Provinces, and informed all the Clergy, partly with threatnings, and partly with punishments to receive that Order. And as touching the Books of Ambrose Service, he burnt them to ashes in all places, and threw into prison many Priests that would not consent and agree unto the matter. Blessed Eugenius the Bishop coming unto the Council, found that it was diffolved three days before his coming. Notwithstanding through his Wisdom, he so perswaded the Lord Pope, that he called again all the Prelates that had been present at the Council, and were now departed by the space of three days. Therefore when the Council was gathered again togéther, in this all the Fathers did consent and agree, that both the Mass-Books of Ambrose and Gregory should be laid upon the Altar of blessed Saint Peter the Apostle, and the Church-doors diligently shut, and most warily sealed up with the Signets of many and divers Bishops. Again, that they should all the whole night give themselves to prayer, that the Lord might reveal, open, and shew unto them by some evident sign or token, which of these two Services he would have used in the Temples. Thus they doing in all points as they had determined, in the morning opened the Church-doors, and found both the Missals or Mass-Books open upon the Altar: or rather (as some say) they found Gregories Mass-Book utterly plucked asunder, one piece from another, and scattered over all the Church. As touching Ambrose Book, they only found it open upon the Altar in the very same place where they before laid it. This Miracle Pope Adrian, like a wise Expounder of dreams, interpreted thus, That as the leaves were torn and blown abroad all the Church over, so should Gregories Book be used throughout the World. Whereupon they thought themselves sufficiently instructed and taught of God, that the Service which Gregory had made, ought to be set abroad and used throughout the World, and that Ambrose his Service should only be observed and kept in his own Church of Mediolanum, where he sometime was Bishop.

Gregories Mass taketh place in Europe.

Thus hast thou heard (Brother Reader) the full and whole Narration of this mystical Miracle, with the Popes Expolition upon the same, which seemeth to be as true as that which Daniel speaketh of, how the Idol Bell did eat up all the meat that was set before him all the night. Daniel 14. Concerning the which Miracle, I need not admonish thee to smell out the blind practises of these night-Crows, to blind the World with forged inventions in stead of true stories. Albeit to grant the Miracle to be most true and unfallible, yet as touching the Exposition thereof, another man beside the Pope percase might Interpret this great Miracle otherwise, as thus, That God was angry with Gregories Book, and therefore rent it in pieces, and scattered it abroad; and the other as good, lay found, untouched, and at the least so to be preserved. Notwithstanding, whatsoever is to be thought of this Miracle with the Exposition thereof, thus the matter fell out, that Gregories Service had only the place, and yet hath to this day in the greatest part of Europe, the Service of Ambrose being excluded. And thus much touching the great Act of Pope Adrian for the setting up of the Mass. By the relation whereof, yet this knowledge may come to the Reader, at least to understand how that commonly in Christian Nations abroad, as yet no uniform Order of any Missal or Mass-Book was received, as hath been hitherto discoursed.

Carolus Magnus beneficial to the See of Rome.

Now from the Popes to return again to the Emperors, from whence we digreffed: like as Pipinus the Father of Charles (as hath been before sufficiently told) had given to the See of Rome all the Princedom of Ravenna, with other Donations and Revenues and Lands in Italy: so this Carolus following his Fathers devotion did confirm the same, adding moreover thereunto, the City and Dominion of Venice, Histria, the Dukedom *Forojulien*se, the Dukedom Spoletanum, and Beneventanum, and other Possessions more, to the Patrimony of S. Peter, making him the Prince of Rome and Italy. The Pope again to recompence his so gentle kindness, made him to be intituled Most Christian King, and made him Patricium Romanum, moreover, ordained him only to be taken for Emperor of Rome. For these and other causes more, Carolus bare no little affection to the said Adrian above all other Popes: as may well appear by this Letter of Carolus Magnus sent to King Offa, what time the said Offa (as is above prefixed) sent to him Alcuinus for Intreaty of Peace: whereto the foresaid Carolus answereth again to the Message of Offa in a Letter, the Contents whereof be these.

Rex Christianissimus, Imitator Dei Franciæ.

The tenor of a Letter sent by Carolus Magnus to King Offa, answering to his requeft concerning the treatise of peace between them.

A Letter of Charles the Great sent to King Offa.

CArolus Rex Francorum & Longobardorum, patricius Romanorum, viro venerando, & fratri charissimo Offæ Regi Merciorum salutem. Primo gratias agimus Omnipotenti Deo, de Catholicæ fidei sinceritate, quam in vestris laudabilibus paginis reperimus exaratam. De peregrinis vero, qui pro amore Dei, & salute animarum suarum, beatorum Apostolorum limina desiderant adire, cum pace sine omni perturbatione vadant. Sed si aliqui religiosi non fervienes, sed lucra sectantes inveniantur inter eos, locis opportunis statuta solvant telonia. Negotiatores quoque volumus ut ex mandato nostro patrocinium habeant in regno nostro legitime, Et si in aliquo loco injusta affligantur oppressione, reclament se ad nos, vel nostros judices, & plenam justitiam jubemus fieri. Cognoscat quoque dilectio vestra, quod aliquam benignitatem de Delmaticis nostris vel palliis ad singulas sedes Episcopales Regni vestri vel Ethelredi direximus, in Eleemosynam Domini Apostolici Adriani, deprecantes ut pro eo intercedi jubeatis, nullam habentes dubitationem beatam illius animam in requie esse, sed ut fidem & dilectionem ostendamus in amicum nobis charissimum. Sed & de thesauro humanarum rerum, quum Dominus Jesus gratuita petenti concesse aliquid per Metropolitanas civitates; direximus vestræ quoque dilectioni unum baltheum, & unum gladium, & duo Pallia serica, &c.

Et tamen ipse communem placentem. Terent.

The cause why this Carolus writeth so favourably of Adrian, partly is touched before; partly also was, for that Caroloman his elder Brother being dead, his Wife called Bertha with her two Children came to Adrian, to have them confirmed in their Fathers Kingdom, whereunto the Pope to shew a pleasure to Carolus would not agree: but gave the Mother with her two Children, and Desiderius the Lombard King with his whole Kingdom, his wife and children, into the hands of the said Carolus, who led them with him Captive into France, and there kept them in servitude during their life.

How the Pope heare eth the cry of poor widows and Orphans.

The Empire translated from Greece to France.

Thus Carolus Magnus being proclaimed Emperor of Rome, through the preferment of Adrian and Pope Leo the third, which succeeded next after him, the Empire was translated from the Greeians about the year of our Lord, 801. unto the Frenchmen, where it continued about one hundred and two years, till the coming of Conradus and his Nephew Otho, which were Germans: and so hath continued after them among the Almans unto this present time. This Charles builded so many Monasteries as there be letters in the row of A B C, he was beneficial chiefly to the Church-men, alfo mercifull to the Poor, in his Acts valiant and triumphant, skil'd in all Languages; he held a Council at Frankford, where was condemned the Council of Nice and Irene, for setting up and worshipping Images, &c.

Images written against, as contrary to the true Faith.

Concerning which Council of Nice, and things there concluded and enacted (because no man shall think the detesting of Images to be any new thing now begun) thus I find it recorded in an ancient written History of Roger Hoveden, called Continuationes Bedæ: his words in Latine be these, Anno 792. Carolus Rex Francorum misit Synodalem librum ad Britanniam, sibi a Constantinopoli directum. In quo lib. Heu proh dolor, multa inconvenientia, & veræ fidei contraria reperimtur, maxime quod pene omnium orientalium Doctorum non minus quam 300 vel eo amplius Episcoporum unanimi assertione confirmatum fit, imagines adorari debere: quod omnino Ecclesia Dei execratur. Contra quod scripsit Albinus Epistolaris ex authoritate divinarum scripturarum mirabiliter affirmatam, illamque cum eodem libro ex persona Episcoporum ac Principum nostrorum, Regi Francorum attulit. Hæc ille: That is, In the year of our Lord, 792. Charles the French King sent a Book containing the Acts of a certain Synode, unto Britain, directed unto him from Constantinople. In the which Book (lamentable to be told) many things were found inconvenient, and clean contrary unto the true Faith. This Alcuinus was Abbot of Turonia in France.

Againſt which Book Alkinus wrote an Epiſtle, ſubſtantially grounded out of the Authority of holy Scripture, which Epiſtle with the Book, the ſaid Alkinus, in the name and Perſon of one Biſhops and Princes, did preſent to the French King

The Biſhops and Princes of England againſt Images.

And thus much by the way of Romiſh matters: Now to return again to the Northumberland Kings, where we left at Egbert, which Egbert (as is before declared) ſucceeded after Celulphus, after he was made Monk. And likewiſe as the ſaid Egbert alſo following the devotion of his Uncle Celulphus, and Kenredus before him, was likewiſe thom Monk, after he had Reigned twenty years in Northumberland; leaving his Son Oſulphus, after him to ſucceed. About which time, and in the ſame year, when Oſulphus, Midla, other wiſe called Adelwald, Alcredus, or Alnredus, Ethelbert otherwiſe called Adelard or Eardulph, Alfwold, Ofredus, Adelred again Kings of Northumberland.

After, Alcredus when he had Reigned ten years, was expulſed out of his Kingdom by his people; Then was Ethelbert, otherwiſe named Adelred, the Son of the foreſaid Mollo, received King of Northumberland: Which Ethelbert or Adelred in like ſort, after he had Reigned five years, was expulſed. So likewiſe after him his Nephews, and the Son of Alcredus, named Oſredus, Reigned one year, and was ſlain. Then the foreſaid Ethelbert, the Son of Mollo, after twelve years Baniſhment, Reigned again in Northumberland the ſpace of four years, and was ſlain. The cauſe whereof (as I find in an Old written ſtory) was, that forſaking his Old Wife, he married a new. Concerning the reſtoring of whom, Alcuinus writeth in this manner. Benedictus Deus qui facit mirabilia ſolus. Nuper Edelredus, filius Edelwaldi de carcere proceſſit in ſolium, & de miſeria in majeſtatem, cujus regni novitate detenti ſumus ne veneremus ad vos, &c. And afterward the ſame Alcuinus again ſpeaking of his death, writeth unto King Offa in theſe Words, *Sciat veneranda dilectio veſtra quod dominus Carolus amabiliter & fideliter ſepe mecum locutus eſt de vobis, & in eo habetis fideliſſimum amicum. Ideo & veſtræ dilectioni digna dirigit munera, & per epiſcopales ſedes regni veſtri, ſimiliter & Edelredo regi, & ad ſuas epiſcoporum ſedes direxit dona. The Kingdom of Northumberland ceaſeth.

Northumberland Kingdom ceaſeth.

Thus as you have heard, after the Reign of King Egbert before mentioned, ſuch trouble and perturbation was in the Dominion of Northumberland, with ſlaying, expulſing and depoſing their Kings one after another, that after the murthering of this Edelred above ſpecified, none durſt take the Government upon him, ſeeing the great danger thereupon inſuing. Inſomuch that the foreſaid Kingdom did lie void and waſte, the ſpace of three and thirty years together; after the term of which years, this Kingdom of Northumberland, with the Kingdoms alſo of the other Saxons beſides, came altogether into the hands of Egbert, King of Weſt-Saxons, and his Progeny; which Monarchy began in the year of our Lord 827. and in the eight and twentieth year of the Reign of the ſaid Egbert; whereof more ſhall be ſaid (Chriſt willing) hereafter. Of this troubleſome and outragious time of Northumberland peopleſpeaketh alſo the ſaid learned man Alcuinus, otherwiſe called Albinus, in the ſame Country born, writing out of France into England, and complaining of the ſame in divers his letters, as firſt to Offa, where he thus writeth: Ego paratus eram cum muneribus Caroli regis ad vos venire, & in patriam reverti. Sed melius viſum eſt propter pacem gentis meæ in peregrinatione remanere, niſi ſciens quid feciſſem inter vos, ubi nullus ſecurus eſſe, vel in ſalubri conſilio proficere poteſt. Eccleſia ſanctæ a paganis vaſtata, Altaria perjuriis fœdata, Monaſteria adulteriis violata, terra ſanguine Dominorum & Principum fœdata, &c. Moreover, the ſaid Alcuinus writing to the foreſaid Edelred a little above mentioned, after the ſame Tenor reporteth: Ecce Eccleſia ſanctæ Cutberti ſacerdotum Dei ſanguine aſperſa (omnibus ſpoliata ornamentis) locus cunctis in Britannia venerabilior paganis gentibus datur ad deprædandum. Et ubi primum poſt deceſſum S. Cutberti ab Eboraco, Chriſtiana religio in noſtra gente ſumpſit exordium, ibi miſeriæ & calamitatis cæpit initium, &c.

Item, writing to Osbert a Noble Peer of the Mercians, complaining on the ſame matter, ſaith: Regnum noſtrum Northumbrorum pene periit, propter inteſtinas diſſenſiones, & falſaces conjurationes, &c.

Item, in another place the ſaid Alcuinus writing to Adelard Archbiſhop of Canterbury, complaineth moreover: *Hoc dico propter flagellum, quod nuper accidit partibus inſulæ noſtræ, quæ prope trecentis & quadraginta annis a parentibus inhabitata eſt noſtris, Legitur in libro Gildæ ſapientiſſimi Britonum, quod iidem Britones, propter avaritiam & rapinam Principum, propter iniquitatem & injuſtitiam Judicum, propter deſidiam prædicationis Epiſcoporum, propter luxuriam & malos mores populi, patriam perdidere. Over and beſides, the ſame Author Alcuinus, writing unto the foreſaid Edelred King of Northumberland, maketh record of ſtrange ſight which he himſelf did ſee the ſame time in the City of York, it rained Blood: Whereof his words which he wrote, concerning the ſame unto the ſaid King Edelred be theſe: Quid ſignificat pluvia ſanguinis, quam quadrageſimali tempore in Eboraco civitate, quæ caput eſt totius regni, in eccleſia beati principis Apoſtolorum, vidimus de borealibus partibus domus (ſereno aere) de ſummitate minanter cadere? Nonne poteſt putari, a borealibus partibus venire ſanguinem ſuper terram? That is, What ſignifieth the rain Blood which in time of Lent, in the City of York, the chief City of that Dominion, and in the Church of S. Peter the chief of the Apoſtles, we our ſelves did ſee to fall from the Church top (the Element being cleer) out of the North parts of the Temple, &c. This wondrous ſight teſtified by Malmeſburienſis, is thought of Fabian to happen in the ſecond year of the Reign of Brightricus (as with the time doth well agree) which was the year of our Lord, ſeven hundred and eighty, and is thought of ſome Expoſitors to betoken the coming of the Danes into this Land, which entred ſhortly after about ſeven years, in the ninth year, of the Reign of Brightricus King of the Weſt-Saxons. Which Brightricus in defence thereof ſent forth his Steward of his houſhold with a ſmall company, which ſhortly was ſlain: But by the ſtrength of the ſaid Brightricus and the other Saxon Kings, they were compelled to void the Land for that time, which was in the year 790. To this Brightricus, King Offa, as is aforeſaid, gave his Daughter Edelburga to Wife, by whom he at length was impoyſoned, beſides certain other of his Nobles, upon whom the ſaid Queen before him had Practiſed the ſame wickedneſs. Who then after that fled over to Charles the Great, into France: Where ſhe being offered for her beauty to marry either to him or his Son, becauſe ſhe chooſed rather to live a Nun, married neither the one, nor yet the other; but was thruſt into a Monaſtery, where ſhe, then playing the Harlot with a Monk, was expulſed from thence, and ended her life in Penury and miſery.

ſame, ſhe cauſed the Aſhes to be caſt into the Sea, becauſe he diſanulled Images. Afterwards reigning with her Son Conſtantine the ſixth, Son to Leo the fourth (whom alſo we declared before to be excommunicated for taking away Images) being at diſſention with him, cauſed him to be taken and laid in Priſon; who afterward through power of Friends being reſtored to his Empire again, at laſt ſhe cauſed the ſame her own Son to be caſt into Priſon, and his eyes to be put out ſo cruelly, that within ſhort ſpace he dyed. After this the ſaid Irene Empreſs, with the Council of Theraſius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, held a Council at Nicæa, where it was decreed, that Images ſhould again be reſtored unto the Church; which Council after was repealed by another Council holden at Francford by Charles the Great. At length the was depoſed by Nicephorus (who Reigned after) and was expulſed the Empire: Who after the example of Edelburga above mentioned (condignly puniſhed for her wickedneſs) ended likewiſe her life in much Penury and Miſery.

About the time when the foreſaid Brightricus was impriſoned by Edelburga his Wife, died alſo King Offa, which was about the year of our Lord 795. or (as ſome ſay) 802. After which Offa (as is aforeſaid) ſucceeded Egbert, then Kenulphus, after whom ſucceeded Kenelmus his Son, who in his younger age was wickedly murdered by his Siſter Quinreda, and Askebertus, about the year of our Lord 819. and in the Church of Winchcombe was counted for an holy Martyr. After him ſucceeded his Uncle Ceolulphus, whom Bermulphus in the firſt year of his reign expulled, and reigned in his place. Who likewiſe in the third year of his Reign was overcome, and expulſed by Egbert King of the Weſt-Saxons, and afterward ſlain by the Eaſtangles. And the Kingdom of Mercia alſo ceaſed, and came into the hands of the Weſt-Saxons.

Hitherto I have brought (as thou ſeeſt good Reader) the confuſed and turbulent reigns of theſe ſeven Saxon Kings, who after the expullion of the Britains, ruled and reigned ſunder in ſundry quarters of this Land together, unto this preſent time of Egbert King of the Weſt-Saxons, by whom it ſo pleaſed God to begin to reduce and unite all theſe ſcattered Kingdoms, into one Monarchical form of Dominion. Wherefore, as in the aforeſaid Egbert, beginneth a new alteration of the Commonwealth, here in this Land among the Saxons: So my purpoſe is (the Lord willing) with the ſame Egbert, to enter a new beginning of my third Book, after a brief recapitulation firſt made of ſuch things as in this ſecond Book before are to be collected and noted, eſpecially touching the Monaſteries builded, the Kings who have entred the life and profeſſion Monaſtick; alſo Queens and Queens Daughters, which the ſame time profeſſed ſolitary life in Monaſteries, which they or their Anceſtors had Erected.

And thus haſt thou (Gentle Reader) concerning the ſeven Kingdom of theſe Saxons, ruling all together in England, the courſe and Order of their doings briefly deſcribed, and diſcourſed unto thee, in ſuch Order, as the matter being ſo intricate, in ſuch confuſion and diverſity of things incident together, would permit: Following eſpecially in this ſtory hitherto the line of the Northumberland Kings, as the other ſtories moſt follow the line of Weſt-Saxon Kings. The which ſeven Kingdoms of theſe ſaid Saxons, after they had untruly expulſed and chaſed out the Britains from their Land, like as they never were in quietneſs among themſelves, Reigning thus together, till the time of this Egbert, ſo alſo after the Reign of Egbert, the whole Realm being reduced into one Regiment, no leſs were they impugned and afflicted by the Danes continually from time to time, till the laſt Conqueſt of William the Norman. Thus is pleaſed God (ever lightly) to revenge with blood bloody violence, and the unjuſt dealings of men with juſt and like retribution. But of this let the Chriſtian Reader conſider, as Gods Grace ſhall work in him. In the mean time we, as much as in us did lie, ſatisfying the part of an Hiſtorian, have thus hitherto ſet forth and declared concerning theſe ſeven foreſaid Kingdoms: Firſt, the names and lineal deſcent of the Kings ſeverally by themſelves, as by the Table Precedent may appear: Then what were the doings and acts of the ſame, how firſt being Pagans, they were converted to the Chriſtian faith; what things in their time hapned in the Church, how many of them, of Kings were made Monks; how devout they were then to holy Church and to the Church-men, and eſpecially to the Church of Rome. But the Church-men then were much otherwiſe, in life than afterward they declared themſelves to be. Through which devotion of the ſaid Kings, firſt came in the Peter-pence or Rome-ſchots in this Realm, as by Ive firſt in his Dominion, then by Offa in his Lordſhip, and afterwards by Adelwulph brought in and ratified through the whole Realm: Where alſo is to be noted, that by the foreſaid Kings and Queens of the ſaid Saxons, the moſt part of the greateſt Abbeys and Nunneries, in this Realm, were firſt begun and builded, as partly by the names of ſome here follow to be ſeen.

Thus ye see what Monasteries, and in what time, began to be founded by the Saxon Kings, newly converted to the Christian Faith, within the space of two hundred years; who, as they seemed then to have a certain zeal and devotion to Godward, according to the leading and teaching that then was: so it seemeth again to me, two things to be wished in these forefaid Kings: first, that they which began to erect these Monasteries and Cels of Monks and Nuns, to live solely and singly by themselves out of the holy state of Matrimony, had foreseen what danger, and what absurd Enormities might and also did thereof ensue, both publickly to the Church of Christ, and privately to their own Souls: secondly, that unto this their zeal and devotion had been joyned like Knowledge and Doctrine in Christs Gospel, especially in the Article of our free Justification by the Faith of Jesus Christ; because of the, lack whereof, as well the Builders and Founders thereof, as they that were professed in the same, seem both to have run the wrong way, and to have been deceived. For albeit in them there was a devotion and zeal of mind, that thought well in this their doing, which I will not here reprehend: yet the end and cause of their deeds and buildings cannot be excused, being contrary to the rule of Christs Gospel; for so much as they did these things seeking thereby Merits with God, and for remedy of their Souls, and remission of their sins, as may appear testified in their own Records, whereof one here I thought to set forth for probation of the same. Read this Chart (if it please thee gentle Reader) of King Ethelbald his donation, given to Churches and religious persons; which Ethelbald was the builder (as is said) of Peterborough. The words of his Record and Instrument be these.

Two things to be wished in them that first builded monkish Monasteries.

The Article of free justification not known.

The Donations and Priviledges granted and given by King Ethelbald to religious men of the Church.

Ex chronicis Guliel. Malmesb. lib. 1.

PLerumque contingere solet, pro incerta temporum vicissitudine, ut ea quæ multarum fidelium personarum testimonio consilioque roborata fuerint, fraudulenter per contumaciam plurimorum, & machinamenta simulationis, sine ulla considerationis rationis periculose dissipentur, nisi authoritate literarum (testamento chirographorum) æternæ memoriæ commissantur. Quapropter, ego Ethelbaldus Rex Merciorum pro amore cælestis patriæ, & remedio animæ meæ, studendum esse prævidi, ut eam pro bona opera liberam efficerem in omni vinculo delictorum. Quoniam enim mihi omnipotens Deus per misericordiam clementiæ suæ, absque ullo antecedente merito, sceptra regiminis largitus est: ideo libenter ei, ex eo quod dedit, retribuo. Hujus rei gratia hanc donationem, me vivente, concedo, ut omnia Monasteria & Ecclesiæ Regni mei, a publicis vectigalibus, & operibus, & oneribus absolvantur; nisi institutionibus arcium, vel pontium, quæ nulli unquam prosunt. Præterea, habeant famuli Dei propriam libertatem in fructibus sylvarum & agrorum, & in captura piscium, ne minuscula præbeant vel regi, vel principibus, nisi voluntaria; sed liberi Deo serviant, &c.

By the Contents hereof may well be understood (as where he saith, Pro amore cælestis patriæ, pro remedio animæ, pro liberatione animæ, & absolutione delictorum, &c.) how great the ignorance and blindness of these men was; who, lacking no zeal, only lacking knowledge to rule it withall: seeking their salvation not by Christ only, but by their own deservings and meritorious deeds. Which I recite not here to any infamy or reprehension of them; but rather to put us in mind and memory, how much we at this present are bound to God for the true sincerity of his truth, hidden so long before to our fore-Ancestors, and opened now unto us by the good will of our God, in his Son Christ Jesus. This only lamenting by the way, to see them to have such Works, and to lack our Faith, and us to have the right Faith, and to lack their Works. And this blind ignorance of that Age, thus above pre-noted, was the cause not only why these Kings builed so many Monasteries upon zealous Superstition, but also why so many of them, forsaking their orderly vocation of Princely Regiment, gave themselves over to Monastical profession, or rather wilful Superstition. Concerning the names and number of which Kings that were professed Monks, is sufficiently in the story before declared: the names of whom we shewed to be seven or eight, within the space of these two hundred years. Such was then the superstitious devotion of Kings and Princes in that age; and no less also to be noted in Queens and Kings Daughters, with other Noble women of the same age and time; the names of whom it were too long here to recite. As Hilda Daughter to the Nephew of Edwin King of Northumberland, Abbess of Ely. Erchengoda with her Sister Ermenilda, Daughters of Ercombertus King of Kent, which Erchengoda was professed in Saint Brigets Order in France. Item, Edelberga Wife and Queen to King Edwin of Northumberland, and Daughter of King Anna, which was also in the same house of Saint Briget made a Nun. Item, Etheldreda, whom we term Saint Eldred, Wife to King Ecfride of Northumberland, who being married to two Husbands, could not be obtained to give her consent to either of them, during the space of twelve years, but would needs live a Virgin, and was professed Nun at Helinge. Werburga was the Daughter of Ulferus King of Mercians, and made Nun at Ely. Kenreda Sister of King Ulferus and Kinefwida her Sister, were both Nuns professed. Sexburga Daughter of King Anna King of Mercians, and Wife of Ercombert King of Kent, was Abebss at Ely. Elfrida Daughter of Oswy King of Northumberland was Abbess of Whitney: Mildreda, Milburga, and Milgnida, all three Daughters of Merwardus King of West-Mercians, entred the Profession and Vow of Nunish Virginity. Kineburga Wife of Alfride King of Northumberland, and Sister to Ofricus King of Mercians, and Daughter of King Penda, was professed Abbess of the Monastery in Gloucester. Elfleda Daughter of Oswy King, and Wife of Peda, Son of King Penda, likewise inclosed her self in the same Profession and Vow of Romish Chastity. Likewise Alfritha Wife to King Edgar, and Editha Daughter to the said Edgar, with Wolfride her Mother, &c. All which holy Nuns with divers more, the Romish Catholicks have canonized for Saints, and put the most part of them in their Kalendar, only because of the Vow of their Chastity solemnly professed. Concerning which Chastity, whether they kept it or no, little I have to say against them, and less to sweare for them. But whether they so kept it or not; if this Gift of Chastity which they professed, were given them of God, small praise worthy was it in them to keep it. And if it were not given them, I will not say here of them so much, as hath been said of some other, which sufficiently have painted out to the World the Demeanor of these holy Votaries. But this I will say, that although they kept it never so perfectly, yet it is not that which maketh Saints before God, but only the blood of Christ Jesus, and a true Faith in him.

Werburga. Kenreda. Kinefwida. Sexburga. Elfrida. Mildreda. Milburga. Milgnida. Kineburga. Elfleda. Alfritha. Wolfride. Editha.

Likewise remaineth, that as we have declared the devotion of these Noble women, which professing Monastick life, have cast off all worldly Dignity and Delights: so we should also intreat of such Noblemen, who among the Saxon Kings in like zeal of devotion, have given over themselves from the World (as they thought) unto the contemplative life of Monkish Profession. The Names of whom as in the Catalogue of the Saxon Kings before is described, be these, to the number of Nine.

Of which Kings and their doings, what is to be judged, look (gentle Reader) before.

By these Histories it is apparent, what Mutations, what Perturbations, and what Alterations of State hath been in this Realm of Britain, first from Britains Kings, to Romans; then to Britains again; afterward to the Saxons. First, to seven altogether reigning, then to one, &c. And this alteration not only happened in the Civil Government, but also followed in the State Ecclesiastical. For as in the Britains time the Metropolitan See was in London, so in the Saxons time, after the coming of Austin, it was removed to Canterbury: the Catalogue and Order of which Metropolitans, from the time of Austin to Egbertus, is thus, as in the History of Malmesburiensis is described.

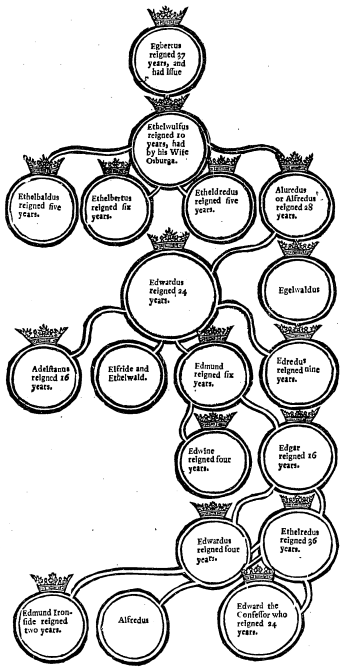
During the course of these seventeen Archbishops of Canterbury, in Rome passed in the mean time four and thirty Popes, of whom partly heretofore we have declared.

And thus much touching the time of the seven Kingdoms of the Saxons, ruling together in England, from the Reign of Hengist unto Egbert, the first King and Monarch of the whole Land, after the Expulsion of the Britains.

NOw remaineth (by the Grace of Christ) in the next Book following, to prosecute the Order of such Kings as principally reigning alone had this Realm in their possession, from the time of Egbert King of West-Saxons, to the coming of William Conqueror the Norman; comprehending therein the rest of the next 300 years, with the acts and state of Religion, as in that space was in the Church: wherein may appear the declining time of the Church, and of true Religion, preparing the way to Antichrist, which not long after followed. For here is to be noted, that during yet this mean time, Satan (as is said) was bound up from his raging and furious violence; counting from the time of Constantinus, to the next kooling out of Satan, which was foretold by the Revelation of S. John above mentioned, to be a thousand years; whereof by the order of the History (Christ granting) more shall be said hereafter.

The End of the Second Book.



THE THIRD BOOK,

CONTAINING

The next three hundred years, from the Reign of King Egbertus unto the time of William Conqueror.

NOw remaineth likewise, as before I did in describing the defcent and diverfity of the feven Kings, all together reigning and ruling in this Land: fo to profecute in like order the lineal Succeffion of them, which after Egbertus King of the Weſt-Saxons, governed and ruled folely, until the Conqueſt of William the Norman; firſt expreſſing their Names, and afterwards importing ſuch Acts, as in their time happened in the Church worthy to be noted. Albeit, as touching the Acts and Doings of theſe Kings, becauſe they are fufficiently and at large deſcribed, and taken out of Latine Writers into the Engliſh-Tongue by divers and fundry Authors, and namely in the Hiſtory or Chronicle of Fabian; I ſhall not ſpend much travel thereupon, but rather refer the Reader unto him or to ſome other, where the troubleſome tumults between the Engliſh-men and the Danes at that time may be ſeen, who ſo liſteth to read them. Only the Table of their Names and Reign, and Acts done under their Reign, I have compendiouſly abridged, uſing ſuch brevity as the matter would ſuffer.

A TABLE of the Saxon Kings, which ruled alone from King Egbert unto William Conqueror.

Here

Here is to be noted, that before the Reign of Edward the Confeſſor, the Danes obtained the Crown under their Captain Canutus who reigned years 19
Haraldus Harefoot Son of Canutus 4
Hardeknutus, Son of Canutus 2
Edward the Confeſſor, an Engliſh man, Son of Etheldred 24
Haraldus, Son of Earl Goodwin an Uſurper 1
William Conqueror a Norman.

King Egbertus.

Egbert King of the Weſt-Saxons, afterward Monarch and King of the whole Realm.

IN the Reign of Brightricus a little before mentioned, about the year of Grace, 795. there was in his Dominion a Noble Perſonage, of ſome called Egbert, of ſome Ethelbert, of ſome Ethelbright: who being feared of the ſame Brightricus, becauſe he was of Kingly blood, and near unto the Crown, was by the force and conſpiracy of the forenamed Brightricus, chaſed and purſued out of the Land of Britain into France, where he indured till the death of the ſaid Brightricus. After the hearing whereof, Egbert ſped him eſſoons out of France, unto his Country of Weſt-Saxe, where he in ſuch wiſe behaved himſelf, that he obtained the Regiment and Governance of the above-ſaid Kingdom.

In this time came in the Danes firſt into the North parts and were driven out again.

{Anno 809.} Bernulphus, King of Mercia above mentioned, with other Kings, had this Egbert in ſuch deriſion, that they made of him divers ſcoffing Jeſts, and ſcorning Rimes, all which he ſuſtained for a time. But when he was more eſtabliſhed in his Kingdom, and had proved the minds of his Subjects, and eſpecially God working withall, he afterward aſſembled his Knights, and gave to the ſaid Bernulphus a battel in a place called Elinden in the Province of Hampton; and notwithſtanding in that fight was great odds of number, as ſix or eight againſt one, yet Egbert (through the might of the Lord which giveth Victory as pleaſeth him) had the better, and won the field; which done, he ſeized that Lordſhip into his hand; and that alſo done, he made War upon the Kentiſh-Saxons, and at length in likewiſe obtained the Victory. And as it is in Polycronicon teſtified, he alſo ſubdued Northumberland, and cauſed the Kings of theſe three Kingdoms to live under him as Tributaries, or joyned them to his Kingdom: Ex Flor. hiſt. This Egbert alſo won from the Britains or Welſhmen the Town of Cheſter, which they had kept poſſeſſion of till this day. After theſe and other Victories, he peaceably injoying the Land, called a Council of his Lords at Wincheſter, where by their advices he was crowned King, and chief Lord over this Land, which before that day was called Britain: but then he ſent out into all coaſts of the Land his Commandments and Commiſſions, charging ſtraightly, that from that day forward, the Saxons ſhould be called Angles, and the Land Anglia.

Example what it is to deſpiſe others. Example of patience.

Of this victory went a proverb. Rarus erravit rabit, rarius reſtituit ſua tabulis.

This Land firſt called Anglia.

{Anno 833. Danes now the ſecond time entred in this land.} About the thirteenth year of the Reign of Egbert, the Heatheniſh people of the Danes, which a little before had made horrible deſtruction in Northumberland, and eſpecially in the Iſle of Lindeſarne, where they ſpoiled the Churches, and murthered the Miniſters, with Men, Women and Children, after a cruel manner, entred now the ſecond time with a great Hoſt into this Land, and ſpoiled the Iſle of Sheppy in Kent, or near to Kent: where Egbert hearing thereof, aſſembled his people, and met with them at Carrum. But in that Conflict he ſped not ſo well as he was wont in times before, but with his Knights was compelled to forſake the field. Notwithſtanding in the next battel, the ſaid Egbert, with a ſmall Power, overthrew a great multitude of them, and ſo drave them back. The next year following, the ſaid Danes preſuming upon their Victory before, made their return again into the Land Weſtward, where joyning with the Britains, by the help and power of them, they affailed the Lands of Egbert, and did much harm in many places of his Dominion, and elſewhere; ſo that after this day they were continually abiding in one place of the Realm of England or other, till the time of Hardeknutus laſt King of the Danes blood, ſo that many of them were married to Engliſh women, and many that now be, or in times paſt were called Engliſh-men, are deſcended of them. And albeit that they were many and ſundry times driven out of the Land, and chaſed from one Country to another, yet that notwithſtanding, they ever gathered new ſtrengths and powers, that they abode ſtill within the Land.

England five times plagued by other nations.

And thus, as by the ſtories appears, this troubleſome Land of Britain, now called England, hath been hitherto by five ſundry outward Nations plagued. Firſt, by the Romans; then by the Scots and Picts; thirdly, by the Saxons; fourthly, by the Danes, of whoſe outragious cruelty and hoſtility, our Engliſh Hiſtories do moſt exclaim and complain; fifthly, by the Normans, which I pray God be the laſt. Ex R. G. Hoveden. lib. 3.

Then it followeth in the ſtory, that the time of this Perſecution of the foreſaid Pagans and Danes continuing, King Egbert, when he had ruled the Weſt-Saxons, and over the more part of England, by the term of ſeven and thirty years, died, and was buried at Wincheſter, leaving to his Son Ethelwulfe his Kingdom, which firſt was Biſhop of Wincheſter (as Hoveden recordeth) and after upon neceſſity made King, leaving withall, and pronouncing this ſaying to his Son, Felicem fore ſi regnum, quod multa rexerat induſtria, illæ conſueta genti illi non interrumperet ignavia.

King Ethelwulfus.

{Anno 837.} Ethelwulfus, the Son of Egbert, in his former age had entred into the Order of Sub-Deacon, as ſome others ſay, was made Biſhop of Wincheſter; but afterwards, being the only Son of Egbert, was made King through the Diſpenſation (as Fabian ſaith) of Pope Paſchalis: but that cannot be, for Paſchalis then was not Biſhop: ſo that by the computation of time, it ſhould rather ſeem to be Gregory the fourth. This Ethelwulfe (as being himſelf once nuzled in that Order) was always good and devout to holy Church and religious Orders, inſomuch that he gave to them the Tythe of all his goods and lands in Weſt-Saxony, with liberty and freedom from all ſervage and civil Charges. Whereof his chart Inſtrument beareth teſtimony after this tenor proceeding, much like to the donation of Ethelbaldus, King of Mercians above mentioned.

a place in Fabian to be amended.

The Priviledges and Donations given by King Ethelwulfus to the Clergy.

{Anno 844.} Privileges and temporalties granted to the Church by King Ethelwulfe.

Ex Flor. hiſtor.

Pro remiſſio.

RE*gnante Domino noſtro in perpetuum. Dum in noſtris temporibus per bellorum incendia, & direptiones opum noſtrarum, necnon & vaſtationum crudeliſſimas depræ dationes hoſtium barbarorum, pegan arumque gentium, multiplices tribulationes ad affligendum uſque ad internecionem, tempora cernimus incumbere periculoſa. Quamobrem, ego* Ethelwulfus Rex occidentalium Saxonum, cum conſilio Epiſcoporum & principum meorum, conſilium ſalubre, & uniforme remedium affirmavi: ut aliquam portionem terrarum hæreditariam, Deo & ſanctæ Mariæ, & omnibus ſanctis jure perpetuo poſſidendam concedam. Scilicet partem terræ meæ, ut ſit tuta & immunis ab omnibus ſecularibus ſervitiis, necnon regalibus tributis majoribus & minoribus ſive taxationibus, quod nos dicimus Witterden: ſit q; libera omnium rerum, pro remiſſione animarum & peccatorum noſtrorum, ad Deo ſoli deſerviendum, ſine expeditione, & pontis conſtructione, & arcis munitione: ut eo diligentius pro nobis ad Deum preces ſine ceſſatione fundant, quo eorum ſervitutem in aliqua parte levigamus, &c.

Hereby may it appear, how and when the Churches of England began firſt to be indued with Temporalties and Lands, alſo with Privileges and Exemptions inlarged: moreover (and that which ſpecially is to be conſidered and lamented) what pernitious Doctrine this was, wherewith they were led, thus to ſet remiſſion of their ſins, and remedy of their ſouls, in this donation, and ſuch other deeds of their donation, contrary to the information of Gods Word, and with no ſmall derogation from the Croſs of Chriſt?

Note the blind ignorance and erroneous teaching in thoſe days.

Theſe things thus done within the Realm, then the ſaid Ethelwulfe the King, taking his Journey to Rome with Alfred his youngeſt Son, committed him to the bringing up of Pope Leo the fourth, where he alſo re-edified the Engliſh School at Rome: which being founded by King Offa, or rather by Ive, King of Mercians (as in the Flowers of Hiſtories is affirmed) was lately in the time of King Egbert his Father, conſumed with fire. Further and beſides, this King gave and granted there unto Rome, of every fire-houſe a penny to be paid through his his whole Land, as King Ive in his Dominion had done before. Alſo he gave and granted yearly to be paid to Rome 300 Marks; that is, to the maintaining of the light of Saint Peter, 100 Marks, to the light of Saint Paul, 100 Marks, to the uſe of the Pope alſo another hundred. This done, he returning home through France, married there Judith, the Daughter of Carolus Calvus, the French King: whom he reſtored afterward (contrary to the Laws of Weſt-Saxons) to the Title and Throne of a Queen. For before it was decreed among the Weſt-Saxons (by the occaſion of wicked Ethelburga, who poiſoned Brigibricus her own Husband) that after that no Kings wife ſhould have the name or place of a Queen.

And for ſo much as I have here entred into the mention of Judith, Daughter of Carolus Calvus; the occaſion thereof putteth me in memory here to inſert by the way, a matter done, although not in this Realm, yet not impertinent to this Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory. And firſt to deduct the Narration hereof from the firſt Original; the Father of this Carolus Calvus, whoſe name was Ludovicus, firſt of that name called Pius, King of France, had two wives: whereof by the firſt he had three Sons, Lothary, Pipin, and Lewis: Which three Sons unnaturally and unkindly conſpiring againſt their Father and his ſecond wife, with her Son their youngeſt Brother, perſecuted him ſo, that through a certain Council of Lords Spiritual and Temporal, they depoſed the ſame their natural and right godly Father, diſpoſſeſſing and diſcharging him of all Rule and Dominion. Moreover, cauſed him to renounce his Temporal habit, incloſing him in the Monaſtery of S. Mark, for a Monk, or rather a Priſoner. All which done, they divided his Empire and Kingdom among themſelves.

Note here th holy and wholeſome councils and doings of the ſpiritual Lords.

Ludovicus Pius Emperor, King of France.

Thus was Ludovicus Pius, of impious Sons left deſolate. But the power of God which worketh, when as all earthly power ceaſeth, of his divine mercy ſo aided and recovered him out of all his tribulation to this Imperial dignity again; that it was to all his enemies confuſion, and to all good men a miracle. But this by the way. By his ſecond wife, whoſe name was Judith, he had this Charles the Bald here mentioned. Which Judith was thought, and ſo accuſed to the Pope, to be within ſuch degree of alliance, that by the Popes Law, ſhe might not continue his wife without the Popes diſpenſation. It ſo fell out in the mean time, that this Ludovicus the Emperor had promoted a young man named Frederick, to be Biſhop of Utricht; and to him had given fair and good exhortation, that he remembring and following the conſtancy of his predeceſſors, would maintain right and truth without all exception of any perſon, and puniſh miſdoers, with excommunication, as well the rich as the poor with ſuch like words of godly counſel. Frederick hearing the King thus ſay, ſitting at dinner with him as the manner was, being newly inveſted, in theſe words anſwered the Emperor again: I thank your Majeſty, (ſaith he) which with your ſo wholeſome exhortation put me in mind of my profeſſion. But I beſeech you of your benign favour and patience, that I may freely diſcloſe that which hath long incumbred and pierced my conſcience. To whom leave being given, thus he began, I pray you (Lord Emperor) to ſhew me herein your mind (pointing to the fiſh before him) whether it is more according to attain this fiſh here preſent, beginning firſt at the head or at the tail? What a tale is this (quoth the Emperor) of the taile and of the head? At the head (quoth he.) Then Frederick taking thereof his occaſion, proceedeth, Even ſo let it be Lord Emperor (ſaith he) as you have ſaid. Let Chriſtian Faith and Charity firſt begin with your ſelf, as with the head, admoniſhing you to ceaſe from your Fact and Error, that your Subjects by that example be not boldned to follow your miſdoing. Wherefore firſt forſake you your unlawful Wedlock, which you have made with Judith your near Kinſwoman. Theſe words of the new Biſhop, although they moved Ludovicus the Emperor not a little, yet he with a gentle modeſty, and modeſt ſilence was contented, ſuffering the Biſhop to go home in peace. But the word being uttered in ſuch an audience, could not be ſo concealed, but ſpread and burſt out in much talk in the whole Court, and eſpecially among the Biſhops, conſulting earneſtly with themſelves about the matter. Through whoſe counſel and labour ſo at length it fell, that the Emperor was conſtrained to leave the company of his Wife, till he had purchaſed a Licence of the Biſhop of Rome to retain her again, who then forgave the ſaid Biſhop all that was paſt. But the woman lured two Knights that flew him in his Veſtments, when he had ended his Maſs. Ranulphus and Gul. lib. de Pontificib. gave forth this ſtory in his great Commendation, that he died a Martyr. Whereof I have not to judge, nor here to pronounce, but that rather I think him to be commended in his dying, than the woman for her killing.

Biſhop Frederick openly admoniſheth the Emperor at the table.

Note, there were two Judiths, one the mother of Carolus Calvus, the other, his daughter whom King Ethelwulfe did marry.

And for ſo much as mention hath been made of Ludovicus Pius, here is to be noted, that in France then was uſed of Prieſts and Church-men, precious and ſhining Veſtures, and golden and rich ſtaring Girdles, with Rings and other Ornaments of gold. Wherefore the ſaid Lewis purchaſed of the Biſhop of Rome a Correction for all ſuch as uſed ſuch diſordinate Apparel, cauſing them to wear brown and ſad colours, according to their eſtates. Fob.

Of this Lewis the Papiſts do feign, that becauſe he converted certain of their Church-goods and Patrimony to the wages of his Souldiers, his body (ſay they) was carried out of his Tomb by Devils, and was no more ſeen.

And thus a little having digreſſed out of our courſe, now let us return out of France into England again. King Ethelwolfus, coming now from Rome by the Country of France, was now returned again into his own Dominion, where he continued not long after.

This Ethelwolfus had eſpecially about him two Biſhops, whoſe counſel he was moſt ruled by, Swithinus Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Adelſtanus Biſhop of Shireborne. Of the which two, the one was more skilful in temporal and civil Affairs touching the Kings Wars, and filling of his Coffers, and other furniture for the King. The other (which was Swithinus) was of a contrary ſort, wholy diſpoſed and inclined to Spiritual meditation, and to miniſter Spiritual counſel to the King: who had been School-Maſter to the King before. Wherein appeared one good condition of this Kings nature, among his other Vertues, not only in following the Precepts and Advertiſements of his old School-Maſter, but alſo in that he like a kind and thankful Pupil did ſo reverence his Bringer up, and old School-Maſter (as he called him) that he ceaſed not, till he made him Biſhop of Wincheſter, by the confecration of Celnoch then Archbiſhop of Canterbury. But as Concerning the Miracles which are read in the Church of Wincheſter, of this Swithinus, them I leave to be read together with the Iliads of Homer, or Tales of Robinhood.

This Gregory the Fourth, here in this preſent Chapter above mentioned, was the third Pope which ſucceeded after Paſchalis the firſt, being but four years betwixt them: which Paſchalis ſucceeded after Stephan the Fourth, who followed after Leo the Third, next Pope unto Adrian above in our Hiſtory mentioned, whereas we inteated of Charles the Great. From the time of that Adrian the firſt, unto Pope Adrian the third, the Emperors had ſome ſtroke in the Election (at leaſt in the Confirmation) of the Roman Pope. Notwithſtanding, divers of thoſe foreſaid Popes in the mean time began to work their Practiſes to bring their Purpoſe about. But yet all their devices could take no full effect, before the ſaid Adrain the third, as hereafter (Chriſt willing) ſhall be declared. So that the Emperors all this while bare ſome Rule in chooſing the Popes, and in aſſembling general Councils. Wherefore by the Commandment of Ludovicus the Emperor, in the time of this Gregory the fourth, a general Synod was commenced at Aquiſgrane, where it was decreed by the ſaid Gregory and his Aſſiſtants: Firſt, that every Church ſhould have ſufficient of his own proper Lands and Revenues to find the Prieſts thereof, that none ſhould need to lack or go about a begging. Item, that none of the Clergy, of what Order or Degree ſoever he be, ſhould uſe any Veſture of any precious or ſcarlet colour. Neither ſhall wear Rings on their Fingers, unleſs it be when Prelates be at Maſs, or give their Conſecrations. Item, that Prelates ſhould not keep too great Ports or Families, nor keep great Horſes, uſe Dice or Harlots: and the Monks ſhould not exceed meaſure in Gluttony or Riot. Item, that none of the Clergy being either anointed or ſhaven, ſhould uſe either gold or ſilver in their Shooes, Slippers, or Girdles, like to Heliogabalus. By this it may be conjectured, what Pomp and Pride in thoſe those days was crept into the Clergy. Moreover, by the ſaid Pope Gregory the fourth, at the Commandment of Ludovicus Emperor, the Feaſt of All Saints was firſt brought into the Church.

After this Pope, came Sergius the ſecond, which firſt brought in the altering of the Popes names, becauſe he was named before Os porci, that is Swine-ſnout: which alſo ordained the Agnus thrice to be ſung at the Maſs, and the Hoſt to be divided into three parts.

After him was Pope Leo the fourth, to whom this King Ethelwolfe (as in this preſent Chapter is above ſpecified) did commit the tuition of his Son Alured. By this Pope Leo it came in, and was firſt enacted in a Council of his, that no Biſhop ſhould be condemned under threeſcore and twelve witneſſes, according as ye ſee, in the witneſſes at the condemnation of Stephen Gardiner, orderly practiſed.

Item, contrary to the Law of Gregory the fourth his Predeceſſor, this Pope ordained the Croſs (all ſet with gold and precious ſtones) to be carried before him, like a Pope.

And here next now followeth and cometh in the Whore of Babylon (rightly in her true colours, by the permiſſion of God, and manifeſtly without all tergiverſation) to appear to the whole World: and that not only after the ſpiritual ſenſe, but after the very letter, and the right form of an Whore indeed. For after this Leo above mentioned, the Cardinals proceeding to their ordinary Election (after a ſolemn maſs of the Holy Ghoſt. to the perpetual ſhame of them and of that See) in ſtead of a man Pope, elected an Whore indeed to miniſter Sacraments, to ſay Maſſes, to give Orders, to conſtitute Deacons, Prieſts, and Biſhops; to promote Prelates, to make Abbots, to conſecrate Churches and Altars, to have the Reign and Rule of Emperors and Kings: and ſo the did indeed, called by name Joan the eighth. This womans proper name was Gilberta (a Dutch woman of Magunce) who went with an Engliſh Monk out of the Abbey of Fulda in mans Apparel unto Athens, and after through her dexterity of wit and learning was promoted unto the Popedom, where ſhe ſate two years and ſix months. At laſt openly in the face of a general Proceſſion, ſhe fell in labour and travel of child, and ſo died, by reaſon whereof, the Cardinals yet to this day do avoid to come near by that ſtreet where this ſhame was taken. By Benedictus the third, who ſucceeded next in the whoriſh See, was firſt ordained (as moſt Writers do record) the Dirge to be ſaid for the Dead. Albeit before him, Gregory the third had done in that matter worthily for his part already.

Pope Nicholas the firſt.

After him ſate Pope Nicholas the firſt, who inlarged the Popes Decrees with many Conſtitutions, equalling the authority of them with the writings of the Apoſtles. He ordained that no ſecular Prince, nor the Emperor himſelf, ſhould be preſent at their Councils, unleſs in matters concerning the Faith; to the end that ſuch as they judged to be Hereticks, they ſhould execute and murther. Alſo, that no Lay-men ſhould ſit in Judgment upon the Clergy-men, or reaſon upon the Popes Power. Item, that no Chriſtian Magiſtrate ſhould have any Power upon any Prelate, alledging that a Prelate is called God. Item, that all Church-Service ſhould be in Latine, yet notwithſtanding, diſpenſing with the Sclavonians and Polonians to retain ſtill their vulgar Language. Sequences in the Maſs were by him firſt allowed. By this Pope Prieſts began to be reſtrained and debarred from marrying: whereof Huldericke Biſhop of Ausbrough (a learned and an holy man) ſending a Letter unto the Pope, gravely and learnedly refuteth and reclaimeth againſt his undiſcreet proceedings touching that matter. The Copy of which Letter, as I thought it unworthy to be ſuppreſſed, ſo I judged it here worthy and meet for the better inſtruction of the Reader to be inſerted. The words thereof here follow out of Latine into Engliſh tranſlated.

The marriages of Prieſts began to be forbidden.

A learned Epiſtle of Huldrike Biſhop of Auſburgh, ſent to Pope Nicholas the firſt, proving by Probations ſubſtantial, that Prieſts ought not to be reſtrained from Marriage.

Anno 867.

Nicholas Domino & Patri, pervigili Sanctæ Romanæ Eccleſiæ proviſori, Huldericus ſolo nomine Epiſcopus, amorem ut filius, timorem ut ſervus. Cum tua (O Pater & Domine) decreta ſuper Clericorum continentiam, &c.

The ſame in Engliſh.

A Letter written to Pope Nicholas concerning Prieſts not to refrain from marriage.

Hulderike Biſhop only by name, unto the reverend Father Nicholas the vigilant Proviſor of the holy Church of Rome, with due commendation ſendeth love as a Son, and fear as a Servant. Underſtanding (reverend Father) your Decree which you ſent to me concerning the ſingle life of the Clergy, to be far diſcrepant from all diſcretion, I was troubled partly with fear, and partly with heavineſs. With fear for that (as it is ſaid) the Sentence of the Paſtor, whether it be juſt or unjuſt, is to be feared. For I was afraid leſt the weak hearers of the Scripture (which ſcarcely obey the juſt Sentence of their Paſtor, much more deſpiſing this unjuſt decreement) through the onrous and importable tranſgreſſion of their Paſtor, ſhould ſhew themſelves diſobedient. With heavineſs I was troubled, and with compaſſion, for that I doubted how the members of the body ſhould do, their Head being ſo greatly out of frame. For what can be more grievous or more to be lamented, touching the ſtate of the Church, than for you, being the Biſhop of the Principal See, to whom appertaineth the Regiment of the whole Church, to ſwerve never ſo little out of the right way? Certes in this you have not a little erred, in that you have gone about to conſtrain your Clergy to ſingleneſs of life, through your imperious Tyranny: whom rather you ought to ſtir up to the continency of marriage. For is not this to be counted a violence and tyranny to the judgment of all wiſe men, when a man is compelled by your Decrees to do that which is againſt the Inſtitution of the Goſpel and the proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt? Seeing then there be ſo many holy Examples both of the Old and New Teſtament, teaching us (as you know) due Information: I deſire your patience not to think it grievous for me to bring a few here out of many.

Prieſts marriage in the old Law permitted.

Firſt, in the old Law, the Lord permitteth marriage unto the Prieſts, which afterward in the new Law we do not read to be reſtrained, but in the Goſpel thus he ſaith, There be ſome Eunuchs which have gelded themſelves for the Kingdom of Heaven, but all men do not take this Word; he that can take it, let him take it. Wherefore, the Apoſtle ſaith, Concerning Virgins, I have no Commandment of the Lord, but only I give counſel. Which counſel alſo all men do not take, as in the Commandment of the Lord before, but many there be falſe Diſſemblers and Flatterers, going about to pleaſe men, and not God, whom we ſee under a falſe pretence of continency to fall into horrible wickedneſs: ſome to lie with their Fathers wives, ſome to be Sodomites, and not to abſtain to play the beaſts with brute Beaſts. And therefore leſt through the infection of this wicked Peſtilence, the ſtate of the Church ſhould too much go to ruine: therefore he ſaid, Becauſe of Fornication, let every man have his own wife. Touching which ſaying, our falſe Hypocrites falſly do lye and feign: as though only it pertained to the Laity, and not to them. And yet they themſelves, ſeeming to be ſet in the moſt holy Order, are not afraid to abuſe other mens wives, and as we ſee (with weeping eyes) all they do outrage in the foreſaid wickedneſs.

The Incontinency of ſingle life.

Theſe men have not rightly underſtood the Scripture, whoſe Breaſts while they ſuck ſo hard, inſtead of milk they ſuck out blood. For the ſaying of the Apoſtle, Let every man have his own wife, doth except none in every deed, but him only which hath the gift of Continency, profeſſing with himſelf to keep and continue his Virgin in the Lord. Wherefore (O reverend Father) it ſhall be your part to cauſe and overſee, that whoſoever, either with hand or mouth, hath made a Vow of Continency, and afterward would forſake, either ſhould be compelled to keep his Vow, or elſe by lawful Authority ſhould be depoſed from his Order.

The ſaying of the Apoſtle.

Prieſts wives.

And

And to bring this to paſs, you ſhall not only have me, but alſo all other of my Order, to be helpers unto you. But that you may underſtand, thoſe ſuch which know not what a Vow doth mean, are not to be violently compelled thereunto, bear what the Apoſtle ſaith to Timothy, A Biſhop (ſaith he) muſt be irreprehenſible, the Husband of one Wife. Which ſentence left you ſhould turn and apply only to the Church; mark what he inferreth after, He that knoweth not (ſaith he) to rule his own Houſhold and Family, how ſhould he rule the Church of God? And likewiſe the Deacons (ſaith he) let them be the Husband of one Wife, which have knowledge to govern their own Houſe and Children. And this Wife, how ſhe is wont to be bleſt of the Prieſt, you underſtand ſufficiently, I ſuppoſe, by the decrees of holy Sylveſter the Pope.

This Decree is contrary to the Biſhops and Prelates in Queen Mary time.

To theſe and ſuch other holy ſentences of the Scripture agreeth alſo he that is the Writer of the rule of the Clergy, writing after this manner, A Clerik muſt be chaſt and continent, or elſe let him be coupled in the Bands of Matrimony, having one Wife. Whereby it is to be gathered, that the Biſhop and Deacon are noted infamous and reprehenſible, if they be divided in more women than one: otherwiſe, if they do forſake one under the pretence of Religion, both they together, as well the Biſhop as the Deacon be here condemned by the Canonical Sentence, which ſaith, Let no Biſhop or Prieſt forſake his own Wife, under the colour and pretence of Religion. If he do forſake her, let him be Excommunicate. And if he ſo continue, let him be dragged. Saint Auguſtine alſo (a man of diſcreet holineſs) ſaith in theſe words, There is no offence ſo great or grievous, but it is to avoid a greater evil.

Furthermore, we read in the ſecond Book of the Tripartite Hiſtory, that when the Council of Nice, going about to eſtabliſh the ſame Decree, would Enact, that Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons, after their Conſecration, either ſhould abſtain utterly from their own Wives, or elſe ſhould be depoſed; then Paphnutius (one of thoſe holy Martyrs, whom the Emperor Maximus had put out the right eye, and hocks their left legs) riſing up amongſt them, withſtood their purpoſed decreement: confeſſing Marriage to be honourable, and calling the Bed of Matrimony to be Chaſtity, and ſo perſwaded the Council from making that Law, declaring thereby what occaſion might come to themſelves and their wives of Fornication. And thus much did Paphnutius (being unmarried himſelf) declare unto them. And the whole Council commending his Sentence, gave place thereto, and left the matter freely without compulſion, to the will of every man, to do therein as he thought fit.

Notwithſtanding there be ſome, which take Saint Gregory for their defence in this matter, whoſe temerity I laugh at, and ignorance I lament: for they know not, being ignorantly deceived, how dangerous the decree of this Hereſie was (being made of S. Gregory*) who afterwards well revoked the ſame, with condigne fruit of Repentance.*

More than ſix thouſand heads of Infants found in the Popes Mote through the wicked Decreer of the ſingle life of Prieſts. Let Prieſts note well the ſaying of Gregory.

For upon a certain day, as he ſent into his Fiſh-pond to have fiſh, and did ſee more than ſix thouſand Infants heads brought to him, which were taken out of the ſame Pond or Mote, he did greatly repent in himſelf the Decree made before touching the ſingle life of Prieſts, which he confeſſed to be the cauſe of that ſo lamentable a murther. And ſo purging the ſame with condigne fruit of Repentance, eſtored again the things which he had decreed before, commending that counſel of the Apoſtle, which ſaith, It is better to marry than to burn; adding moreover of himſelf thereunto, and ſaying, It is better to marry than to give occaſion of death.

Peradventure if theſe men had read with me thus which ſo haſted, I think they would not be ſo raſh in their doing and judging; fearing at leaſt the Lords Commandment, Do not judge, that you be not judged. And Saint Paul ſaith, Who art thou that judgeſt another mans Servant? Either he ſtandeth or falleth to his own Maſter: but he ſhall ſtand; for the Lord is mighty and able to make him ſtand. Therefore let your Holineſs ceaſe to compel and inforce thoſe, whom only you ought to admoniſh, leſt through your own private commandment (which God forbid) you be found contrary as well to the Old Teſtament, Auguſt. ad Donatum. are to the New. For as Saint Auguſtine ſaith to Donatus, This is only that we do fear in your Juſtice, leſt (not for the conſideration of Chriſtian lenity, but for the grievouſneſs and greatneſs of tranſgreſſions committed) you be thought to uſe violence in executing puniſhment of that, which only we do deſire you, (by Chriſt) not to do. For tranſgreſſions are ſo to be puniſhed, that the life of the Tranſgreſſors may repent. Alſo another ſaying of Saint Auguſtine we would have you to remember, which is this, Nil nocendi fiat cupiditate, omnia conſulendi charitate, & nihil fiat immaniter, nihil inhumaniter; that is, Let no thing be done through the greedineſs of hurting, but all things through the charity of profiting; neither let any thing be done cruelly, nothing ungently. Item, of the ſame Auguſtine it is written, In the fear and name of Chriſt I exhort you, which of you ſoever have not the goods of this world, be not greedy to have them. Such as have them, preſume not too much upon them. For, I ſay, to have them is no damnation, but if you preſume upon them, that is damnation; if for the having of them you ſhall ſeem great in your own ſight, or if you do forget the common condition of man through the excellency of any thing you have. Uſe therefore them due diſcretion, tempered with moderation, the which Cup of diſcretion is drawn out of the Fountain of the Apoſtolick Preaching, which ſaid, Art thou looſe from thy wife? Do not ſeek for thy wife. Art thou bound to thy wife? Seek not to be looſed from her. Where alſo it followeth, Such as have wives, let them be as though they had them not, and they that uſe the world, let them be as not uſing it.

Note well the ſaying of Aug.

Item, concerning the Widow, he ſaith, Let her marry to whom ſhe will, only in the Lord. To marry in the Lord, is nothing elſe but to attempt nothing in contracting of Matrimony, which the Lord doth forbid. Jeremy alſo ſaith, Truſt not in the words of lyes, ſaying, The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord. The which ſaying of Jeremy, Hierome expounding, ſaith thus, This may agree alſo, and be applied to ſuch Virgins, which brag and vaunt of their Virginity with an impudent face, pretending Chaſtity, when they have another thing in their Conſcience, and know not how the Apoſtle deſineth the Virgin, that ſhe ſhould be holy in body, and alſo in ſpirit. For what availeth the chaſtity of the body, if the mind inwardly be deſlowred? Or if it have not the other Vertues, which the Prophetical Sermon doth deſcribe? The which Vertues, for ſo much as we ſee partly to be in you; and becauſe we are not ignorant, that this diſcretion, although neglected in this part, yet in the other actions of your life is kept honeſtly of you, we do not deſpair, but you will alſo ſoon amend the little lack which is behind. And therefore with as much gravity as we can, we ceaſe not to call upon you, to correct and amend this your negligence. For although, according to our common calling, a Biſhop is greater than a Prieſt, and Auguſtine was leſs than Hierome; notwithſtanding the good correction proceeding from the leſſer to the greater, was not to be refuſed or diſdained; eſpecially when he which is corrected is found to ſtrive againſt the truth, to pleaſe men. For as Saint Auguſtine ſaith, writing to Boniface, The Diſputations of all men, be they never ſo Catholick or approved perſons, ought not to be had in ſtead of the Canonical Scriptures. So that we may diſprove or refuſe (ſaving the honour and reverence which is due unto them) any thing that is in their writings, if any thing there be found contrary to truth. And what can be found more contrary to the truth than this? When as the truth it ſelf, ſpeaking of continency, not of one only, but of all together (the number only excepted of them which have profeſſed continency) ſaith, He that can take, let him take: the which ſaying, theſe men (moved, I cannot tell by what occaſion) do turn and ſay, He that cannot take, let him be accurſed. And what can be more ſoliſh amongſt men, than when any Biſhop or Archdeacon run themſelves headlong into all kind of luſt, to Adultery and Inceſt, and alſo Sodomitry? Yet ſhame not to ſay, that the chaſt marriage of Prieſts doth ſtink before them: and, as void of all compaſſion and true righteouſneſs, do not deſire or admoniſh their Clerks, as their fellow-ſervants to abſtain, but command them, and enforce them as ſervants, willingly to abſtain. Unto the which imperious Commandment of theirs, or Counſel (whether you will call it) they add alſo this ſoliſh and filthy ſuggeſtion, ſaying, That it is more honeſt, privily to have to do with many women, than apertly in the fight and conſciences of many men to be bound to one wife. The which truly they would not ſay, if they were either of him, or in him, which ſaith,

What it is to marry in the Lord.

What a Virgin is by the diſtinction of the Apoſtle.

Auguſt. ad Bonifacium.

Inconſtitut. Apoſtolic. lib. viii. (Auctore Iacobo Epiſc. Eliberitano) & Concil. Carthag. 3. Can. 3. Auguſt. de Bono Viduit. cap. 8. Hieronym. in Epiſt. ad Ocean. de Epiſcopis.

The chief ſaying of contrary doing of Papiſts.

Woe to you Phariſees, which do all things before men. And ſo the Phariſies, Becauſe they pleaſe men, they are confounded, for the Lord hath deſpiſed them. Theſe be the men, who ought to perſwade us that we ſhould rather ſhame to ſin privily in the ſight of him, to whom all things be open, than ſeem in the ſight of men to be clean. Theſe men therefore, although through their ſinful wickedneſs they deſerve no counſel of godlineſs to be given them: yet we, not forgetting our humanity, ceaſe not to give them counſel by the authority of Gods Word, which ſeeketh all mens ſalvation; deſiring them by the bowels of Charity, and ſaying with the words of Scripture, Caſt out (thou Hypocrite) firſt the beam out of thine own eye, and then thou ſhalt ſee to caſt the mote out of the eye of thy Brother.

Gregorius.

Moreover, this alſo we deſire them to attend, what the Lord ſaith of the adulterous woman, Which of you that is without ſin, let him caſt the firſt ſtone againſt her. As though he would ſay, If Moſes bid you, I alſo bid you. But yet I require you that be the competent Miniſters and Executors of the Law, take heed what you add thereunto; take heed alſo (I pray you) what you are your ſelves: for if (as the Scripture ſaith) thou ſhalt well conſider thy ſelf, thou wilt never deſame or detract another.

Moreover, it is ſignified unto us alſo, that ſome there be of them, which (when they ought like unto good Shepherds to give their lives for the Lords Flock) yet are they puffed up with ſuch pride, that without all reaſon they preſume to rend and tear the Lords Flock with whippings and beatings, whoſe unreaſonable doings Saint Gregory bewailing, thus ſaith, Quid fiat de ovibus quando Paſtores Lupi fiunt? that is, What ſhall become of the Sheep when the Paſtors themſelves be Wolves? But who is overcome, but he which exerciſeth, cruelty? Or who ſhall judge the Perſecutor, but he which gave patiently his back to ſtripes? And this is the fruit which cometh to the Church by ſuch Perſecutors, alſo which cometh to the Clergy by ſuch deſtructful handling of their Biſhops, or rather Infidels. For why may you not call them Infidels, of whom Saint Paul thus ſpeaketh, and writeth to Timothy? That in the later days there ſhall certain depart from the Faith, and give heed to Spirits of Error and Doctrine of Devils: that ſpeak falſe through hypocriſie, having their Conſciences marked with an hot Iron, forbidding to marry, and commanding to abſtain from meats, &c. And this is (if it be well marked) the whole handful of the Darnel and Cockel growing amongſt the Corn: this is the Covens of all madneſs; that whiles they of the Clergy be compelled to relinquiſh the company of their own lawful Wives, they become afterward Fornicators and Adulterers with other women, and wicked Miniſters of other ſinful filthineſs. Theſe be they which bring into the Church of God this Hereſie (as blind Guides leading the blind) that it might be fulfilled which the Pſalm ſpeaketh of, as fore-ſeeing the Errors of ſuch men, and accuſing them after this manner, Let their eyes be blinded, that they ſee not, and bow down always their backs. For ſo much then (O Apoſtolical Sir) as no man which knoweth you, is ignorant, that if you through the light of your diſcretion had underſtood and ſeen what poiſoned peſtilence might have come into the Church through the Sentence of this your Decree, you would never have conſented to the ſuggeſtions of certain wicked perſons. Wherefore we counſel you by the fidelity of our due ſubjection, that with all diligence you would put away ſo great ſlander from the Church of God: and through your diſcreet Diſcipline, you will remove this Phariſaical Doctrine from the Flock of God: ſo that this only Sunamite of the Lords (uſing no more adulterous Huſbands) do not ſeparate the holy people, and the Kingly Prieſthood from her Spouſe which is Chriſt, through an unrecoverable Divorcement: ſeeing that no man without Chaſtity (not only in the Virgins ſtate, but alſo in the ſtate of Matrimony) ſhall ſee our Lord, who with the Father and the Holy Ghoſt liveth and reigneth for ever. Amen.

Pope Adrian the firſt. John the fifth. Martin the ſecond. Adrian the third. Stephan the fifth.

¶ By this Epiſtle of Biſhop Huldericke (above prefixed) the matter is plain (gentle Reader) to conceive what was then the Sentence of learned men concerning the marriage of Miniſters: but that here by the way, the Reader is to be admoniſhed, that this Epiſtle which by Error of the Writer is referred to Pope Nicholas the firſt, in my mind is rather to be attributed to the name and time of Nicholas the ſecond, or Nicholas the third.

After this Pope Nicholas ſucceeded Adrianus the ſecond, Joannes the ninth, Martinus the ſecond, After whom came Adrian the third, and Stephan the fifth. By this Adrian it was firſt decreed, That no Emperor after that time ſhould intermeddle or have any thing to do in the Election of the Pope. And thus began the Emperors firſt decay, and the Papacy to ſwell and riſe aloft. And thus much concerning Romiſh matters for this time.

Then to return where we left, touching the ſtory of King Ethelwolfe. About the later end of his Reign, the Danes which before had invaded the Realm, in the time of King Egbert, as is above declared, now made their reentry again, with three and thirty Ships arriving about Hamſhire: through the barbarous tyranny of whom, much bloodthed and murther happened here among *Engliſh*men, in Dorſetſhire, about Portſmouth, in Kent, in Eaſt-Angle, in Lindſie, at Rocheſter, about London, and in Weſt-Sex, where Ethelwolfe the King was overcome, beſides divers other Kings and Dukes, whom the Danes daily approaching, in great multitudes, in divers Victories had put to flight. At length King Ethelwolfe, with his Son Ethelbaldus, warring againſt them in Southery, at Okley, drave them to the Sea; where they hovering a ſpace, after a while braſt in again with horrible rage and cruelty, as hereafter (Chriſt willing) ſhall be declared, ſo much as to our purpoſe ſhall ſerve, profeſſing in this Hiſtory to write of no matters extern and politick, but only pertaining to the Church. The cauſe of this great Affliction ſent of God unto this Realm, thus I found expreſſed and collected in a certain old written ſtory, which hath no name: the words of which Writer, for the ſame cauſe as he thought to recite them, writing (as he ſaith) Ad cautelam futuro-rum, I thought alſo for the ſame here not to be omitted, albeit in all parts of his Commendation I do not fully with him accord. The words of the Writer be theſe:

Ex veruſta Angelo-Saxonica Hiſtoria Cant. exon. MS.

In Anglorum quidem Eccleſia primitiva, religio clariſſime reſplendauit: ita ut Reges & Reginæ, & Principes ac Duces, Conſules, & Barones, &c.

In Engliſh thus:

In the Primitive Church (ſaith he) of the Engliſh-men, Religion did moſt clearly ſhine, inſomuch that Kings, Queens, Princes and Dukes, Conſuls, Barons, and Rulers of Churches, incenſed with the deſire of the King dom of Heaven, labouring and ſtriving among themſelves to enter into Monkery, into voluntary exile and ſolitary life, forſook all, and followed the Lord. Where, in proceſs of time all vertue ſo much decayed among them, that in fraud and treachery none ſeemed like unto them: neither was to them any thing odious or hateful, but Piety and Juſtice. Neither any thing in price or honour, but civil War and ſhedding of innocent blood. Wherefore Almighty God ſent upon them Pagan and cruel Nations, like ſwarms of Bees, which neither ſpared Women nor Children, as Danes, Norwegians, Gothes, Suevians, Vandals, and Friſians. Who, from the beginning of the Reign of King Ethelwolfe, till the coming of the Normans, by the ſpace near of two hundred and thirty years, deſtroyed their ſinful Land from the one ſide of the Sea to the other, from man alſo to beaſt. For why? They invading England oft-times, of every ſide, went not about to ſubdue and poſſeſs it, but only to ſpoil and deſtroy it. And if it had chanced them at any time to be overcome of Engliſh-men, it availed nothing, when as other Navies ſtill with greater Power in other places were ready upon a ſudden and unawares, to approach upon them, &c. Hiſtoria Cariana.

The cauſe of Gods wrath whereby the Realm of England was flourged by the Danes.

Thus far have you the words of mine Author, declaring the cauſe which provoked Gods anger: whereunto may be adjoyned the wickedneſs, not only of them but of their fore-Fathers alſo before them, who falſely breaking the Faith and Promiſe made with the Britains, did cruelly murther their Nobles, wickedly oppreſſed their Commons, impiouſly perſecuted the innocent Chriſtians, injuriouſly poſſeſſed their Land and Habitation: chaſing the Inhabitants out of Houſe and Country, beſides the violent murther of the Monks of Bangor, and divers foul Slaughters among the poor Britains, who ſent for them to be their Helpers. Wherefore Gods juſt recompence falling upon them from that time never ſuffered them to be quiet from foreign Enemies, till the coming of William the Norman, &c.

Another cauſe rendred, why England was ſcourged of the Danes.

Moreover, concerning the outward occaſions given of the Engliſhmens parts, moving the Danes firſt to invade the Realm, I find in certain ſtories two moſt ſpecially aſſigned. The one unjuſtly given, and juſtly taken. The other not given juſtly, and unjuſtly taken. Of the which two, the firſt was given in Northumberland, by the means of Osbright, reigning under-King of Weſt-Saxons, in the North parts. This Osbright upon a time journeying by the way, turned into the houſe of one of his Nobles called Bruer. Who having at home a wife of great beauty (he being abſent abroad) the King after his dinner (allured with the excellency of her beauty) took her to a ſecret Chamber, where he forceably (contrary to her will) did raviſh her: whereupon ſhe being greatly diſmayed, and vexed in her mind, made her moan to her Husband returning, of this violence and injury received. Bruer conſulting with his Friends, firſt went to the King, reſigning into his hands all ſuch ſervice and poſſeſſions which he did hold of him: that done, he took ſhipping and ſailed into Denmark, where he had great Friends, and had his bringing up before. There making his moan to Cobrinus the King, deſired his aid in revenging of the great villany of Osbright againſt him and his wife. Cobrinus hearing this, and glad to have ſome juſt quarrel to enter that Land, levied an Army with all ſpeed, and preparing all things neceſſary for the ſame, ſendeth forth Inguar and Hubba, two Brethren, his chief Captains, with an innumerable multitude of Danes into England; who firſt arriving at Holdernes, there burnt up the Country, and killed without mercy, both Men, Women and Children, whom they could lay hands upon. Then marching towards York, entred their battel with the foreſaid Oſbright, where he with the moſt part of his Army was ſlain. And ſo the Danes entred the poſſeſſion of the City of York. Some others ſay, and it is by the moſt part of ſtory-writers recorded, that the chief cauſe of the coming of Inguar and Hubba with the Danes, was, to be revenged of King Edmund, reigning under the Weſt-Saxons over the Eaſt-Angles in Norfolk and Suffolk: for the murthering of a certain Dane being Father to Inguar and Hubba, which was falſely imputed to King Edmund. The ſtory is thus told.

Example, what miſchief cometh by Adultery.

Cobrinus King of Denmark.

Inguar and Hubba Captains of the Danes.

Another cauſe of the coming of the Danes.

A certain Nobleman of the Danes of the Kings ſtock, called Lothbroke, Father to Inguar and Hubba, entring upon a time with his Hawk into a certain Schiffe or Cockbote alone; by chance through tempeſt was driven with his Hawk to the coaſt of Norfolk named Rodham, where he being found and detained, was preſented to the King. The King underſtanding his Parentage, and ſeeing his cate, entertained him in his Court accordingly, and every day more and more perceiving his Activities and great Dexterity in hunting and hawking, bare ſpecial favour unto him. Inſomuch that the Kings Falkoner, or Maſter of his Game, bearing privy envy againſt him, ſecretly as they were hunting together in a Wood did murther him, and threw him into a buſh. This Lothbroke, being murthered, within two or three days began to be miſſed in the Kings houſe: of whom no tidings could be heard, but only by a Dog or Spaniel of his, which continuing in the Wood with the corps of his Maſter, at ſundry times came and fawned upon the King: ſo long that at the length they following the trace of the Hound, were brought to the place where Lothbroke lay. Whereupon inquiſition being made, at length by certain circumſtances of words and other evidences, it was known how and by whom he was murthered, that was by the Kings Huntſman named Berike. Who thereupon being convicted, was ſet into the ſame Bote of Lothbroke, alone and without any tackling to drive by Seas, either to be ſaved by the weather, or to be drowned in the deep. And as it chanced, Lothbroke from Denmark to be driven to Norfolk, ſo it happened that from Norfolk he was carried into Denmark, where the Bote of Lothbroke being well known, hands were laid upon him, and inquiſition made of the party. In fine in his torments, to ſave himſelf, he uttered an untruth of King Edmund, ſaying, That the King had put him to death in the Country of Norfolk. Whereupon grudge firſt was conceived, then an Army appointed, and great multitudes ſent into England to revenge that Fact, where firſt they arriving in Northumberland, deſtroyed (as is ſaid) thoſe parts firſt. From thence ſailing into Norfolk they exerciſed the like tyranny there, upon the Inhabitants thereof, eſpecially upon the innocent Prince, and bleſſed Martyr of God, King Edmund. Concerning the farther Declaration whereof hereafter ſhall follow (Chriſt our Lord ſo permitting) more to be ſpoken, as place and obſervation of time and years ſhall require.

Lothbroke Father to Inguar and Hubba.

What miſchief envy worketh.

Murther will out.

In the mean ſeaſon, King Ethelwolfe in this Chapter here preſently touched, when he had chaſed the foreſaid Danes, (as is above rehearſed) from place to place, cauſing them to take the Sea, he in the mean while departeth himſelf both from land and life: leaving behind him four Sons, which reigned every one his order, after the deceaſe of their Father. The names of whom were Ethelbaldus, Ethelbrightus, Ethelredus and Alueredus.

King Ethelwolfe ſendeth for the Danes.

King Ethelbald.

KIng Ethelbald the eldeſt Son of Ethelwolfe, ſucceeding his Father in the Province of Weſt-Sax, and Ethelbright in the Province of Kent, reigned both together the term of five years, one with the other. Of the which two, Ethelbald the firſt left this Infamy behind him in ſtories, for marrying and lying with his ſtepmother, wife to his own Father, named Judith. After theſe two ſucceeded Ethelred, the third Son, who in his time was ſo incumbred with the Danes, burſting in on every ſide, eſpecially about York (which City they then ſpoiled and burnt up) that he in one year ſtood in nine battels againſt them, with the help of Alured his Brother. In the beginning of this Reign, the Danes landed in Eaſt-England, or Norfolk and Suffolk. But (as Fabian writeth) they were compelled to forſake that Country, and ſo took again ſhipping, and ſailed Northward, and landed in Northumberland: where they were met of the Kings then there reigning, called Osbright and Ella, which gave to them a ſtrong fight. But notwithſtanding, the Danes, with the help of ſuch as inhabited the Country, won the City of York, and held it a certain ſeaſon, as is above foretouched.

King Ethelbald. King Ethelbright. { Anno 857.

Ethelred ſucceeded by the Danes.

In the Reign of this Ethelred, the Northumberlanders rebelling againſt the King thought to recover again the former ſtate of their Kingdom out of the Weſt-Saxons hand; by reaſon of which diſcord (as happeneth in all Lands where diſſention is) the ſtrength of the Engliſh Nation was thereby not a little weakened, and the Danes the more thereby prevailed.

What diſcord doth in a Commonwealth.

About the later time of the Reign of this Ethelred, which was about the year of our Lord, 870. certain of the foreſaid Danes being thus poſſeſſed of the North Country (after their cruel Perſecution and murther done there, as partly is touched before) took ſhipping from thence, intending to fail toward the Eaſt-Angles, who by the way upon the Sea met with a Fleet of Danes; whereof the Captains or Leaders were named Inguar and Hubba. Who joyning altogether in one Council, made all one courſe, and laſtly landed in Eaſt-England or Northfolk, and in proceſs of time came to Thetford. Thereof hearing Edmund, then under-King of that Province, aſſembled an Hoſt that gave to them battel. But Edmund and his Company was forced to forſake the Field; and the King with a few perſons fled unto the Caſtle of Framingham, whom the Danes purſued. But he in ſhort while after yielded himſelf to the perſecution of the Danes: anſwering in this manner to the Meſſenger, that told him in the name of Inguar Prince of the Danes, which moſt victoriouſly (ſaith he) was come with innumerable Legions, ſubduing both by Sea and Land many Nations unto him: and ſo now arrived in thoſe parts requireth him likewiſe to ſubmit himſelf, yielding to him his hid Treaſures, and ſuch other goods of his Anceſtors, and ſo to Reign under him: which thing if he would not do, he ſhould (ſaid he) be judged unworthy both of life and reign. Edmund hearing of this proud meſſage of the Pagan, conſulted with certain of his friends; and among others, with one of his Biſhops, being then his Secretary; who ſeeing the preſent danger of the King, gave him counſel to yield to the conditions. Upon this the King pauſing a little with himſelf, at length rendred this anſwer, bidding the meſſenger go tell his Lord in theſe words, That Edmund a Chriſtian King, for the love of temporal life, will not ſubmit himſelf to a Pagan Duke, unleſs he before would be a Chriſtian. Incontinent upon the ſame, the wicked and crafty Dane, approaching in moſt haſty ſpeed upon the King, encountred with him in battel (as ſome ſay) at Thetford; where the King being put to the worſe, and ſpitying the terrible ſlaughter of his men, thinking with himſelf rather to ſubmit his own perſon to danger, than his people ſhould be ſlain, did flie (as Fabian ſaith) to the Caſtle of Framingham, (or as mine Author writeth) to Haleſdon, now called St. Edmundſbury, where this bleſſed man being on every ſide compaſſed of his cruel enemies, yielded himſelf to their perſecution. And for that he would not reny or deny Chriſt and his Laws, they therefore moſt cruelly bound him unto a Tree, and cauſed him to be ſhot to death; and laſtly, cauſed his head to be ſmitten from his body, and caſt into the thick buſhes. Which head and body at the ſame time by his friends was taken up, and ſolemnly buried at the ſaid Haleſdon, otherwiſe now named St. Edmundſbury. Whoſe Brother named Edwoldane (notwithſtanding of right the Kingdom fell next unto him) ſetting apart the liking and pleaſure of the world, became an Hermite of the Abbey of Cerum in the Country of Dorſet.

The perfection and death of St. Edward K. of the Eaſt-angles.

K. Edmund martyr.

After the Martyrdom of this bleſſed Edmund, when the cruel Danes had ſufficiently robbed and ſpoiled that Country, they took again their Ships, and landed in Southery, and continued their journey till they came to the Town of Reading, and there won the Town with the Caſtle, where (as Cambrenſis ſaith) within three days of their thither coming, the foreſaid Inguar and Hubba Captains of the Danes, as they went in purchaſing of their preys or booties, were ſlain at a place called Englefield. Which Princes of the Danes thus ſlain, the reſt of them kept whole together, in ſuch wiſe that the Weſt-ſaxons might take of them none advantage. But yet within few days after, the Danes were holden ſo ſhort, that they were forced to iſſue out of the Caſtle and to defend themſelves in plain battel. In the which (by the induſtry of King Ethelred, and of Alured his Brother) the Danes were diſcomfited, and many of them ſlain; which diſcomfort made them fly again into the Caſtel, and there he kept them for a certain time. The King then committing the charge of them to Ethelwold Duke of Baroke, or Barkſhire, ſo departed. But when the Danes knew of the Kings departure, they brake ſuddenly out of their Hold, and took the Duke unprovided, and ſlew him, and much of his people. And ſo adjoyning themſelves with others that were ſcattered in the Country, imbattelled them in ſuch wiſe, that of them was gathered a ſtrong Hoſt.

Reading taken from the Danes.

Inguar and Hubba ſlain.

Duke Ethelwold ſlain.

As the tidings hereof was brought unto King Ethelred, (which put him in great heavineſs) word alſo was brought the ſame time of the landing of Oſrike King of Denmark, who with affiſtance of the other Danes had gathered a great Hoſt, and were imbattelled upon Aſhdon. To this battel King Ethelred with his Brother Alured (forced by great need) ſped themſelves to withſtand the Danes. At which time the King a little ſtaying behind, being yet at his ſervice, Alured which was come in before, had entred already into the whole fight with the Danes; who ſtruck together with huge violence. The King being required to make ſpeed (he being then at ſervice and meditations) ſuch was his devotion, that he would not ſtir out one foot before their ſervice was fully compleat. In this mean while, the Danes ſo fiercely invaded Alured and his men, that they won the hill, and the Chriſtian men were in the valley, and in great danger to loſe the whole field. Nevertheleſs through the grace of God, and their godly manhood, the King coming from his ſervice, with his freſh Soldiers recovered the hill of the Infidels, and ſo diſcomfited the Danes that day; that in flying away not only they loſt the victory, but moſt part alſo of them their lives. Inſomuch that their Duke or King Oſrike, or Oſege, and five of their Dukes, with much of their people were ſlain, and the reſt chaſed unto Reading Town.

Invocation and prayer profitable in time of battel.

The Danes overthrown at Aſhdon.

After this the Danes yet reaſſembled their people, and gathered a new Hoſt; ſo that within fifteen days they met at Baſingſtoke, and there gave battel unto the King, and had the better. Then the King again gathered his men, which at that field were diſparkled, and with freſh Soldiers to them accompanied, met the Danes within two months after at the Town of Merton, where he gave them a ſharp Battel, ſo that much people were ſlain as well of the Chriſtians as of the Danes, but in the end the Danes had the honour of the field, and King Ethelred there was wounded, and therefore fain to ſave himſelf.

Another battel fought with the Danes at Merton.

After theſe two fields thus won by the Danes, they obtained great circuit of ground, and deſtroyed man and child that would not yield to them. And Churches and Temples they turned to the uſe of Stables, and other vile occupations.

Thus the King being beſet with enemies on every ſide, ſeeing the land ſo miſerably oppreſſed of the Danes, his Knights and Soldiers conformed, his own Land of Weſt-ſaxons in ſuch deſolation, he being alſo wounded himſelf, but eſpecially for that he ſending his Commiſſions into Northumberland, into Mercia, and Eaſtanglia, could have of them but ſmall or little comfort (becauſe they through wicked rebellion were more willing to take the part of the Danes than of their King) was ſore perplexed there withal, as the other Kings were both before him and after him at that time. So that as Malmeſbury witneſſeth, Magis optarent honeſtum exitium, quam tam acerbum imperium: that is, They rather wiſhed honeſtly to die, than with ſuch trouble and ſorrow to reign. And thus this King not long after deceaſed, when he had reigned (as Fabian ſaith) eight years, or as Malmeſbury writeth, but five years. During which time of his reign, notwithſtanding his great troubles and vexations in Martial affairs (as is in ſome Stories mentioned) he founded the Houſe or Colledg of Canons at Excester, and was buried at the Abbey of Wimborne or Woborne. After whoſe deceaſe, for lack of iſſue of his body, the rule of the land fell unto his Brother Alured.

King Alured, otherwiſe called Alfred.

{ Anno 872.

Alured King of England.

AMONG the Saxon Kings hitherto in this Story aforementioned, I find few or none to be preferred (or almoſt to be compared) to this Alured or Alfred, for the great and ſingular qualities in this King, worthy of high renown and commendation; whether we behold in him the valiant acts and manifold travels which he continually from time to time ſuſtained againſt his enemies in wars, during almoſt all the time of his reign, for the publick preſervation of his people; or whether we conſider in him his godly and excellent vertues, joyned with a publick and tender care, and a zealous ſtudy for the common peace and tranquility of the weal publick; appearing as well in his prudent Laws by him both carefully ſet forth, and with the like care executed; as alſo by his own private Exerciſes touching the vertuous inſtitution of his life. Or whether we reſpect that in him, which with equal praiſe matcheth with both the other before; that is, his notable knowledg of good Letters, with a fervent love and Princely deſire to ſet forth the ſame through all his Realm, before his time both rude and barbarous. All which his Heroical properties, joyned together in one Prince, as it is a thing moſt rare, and ſeldom ſeen in Princes now a days; ſo I thought the ſame the more to be noted and exemplied in this good King. Thereby either to move other Rulers and Princes in theſe our days to his imitation; or elſe to ſhew them what hath been in times paſt in their anceſtors, which ought to be, and yet is not found in them. Wherefore of theſe three parts to diſcourſe either part in order, firſt will enter to intreat of his acts and painful travels ſuſtained in defence of the Realm publick, againſt the raging tyranny of the Danes, as they be deſcribed in the Latin Hiſtories of Roger Hoveden, and Huntington; whom Fabian alſo ſeemeth in this part ſomewhat to follow. King Alfred therefore the firſt of all the Engliſh Kings, taking his Crown and Unction at Rome of Pope Leo (as Malmeſbury and Polychronicon do record) in the beginning of his reign, perceiving his Lords and people much waſted and decayed, by the reaſon of the great wars of Ethelred had againſt the Danes, yet as well as he could, gathered a ſtrength of men unto him, and in the ſecond month that he was made King, he met with the Danes beſide Wilton, where he gave them Battel

Ex Rog. Hoved. & Huntingd. Polychronico & Fabiano.

Burthered expulſed his Kingdom, went to Rome, and there died in the Engliſh houſe.

But being far over-matched through the multitude of the contrary part, was put there to the worſe; although not without a great ſlaughter of the Pagan Army. Which Army then of the Danes, after that victory, by compaction made with King Alfred to depart out of his Dominion of Weſtſax, removed from Reading to London, where they abode all that Winter. Where Halden their King, true with Burthred King of Mercians, the next year following voided thoſe parts, and drew to Lindſey, robbing and ſpoiling the Towns and Villages as they went, and holding the common people under their ſervage. From thence after to Repingdon, where they joyning with the three other Kings of the Danes (called Surdrim, Osketell, and Hamond) grew thereby in mighty force and ſtrength. Who then dividing their Army in two parts, the one half remained with Halden in the Country of Northumberland; the reſidue were with the other three Kings, wintring and ſojourning all the next year at Granthridge, which was the fourth year of King Alfred. In the which year King Alfred his men had a conflict on the Sea with ſix of the Danes Ships, of which one they took, the other fled away.

Rollo a Dane firſt Duke of Normandy.

In this year went Rollo the Dane into Normandy, where he was Duke thirty years, and afterward was Baptized in the Faith of Chriſt, and named Robert. The foreſaid Army of the three Dane Kings above mentioned from Grantbridge returned again to Weſtſaxony, and entred the Caſtle of Warrham; where Alfred with a ſufficient power of men was ready to aſſault them. But the Danes ſeeing his ſtrength, durſt not attempt with him, but fought delays, whiles more aid might come. In the mean ſeaſon they were conſtrained to entreat for truce; leaving alſo ſufficient pledges in the Kings hand, promiſing moreover upon their Oath to void the Country of the Weſtſaxons. The King upon the ſurety let them go. But they falſely breaking their league, privily in the night brake out, taking their journey toward Exceſter. In which journey they loſt ſix ſcore of their ſmall Ships, by a tempeſt at Sandwich, (as Henry Huntington in his Story recordeth.) Then King Alfred followed after the Horſemen of the Danes, but could not overtake them before they came to Exceſter, where he took of them pledges and fair promiſes of peace, and ſo returned. Notwithſtanding the number of the Pagans did daily more and more increaſe, in ſo much (as one of my Authors ſaith) that if in one day thirty thouſand of them were ſlain, ſhortly after they increaſed double as many again. After this truce taken with King Alfred, the Danes then voided to the Land of Mercia, whereof part of that Kingdom they kept themſelves, part they committed to one Ceolulphus; upon condition that he ſhould be vaſſal to them, and at their commandment, with his people at all times.

{ Anno 879. } The next year enſuing, which was the ſeventh year of the reign of Alfred, the Danes now having all the rule of the North part of England, from the river of Thames, with Mercia, London, and Eſſex, diſdained that Alfred ſhould bear any Dominion on the other ſide of Thames Southward. Whereupon the foreſaid three Kings, with all the forces and ſtrength they could make, marched toward Chippenham in Weſtſex, with ſuch a multitude, that the King with his people was not able to reſiſt them; inſomuch that the people which inhabited there, ſome fled over the Sea, ſome remained with the King, divers ſubmitted themſelves to the Danes. Thus Alfred being overſet with multitude of enemies, and forſaken of his people, having neither hand to hold, nor hope to recover that which he had loſt, withdrew himſelf with a few of his Nobles about him, into a certain Wood-country in Somerſetſhire called Etheling; where he had right ſcant to live with, but ſuch as he and his people might purchaſe by hunting and fiſhing. This Edeling or Etheling, or Ethelingſey, ſtandeth in a great marith or moor, ſo that there is no acceſs unto it without Ship or Boat, and hith in it a great Wood called Selwood, and in the middle a little Plain about two acres of ground, in which Ile is Veniſon, and other wild Beaſts, with Fowl and Fiſhes, great plenty. In this Wood King Alfred at his firſt coming eſpied a certain deſert cottage of a poor Swineherd, keeping Swine in the Wood, named Dunwolfus; of whom the King then unknown was entertained and cheriſhed, with ſuch poor fare as he and his wife could make him. For the which King Alfred afterward ſet the poor Swineherd to learning, and made him Biſhop of Wincheſter.

K. Alfred flieth into a deſert Wood.

Etheling, which is to ſay, the Ile of Nobles.

A Swineherd made Biſhop of Wincheſter.

In the mean ſeaſon, while King Alfred accompanied with a few was thus in the deſert Wood, waiting the event of theſe miſeries, certain Stories record of a poor Beggar, which there came and asked his Alms of the King; and the night following he appeared to the King in his ſleep, ſaying, his name was Cuthbert, promiſing (as ſent from God unto him for his good charity) great victories againſt the Danes. But to let theſe dreaming Fables paſs, although they be teſtified by divers Authors, as both Wilhelmus lib. de Reg. Polychronicon, Reg. Hovedon, Fornalenſis, and others more. Notwithſtanding the King in proceſs of time was ſtrengthened and comforted more, through the Providence of God; reſpecting the miſerable ruin of the Engliſh men. Firſt, the Brother of King Halden the Dane before mentioned, coming in with three and thirty Ships, landed about Devonſhire; where by chance being reſiſted by a Buthment of King Alfreds men (who for their ſafeguard there lay in Garriſon) were ſlain to the number of 1300 men, and their Enſign called the Raven was taken. Hovedennis in his Book of Continuationes writeth, that in the ſame conflict both Inguar and Hubba were ſlain among the other Danes. After this King Alfred being better cheared, ſhewed himſelf more at large; ſo that daily reſorted to him men of Wiltſhire, Sommerſetſhire, and Hamſhire, till that he was ſtrongly accompanied.

Hiſtor. Bas. Engliſh. & Higden. deſcr.

Then the King put himſelf in a bold and dangerous venture, as writeth Wilhelmus lib. de Reg. Polychron. and Fabian, which followeth them both. For he apparelling him in the habit of a Minſtrel (as he was very skilful in all Saxon Poems) with his inſtrument of Muſick entred into the Tents of the Danes, lying then at Eddendun; and in ſhewing there his Interludes and Songs, eſpied all their ſloth and idleneſs, and heard much of their counſel; and after returning to his company, declared unto them the whole manner of the Danes. Shortly upon the ſame, the King ſuddenly in the night fell upon the foreſaid Danes, and diſtreſſed and ſlew of them a great multitude, chaſed them from that coaſt. Inſomuch that through his ſtrong and valiant aſſaults upon his enemies out of his Tower of Edeling newly fortified, he ſo incumbred them, that he clearly voided the Country of them, between that and Selwood. His ſubjects eſtſoons hearing of theſe his valiant victories and manful deeds, drew to him daily out of all coaſts. Who through the help of God, and their aſſiſtance, held the Danes ſo ſhort, that he won from them Wincheſter, and divers other good Towns. Briefly, at length he forced them to ſeek for peace; the which was concluded upon certain Covenants. Whereof one and the principal was, that the forenamed Gutrum their King ſhould be Chriſtened. The other was, that ſuch as would not be Chriſtened, ſhould depart and void the Country.

A bold ſtratagem or Attempt of K. Alfred, returning himſelf in the habit of a Tome of the Danes.

Ex Fabian.

Upon theſe Covenants, firſt the ſaid Gutrum the Daniſh Prince coming to Wincheſter, was there Chriſtened with twenty of his greateſt Dukes or Nobles. To the which Gutrum King Alfred being his Godfather at his Baptiſm, named him Athelſtan. Who after a certain ſeaſon that he had feaſted the ſaid Danes, he according to his promiſe before made, gave unto their King the Country of Eaſtanglia, containing Northfolk and Suffolk, and part of Cambridgeſhire. Moreover (as ſaith Polychronicon) he granted to the Danes that were Chriſtened, the Country of Northumberland. So the reſidue that would not be Chriſtened, departed the land, and ſailed into France; where what vexation and harm they wrought, the Chronicles of France do partly comprehend.

King Athelſtan thus having the poſſeſſion of theſe Countries, had all Eaſtangles under his obedience. And albeit that he held the ſame Province as in fee of the King, and promiſed to dwell there as his liege man, yet that notwithſtanding, he continued more like a Tyrant by the term of eleven years, and died in the twelfth year. During the which ſpace, King Alfred having ſome more reſt and peace, repaired certain Towns and ſtrong Holds afore by the Danes impaired. Alſo he builded divers Houſes of Religion, as the Houſe of Nuns at Shaftſbury; another Religious Houſe at Etheling he founded. Item, another in Wincheſter, named the New Monaſtery. Item, he endued richly the Church of St. Cuthert in Dirham. He ſent alſo to India to pay and perform his Vows to St. Thomas of Inde, which he made during the time of his diſtreſs againſt the Danes.

About

About the fifteenth year of the reign of Alfred, the Danes returning from France to England, landed in Kent, and ſo came to Rocheſter and beſieged that City; and there lay ſo long that they builded a Tower of timber againſt the Gates of the City. But by ſtrength of the Citizens that Tower was deſtroyed, and the City defended, till King Alfred came and reſcued them. Whereby the Danes were ſo diſtreſſed, and ſo neer trapped, that for fear they left their Horſes behind them, and fled to their Ships by night. But the King when he was thereof aware, ſent after them and took ſixteen of their Ships, and ſlew many of the ſaid Danes. This done, the King returned to London, and repaired the ſame honourably (as ſaith Hovedenus) and made it habitable, which before was ſore decayed and feebled by the Danes.

{ Anno 891. } The third year after this, which was the nineteenth year of the reign of King Alfred, the foreſaid Athelſtan the Daniſh King of Northfolk (which by Alfred was Chriſtened before) deceaſed. Not long after this, about the one and twentieth year of this Kings reign, the Danes again landed in four places of this land; which was in Eaſt-England, in the North, and in the Weſt, in two places. Before the landing of theſe Danes it chanced King Alfred, hearing of the death of King Athelſtan, and of other complaints of the Danes, was then in Eaſt-England when theſe tidings came to him.

The Danes driven from Northfolk.

When King Alfred was hereof aſcertained, for ſo much as ſome of the Danes were landed in that Coaſt, thinking with themſelves the further they went in thoſe parts the leſs reſiſtance to have, and the more ſpeed, as they were wont to have before; Alfred therefore ſending meſſengers in all haſt to Ethelred Duke of Mercia, to aſſemble to him an Hoſt to withſtand the Danes which landed in the Weſt, made forth toward his enemies there, where he was in Eaſtanglia, whom he purſued ſo ſharply, that he drove them out from thoſe parts. They then landed in Kent, whither the King with his people ſped him, and in like manner drave the Danes from thence, without any great fight, ſo far as in our Authors we can ſee. After this, again the Danes took ſhipping, and ſailed into Northwales, and there robbed and ſpoiled the Britains, and from thence returned by the Sea into Eaſtanglia, with an hundred Ships, and there reſted them, for ſo much as the King then was gone Weſtward.

The Danes return again to Northwales.

The Danes driven out of Chester.

The fourth Hoſt of the Danes the ſame year came to Cheſter, which at length they won; but then the Country adjoyning preſſed ſo ſore upon them, and beſieged them ſo long, keeping themſelves within the City, that at the laſt the Danes wearied, with the long ſiege, were compelled to eat their own Horſes for hunger. But by appointment at laſt they gave over the Town, and went about by Northwales to Northumberland, which was about the three and twentieth year of King Alfred. Which Alfred in the mean while with his Hoſt ſped him thitherward. Then the Danes leaving their ſtrong Holds and Caſtles, garniſhed with men and victual, took again ſhipping, and ſet their courſe in ſuch wiſe that they landed in Suſſex, and ſo came to the Port of Lewes, and from thence toward London, and builded a Tower or Caſtle near unto the River of Ly, twenty miles from London. But the Londoners hearing thereof, manned out a certain number of men of Arms, who with the aſſiſtance of them of that Country, put the Danes from that Tower, and after beat it down to the ground. Soon after the King came down thither, and to prevent the dangers that might enſue, commanded the River of Ly to be divided in three ſtreams; ſo that where a Ship might ſail in times before, there a little Boat might ſcantly row. From thence the Danes leaving their Ships and Wives, were forced to flie that Country, and took their way again toward Wales, and came to Quadrage near to the River of Severn; where upon the borders thereof they builded them a Caſtle, there reſting themſelves for a time, whom the King eſtſoons with his Army purſued. In the mean time the Londoners at Ly taking the Danes Ships, ſome of them they brought to London, the reſt they fired. During all theſe three years, from the firſt coming of the Danes to Ly, England was afflicted with three manner of ſorrows, with the Danes, with peſtilence of men, and mortain of beaſts. The which troubles notwithſtanding, yet the King manfully reſiſted the malice of his enemies, and thanked God always, what trouble ſoever fell to him, or unto his Realm, and ſuſtained it with great patience and humility. Theſe three years overpaſt, the next following, which was the eight and twentieth of the reign of Alfred, the Danes divided their Hoſt, of whom part went to Northumberland, ſome to Northfolk, part ſailed over to France, ſome other came to Weſtſax, where they had divers conflicts with the Engliſh men, both by land, and eſpecially upon the Sea; of whom ſome were ſlain, many by ſhipwrack periſhed, divers others were taken and hanged, and thirty of their Ships were taken.

Not long after this, King Alfred, when he had reigned nine and twenty years and ſix months, changed this mortal life. And thus much (and more peradventure than will ſeem to this our Eccleſiaſtical Story appertaining) touching the painful labours and travels of this good King; which he no leſs valiantly atchieved, than patiently ſuſtained for the neceſſary defence of his Realm and ſubjects.

{ Anno 899. }

Now if there be any Prince who liſteth to ſee and follow the vertuous and godly diſpoſition of this King, both touching the inſtitution of his own life, and alſo concerning his careful Government of the Common-weal, thus the Hiſtories of him do record. That at what time he being young, perceiving himſelf ſome what diſpoſed to the vice of the fleſh, and thereby letted from many vertuous purpoſes, did not as many young Princes and Kings Sons in the world be now wont to do, that is, to reſolve themſelves into all kind of carnal licenſe, and diſſolute ſenſuality, running and following without bridle whither ſoever their licenſe given doth lead them (as therefore not without cauſe the common Proverb reporteth of them, that Kings Sons learn nothing well elſe but only to ride.) Meaning thereby, that Princes and Kings Sons having about them flatterers, which bolſter them in their faults, only their Horſes give to them no more than to any other; but if they fit not faſt, they will caſt them. But this young King ſeeing in himſelf the inclination of his fleſhly nature, minding not to give himſelf ſo much as he might take, but rather by reſiſtance to avoid the tentation thereof, befought God that he would ſend to him ſome continual ſickneſs, in quenching of that vice, whereby he might be more profitable to the publick buſineſs of the Common-wealth, and more apt to ſerve God in his calling. Ceſtren. lib. 5. cap. 1. Feth. cap. 17.

The Godly Petition of K. Alfred.

Then at Gods Ordinance he had the Evil called Fiene, till he came to the age of twenty years, whereof at length he was cured (as is faid in ſome Stories) by the Virgin called Modwen, an Iriſh woman. After this ſickneſs being taken away, to him fell another, which continued with him from the twentieth year of his age to forty and five (according to his own Petition and requeſt made unto God) whereby he was the more reclaimed and attempered from the other more great inconveniencies, and leſs diſpoſed to that which he did moſt abhor.

Modwen.

Moreover, to behold the bountiful goodneſs joyned with like prudence in this man, in the ordering and diſpoſing his riches and rents, it is not unworthily to be recited, how he divided his goods in two equal parts; the one appertaining to uſes ſecular, the other to uſes ſpiritual or Eccleſiaſtical. Of the which two principal parts, the firſt he divided into three portions, the firſt to the behoof of his houſe and family; the ſecond upon the workmen and builders of his new works, whereof he had great delight and cunning; the third upon ſtrangers. Likewiſe the other ſecond half upon Spiritual uſes, he did thus divide in four portions, one to the relieving of the poor, another to the Monaſteries, the third portion to the Schools of Oxford, for the maintaining of good Letters; the fourth he ſent to foreign Churches without the Realm. This alſo is left in Stories written to his commendation for his great tolerance and ſufferance, that when he had builded the new Monaſtery at Wincheſter, and afterward his Son Edward had purchaſed of the Biſhop and the Chapter a ſufficient piece of ground for certain Offices to be adjoyned unto the ſame, and had given for every foot of ground, Marcam auri pleni ponderis, (which was as I think a mark of Gold, or more) yet Alfred therewith was not greatly diſcontented to ſee his Coffers ſo waſted.

How well and godly this King spent his time.

from all vain pastimes and idleness he was this sloth well declare, which in the three parts of William de Reg. and other Writers is told of him. That he so divided the day and night in three parts, if he were not let by wars and other great business, that eight hours he spent in study and learning, and other eight hours he spent in prayer and almes-deeds, and other eight hours he spent in his natural rest, sustenance of his body, and the needs of the Realm. The which order he kept duly by the burning of waxen Tapers kept in his Closet by certain persons for the same purpose. Guliel.

The God'ly Laws of K. Alfred.

How studious he was and careful of the Common-wealth, and maintenance of publick tranquillity, his Laws most godly set forth and devised by him may declare.

A notable example of thievery and felony inured this Realm.

Wherein especially by him was provided for the extirpating and abolishing out all theft and thieves out of the Realm. Whereby the Realm through his vigilant care was brought into such tranquillity, or rather perfection, that in every cross or turning way he made to be set up a golden Brouch, at least of silver gilded, through his Dominions, and none so hardy neither by day nor night to take it down; for the more credit whereof the words of the Latin story be these, Armillas aureas tuberet suspendi, quas viantium aviditatem irritaret, dum non essent qui eas abriperent, &c. Guliel. lib. de regibus Angl. And no great marvel therein, if the Realm in those days was brought into such an order, and that justice then was so well minister'd, when the King himself was so vigilant in overseeing the doings of his Judges and Officers. Whereof thus also we read in the said Author testified: Judiciorum a suis hominibus factorum inquisitor perpetam actorum aspernimus corrector. i.e. He was (saith mine Author, speaking of the King,) a vigilant inquisitor of the doings of his Judges, and a strict punisher of their misdoings. Fornalensis also writing upon the same, thus saith, Facta ministrorum suorum & potissime judicum diligenter investigavit, adeo ut quos ex avaritia aut imperitia errare cognoscerat, ab officio removebat: that is, He did diligently search out the doings of his Officers, and especially of his Judges, that if he knew any of them to err either through covetousness or unskilfulness, them he removed from their office.

Ex Historia Fornalensi.

And thus much concerning the valiant acts and noble vertues of this worthy Prince; whereunto although there were no other ornaments adjoyning besides, yet sufficient were they alone to set forth a Prince worthy excellent commendation. Now besides these other qualities and gifts of Gods grace in him above mentioned, remaineth another part of his no little praise and commendation, which is his learning and knowledg of good letters, wherein if he not only was excellently expert himself, but also a worthy maintainer of the same through all his Dominions; where before no use of Grammar or other Sciences was practised in this Realm, especially about the West parts of the land, there through the industry of the King, Schools began to be erected, and studies to flourish. Although among the Britains, in the Town of Chester in Southwales, long before that in King Arthurs time, as Galfridus writeth, both Grammar and Philosophy, with other Tongues was then taught. After that some other Writers record that in the time of Egbert King of Kent, this Iland began to flourish with Philosophy. About which time some also think that the University of Grantchester, near to that which now is called Cambridg, began to be founded by Beda, following this conjecture therein, for that Alcuinus (before mentioned) which after went to Rome and from thence to France, in the time of Charles the Great, where he first began the University of Paris, was first trained up in the exercise of studies at the same School of Grantchester. Beda lib. 111. cap. 8. Writing also of Sigebert King of Eastanglers, declareth how the said Sigebert returning out of France into England (according to the examples which he did there see) ordered and disposed Schools of Learning through the means of Felix then Bishop, and placed in them Masters and Teachers, after the use and manner of the Cantuarits. And yet before these times, moreover it is thought that there were two Schools or Universities within the Realm, the one Greek at the Town of Greglade, which afterward was called Kirkelade; the other for Latin, which place was then called Latimlade, afterward Lethelade near to Oxford.

But howsoever it chanced that the knowledg and study of good Letters being once planted in this Realm, afterward went to decay; yet King Alfred deserveth no little praise, for restoring or rather increasing the same. After whose time they have ever since continued, albeit not continually through every age in like perfection. But this we may see, what it is to have a Prince learned himself, who feeling and tasting the price and value of Science and knowledg, is thereby not only the more apt to rule, but also to instruct and frame his subjects, from a rude barbarity, to a more civil congruency of life, and to a better understanding of things, as we see in this famous Prince to happen. Concerning whose first education and bringing up, although it was somewhat late before he entred any Letter, yet such was the apt towardness and docility of his nature, that being a child, he had the Saxon Poems (such as were used then in his own tongue) by heart and memory. Who afterwards with years and time grew up in such perfection of learning and knowledg, in so much that (as mine Author saith) Nullus Anglorum fuerit vel intelligendo acutior, vel interpretando elegantior. The which thing in him the more was to be marvelled, for that he was twelve years of age before he knew any Letter. Then his Mother, careful and tender over him, having by chance a Book in her hand, which he would fain have, promised to give him the same, so that he would learn it. Whereupon he for greediness of the Book, effoons learned the Letters, having to his School-master Pleimundus, after Bishop of Canterbury. And so daily grew he more and more in knowledg, that at length, as mine Author saith, Plurimam partem Romanæ Bibliothecæ Anglorum auribus dedit, optimam prædam peregrinarum mercium civium usibus convertens: that is, A great part of the Latin Library he translated into English, converting to the uses of his Citizens a notable prey of foreign ware and Merchandize &c. Of which Books by him and through him translated, was Orosius, Pastorale Gregorii, the History of Beda, Boetius de consolatione Philosophiæ. Also a Book of his own making, and in his own tongue, which in the English speech he called, A Hand-book; in Greek called it, Enchiridion, in Latin, A Manual. Besides the History of Beda translated into the Saxons Tongue, he also himself compiled a story in the same Speech, called, The Story of Alfred, &c. which both Books in the Saxons Tongue I have seen, though the Language I do not understand. And as he was learned himself excellently well, so likewise did he inflame all his Countrymen to the love of Liberal Letters, as the words of the Story reporteth, Illes præmiis, his minis hortando nemimum illiteratum ad quamlibet curiæ dignitatem assurgere permittens: that is, He exhorted and stirred his people to the study of Learning, some with gifts, some by threats, suffering no man to aspire to any dignity in the Court except he were learned. Moreover another Story thus saith, speaking of his Nobles, Optimates quoque sua ad literaturam addiscendam in tantum provocavit, ut filii filios suos, vel satem si filios non haberent, servos suos, literis commendarent: that is, Also his Nobles so much he did allure to the imbracing of good Letters, that they set all their Sons to School; or if they had no Sons, yet their servants they caused to be learned. Whereby the common Proverb may be found not so common as true, Such as is the Prince, such be the subjects. He began moreover to translate the Psalter in English, and had almost finished the same, had not death prevented him. Guliel. de Regib. Angl. In the Prologue of the Book, Intituled, Pastorale Grego. thus he writeth, declaring the cause why he was so earnest and diligent in translating good Books from Latin into English, shewing the cause thereof why he so did, as followeth: Quod Ecclesiæ in quibus innumeræ prisce Bibliothecæ continebantur, cum libris a Danis incensæ sint: quodque in tota insula studium literarum ita abolitum esset, ut quisque minus timeret capitis periculum, quam studiorum exercitia adire. Quapropter se in hoc Anglis sua consulere, &c. that is, The cause was for that innumerable ancient Libraries which were kept in Churches, were consumed with fire by the Danes; and that men had rather suffer peril of their life than to follow the exercises of studies; and therefore he thought thereby to provide thereby for the people of the English Nation, &c.

The Psalter translated into English by King Alfred.

The cause why the King turned Latin Books into English.

It is told of him both in Polychronicon, Malmesbury, Fornalensis, and other stories more, whereof I have no names, that he seeing his Country (namely Westward) to be so so desolate of Schools and Learning, partly to profit himself, partly to furnish his Country and subjects with better knowledg, first sent for Grimbaldus a learned Monk out of Fraunce to come into England. Also he sent for another learned man out from the parts of Wales, whose name was Asserius, whom he made Bishop of Shireborne. Item, out of Mercia he sent for Werefridus Bishop of Worcester, to whom he put the Dialogues of Gregory to be translated. But chiefly he used the counsel of Neotus, who then was counted for an holy man, an Abbot of a certain Monastery in Cornwal. By the advisement of which Neotus, he sent for these learned men above recited; and also ordained certain Schools of divers Arts, first at Oxford, and also franchised the same with many great liberties. Guliel. Fornalens. Fab. c. 171. Whereof perhaps the School, now called the New Colledg (first then begun of this Neotus) might take his name, which afterward peradventure the Bishops of Winchester after a larger manner did re-edifie and enlarge with greater possessions.

Learned men sent for and placed about the King.

Moreover, among other learned men, which were about King Alfred, Historians make mention of Joannes Scotus (a godly Divine, and a learned Philosopher) but not that Scotus whom now we call Duns. For that Johannes Scotus came after this many years. This Johannes is described to be of a sharp wit, of great eloquence, and well expert in the Greek Tongue, pleasant and merry of nature and conditions, as appeareth by divers his doings and answers. First, he coming to France out of his own Country of Scotland, by reason of the great tumults of war, was there worthily entertained, and for his learning had in great estimation of Carolus Calvus the French King; whom he commonly and familiarly used ever to have about him, both at Table, and in Chamber. Upon a time the King sitting at meat, and seeing something (belike in this John Scot) which seemed not very Courtly, cast forth a merry word, asking of him what difference there was betwixt a Scot and a Sot? Whereunto the Scot sitting over against the King somewhat lower, replied again suddenly, rather than advisedly (yet merrily) saying, Mensa tantum, that is, the Table only; importing thereby himself to be the Scot, and so calling the King a Sot by craft. Which word how other Princes would have taken of stomach, I know not: but this Charles, for the great reverence he bear to his learning, turned it but to a laughter among his Nobles, and so let it pass.

Johannes Scotus

The nature of Johannes Scotus to the French King.

Another time the same King being at dinner was served with a certain dish of Fish, wherein were great fishes and a little one. After the King had taken thereof his repast, setteth down to Johannes Scotus the foresaid Fish, to distribute unto the other two Clerks sitting there with him, which were two tall and mighty persons, he himself being but a little man. Johannes taketh the Fish, of the which the two great he taketh and carveth to himself, the little Fish he reacheth to the other two. The King perceiving his division thus made, reprehended the same. Then Johannes whole manner was ever to find out some honest matter to delight the King, answered to him again, proving his division to stand just and equal: For here (saith he) be two great, and a little, pointing to the two great fishes and himself; and likewise here again is a little one and two great, pointing to the little fish, and two great persons. I pray you (saith he) what odds is there, or what distribution can be more equal? Whereat the King with his Nobles being much delighted, laughed merrily.

Johannes Scotus translated Hierarchiam Dionysii from Greek into Latin.

At the request of this Charles Surnamed Bald, the French King, this Scotus translated the Book of Dionysius, intituled, De Hierarchia, from Greek into Latin, word for word, Quo fit (as my Author saith) ut vix intelligatur Latina litera, quam nobilitate magis Græca, quam positione construitur Latina. He wrote also a Book, De corpore & sanguine Domini, which was afterward condemned by the Pope, in concilio Vercellensi.

The Book of Johannes Scotus called Hell su-ccary.

The same Johannes Scotus moreover compiled a Book of his own, giving it a Greek Title, Περὶ φυσικῶν διαιρέσεων, that is, De naturæ divisione. In which Book (as saith my forefaid Author) is contained the resolution of many profitable questions; but so that he is thought to follow the Greek Church rather than the Latin, and for the same was counted of some to be an Heretick; because in that Book some things there be which in all points accord not with the Romish Religion. Wherefore the Pope writing to the said King Charles of this Scotus, complaineth, as in his own words here followeth: Relatum est Apostolatui nostro, quod opus Dionysii Areopagitæ, quod de divinis nominibus, & de cælestibus ordinibus, Græco descripsit eloquio, quidam vir Joannes (genere Scotus) nuper transtulit in Latinum. Quod, juxta morem Ecclesiæ, nobis mitti, & nostro judicio debuit approbari; præsertim quum idem Joannes (licet multæ scientiæ esse prædicetur) olim non sane sapere, in quibusdam frequenti rumore dicatur, &c. That is, Relation hath been made unto our Apostleship, that a certain man called Johannes a Scotish man, hath translated the Book of Dionysius the Areopagit, of the names of God, and of the Heavenly Orders, from Greek into Latin. Which Book, according to the Custom of the Church, ought first to have been approved by our judgment; namely, seeing the said John (albeit he be said to be a man of great learning and science) in time past hath been noted by common rumor to have been a Man not of upright or found Doctrine, in certain points, &c. For this cause, the said Scotus being confirmed to remove from France, came into England, allured (as some testifie) by the Letters of Alured or Alfred, of whom he was with great favour entertained and conversant a great space about the King: till at length (whether before or after the death of the King, it is uncertain) he went to Malmesbery, where he taught certain Scholars a few years; by the which Scholars at last most impiously he was murthered and slain with their Penknives, and so died, as Stories say, a Martyr, buried at the said Monastery of Malmesbury with this Epitaph.

Johannes Scotus added more to the Greek Church than the Latin.

Johannes Scotus accused of the Pope for an Heretick.

King Alfred having these helps of learned men about him, and no less learned also himself, part over his time not only to great utility and profit of his subjects, but also to a rare and profitable example of other Christian Kings and Princes for them to follow. This foresaid Alfred had by his wife, called Ethelwitha, two Sons, Edward and Ethelward; and three Daughters, Elfleda, Ethelgora, and Ethelguida: Quæ omnes liberalibus fecit artibus eruditi; that is, Whom he set all to their Books and study of Liberal Arts, as my Story testifieth. First, Edward his Eldest Son succeded him in the Kingdom; the second Son Ethelward died before his Father: Ethelgora his middle Daughter was made a Nun, the other two were married, the one in Mereland, the other to the Earl of Flanders. Thus King Alfred the valiant, vertuous and learned Prince, after he had thus Christianly governed the Realm the term of nine and twenty years, and six months, departed this life, 5 Cal. Novemb. and lyeth buried at Winchester, Anno Dom. 901. Of whom this I find moreover greatly noted and commended in History, and not here to be forgotten, for the rare example thereof touching this Alfred, that wheresoever he was, or whithersoever he went, he bear always about him in his bosom or pocket a little Book containing the Psalms of David, and certain other Orisons of his own collecting. Whereupon he was continually reading or praying, whensoever he was otherwise vacant, having leisure thereunto. Finally, what were the vertues of this famous King, this little Table here under written, which is left in ancient writing in the remembrance of his worthy and memorable life, doth sufficiently in few lines contain.

Moreover in the History of Henricus Huntingtonensis these Verses I find written in the commendation of the fame Alfred made (as I suppose, and by his words appeareth) by the faid Author, whereof I thought not to defraud the Reader, the words whereof here follow:

Epitaphium Regis Alfredi.

Nobilitas innata tibi probitate bonorum,
Armipotens Alfrede, dedit, probitasque laborem,
Perpetuumque labor nomen, cui mixta dolori
Gaudia semper erant, spes semper mixta timori.
Si modo victor eras, ad crastina bella parabas,
Si modo victus eras, ad crastina bella parabas.
Cui vestes sudore jugi, cui sicca cruore
Tincta jugi, quantum sit cuus regnare, probarunt.
Non fuit immensi quisquam per climata mundi,
Cui tot in adversis nil respirare liceret.
Nec tamen aut ferro contritus ponere ferrum,
Aut gladio potuit, vitæ finisse dolores.
Jam post transactos vitæ regnique labores,

Etheredus, Pleimundus, Athelmus, Ulfelmus, Odo Archbishop of Canterbury.

In the story of this Alfred, a little above mention was made of Pleimundus Schoolmaster to the faid Alfred, and alfo Bifhop of Canterbury, fucceeding Etheredus there Bifhop before him. Which Pleimundus governed that See the number of thirty and four years. After Pleimundus fucceeded Athelmus, and fat twelve years. After him came Ulfelmus thirteen years. Then followed Odo a Dane born in the faid See of Canterbury, and governed the fame twenty years, being in great favour with King Ethelftan, King Edmund, and Edwin, as in procefs hereafter (Chrift willing) as place and order doth require, fhall more at large be expreffed.

As touching the courfe and proceedings of the Romifh Bifhops there, where I laft entred mention of them, I ended with Pope Stephan the fifth. After his time was much broil in the Election of the Bifhops of Rome, one contending againft another; insomuch that within the fpace of nine years, were nine Biſhops. Of the which, firſt was Formoſus, who ſucceeded next unto the forenamed Stephan the fifth, being made Pope againſt the mind of certain in Rome, that would rather Sergius, than Deacon of the Church of Rome to have been Pope. Notwithſtanding Marx and Money prevailed on Formoſus part. This Formoſus, of whom partly alſo is mentioned in other places of this Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, being before Biſhop of Pontinale, had in times paſt (I know not on what cauſes) offended Pope John the eighth of that name, by reaſon whereof, for fear of the Pope, he voided away, and left his Biſhoprick. And becauſe he being ſent for again by the Pope, would not return, therefore was he Excommunicated. At length coming into France to make there his ſatisfaction unto the Pope, he was degraded from a Biſhop into a ſecular mans habit, ſwearing to the Pope that he would no more re-enter into the City of Rome, nor claim his Biſhoprick again, ſubſcribing moreover with his own hand to continue from that time in the ſtate of a ſecular perſon. But then Pope Martin (the next Pope after John) releaſed the faid Formoſus of his Oath, and reſtored him again unto his Biſhoprick; whereby Formoſus entred not only into Rome again, but alſo obtained ſhortly after the Papacy. Thus he being placed in the Popedom, arofe a great doubt or controverſie among the Diviſes of his Conſecration, whether it was lawful or not; ſome holding againſt him, that forſomuch as he was ſolemnly depoſed, degraded, unprieſted, and alſo ſworn not to reiterate the State Eccleſiaſtical, therefore he ought to be taken no otherwiſe than for a ſecular man. Others alledged again, that whatſoever Formoſus was, yet for the dignity of that Order, and for the credit of them whom he ordered, all his Conſecration ought to ſtand in force, eſpecially ſeeing the ſaid Formoſus was afterward received and abſolved by Pope Martin from that his perjury and degradation, &c. In the mean time (as witneſſeth Sigebertus) this Formoſus ſendeth for King Arnulphus for aid againſt his adverſaries; who then marching toward Rome, was there reſiſted by the Romans from entring. But in the ſiege (ſaith the Author) the Romans within ſo plaid the Lions, that a poor Hare (or ſuch a like thing) coming toward the City, the Hoſt of Arnulphus followed after with ſuch a main cry, that the valiant Romans upon the walls for very fear (where there was no hurt) caſt themſelves deſperately over the walls, ſo that Arnulphus with little labour ſcaled the walls, and got the City. Thus Arnulphus obtaining the City of Rome, reſcueth Pope Formoſus, and beheadeth his adverſaries; whom the Pope to gratifie with like recompence again, bleſſeth and Crowneth him for Emperor. Thus Formoſus fitting faſt about the ſpace of four or five years, followed his Predeceſſors; after whoſe time (as I ſaid) within the ſpace of nine years were nine Biſhops, as followeth. But in the mean time, concerning the ſtory of this Formoſus declared by Sigebert, and many other Chronicles; this thing would I gladly aſk, and more gladly learn of ſome indifferent good Catholick perſon, which not of obſtinacy, but of ſimple error being a Papiſt, would anſwer his conſcience; Whether doth he think the holy Order of Prieſthood, which he taketh for one of the ſaven Sacraments, to be Character indelebile, or not? If it be not indelebilis, that is, If it be ſuch a thing as may be put off, why then doth the Popes Doctrine ſo gladly call and ſo hold the contrary, pretending it to be Indelebilis, unremoveable? If it be indeed ſo as they teach and affirm, Indelebilis character, why then did Pope John, or could Pope John annihilate and evacuate one of his ſeven Pope-holy-Sacraments, making of a Prieſt, a non-Prieſt, or layman, uncharactering his own Order, which is (as he ſaith) a Character, which in no wiſe may be blotted out, or removed? Again, howſoever Pope John is to be judged in this matter to do either well or not well; this would I know, if he did well in ſo diſpriesting and diſcharacthering Formoſus for ſuch private offences? If yea, how then ſtandeth his doing with his own Doctrine which teacheth the contrary? If he did not well, how then ſtandeth his Doctrine with his doings to be true, which teacheth that the Pope with his Synod of Cardinals cannot err? Moreover, if this Pope John did not err in his diſordering Formoſus, how then did Martinus his Succeſſor not err in repealing the ſaid doing of his Predeceſſor? or how did not Pope Formoſus err himſelf, who being unprieſted by Pope John afterward, without reiterating the character or order of Prieſthood, took upon him to be Pope, and made Acts and Laws in the Church? Again, if Formoſus now Pope did not err, how then did Pope Stephan his Succeſſor afterward not err, who did annihilate the Confecration, and all other Acts of the ſaid Formoſus as erroneous? Or again, if we ſay that this Stephan with his Synod of Cardinals did right, then how could it be that Pope Theodore, and Pope John the tenth, which came after the foreſaid Stephan, did not plainly err, who approving the Confecration of Formoſus, did condemn and burn the Acts Synodal of Stephan and his Cardinals, which before had condemned Formoſus, according as in ſtory here conſequently may appear?

After Formoſus had governed the See of Rome five years, ſucceeded firſt Bonifacius the ſixth, who continued but five and twenty days. Then came Stephan the ſixth, who ſo envied the name of his Predeceſſor Formoſus, that he abrogated and diſſolved his Decrees, and taking up his body after it was buried, cut two fingers off his right hand, and commanded them to be caſt into Tiber, and then buried the body in a private or lay-mans Sepulchre.

Thus after Stephan had ſat in the Chair of Peſtilence one year, ſucceeded in the ſame Chair Pope Romanus, and ſat three months, repealing the Acts decreed by Stephan his Predeceſſor againſt Formoſus. Next to whom came Theodorus the ſecond, who likewiſe taking part with Formoſus againſt the foreſaid Stephan, reigned but twenty days. Then ſat Pope John the tenth, who did fight and repugn againſt the Romans, and to confirm the cauſe of Formoſus more ſurely, did hold a Synod at Ravenna of 74 Biſhops, with the French King Eudo, and his Arch-Biſhops being preſent at the ſame. At the which Council were ratified all the Decrees and doings of Formoſus, and the contrary Acts of the Synod of Stephan the ſixth were burned. This Pope lived not long after fully two years, years, after whom ſucceeded Benedictus the fourth, who kept the Chair three years. After whom Leo the firſt was next Pope, who within forty days of his Papacy, was with ſtrong hand taken and caſt in Priſon by one Chriſtopher a poor, his own houſhold Chaplain, whom he had long nourished before in his houſe. Which thing (ſaith Platina) could not be done without great conſpiracy and much ſlaughter of men. Which Chriſtopher, being Pope about the ſpace of ſeven Months, was likewiſe himſelf hoyſted from his Papal Throne by Sergius, like as he had done to his Maſter before. And thus within the ſpace of nine years had been nine Popes one after another. Then Sergius after he had thruſt down Pope Chriſtopher, and ſhorn him Monk into a Monaſtery, occupied the room ſeven years. This Sergius a rude man and unlearned, very proud and cruel, had before been put back from the Popedom by Formoſus above mentioned. By reaſon whereof, to revenge Formoſus again being now in his Papacy, he cauſed the body of Formoſus where it was buried, to be taken up; and afterward, ſitting in the Papal See (as in his Pontificalibus) firſt degraded him, then commanded his Head to be ſmitten off, with the other three fingers that were left (as Sigebertus writeth) which done, he made his body to be thrown into Tiber, depoſing likewiſe all ſuch as by the ſaid Formoſus before had been conſecrated and invefted. This body of Formoſus, thus thrown into Tiber, was afterward (as our Writers ſay) found and taken up by certain Fiſhers, and ſo brought into St. Peter's Temple. At the preſence whereof (as they ſay) certain Images there ſtanding by, bowed down themſelves, and reverenced the ſame, with lie and all. But ſuch deceivable Miracles of Stocks and Images, in Monkiſh and Friery Temples, be to us no news, eſpecially here in England, where we have been ſo inured with the like and ſo many, that ſuch wily practices cannot be to us inviſible, though this Crown-from generation think themſelves to dance in a Net. But the truth is, while they think to deceive the ſimple, theſe wily beguilers moſt of all deceive themſelves, as they will find, except they repent. By this Pope Sergius firſt came up the uſe to bear about Candles on Candlemas day, for the purifying of the Bleſſed Virgin; as though the Sacred Conception of Jeſus the Son of God, were to be purified as a thing impure, and that with Candle light.

After Sergius entred Pope Anaſtaſius, in whoſe time the body of Formoſus aforenamed, is thought to be found of Fiſhermen in the River of Tiber, and ſo brought (as is ſaid) into the Temple to be ſaluted of the Images; which thing may quickly be tainted as a lie. For how is it to be thought, that the body of Formoſus ſo long dead before, and now lying ſeven years in the River, could remain whole all that while, that Fiſhers might take it up, and diſcern it to be the ſame? After Anaſtaſius had fate two years, followed Pope Lando, the father (as ſome hiſtories think) of Pope John, which John is ſaid to be the Paramour of Theodora, a famous Harlot of Rome, and ſet up of the ſame Harlot, either againſt Lando, or after Lando his father ſucceeded in his room. There is a Story-writer called Luitprandus, who writing De Imperatorib. l. 2. cap. 13. maketh there mention of this Theodora and Pope John the Eleventh, and ſaith moreover, that this Theodora had a Daughter named Marozia, which Marozia had by Pope Sergius above mentioned, a Son which afterward was Pope John the twelfth. The ſame Marozia afterwards chanced to marry with Guido Marqueſs of Toſcia, through the means of which Guido and his friends at Rome, the brought to paſs that this Pope John the Eleventh was ſmothered with a Pillow laid to his mouth after he had reigned thirteen years, and ſo the foreſaid John the twelfth (for ſo that might ſucceed next after him. But becauſe the Clergy and People of Rome did not agree to his Election, therefore was Pope Leo the ſixth in his place ſet up. Thus Pope John the Son of Sergius, and Marozia being dejected, reigned Pope Leo ſeven months. After him Pope Stephan two years, who being poyſoned, then was Pope John the twelfth above rehearſed, the ſon of Sergius and Marozia ſet up again in the Papacy, where he reigned near the ſpace of five years. Of the wickedneſs of this Strumpet Marozia, how ſhe married two brethren, one after the death of the other, and how ſhe governed all Rome, and the whole Church at that time I let it paſs. Although the Latine Verſes wherewith the faid Luitbprandus doth invey againſt ſuch Women as marry two brethren, were neither worthy here to be recited, and perhaps might be further applied than to that Marozia of Rome; but for ſhortneſs I let them alſo paſs. After John the twelfth, followed Pope Stephan three years, Pope Leo three years and four months. Pope Stephan the eighth three years and four months. Pope Martin three years and ſix months; after him Pope Agapetus eight years and ſix months. About whoſe time, or a little before, began firſt the Order of Monks, called Ordo Cluniacenſis, &c. But now to leave off theſe monſtrous matters of Rome, and to return again to our Country of England, where we laſt left before.

King Edward the elder.

After the Reign of the famous King Alfred, his Son Edward ſucceeded, ſirnamed the Elder: where firſt is to be noted, that before the Conqueſt of the Normans, there was in England three Edwards; firſt, this Edward the Elder; ſecondly, Edward the Martyr; thirdly, Edward the Confeſſor; whereof here after (by the grace of Chriſt) ſhall follow in order as place ſhall give to be declared. This Edward began his Reign the year of our Lord 901. and governed the Land right valiantly and nobly four and twenty years. In knowledge of good letters and learning he was not to be compared to his Father, otherwiſe in Princely Renown, in Civil Government, and ſuch like Martial Proweſs, he was nothing inferiour, but rather excelled him; through whoſe valiant acts firſt the Princedom of Wales and Kingdom of Scotland, with Conſtantine King thereof, were to him ſubdued. He adjoyned moreover to his dominion, the Country of Eaſtanglia, that is, of Norfolk, Suffolk, and Eſſex. All Merceland alſo he recovered, and Northumberland out of the hands of the Danes. In all his Wars he never lightly went without Victory. The Subjects of his Provinces and Dominions were ſo inured and hardened in continual practice and feats of War, that when they heard of any enemies coming (never tarrying for any bidding from the King or from his Dukes) ſtraightways they encountred with them, both in number and knowledge of the order of War excelling always their adverſaries. Guliel. de regi. Ita hoſtes militibus contemptui, regi vifui erant; ſo that, ſaith he, ſo was the coming and aſſaulting of their enemies, to the people and common ſouldiers but a trifle, to the King but a ridicle. Among other adverſaries which were bufie rather than wiſe, in aſſailing this King, was one called Clito Ethelwoldus a young man, King Edwards Uncles ſon, who firſt occupying the Town of Wimborn (taking thence a Nun with him, whom then he had married) fled by night to Northumberland, to adjoyn himſelf unto the Danes, who was made chief King and Captain over them. Then chaſed from thence, he fled over into France, but ſhortly returning again into England, he landed in Eaſtengland, where the ſaid Clito with a company of Danes of that Country gathered to him, deſtroyed and pilled much of the Country about Crokesford and Crikeland. And ſo paſſing over Thames, after he had ſpoiled the land there to Bradenſtock, returned again to Norfolk and Suffolk, where he meeting with an ambuſhment of Kentiſh men, which dragged and tarried after the main Hoſt of Edward, contrary to his commandment, incloſed them in, and ſlew the moſt part of them. Soon after, the two Hoſts meeting together, between the two Ditches of S. Edmunds land, after a long fight, Clito with many of the Danes were ſlain, and the remnant were conſtrained to ſeek for peace, which upon certain conditions, and under a Tribute was to them granted.

Clito Ethelwold rebelleth againſt King Edward. A. 904.

In proceſs about the twelfth year of his Reign, the Danes repenting them of their Covenants, and minding to break the ſame, aſſembled an Hoſt, and met with the King in Staffordſhire, at a place called Tetenhall, and ſoon after at Wodenfield, at which two places, the King ſlew two Kings, two Earls, and many thouſands of Danes that occupied the Country of Northumberland. A. 911.

Thus the importunate rage of the Danes being aſſwaged, King Edward having now ſome leiſture given from Wars to other ſtudies, gave his mind to the building or repairing of Cities, Towns and Caſtles, that by the Danes were were raced, ſhattered and broken. As firſt of Cheſter, which City he double enlarged to that it was before, compaſſing the Caſtle within the Walls of the ſame, which before ſtood without. That done, the King builded a ſtrong Caſtle at Hereford, in the edge of Wales. Alſo for the ſtrengthning of the Country, he made a Caſtle at the mouth of the water of Aven, and another Caſtle at Buckingham, and the third fait thereby upon the River of Ouſe. Moreover, he builded or re-edified the Towns of Tocceſter and Wigmor, and deſtroyed the Caſtle that the Danes had made at Demesford. Likewiſe upon the River of Trent, againſt the old Town of Notingham, he builded a new Town on the South ſide, and made a Bridge over the River between the ſaid two Towns. Alſo by the River of Merce he builded a City or Town in the North end of Mercia, and named it Thilwal, and after repaired the City of Mancheſter, that fore was defaced with Wars of the Danes.

Cheſter repaired and enlarged. The Caſtle of Hereford builded upon the River of Aven and Ouſe. The Towns of Tocheſter and Wigmor builded. The new Town of Notingham builded. Thilwal. Mancheſter repaired.

In this renewing and building of Towns and Caſtles, for the more fortifying of his Realm, his Siſter Elfleda, daughter of King Alfred, and married to the Duke of Mercia (as is afore mentioned) was no ſmall helper. Of this Elfleda, it is firmly of Writers affirmed, that ſhe being (as is ſaid) married to Ethelred, Duke of Mercia, after ſhe had once aſſaied the pains of Women in travelling with her child, ſo much ſhe abhorred ever after the embracing of her Husband, that it ſeemed to her (ſhe ſaid) not ſeemly for a Noble Woman to uſe ſuch fleſhly liking, whereof ſo great ſorrow and travel ſhould enſue. And yet notwithſtanding, the ſame Elfleda for all her delicate tenderneſs, in eſchewing the natural paſſion which neceſſity giveth to Women, was ſo hardy in Warlike dangers which nature giveth not to Women, that fighting againſt the Danes (ſo venturous ſhe was of ſtomach) four of her next Knights, which were guardians of her body, were ſlain faſt by her. This Elfleda, among her other noble acts, whereby ſhe deſerved praiſe, was a great helper and ſtirrer up of her brother Edward, who builded and newly repaired many Caſtles and Towns, as Tamworth beſides Lichfield, Stafford, Warwick, Shrewsbury, Watrisbury, Eldisbury, beſides Cheſter in the Foreſt now deſtroyed. Alſo in the North end of Mercia, upon the River of Merce, a Caſtle called of Mercia, upon the River of Merce, a Caſtle called Brimmis-Rimcern; alſo a Bridge over Severn, named Brimmisbury Bridge.

The laws of King Alfred and K. Edward.

As touching the Laws and Statutes of this Edward, as alſo of his father Alfred, made before him, I omit here to record them for length of matter and waſte of time: yet notwithſtanding this admonition, by the way I think good to note, that in thoſe days of theſe ancient Kings reigning in England, the authority then both of conferring Biſhopricks and ſpiritual Promotions, and alſo of preſcribing Laws as well to the Churchmen, as to the Laity, and of ordering and intermedling in matters meerly ſpirituall, was then in the hands of Kings ruling in the Land, and not only in the hand of the Pope, as appeareth by theſe Laws of Alfred.

Si quis fornicetur cum uxore aliena, &c.
Si quis in quadrageſima ſanctum velum in publico vel in lecto, &c.
Ut Chriſtiani Deum diligant & paganiſmo renuncient, &c.
Si quis Chriſtianitatem mutet, &c.
Si quis ordinatus ſacris furetur, &c.
Si Presbyter ad rectum terminum ſanctum chriſma, &c.
Si duo fratres vel cognati cum una aliqua fornicentur, &c.

Note how Kings of England in times paſt had authority in ſpiritual cauſes.

By theſe and other ſuch like Conſtitutions of King Alfred it may appear, how the governance and direction of the Church in thoſe days depended not upon Monſieur le Pope of Rome, but upon the King which here in their time (under the Lord) did govern the Land. To this alſo the example of King Edwards time gives teſtimony; which Edward with Pleimundus (above mentioned) Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and with other Biſhops in a Synod aſſembled, aſſigned and elected ſeven Biſhops in ſeven Metropolitan Churches of the Realm. Which were, the firſt Fridelſtan, the ſecond Adelſtan, the third Werſtan, the fourth Adeleme, the fifth Edulfus, the ſixth Dernegus, the ſeventh Kenulphus; in which Election, the Kings Authority ſeemed then alone to be ſufficient, &c.

This Edward (as in the beginning was ſaid) reigned 24 years, who had three Wives, Egwin, Elfled and Ethelwild. Of Egwin he had his eldeſt Son, Adelſtan, who next ſucceeded in the Kingdom, and a Daughter, married after to the Duke of Northumberland. Of Elfled he received two Sons and ſix Daughters, to wit, Ethelwald and Edwin. Ethelwald was excellently well ſeen in all knowledge of learning, much reſembling both in countenance and conditions his Grandfather Alfred, and died ſoon after his father. Of his ſix Daughters, two of them, Elfled and Ethelhida were made Nuns, the other four were married, Edgina to Charles the French King in his Fathers time, Ethilda, by King Ethelſtan was married to Hugo the Son of Duke Robert. Edgitha and Algina, were both ſent to Henricus, Prince of Almains. Of which two ſiſters, the ſecond, the ſaid Henricus married to his Son Otho, who was the firſt Emperor of the Almains. The other ſiſter, which was Edgitha, the foreſaid Henricus married unto a certain Duke, about the border of the Alps in Italy. Of his third Wife Ethelwida, he received two Sons, Edmund and Edred, both which reigned after Adelſtan, and two Daughters, Egburga, whom he made a Nun, and Eadguina, who was married unto Ludovicus, Prince of Aquitania in France. Theſe Sons and Daughters King Edward thus brought up; his Daughters he ſet to ſpinning, and to the Needle: Guliel. de reg. his Sons he ſet to the ſtudy of learning, Ut quaſi Philoſophi ad gubernandam rempublicam non ſam rudes procederent: that is, To the end, that they, being at firſt made Philoſophers, ſhould be the more expert thereby to govern the Commonwealth.

King Ethelſtan, or Adelſtan.

King Ethelſtan or Adelſtan.

Ethelſtan or Adelſtan, after the death of Edward his Father, began his Rein in England, and was crowned at Kingſton. He was a Prince of worthy memory, valiant and wiſe in all his acts, nothing inferiour unto his Father Edward. In like worldly renown of Civil Government, joyned with much proſperous ſucceſs, in reducing this Realm under the ſubjection of one Monarchy. For he both expelled the Danes, ſubdued the Scots, and quieted the Welſhmen, as well in Northwales, as alſo in Cornwal. The firſt enemy againſt this Ethelſtan, was one Elfredus, who, with a faction of ſeditious perſons, conſpiring againſt the ſaid Ethelſtan at Winchester, incontinently after the death of his Father, went about to put out his eyes. Notwithſtanding, the King at eſcaping that danger, through the help of God, was at that time delivered. Elfred upon the ſame being accuſed, fled to Rome, there before the Pope to purge himſelf by his Oath. Who being brought to the Church of St. Peter, and there ſwearing (or rather forſwearing) himſelf to be clear, which indeed was guilty thereof, ſuddenly upon his Oath fell down, and ſo being brought to the Engliſh houſe in Rome, within three days after departed. The Pope ſending word unto King Ethelſtan, whether he would have the ſaid Elfred buried among Chriſtians or no? at length, through the perſwaſions of his friends and kinſfolks, it was concluded that he ſhould be buried in Chriſtian Burial. This ſtory, although I find it in no other Writers mentioned, but only in the Chronicles of Guliel. lib. de regib. much as it beareth the witneſs and words of the King himſelf, as teſtified in an old deed of gift, given to the Monaſtery of Malmesbury, I thought the ſame the more to be of credit. The words of the King proceed in this tenor as followeth.

{Anno 927.

In the ſecond year of the Reign of King Ethelſtan, for an unity and peace to be had between the King and the Danes of Northumberland, he married to Sitherica their King, his ſiſter, whereof mention is made before; but ſhortly after, within one year, this Sitherica died. After whoſe death, King Ethelſtan ſeized that Province into his own hands, putting out the ſon of the foreſaid Sithericus, called Alanus, who with his brother Godfridus fled, the one into Ireland, the other unto Conſtantine, King of the Scots. And when he had thus accorded with the Danes of Northumberland, he ſhortly made ſubject unto him Conſtantine King of the Scots. But the ſaid Conſtantine meeked himſelf ſo lowly to the King, that he reſtored him to his former Dignity, ſaying, that it was more honour to make a King, than to be a King.

Northumberland ſubdued to King Ethelſtan.

The Scots ſubdued to the King of England, but more honour to make a King than to be a King.

Not long after, the ſaid Conſtantine, King of Scots did break Covenant with King Ethelſtan; wherefore he aſſembled his Knights, and made towards Scotland, where he ſubduing his enemies, and bringing them again unto due ſubjection, returned into England with Victory. Here by the way, in ſome Story-writers (who, forgetting the office of Hiſtoricians, ſeem to play the Poets) is written and recorded for a marvel, that the ſaid Ethelſtan, returning out of Scotland into England, came to York, and ſo into the Church of Saint John of Beverly, to redeem his Knife, which before he had left there for a Pledge at his going forth. In the which place he praying to God, and to St. John of Beverly, that he might leave there ſome remembrance whereby they that came after might know that the Scots by right ſhould be ſubdued to the Engliſh men, ſmote with a Sword (they ſay) upon a great hard ſtone ſtanding near about the Caſtle of Dunbar, that with the ſtroke thereof the ſtone was cut a large Ell deep, with a lieu leſs deep alſo than was the ſtroke in the ſtone. But of this poetical or fabulous ſtory, albeit Polychronicon, Fabian, Formilenſis, and others more conſtantly accord in the ſame, yet in Guliel. and Henricus no mention is made at all. But peradventure, he that was the inventor firſt of this tale of the ſtone, was diſpoſed to lie for the Whetſtone; wherefore in my mind he is worthy to have it.

A fabulous Miracle falſly reported of King Ethelſtan.

Of like truth and credit ſeemeth alſo to be this that followeth, about the ſame year and time under the Reign of King Ethelſtan, being the eighth year of his Reign, of one Briſtanus Biſhop of Wincheſter, who ſucceeded Frichſtanus in the ſame See, and governed that Biſhoprick four years. This Briſtanus being a devout Biſhop in prayer and contemplation, uſed much among his ſolitary walks, to frequent late the Church-yard, praying for the ſouls there, and all Chriſtian ſouls departed. Upon a time the ſaid Briſtanus after his wonted manner proceeding in his devotions, when he had done, came to Requieſcant in pace. Whereunto ſuddenly a great multitude of ſouls anſwering together with one voice, ſaid Amen. Of this Miracle albeit I have not much to ſay (haſting to other matters) yet this queſtion would I aſk of ſome indifferent Papiſt, which were not wilful, but of ignorance deceived; Whether this multitude which here anſwered, Amen, were the ſouls of them buried in the Church-yard, or not? If yea, then how were they in Purgatory, what time they were heard in that place anſwering Amen? Except we ſhould think Purgatory to be in the Church-yard at Wincheſter, where the ſouls were heard then ſo many anſwering and praying, Amen. And yet this ſtory is teſtified by the accord of Writers of that time, Guliel. Polybron. Hovedenus, Jornalenſis, and others more. Much like Miracles and Propheſies alſo we read of Elpleegus which ſucceeded him; but becauſe we haſte to other things, let theſe Fables paſs.

Biſhop Briſtanus Biſhop. {Anno 933.

A ridiculous Miracle forged upon Briſtanus Biſhop of Wincheſter.

A Miracle of ſouls anſwering, Amen.

Ye heard a little before, how King Ethelſtan after the death of Sitherices King of Northumberland, ſeized that Land or Province into his own hand, and put out his ſon Alanus, who after flying into Swetland, married the daughter of Conſtantine King of Scots. By whoſe ſtirring and exhortation he gathered a company of Danes, Scots, and others, and entred the mouth of Humber with a ſtrong Navy of ſix hundred and fifteen Ships.

A fore Battel fought at Brunford.

Whereof King Ethelſtan, with his brother Edmund, having knowledge, prepared his Army, and at length joyned in fight with him and his people, at a place called Brimamburuch or Brimford, where he fighting with them from morning till evening, after a terrible ſlaughter on both ſides (as the like hath not been ſeen lightly in England) had the Victory. In the which Battel were ſlain five ſmall and under-Kings, with Conſtantine King of Scots, and twelve Dukes, with the moſt part of all the ſtrangers which at that time they gathered to them. Here alſo our Writers put in another Miracle in this Battel, how King Ethelſtans Sword miraculouſly fell into his ſheath, through the prayer of Odo then Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Another like Miracle of King Ethelſtan found Odo Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Concerning this Battel, I find in a certain written Chronicle theſe Verſes, which becauſe they ſhould not be loſt, I thought not unworthy here of rehearſal.

After this Victory thus obtained of the Danes and Scots, King Ethelstan also subdued (or at least quieted the North Britains, whom he conventing together at Hereford (or thereabouts) forced them to grant unto him as a yearly tribute, twenty pounds of Gold, three hundred pounds of silver, and of heads of Neat five and twenty hundred, with Hawks and Dogs, to a certain number. This done, he went to Exceſter, and there likewise subduing the South Britains about Exceſter and Cornwal, repaired the Walls of Exceſter with sufficient strength, and so returned.

The North Britains brought to Tribute.

The South Britains subdued.

Among these victorious and noble acts of this King, one blot there is of him written and noted, wherein he is as much worthy to be reprehended, as in the other before to be commended; (that is) the innocent death and murther of his brother Edwin. The occasion thereof was this. King Edward aforenamed their Father, in the time of his youth coming by a certain Village or Grange where he had been nursed and brought up of a Child, thought of courtelie to go to see how his Nurse did, where he entering into the house, espied a certain young Damsel beautiful and right seemly attired, Egwina by name. This Egwina, before, being a poor mans daughter, had a Vision by night, that of her body sprang such a bright light of the Moon, that the brightnes thereof gave light to the Realm of England, by reason whereof she was taken into the foresaid house, and daintily brought up instead of their own daughter, for hope of some commodity to ensue thereby, as afterward it came to pass. For King Edward (as is declared) coming into the house, and ravished with the beauty of the Maiden, begat of her the same Night this Ethelſtan. Wherefore the said Ethelſtan being thus basely born of Egwina, the first Wife to Edward (as is said) before he was Married to her, and fearing his next Brother Edwin, which was rightly born, especially being stirred thereunto through the smiſter suggestion of his Mother) did cast such displeasure to the foresaid Edwin his Brother, being yet but young, that (notwithstanding his innocent submission and purgation made against his accusers) he caused him to be set in an old rotten Boat in the broad Sea (only with one Esquire with him) without any tackling or other provision to the same. Where the young and tender Prince being dismaid with the rage of Winds and of the Floods, and now weary of his life, cast himself over-board into the Sea, and so was drowned. Notwithstanding the Esquire shifting for himself as he could, and recovering the body of his Master, brought it to Sandwich, where it was buried. Which done, the King, afterwards coming to the remembrance of himself, was stricken with great repentance the space of seven years together, and at length was revenged of him that was the accuser of his Brother. This accuser (as is said) was the Kings Cup-bearer, who (as God the righteous Judge of all things would have it) upon a certain solemn Feast, bearing the Cup unto the King, chanced in the middle of the Floor to stumble with one foot, helping and recovering himself with the other, saying in these words, Thus one brother (as you see) helpeth another, the sword being thus spoken in the hearing of the King, so moved his mind, that forthwith he commanded the false accuser of his Brother, to be had out to execution. Whose just recompence I would with to be a warning to all men, what it is to sow discord between Brother and Brother.

King Ethelſtan seeketh the death of his own brother.

A note to learn not to sow discord between brother and brother.

Ethelſtan (brsides his seven years lamentation for this act) builded the two Monasteries of Midleton and of Michlenes for his Brothers sake, or (as the stories say) for his Soul. Whereby it may appear what was the cause much special in those days of building Monasteries, to wit, for releasing the sins both of them deported, and them alive: which cause, how it standeth with the grace and verity of Christs Gospel, and of his passion, let the Christian Reader try and examine with himself. This cruel fact of the King towards Edwin, caused him afterward to be more tender and careful towards his other Brethren and Sisters left in his hands unmarried. Which Sisters, as is partly in the Chapter before declared, he richly bestowed in great Marriages; as one to the King of Northumberland, Sithericus; another he gave unto Lewis King of Aquitania; the third to Henricus, Duke of Almain for his Son Otho, who was the first Emperor of the Germans. Whereby it is to be understood, that the Empire at this time began first to be translated from France (where it remained about one hundred years and an half) unto Germany, where it hath ever since continued.

The cause of building Athles examined.

Otho 1st Emperor of the Germans.

The fourth of his Sisters being a Virgin of singular beauty, Hugo the French King required to be given unto him, sending to King Ethelſtan precious and flumptuous Presents, such as were not before seen in England. Among the which Presents and Gifts, besides the rare odors of fundry favours, and fine Spices; and besides the precious and costly Gems, namely, of Smaragds of moſt redolent green; besides, also many and great Coursers and Palfries richly trapped; especially of one Jewel (as Writers make mention) which was a certain Vessel finely and subtilly made of the Precious Stone Onychinus, so radiantly wrought, that in it appeared the lively Corn growing, and Mens Images walking, &c. Over and besides was sent also the Sword of Conſtantine the great, with the name of the possessor, written in Golden Letters, where in the Hast of the same all beaten in Gold, was one of the iron Nails wherewith our Saviour on the Cross was nailed. Of the verity wherefore I am not disposed at this present much to say what I suspect; but that this in the Ecclesiastical story of Euſebius is evident, that two of the aforesaid Nails of Christ were spent on the Bridle of Conſtantine, the third he cast into the Sea in a raging Tempest. Wherefore, if Christ were nailed with four Nails, perhaps, this Nail might be one. If he were nailed but with three, I see not how this story can stand with other stories, neither how this fourth Nail can stand with the truth. Among the rest moreover, was the Spear (as is reported) wherewith the side of our Saviour was opened, which also the said Conſtantine was wont to carry in the field against his enemies: with a portion likewise of the holy Cross inclosed in Christal, also a part of the Crown of Thorn in like manner inclosed, &c. Of the which Reliques, part was given to Vinchester, part to the Church of Malmesbury, where King Ethelſtan was buried. As this King was endued and inlarged by the gift of God (the setter up and disposer of all Kings) with great Victories of worldly Renown, having under his subjection both Scots and Britains, and the whole Monarchy of the Land: so he devised divers good and wholsome Laws for the government of the same, as well concerning the state of the Orders Ecclesiastical, as also of the Secular or Lay-people. Whereby it is to be understood, that the usurped power of the Bishop of Rome, did not then extend it self so largely, nor so proudly to derogate from the authority of Kings and Princes, but that every one in his own Dominion had (under God, and not under the Pope) the doing of all matters within the same his Dominion contained, whether they were causes temporal or spiritual, as by the Decrees and Constitutions of this King (and also of other as well before him, as after him) may evidently be testified, as where he amongst other Laws thus ordaineth touching the Bishop, in words as follow.

Concerning one of the mills when with our Saviour Christ was crucified.

The said Ethelſtan besides, prescribed other Constitutions also, as touching Tithes giving, where he saith and proclaimeth: Ego Ethelſtanus Rex, conſilio Uſfalini Archiepiſcopi mei & aliorum Epiſcoporum, mandlo præpoſitis omnibus in Regno meo, in nomine Domini & ſanctorum omnium, ut imprimis reddant de meo proprio decimas Deo, tam in vivente capitali, quam in mortuis frugibus terræ: & Epiſcopi mei ſimiliter faciant de ſuo proprio, & Aldermanni mei & præpoſiti mei, &c. That is, I Ethelſtan King, charge and command all my Officers through my whole Realm, to give Tithes unto God of my proper Goods, as well in living Cattel, as in the Corn and Fruits of the ground, and that my Biſhops likewiſe of their proper goods, and mine Aldermen, and my Officers and Headmen ſhall do the ſame.

The Law of King Ethelſtan concerning Tithes.

Tithes.

Item, this I will, that my Biſhops and other Headmen do declare the ſame to ſuch as be under their ſubjection, and that to be accomplished at the Term of St. John the Baptist. Let us remember what Jacob laid unto the Lord, Of all things that thou giveſt to me I will offer Tithes unto the Lord, &c. Alſo what the Lord ſaith in the Goſpel of St. Matthew, To him that hath it ſhall be given, and he ſhall abound. We muſt alſo conſider how terrible it is written in Books, that we will not offer our tenths, from us nine parts ſhall be taken away, and only the tenth part ſhall be left us, &c. And in the ſame place, after that he hath affigned the Church Rights to be paid in the place whereto they belong, it followeth thus: Facite etiam ut mihi mea propria capitalia, quæ mihi poteritis reſte acquirere. Nolo ut aliquid mihi injuſte conquiratis. Sed omnia veſtra comedo vobis eo tenore, quo mihi mea ſimiliter exopteris. Cavete ſimul & vobis, & eis quos admonere debetis, ab ira Dei, & tranſgreſſione mea.

The King would have no more goods wrongfully.

Among his other Laws and Ordinances, to the number of 35 divers things be comprehended, pertaining as well to the Spiritual, as also to the Temporal Juriſdiction.

The Law of K. Ethelſtan concerning Witches that make away Children.

Out of the Laws of this King first sprang up the Attachment of Thieves, that such as stole above twelve pence, and were above twelve years old, should not be spared.

Sed Vindex. ubi ſuſpicio ſtrepitus erit. Cum regem credo pretium illi fore.

And thus much briefly concerning the Hiſtory of King Ethelſtan, and things in his time done; who reigned about the space of sixteen years. And because he died without issue, therefore after him succeeded his Brother Edmund, the year of our Lord 940, who reigned six years.

Anno 940.

King Edmund.

Edmund the son of Edward the Elder by his third Wife (as is declared) and brother of Ethelſtan, being of the age of 20 years, entred his Reign, who had by his Queen Elgina two sons, Edwin and Edgarus, surnamed Pacificus, which both reigned after him as followeth. This Edmund continued his Reign six years and an half. By him were expelled the Danes, Scots, Normans, and all foreign enemies out of the Land. Such Cities and Towns which before were in the poſſeſſion of frangers, as Lincoln, Nottingham, Derby, Stafford, and Leiceſter, he recovered out of their hands. Thus the Realm being cleared of Foreign power for a time; then the King set his study and mind in the redreſſing and maintaining the state of the Church; which all stood then in building of Monasteries, and furnishing of Churches, either with new poſſeſſions, or with restoring the old which were taken away before. In the time of this Edmund, this I find in an old written story borrowed of William Carey, a Citizen of London, a worthy Treasurer of moſt worthy Monuments of Antiquity. The name of the Author I cannot alledge, because the Book beareth no Title, lacking both the beginning and the later end; but the words thereof faithfully recited be these. Hoyar Regis tempore facta eſt diſperſio Monachorum Euſhmenſis exemſit, cum ſubſtitutione canonicorum per Athelmum & Ulricum laicos, & Oſulphum epiſcopum, &c. that is, In the time of this King, there was a scattering or diſperſion made of the Monks out of the Monaſtery of Euſham, and Canons ſubſtituted in their place, through the doing of Athelmus and Ulricus Lay men, and of Oſulfus Biſhop, &c.

Ex Historia Coriensa.

Monks put out of Eusham, in the year of our Lord 941.

Where, as concerning this matter between Monks and others of the Clergy, first it is to be underſtood, that in the Realm of England heretofore, before the time of Dunſtan, the Biſhops Sees and Cathedral Churches were replenished with no Monks, but with Priests and Canons, called then Clerks or Men of the Clergy. After this beginneth to rise a difference or a Sect between these two parties in strictness of life, and in habit; so that they which lived after a strict rule of holiness were called Monks, and professed Chastity, that was, to live from Wives (for so then was Chastity then defined to those blind days) as though holy Matrimony were no Chastity, according as Paphnutius did well define it in the Council of Nice. The other sort which were no Monks but Priests or Men of the Clergy so called, lived more free from those Monkish Rules and Observances, and were then commonly (or at least lawfully married) and in their life and habit came nearer to the secular state of other Christians. By reason whereof great disdain and emulation was among them, in so much that in many Cathedral Churches, whereas Priests were before, there Monks were put in: and contrary, sometime whereas Monks were intruded, there Priests and Canons again were placed, and Monks thrust out; whereof more shall appear hereafter (by the grace of Christ) when we come to the life of Dunſtan. In the mean time, something to satisfie the cogitation of the Reader, which peradventure either is ignorant, or else would know of the first coming in of Monks into this Realm and Church of England in the Saxons time; this is to be noted, according as I find in old Chronicles, namely in the Latine History of Guliel. de geſtis Pontificum Anglorum, recorded touching the same. About this time of King Edmund, or shortly after, when hardneſs and strictness of life joyned with superstition, was had in veneration, and counted for great holiness; men therefore, either to win publick fame with men, or merits with God, gave themselves to lead a strict life, thinking thereby (the stranger their conversation was, and the further from the common trade of vulgar people) the more perfect to be towards God and Man. There was at that time (and before that) a Monastery in France named Floriake, after the order and rule of Benedict: from the which Monastery did spring a great part of our English Monks, who being there professed, and afterward returning into England, did congregate men daily to their profession. And so, partly for strangeness of their rule, partly for outward holiness of their strict life, partly for the opinion of holiness that many had of them, were in great admiration, not only with the rude sort, but with with Kings and Princes, who founded their Houſes, maintained their Rules, and enlarged them with poſſeſſions. Among the which Order of Monks coming from Floriake, eſpecially was one Oſwaldus, firſt a Monk of Floriake, then Biſhop of Worceſter and York, a great Patron and fetter up of Monkery. Touching the which Oſwaldus, William in his Book De pontifc. writing of his Hiſtory, hath theſe words: Familiaris per id temporis Anglis contuetudo fuit, ut ſi qui boni affluxiſſent deſiderio, in beatiſſimi Benedicti Monaſterio cenobialem ſuſciperent habitationem, a quo Religionis hujuſce manavit exordium, &c. tum, a quo Religionis hujuſce manavit exordium, &c. That is, It was a common cuſtom at that time among Engliſhmen, that if any good men were well affected or minded toward Religion, they went to the Monaſtery of bleſſed St. Benedict in France, and there received the Habit of a Monk, whereupon the firſt origine of this Religion began, &c. But of this Oſwald Biſhop of York, and Dunſtan Biſhop of Canterbury, and Ethelwald Biſhop of Wincheſter, how they replenished divers Monaſteries and Cathedral Churches with Monks; and how they diſcharged married Prieſts and Canons out of their Houſes, to plant in Monks in their Cells, more ſhall be ſpoken (by the grace of Chriſt) hereafter. Now let us return again to the matter where we left, of King Edmund; who, beſides his noble Victories againſt his enemies, and recovering the Cities above expreſſed into his own hands, did alſo ſubdue the Province of Cumberland. And after he had put out the eyes of the two Sons of Dunmail King of Cumberland, he committed the government thereof to Malcolmus King of the Scots, upon promiſe of his truſty ſervice and obedience, when the King ſhould ſtand in any need of him. In the time of this King, Dunſtan was not yet Archbiſhop of Canterbury, but only Abbot of Glaſtenbury, of whom many fabulous narrations paſs among the Writers, importing more vanity than verity, whereof this is one of the firſt. What time Edgarus called Pacificus was born, Dunſtan being the ſame time Abbot of Glaſtenbury (as the Monkiſh Fables dream) heard a voice in the Air of certain Angels ſinging after this tenor and ſaying, Now peace cometh to the Church of England in the time of this Child, and of our Dunſtan, &c. This I thought to recite, that the Chriſtian Reader might the better ponder with himſelf the impudent and abominable fictions of this Romiſh Generation. But of the ſame mint alſo they have forged, how the ſaid Dunſtan ſhould hear the Angels ſing the Kyrieleſon, uſed to be ſung at Even-ſong in the Church: Guliel. de pontif. lib. 1. Which is as true as that the Harp, hanging in a Womans Houſe played by it ſelf the tune of the Antheme, called Gaudent in cæliis, &c. What would not theſe deceivers feign in matters ſomething likely, which in things ſo abſurd and ſo inconvenient ſhame not to lie and to forge ſo impudently and alſo ſo manifeſtly? Through the motion of this Dunſtan, King Edmund builded and furniſhed the Monaſtery of Glaſtenbury, and made the ſaid Dunſtan Abbot thereof.

Concerning the end and death of this King, ſundry opinions there be. Alfridus and Marianus ſay, that while this King Edmund endeavoured himſelf to ſave his Sewer from the danger of his enemies, which would have ſlain him at Pulcher Church, the King in parting of the fray was wounded, and died ſhortly after. But Gulielmus de regib. lib. 2. ſaith, that the King being at a Feaſt at Pulcher Church upon the day of St. Auguſtine, ſpied a Felon ſitting in the Hall named Leof, whom he before for his Felony had exiled; and leaping over the Table did ſlie upon him, and plucked the Thief by the hair of the head to the ground. In which doing, the Felon with a Knife wounded the King to the death, and alſo with the ſame Knife wounded many other of the Kings ſervants, and at length was all to-hewed, and died forthwith.

Guliel. lib. 2. de regib.

By the Laws of King Edmund (ordained and ſet forth, as well for the redreſs of Church matters, as alſo of civil Regiment) it may appear, that the ſtate both of cauſes Temporal and likewiſe Spiritual, appertained then to the Kings Right (the falſe pretended uſurpation of the Biſhop of Rome notwithſtanding) as by theſe Laws is to be ſeen: where he, by the advice of his Lords and Biſhops did enact and determine concerning the chaſtity and pure life of Eccleſiaſtical Miniſters, and ſuch as were in the Orders of the Church, with the penalties alſo for them which tranſgreſſed the ſame.

The Laws of King Edmund touching as well the ſtate ſpiritual as temporal.

Item, For Tithes to be paid for every Chriſtian Man, and for the Church fees, and Alms fees, &c.

Item, For deſtouring of Women profeſſed, which we call Nuns, &c.

Item, For every Biſhop to ſee his Churches repaired of his own proper Charge; and boldly to admoniſh the King, whether the Houſes of God were well maintained, &c.

Item, For flying into the Church for Sanctuary, &c.

Item, Concerning caſes and determinations ſponſal or matrimonial, &c.

All which Conſtitutions declare what intereſt Kings had in thoſe days in matters as well Eccleſiaſtical as others, within their dominion, and that not only in diſpoſing the Ordinances and Rites, ſuch as appertained to the Inſtitution of the Church, but alſo in placing and ſetting Biſhops in their Sees, &c.

In the time of this Edmund, was Ulfſanus Archbiſhop of York, and Odo Archbiſhop of Canterbury; which Odo being a Dane born (as is before touched) was promoted to that See by King Etheldſtan, for that (as they ſay) he being firſt Biſhop of Wilton, and preſent with King Etheldſtan in the Field againſt Analanus before mentioned, what time the ſaid Etheldſtan had loſt his Sword, he through his interceſſion up to Heaven, did ſee a Sword from Heaven come down into the Sheath of the King. Where of relation being made unto the King by the foreſaid Biſhop, Etheldſtan upon the ſame was ſo affected towards Odo, that not only he counted him for a patron of his life, but alſo made him Primate of Canterbury after the deceaſe of Ulfelmus. This Odo was the firſt from the coming of the Saxons till his time, which was Archbiſhop of Canterbury, being no Monk. For all the other before him were of the profeſſion of Monks, of whom a great part had been Italians unto Bertualdus. Notwithſtanding, this Odo, being alſo a ſtranger born, after he was elected into the Biſhoprick, to anſwer to the old cuſtom of others before him, failed over into France, and there at Floriake (after the uſual manner above mentioned of Engliſhmen) received the Profeſſion and Habit of Monkiſh Religion, as ſaith my foreſaid Author. And like as the ſaid Odo firſt being no Monk, was made Archbiſhop of Canterbury; ſo alſo Oſſanus, the ſame time being Biſhop of York and of Worceſter, differed from divers his Predeceſſors before him in Profeſſion and Habit; of whom the forenamed Author thus writeth in his third Book, ſpeaking of Ulfanus; Qui ſanctitate diſcrepabat & habitu; that is, He differed in ſanctimony and in habit. Whereby it is to be collected, that in thoſe days was a difference in Habit and Garment, not only between Monks and Biſhops, but alſo between one Biſhop and another; albeit what difference it was, yet I do not find. But I return again to Odo, who by the deſcription of his manners might ſeem not to be the worſt that occupied that place, were it not that our lying Hiſtories, feigning falſe Miracles upon him (as they do of others) make him indeed to ſeem worſe than he was. As where they imagine that he ſhould fee from Heaven a Sword fall into the Scabbard of King Etheldſtan. Item, where he ſhould cover and defend the Church of Canterbury with his Prayers from Rain. And alſo where he ſhould turn the Bread of the Altar (as the Writer termeth it) into lively fleſh, and from fleſh into bread again, to confirm the People which before doubted in the ſame. Where note again (good Reader) that albeit this Miracle were true, as no doubt it is untrue, yet is it to be noted, that in thoſe days was a great doubt amongſt Engliſhmen of the Popiſh Sacrament, and that Tranſubſtantiation was not received into the Chriſtian Creed. The like judgment is to be given alſo of that, where our Engliſh Writers, telling of the fame Odo, ſay that he ſhould prophecy long before of Dunſtan to be his Succeſſor in the Church of Canterbury. But to let theſe phantaſies and idle ſtories paſs, this which we find of Odo his own writing is certain, that the ſaid Odo, in the Reign of King Edmund, had a Synod commenced of the chief Prelates and men of the Clergy in his time, to whom he directed this Letter here following: the Copy whereof I thought to expreſs, for the Reader to ſee what zealous care reigned in Archbiſhops then toward the Church of the Lord. The words of his Epiſtle proceed in this tenor.

The Letter of Odo Archbiſhop, to the Prelates.

Mirabile cunctis-potentis polorum præſulis clementia opitulante, Ego Odo Eccleſiæ ſalvatoris Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti Archiepiſcopus Dovernenſis civitatis Metropolitanus, coepiſcopis fidei Catholicæ compagatoribus, ſpiritualis charitatis vigore meis confratribus, præſentium proſperitatem æthereique decoris beatitudinem, &c.

The ſame in Engliſh.

By the divine grace of God, I Odo of the Church of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, Archbiſhop and Metropolitan of the City of Dover, to my fellow Biſhops and fellow planters of the Catholick Faith, and my fellow brethren in the ſpiritual bond of charity, with greeting, with proſperity in this world preſent, and in the world to come felicity. If it were ſo, or by any means could be, that all the riches of this world were laid before mine eyes, ſo that I being Emperor had all things univerſally under my ſubjection, all thoſe things would I gladly give, yea and my ſelf alſo would offer willingly for the health of your ſouls, as which alſo do deſire and truſt likewiſe my ſelf to be ſtrengthened with the fervency of your holineſs, as appertaining to thoſe things wherein the Lord our God hath ſet us to be workmen, &c.

And after a few other words of like effect, wherein he doth declare the heavy burthen of his office, it followeth after this manner.

Wherefore moſt humbly and one unworthy, but yet a devote fellow brother of yours, I beſeech and exhort your holineſs, that you will not ſhew your ſelves cold and negligent in the cure and regiment of ſouls, ſo that in the time of the fearful judgment, the Lord do not complain of you ſaying, My Shepherds did not feed my Flock, but they fed themſelves. And again, They were Princes of my Flock, and I knew not of it. But rather let us take heed and be diligent over the Houſhold of the Lord, over which he hath ſet us to be the leaders, to give them meat and true meaſure of Corn in time convenient, that is to ſay, wholeſome Doctrine. And although upon mine own demerits or worthineſs, I do not preſume to comfort or exhort any man; but as one being unworthy and faulty in tranſgreſſions innumerable, am glad, and ſtand in need rather to be ſtrengthened by your brotherly admonitions; yet for the ancient authority of my Predeceſſors, as of Auguſtine of happy memory, and alſo of all other Saints, by whoſe induſtry the rule of Chriſtianity did firſt flouriſh and ſpring from this Metropolitan See unto all quarters of England; therefore I have thought good to direct unto you theſe my Letters to the profit of you all; eſpecially, for that our Renowned and Princely King Edmund, with all his People, doth joy to follow that which he hear-eth in you and of you; and alſo for ſo much as all his Subjects, which be under his imperial Dominion, do love and delight to follow moſt joyfully the ſame, and report of your ſincere converſation, &c.

This Odo continued Biſhop the ſpace of twenty years. After whom Elſinus was elected and ordained by the King to ſucceed through favour and money; but in going to Rome for the Popes Pall, in his journey through the Alps, he decayed and died for cold. Whereupon ſucceeded Dunſtan, as in time and place (by the leave of Chriſt) followeth to be declared.

This Edmund gave to St. Edmund the Martyr before mentioned, the Town of Bredricheshworth, which is now called S. Edmundsbury, with great Revenues and Lands appertaining to the ſame. But concerning the frivolous Miracles which our Monkiſh ſtory-writers here feign of this good Edmund, by the way (or rather out of the way) I let them paſs.

And thus much concerning the Reign of King Edmund, who after he had reigned ſix years and an half, was ſlain, as is ſaid, at Pulcherchurch, and buried at Glaſtenbury of Dunſtan; leaving behind him two Children, Edwin and Edgar, by his Wife Elgina. But becauſe the foreſaid Children were yet young, and under age, therefore Edred Brother to King Edmund, and Uncle to the Children, governed as Protector about the ſpace of nine years and an half, till Edwin the eldeſt Son came to age. This Edred with great moderation and fidelity to the young Children behaved himſelf, during the time of his Government. In his time Dunſtan was promoted through the means of Oda the Archbiſhop, from Abbot of Glaſtenbury to be Biſhop of Worceſter, and after of London. By the counſel of this Dunſtan, Edred was much ruled, and too much thereto addicted; inſomuch that the foreſaid Edred is reported in Stories to ſubmit himſelf unto much fond penance and caſtigations, inflicted to him of the ſaid Dunſtan. Such zealous devotion was then in Princes, and more blind ſuperſtition in Biſhops. And here again is another Miracle as fantaſtical as the other before, forged of Dunſtan, that when that Edred being ſick ſent for Dunſtan to be his Confeſſor, by the way Dunſtan ſhould hear a Voice declaring to him before, that Edred was already departed, at the declaring whereof Dunſtan's Horſe fell immediately dead under him, with ly and all.

King Edwin.

Edwin the eldeſt Son of King Edmund afore mentioned, after his Uncle Edred, began his Reign about the year of our Lord 955. being crowned at Kingſton by Odo the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Of this Edwin it is reported of divers Writers, that the firſt day of his Coronation, ſitting with his Lords, he brake ſuddenly from them, and entred a ſecret Chamber, to the company of a certain Woman whom he inordinately retained (being, as ſome ſay, another mans Wife) whoſe Husband he had before ſlain, as others ſay, being of his alliance, to the great miſliking of his Lords, and eſpecially of the Clergy. Dunſtan was yet but Abbot of Glaſtenbury; who, following the King into the Chamber, brought him out by the hand, and accuſed him to Odo the Archbiſhop, cauſing him to be ſeparate from the company of the foreſaid party; by the which Oda the King was for his fact ſuſpended out of the Church. By reaſon whereof the King, being with Dunſtan diſpleaſed, baniſhed him his Land, and forced him for a ſeaſon to flie into Flanders, where he was in the Monaſtery of St. Amandus. About the ſame ſeaſon the Monaſtical Order of Benedict Monks, or black Monks (as they were called) began to multiply and increaſe here in England. Inſomuch that where before time other Prieſts and Canons had been placed, there Monks were in their rooms ſet in, and the Secular Prieſts (as they then were called, or Canons) put out. But King Edwin for that diſpleaſure he bare to Dunſtan, did ſo vex all the Order of the ſaid Monks, that in Malmesbury, Glaſtenbury, and other places more, he thruſt out the Monks, and ſet in Secular Prieſts in their ſtead.

K. Edwin.

The King ſuſpended by the Archbiſhop.

Edwin an enemy unto Monks.

Monks put out, and ſecular prieſts placed in their rooms.

Notwithſtanding, it was not long but theſe Prieſts and Canons were again removed, and the ſaid Monks in their ſtead reſtored, both in the foreſaid Houſes, and in divers other Churches Cathedral betides, as in the next Story of King Edgar (Chriſt willing) ſhall more at large appear.

In fine, King Edwin being hated, by reaſon of certain his demeanors, of all his Subjects (eſpecially the Northumbrians and Mercians) was by them removed from his Kingly Honour, and his Brother Edgar in his ſtead received; ſo that the River of Thames divided both their Kingdoms. Which Edwin, after he had Reigned about the term of four years, departed, leaving no heir of his body. Wherefore the rule of the Land fell unto Edgar his younger Brother.

The death of K. Edwin.

King Edgar.

{ Ann. 959. }

Edgar the ſecond Son of Edmund and Brother to Edwin, being of the age of fifteen years, began his Reign over the Realm of England, in the year of our Lord 959. but was not Crowned till fourteen years after; the cauſes whereof hereunder follow (Chriſt willing) to be declared. In the beginning of his Reign he called home Dunſtan, whom King Edwin before had exiled. Then was Dunſtan, which before was Abbot of Glaſtenbury, made Biſhop of Worceſter, and then of London. Not long

K. Edgar called Pacificus.

Dunſtan made Biſhop of Worceſter and of London.

long after, this Odo the Archbishop of Canterbury deceased, after he had governed that Church 24 years. After whom Brithilinus Bishop of Winchester first was elected; but because he was thought not sufficient to furnish that room, Dunstan was ordained Archbishop, the other sent home again to his old Church. Where note by the way, how in those days the donation and assigning of Ecclesiastical Dignities remained in the Kings hand; only they set their Pall from Rome as a token of the Popes Confirmation. So Dunstan, being by the King made Archbishop, took his journey to Rome for his Pall of Pope John the thirteenth, which was about the beginning of the Kings Reign. Thus Dunstan obtaining his Pall, shortly after his return again from Rome, intreateth King Edgar, that Oswaldus (who, as is said, was made Monk at Floriake, and was Nephew to Odo late Bishop of Canterbury) might be promoted to be Bishop of Worcester; which thing to him was granted. And not long after, through the means of the said Dunstan, Etheluoldus, (whom stories do feign to be the great Patron of Monkery) first Monk at Glastenbury, then Abbot of Abendon, was also made Bishop of Winchester. Of this Etheluoldus, Guliel. mus libro de gestis pontificum recordeth, that what time he was a Monk in the House of Glastenbury, the Abbot had a Vision of him, which was this: How that there appeared to him in his sleep a certain great Tree, the branches whereof extended through all the four quarters of the Realm, which branches were all covered with many little Monks Cowls, where in the top of the Tree was one great Master Cowl, which in spreading it self over the other Cowls, inclosed all the rest; which Master Cowl in the Tree top, mine Author in the interpretation applieth to the life of this Etheluold. Of such prodigious fantaties our Monkish Histories be full; and not only our Historics of England, but also of the Heathen Stories of the Gentiles be stuffed with such kind of Dreams of much like effect.

Monkish dreams.

Of such a like Dream we read of the Mother of Athelstan, how the Moon did spring out of her Womb, and gave light to all England. Also of King Charles the Emperor, how he was led by a thred to see the torments of Hell. Likewise of Furceus the Hermite mentioned in the third Book of Beda, who saw the joys of Heaven, and the four fires that should destroy the World; the one of lying, for breaking our promise made at Baptism; the second fire was of the covetous; the third of disfention; the fourth was of the fire of impiety and wrongful dealing. Item, in like sort of the dream of Dunstan, and of the same Etheluould, to whom appeared the three Bishops, Brithanus, Birinus, and Swithinus, &c. Of the dream of the Mother of this Etheluold, who being great with him, did see a golden Eagle flie out of her mouth, &c. Of the dream likewise, or the Vision of King Edgar concerning the falling of the two Apples, and of the pots, one being full of water, the other empty, &c. Also of King Edward the Confessor, touching the ruine of the Land by the conqueror of the Normans. We read also in the History of Assiages, how he dreamed of Cyrus, and likewise of many other dreams in the Books of the Monks, and of the Ethnike Writers. For what cannot either the idle vanity of mans head, or the lie ception of the lying Spirit work by man, in forethewing such earthly events as happen commonly in this present world? But here is a difference to be understood between these earthly dreams, speaking of earthly things and matters of humane superstition; and between other spiritual revelations sent by God touching spiritual matters of the Church pertaining to mans salvation. But to our purpose, by this dream, and by the event which followed after, it may appear how and by what means the multitude of Monks began first to swarm in the Churches of England, that is, in the days of this Edgar, by the means of these three Bishops, Dunstan, Etheluold and Oswald. Albeit Dunstan was the chiefest ringleader of this race; yet Etheluould being now Bishop of Winchester, and Oswald Bishop of Worcester, were not much behind for their parts. By the instigation and counsel of these three forefaid, King Edgar is recorded in Histories to build either new out of the ground, or to reedifie Monasteries decaied by the Danes, more than forty. As the House of Ely, Glastenbury, Abbington, Burga by Stamford, Thorney, Ramsey, Wilton, Wenton, Winchcomb, Thamsteke in Devonshire, with divers more. In the setting up and building of the which the forefaid Etheluold was a great doer, and a Founder under the King. Moreover through the motion of this Dunstan and his fellows, King Edgar in divers great Houses and Cathedral Churches, where Prebendaries and Priests were before, displaced the Priests and set in Monks. Whereof we read in the Chronicles of Roger Hoveden, in words and forme as followeth, Hic namque Etheluoldus regem, cujus eximius erat consiliarius, ad hoc maxime provocavit, ut Clericos a Monasteriis expelleret, & Monachos sanctimonialesque in eis collocaret, &c. that is, Ethelwold Bishop of Winchester, who was then one of the Kings Council, did urge the King chiefly to expel Clerks out of Monasteries, and in their rooms to bestow Monks and Nuns, &c. Whereunto accordeth likewise Historia Fornalensis, containing the like effect in these words, Hoc anno Etheluoldus Wint. & Oswaldus Wigornienfis, Episcopi, justu Regis Edgari (Clericis de quibuldam magnorum Ecclesiis expulsis) Monachos instituerunt, aut de eisdem Clericis & aliis Monachos in eisdem fecerunt. Guliel.mus also writing of the time of Dunstan, maketh the matter somewhat more plain, where he saith, Itaque Clerici multarum Ecclesiarum data opitione, ut aut amicitum mutarent, aut locis valedicerent, melioribus habitacula vacuefacientes: fuegebant itaque in tota insula Religiosorum Monesteria, cumulabantur mole pretiosa metalli sanctorum Altaria, &c. Thus the Secular Priests being put to their choice, whether to change their Habit, or to leave their Rooms, departed out of their Houses, giving place for other better men to come in. Then the Houses and Monasteries of Religious Men through all the Realm went up apace, &c.

Difference of Dreams.

How and when Monks first began to swarm in England. Dunstan, Etheluold, Oswald, three fosterers up of Monkish Religion.

Forty Monasteries builded and repaired by King Edgar.

After the Kings mind was thus perswaded and incited by these Bishops to advance Monkery, then Oswaldus Bishop of Worcester, and also made Archbishop of York after the decease of Oskitellus, Sui voti compos effectus (as Hoveden writeth) having his See in the Cathedral Church there of Saint Peter, began first with fair perswations to assay the minds of the Canons and Priests, whether they could be content to change their Profession, and to be made Monks, or no. Which when he saw it would not take effect, he practised this policy with them: near to the said Church of Saint Peter, within the Church-yard, he erected another Church of our Lady, which when he had replenished with Monks, there he continually frequented; there he kept, there he fat, and was ever there conversant. By reason whereof the other Church was left naked and defolate, and all the People gathered there where the Bishop was. The Priests seeing themselves so to be left and neglected both of the Bishop and of the People, to whom nothing remained but shame and contempt, were driven of shame either to relinquish the House (such as would not enter the monkish Profession) or else to become Monks, such as had nothing else to stay upon. After the like Superstition (although not after the same subtilty) did Etheluold also drive out the Canons and Priests from the new Monastery in Winchester, afterward called Hida, and placed his Monks. So in Oxford and in Mildune, with divers other places more, the Secular Priests with their Wives were expelled, to give place to Monks. The cause whereof is thus pretended in certain Story-writers, whom I fee also Fabian to follow; for that the Priests and Clerks were thought slack and negligent in their Church Service, and set in Vicars in their stead, while they lived in pleasure, and mis-spent the Patrimony of the Church after their own lust. Then King Edgar gave to the Vicars the same Land which before belonged to the Prebendaries; who also not long after shewed themselves as negligent as the others. Whereforе King Edgar (as mine Authors write) by the consent of Pope John the thirteenth voided clearly the Priests, and ordained there Monks. Although certain of the Nobles, and some of the Prelates were therewith not well contented, as in the Chapter following may partly appear.

But

The Difference, order, and institution of Monks examined.

But for so much as we have entred into the mention of Monks and Nuns, and of their Profession, which I see so greatly in our Monkish Stories commended: left perhaps the simple Reader may be deceived thereby, in hearing the name of Monks in all Histories of times to be such an ancient thing in Christian life (even from the Primitive Church after the Apostles time) both commonly recited and well received, therefore to help the judgment of the ignorant, and to prevent all error herein, it shall not be unprofitable, in following the present occasion here given (by way of a little digression) to intermeddle somewhat concerning the original Institution of Monks, what they were in the old time which were called Monachi, wherein the Monks of the primitive time did differ from the Monks of the middle time, and from these our Monks now of this later Age; moreover, wherein all these three do differ from Priests (as we call them) and from men of the Clergy. Wherefore to answer to the superstitious scruple of such, which alledge the old antiquity of the name and Title of Monks; First I grant the Name and Order of Monks to be of old continuance, during near from the time of three hundred years after Christ. Of whom divers old Authors do record, as Augustine, Hieronimus, Basilius Magnus, who was also himself one of the first instituters and commenders of that superstition, Chrysostomus, Nazianzanus, Evagrius, Sozomenus, Dionysius, and divers others. In the number of these Monks (which then were divided into Hermits or Anchorits, and into Coenobits) were Antonius, Paulus, Johannes, with divers other recluses. Among the which was Hieronie, Basil, Macharius, Isidorus, Pambus, Nilammon, Simeon, with infinite others, both in Palestina, Syria, Thebaide, Mesopotamia, in Egypt, in Africa, and in Scythia. In so much that Cassianus Lib.2. Cap.4. De Canon. Noctur. orat. maketh mention of a certain Monastery in Thebaide, wherein were above five thousand Monks, under the government of one Abbot. And here also in England mention is made before of Bangor, wherein were two thousand and two hundred Monks under one mans ruling, in the year of our Lord five hundred ninety six. Whereby it appeareth that Monks were then, and two hundred years before, in the primitive time of the Church. But what Monks these were is to be considered; such as either by tyranny of Persecution were driven into solitary and desert places; or else such as not contrained of any, but of their own voluntary devotion (joyned with some Superstition among, for the love they had unto spiritual contemplation, and for hatred of the wicked world) withdrew themselves from all company, either having nothing to themselves proper, or else all things common with others. And all these were then nothing else but Lay men; of which Lay men, there were two sundry sorts, one of the vulgar and common people, which only were partakers of the Sacraments; the other, in following a Monastical kind of life, were called Monks, (being nothing but Lay men) leading a more fevere and stricter trade of life than the others, as may sufficiently appear, Augustl. lib. de moribus ecclesiæ, cap. 13. Item, lib. de operibus Monachorum. Item, Epistola ad Aurelium. Also by Hieronie ad Heliodorum, writing these words: Alia Monachorum est causa, alia Clericorum; Clerici pascunt oves, ego pascor, &c. that is, One thing pertaineth to Monks, another thing unto them of the Clergy; they of the Clergy feed their Flock, I am fed, &c. Et ex Dionysio. Also the same appeareth likewise by the fourth Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, where it is provided, Ne Monachi se ecclesiasticis negotiis immisceant; that is, That Monks should not intermeddle with matters of the Church, &c. Et Leo Epistola 62. vetat Monachos & Laicos, etsi sententiæ nomine glorientur, admitti ad officium docendi & concionandi.

Two sorts of Monks in the Primitive Church.

Two sorts of Lay-men Monks in the old time were no other but Lay-men, leading a strict life. Augustl. de mor. Eccles. lib. 1. & Hieron. ad Heliodor. Dist. vigil. Concil. Chalc. Can. 4.

Monks forbidden to intermeddle with matters Ecclesiastical.

Monks differing from Priests.

Monks in the Primitive time differing from Monks in the second age of the Church. Augustl. de beatitudine monachorum.

By these forefaid Authors alledged, it is evident, that Monks in the former Age of the Church, albeit they lived a solitary life, yet they were then no other but only Lay men, differing from Priests, and differing from the other Monks which succeeded them afterwards in the middle Age of the Church, and that in three points: First, they were tied and bound to no prescript form, either of diet or apparel, or any thing else, as we may see testified by the words of Saint Augustine, which be these: Neque inter hæc nemo urgetur in asperu, quæ ferre non potest: nulli quod recusat imponitur. Nec ideo contemnitur a cæteris, in quod eis imitandus se fatetur invalidum. Meminerunt enim quantopere commendata sit in scripturis charitas. Meminerunt omnia nouuda mundæ, &c. Non quod intrat in os coinquinat hominem, sed quod exit. Itaque non rejiciendus generibus ciborum quasi pollutus, sed concupiscentiæ perdomandæ & dilectioni fratrum tenendæ inscriptum omne industria. And Sozomen. lib. 3. cap. 16. speaking of the Monks of the same time, which in Cities had several Mansions from others, saith, Alii in turba civitatum conversabantur, ut suspes gerentes, ut nullius momenti viderentur, & a multis nihil differrent, &c. that is, Some live in Cities so behaving themselves, as seeming nothing worth, and they differed nothing from the multitude, &c. The second point wherein they were discrepant from the later Monks was, in that they remained no other but in the Order of Lay Men (only being of a stricter life than the rest) and had nothing to do in matters and charges Ecclesiastical; which was afterward broken by Pope Boniface the fourth, as followeth (the Lord willing) to be seen and said. Thirdly, the forefaid Monks of that Age (albeit the most part of them lived sole and single from Wives) yet some of them were married: certes none of them were forbidden or restrained from Marriage. Of such as were married, speaketh Athanasius in Epistola ad Dracontium qui ait se novisse & Monachos & Episcopos conjuges & liberorum patres, &c. that is, Which saith, that he knew both Monks and Bishops married Men, and Fathers of Children, &c.

Ex Sozom. lib. 3. cap. 16.

Monks of the Primitive time were no Clerks, but meer Laymen.

Monks of the old time some married, some restrained from marriage.

Cassian. lib. 2. cap. 4. de Canon. Dilect. frat.

And yet the said Monks of the old time, though they were better than the other which followed them; yet all that notwithstanding, Superstition with them, and among them began then to creep into the Church through the crafty subtilty of Satan, and all for the ignorance of our free justification by faith in Jesus Christ. Examples do declare the vain and prodigious superstition of these Monastical fort of men; which examples do not lack, if leisure rather, did not lack to bring them in. But two or three shall suffice for many, which I purpose (the Lord willing) here to infert, to the intent the mind of the godly Reader may the better consider and understand, how shortly after the time of Christ and his Apostles, the Doctrine of Christian Justification began to be forgotten, true Religion turned to Superstition, and the Price of Christs Passion to be obscured through the vain Opinion of mens Merits, &c. A certain Abbot named Moses thus testifieth of himself in the Collations of Cassianus, that he so afflicted himself with much fasting and watching, that sometimes for two or three days together, not only he felt no appetite to eat, but also had no remembrance of any meat at all, and by reason thereof was driven also from sleep. In so much that he was caused to pray to God but for a little refreshing of sleep to be given him some piece of the Night. In the same Author mention is made of a certain old man an Hermit, who because he had conceived in himself such a purpose never to eat meat, without he had some guest or stranger with him, sometime was constrained to abstain five days together until Sunday, while he came to the Church, and there brought some stranger or other home with him.

Superstition crept in with Monkery.

The ignorance of our free justification by Christ is the cause of all superstition.

Ex Cass. cap 17. Collat. 2.

Two other Examples yet more will I add out of the said Cassianus, to declare how the subtilty of Satan through Superstition, and false colour of holiness, blindeth the miserable eyes of such, which rather attend mens Traditions than the Word of God. In the fortieth Chapter of the said Author, in his Book De gastrimargia, is told of a certain Abbot named Johannes, in the desert Wilderness of Scythia, who sent two of his Novices with Figs unto one that was sick in the Wilderness, eighteen Miles off from the Church. It chanced these two young Novices, missing the way, wandred so long in the wild Forest or Wilderness, and could not find the Cell, that for emptiness and weariness they waxed faint and tired; and yet rather would they die than taste the Figs committed to them to carry,

Cassian. lib. de spiritu gastrimarg. cap. 40.

Superstition.

and so did; for shortly after they were found dead, their legs lying whole by them.

Cassan. l.6. cap. 2.

Another Story he also reciteth of two Monastical Brethren, who making their Progress in the Desert of Thebaide, purposed with themselves to take no sustenance but such as the Lord himself should minister unto them. It happened as they were wandring desolate in the Desert, and fainting almost for penury, certain Mazazes, a kind of people by nature fierce and cruel, notwithstanding being suddenly altered into a new nature of Humanity, came forth, and of their own accord offered Bread unto them; which Bread the one thankfully received as sent of God; the other, as counting it sent of Man, and not of God, refused it, and so for lack perished.

Hereunto might I also annex the story of Macarius, who, to declare his obedience, did not stick, at the commandment of his Abbot, to cast his Son into the water, not knowing whether any were appointed there ready to rescue him from drowning; so far were the Monks in those days drowned in Superstition. What is this, but for Mans Traditions and Commandments to transgress the Commandments of God, which saith, Thou shalt do no murther; Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God? What man is so blind, that seeth not by these and infinite examples more, what pernicious superstition hath begun by reason of this Monkery, almost from the beginning, to creep into the Church? Whereat I cannot marvel enough, seeing that Age of the Church had in it so many Learned Doctors, who not only did approve and follow these Monastical Sects of life, but also certain themselves were the Authors and Institutors of the same, yea, and of Mens Traditions, made the service of God. In number of whom may be reckoned Basilius Magnus, and Nazianzenus, who with immoderate Austerity did so pluck down themselves, that when they were called to the Office of Bishops, they were not able to sustain the labour thereof.

Monkery mother of superstition and hypocrisie.

Basilius Magnus. Nazianzen.

After these foresaid Monks of that time above rehearsed, followed other Monks of the middle Age of the Church; who, as in multitude, so also in Superstition increasing, began by little and little from their desolate Dens in the vast Wilderness to approach more near to great Towns; where they had solemn Monasteries founded by Kings and Queens, and Kings daughters, and other rich Consuls, as is partly before touched; and the causes also touched withal, for the which they were first founded, as these, Pro remedio animæ meæ, pro remissione peccatorum meorum, pro redemptione peccatorum meorum, & pro salute regnorum, quique meo subjacent regimini populorum, in honoren gloriosæ Virginis, &c. For all these impious and erroneous Titles and Causes we find alledged in stories, as in Malmesburiensis, Fornalensis, Hemicus, and others more. In which Histories I also note, that the most part of these aforesaid Monasteries were erected first upon some great Murther, either by War in the Field, or privately committed at home, as shall well appear to them that read their Books whom I have alledged. But to return to our Monks again, who (as I said) first began to creep from the cold Field into warm Towns and Cloisters, from Towns then into Cities, and at length from their close Cels and Cities, into Cathedral Churches (as here appeareth by this Story of King Edgar) where, not only they did abound in Wealth and Riches (especially these Monks of our later time) but much more did swim in Superstition and Pharisaical Hypocrisie, being yoked and tied in all their doings, to certain prescript Rules, and formal Observances; in watching, in sleeping, in eating, in rising, in praying, in walking, in talking, in looking, in tasting, in touching, in handling, in their gestures, in their vestures, every man apparalled not as the proper condition of others would require, nor as the season of the year did serve, but as the coasted Rules and Order of every Sect did enforce them. The number of which Sects was infinitely divers; some after Basilius Rule went in white; some after Benets Rule in black; some after Cluniacenses, first set up by Otho in the time of this King Edgar, wearing after the Rule of Benets Order; some after Hieromes's Rule, leather girdled, and coped above their white Coat; some Gregorians Copper coloured; some De valle umbrosa, Grey Monks; some Grandimontenses, wearing a Coat of Mailes upon their bare bodies, with a black Cloak thereupon; some Cisterciani, who had white Rochets on a black Coat; some Celestines, all in blew, both Cloakl, Cowl and Cap; some Charter Monks, wearing Haircloth next their bodies; some Flagellants, going bare-foot in long white Linen Shirts, with an open place in the back, where they beat themselves with scourges on the bare skin every day before the peoples eyes, till the blood ran down, saying, that it was revealed to them by an Angel, that in so scourging themselves, within thirty days and twelve hours, they should be made so pure from sin, as they were when they first received Baptism; some starred Monks; some Jesuites, with a white Girdle and ruffet Cowl. Briefly, who can reckon the innumerable Sects and disguised Orders of their Fraternities? some holding of Saint Benet, some of Saint Hierome, some of Saint Basil, some of Saint Bernard, some of Saint Bridget, some of Saint Bruno, some of Saint Lewis, as though it were not enough for Christians to hold of Christ only. So subject were they to servile rules, that no part of Christian liberty remained among them; so drowned and sunk in Superstition, that not only they had lost Christs Religion, but also almost the sense and nature of men. For where men naturally are and ought to be ruled by the discreet government of reason in all outward doings, wherein one Rule can serve for all Men; the circumstance of time, place, person and business being so sundry and divers; contrary among these, no reason, but only the knock of a Bell ruled all their doings; their rising, their sleeping, their praying, their eating, their coming in, their going out, their talking, their silence, and altogether like insensible people, either not having reason to rule themselves, or else as persons ungrateful to God, neither injoying the benefit of reason created in them, nor yet using the grace of Christs Liberty, whereunto he redeemed them.

Monachi Flagellanti.

Monks of the middle and later age of the Church described.

Causes of the founding of Monasteries and Nunneries, tending to the derogation of Christs Passion and Christian Faith.

Most part of Monasteries were builded upon some Murther.

The Order of Monkes Cluniacs, by Otho set up in K. Edgar time.

Thus thou seest (gentle Reader) sufficiently declared, what the Monks were in the primitive time of the Church, and what were the Monks of the middle Age, and of these our later days of the Church. Whereunto joyn this withal, that where the Monks of elder time (as is said) were meer Lay-men and no Spiritual Ministers: afterward Bonifacius the Fourth made a Decree, in the year of our Lord six hundred and six, that Monks might use the office of Preaching, of Christening, of hearing Confessions, and also of absolving them of their sins, &c. So then Monks, who in the beginning were but Lay-men, and no Spiritual Ministers, forbidden by the General Council of Chalcedon (as is above related) to intermeddle with matters Ecclesiastical; afterward in process of time, did so much increach upon the office of Spiritual Ministers, that at length the Priests were discharged out of their Cathedral Churches, and Monks set in their places; because that Monks in those days, leading a stricter life, and professing chastity, had a greater countenance of holiness among the People than the Priests, who then in the days of King Edgar had Wives (at least so many as would) no Law forbidding them to the contrary, till the time of Hildebrand, now called Gregory the seventh, whereof more shall be said (Christ willing) in the Book next following.

Monks made Spiritual Ministers contrary to the old decree and custom of the Church.

Priests in K. Edgars time had Wives.

And thus much by the way, as touching the Order and Profession of Monks. Now to turn in again from whence we digressed (that is) to the matter of King Edgar, who following the counsel and leading of Dunstan, and the foresaid Ethelwold Bishop of Winchester, was somewhat thereby inclined to Superstition: but otherwise of his own nature well given to all vertues and Princely acts worthy of much commendation and famous memory. So excellent was he in justice, and sharp in correction of vices (as well in his Magistrates as other subjects) that never before his days was less Felony by Robbers, nor less Extortion or Bribery by false Officers. Such Provinces and Lordships, as were not yet come under the Kings subjection, he united and adjoyned to his Dominion; and so made one perfect Monarchy of the whole Realm of England, with all the Iflands and borders about the same. Such

The worthy acts of King Edgar.

Such as were wicked, he kept under, he repressed them that were Rebels, the godly he maintained, he loved the modest, he was devout to God, and beloved of his Subjects, whom he governed in much peace and quietness. And as he was a great seeker of peace, so God did bless him with much abundance of peace and rest from all Wars, so that as the Story recordeth of him, Nullas insidias domesticorum, nullum exterminium alienorum sensit, for the which he was called Pacificus. He neither rafted of any privy Treason among his Subjects, nor of any Invasion of Foreign Enemies. So studious he was of the publick profit of his Realm, and fruitful in his Government, that as the said story saith of him, Nullus fere annus in chronicis præteriit, quo non magnum & necessarium patriæ aliquid fecerit: No year passed in all the time of his Reign, wherein he did not some singular and necessary commodity for the Common wealth, &c. A great maintainer he was of Religion and Learning, not forgetting herein the forefteps of King Alfred his Predecessor. Among his other Princely virtues this chiefly is to be regarded, that whereas other Princes commonly in much peace and quietness are wont to grow into a dissolute negligence of life, or oblivion of their charge committed unto them; this King in continuance of peace (that notwithstanding) kept ever with him such a watch, and a vigilant severity joyned with a seemly clemency, that I cannot here but recite the witness of our Story-writers, testifying of his diligent care over the Commonwealth, which was so great, Ut nullum enjuscunque dignitatis hominem leges eludere impune permitteret: that is, That he would suffer no man, of what degree of Nobility so ever he were, to dally out his laws without condign punishment, &c. And followeth more in the same Author, Nemo ejus tempore privatus latro, nemo popularis prædo, nisi qui mallet in fortunas alienas grassari propriæ vitæ dispendio, &c. In all his time there was neither any privy picker, nor open thief, but he that in stealing other Mens goods, would venture and suffer (as he was sure) the loss of his own life, &c. Guliel. de reg.

England reduced to one full and perfect Monarchy.

Edgar no Pacifist. K. Edgar and K. Alfred compared together.

A note for men of Nobility to mark.

A notable example of a Prince, to admonish all Princes what to do. Wolves hath driven out of England.

Moreover, as the studious industry of this Prince was forward in all other points, so his prudent provision did not lack in this also, in driving out the devouring and ravening Wolves throughout all his Land. Wherein he used this policy, in casting Ludwallus Prince or King of Wales, to yield to him yearly by way of Tribute three hundred Wolves. By means whereof, within the space of four years after, in England and Wales might scantly be found one Wolf alive.

This Edgar among other of his politick deeds had in readiness three thousand six hundred Ships of War to scour the Seas in the Summer time, whereof one thousand two hundred kept the East Seas; as many defended the West side; again, as many were on the South Seas, to repulse the Invasion of Foreign Enemies. Moreover, in Winter season, the use and manner of this vertuous King was this, During all the time of his life, to ride over the Land in progress, searching and inquiring diligently (to use here the words of mine Author) Quomodo legum jura, & fuorum statuta decretorum observaretur & ne pauperes a potentibus præjudicium passi opprimerentur; that is, How his Laws and Statutes by him ordained were kept, and that the poor should suffer no prejudice, or be oppressed any manner of ways by the mightier, &c. Briefly, as I see many things in this worthy Prince to be commended, so this one thing in him I cannot but lament, to see him like a Phenix to fly alone, that of all his Posterity so few there be that seek to keep him company. And although I have shewed more already of this King, than I think will well be followed, yet this more is to be added to the worthiness of his other acts, that whereas by the multitude of the Danes dwelling in divers places of England, much excessive drinking was used, whereupon ensued drunkenness and many other vices, to the evil example and hurt of his Subjects; he therefore, to prevent that evil, ordained certain Cups with Pins or Nails set in them, adding thereunto a Law, that what person drank past the mark at one draught, should forfeit a certain peny, whereof one half should fall to the accuser, and the other half to the Ruler of the Borough or Town where the offence was done.

The proffession of King Edgar in keeping the Seas.

A notable example in a Prince, for all good Princes to mark and to follow.

The device of K. Edgar to avoid drunkenness

It is reported of this Edgar by divers Authors, that about the thirteenth year of his Reign, he being at Chester, eight Kings (called in Histories Subregnli) to wit, petty Kings, or under Kings, came and did Homage to him. Of whom the first was the King of Scots, called Kinadius, Macolinus of Cumberland, Mackus or Maccusius King of Monia, and of divers other Ilands, and all the Kings of Wales, the names of whom were Dufnal, or Dunewaldus, Sifsell, Huwall, Jacob, Ulkell, Fuchal. All which Kings, after they had given their fidelity to Edgar, the next day following (for a Pomp or Royalty) he entred with these aforesaid Kings into the River of Dee; where he, sitting in a Boat, took the rule of the Helm, and caused these eight Kings, every person taking an Ore in his hand, to row him up and down the River, to and from the Church of Saint John, unto his Palace again, in token that he was Master and Lord of so many Provinces; whereupon he is reported to have said in this manner, Tunc demum posse successores suos gloriari, se Reges Angliæ esse, cum tanta prærogativa honorum fruerentur. But in my mind, this King had said much better, if he had rather said with Saint Paul, Absit mihi gloriari, nisi in Cruce Domini nostri Jesu Christi.

Eight Kings do Homage to K. Edgar.

The glory of K. Edgar reprehended.

Wherein Kings ought to glory.

And thus ye have heard hitherto, touching the commendation of King Edgar, such reports as the old Monkish Writers thought to bestow upon him, as upon the great Patron of their Monkish Religion, who had builded so many Monasteries for them, as were Sundays in the year (as some say) or as Edmer reporteth, but forty eight.

K. Edgar a superstitious upholder of Monkery. Ex Eadmero.

Now on the other side, what Vices in him were reigning, let us likewise consider, according as we find in the said Authors described, which most wrote to his advancement. Whereof, the first Vice is noted to be Cruelty, as well upon others, as namely, upon a certain Earl, being of his secret Council, called Ethelwold. The story is this; Ordgarus, Duke of Devonshire, had a certain Daughter named Elfrida, whose Beauty being highly commended to the King, he being inflamed therewith, sent this foresaid Ethelwold (whom he specially trusted) to the party, to see and to bring him word again, and if her Beauty were such as was reported, willing him also to make the Match between them. Ethelwold well viewing the party, and seeing her Beauty nothing inferiour to her fame, and thinking first to serve his own turn, told all things contrary unto the King. Whereupon the King withdrawing his mind otherwise, in the end it came to pass, that Ethelwold himself did marry her.

Vices noted in K. Edgar.

K. Edgar circumvented by one of his Council.

Not long after, the King understanding further by the complaints and rumors of certain, how he was prevented and beguiled, set a fair face upon the matter before Ethelwold; and merrily jesting with him, told him how he would come and see his Wife, and indeed appointed the day when he would be there. Ethelwold the Husband, perceiving this matter to go hardly with him, made haste to his Wife, declaring to her the coming of the King, and also opening the whole order of the matter how he had done; desiring her of all love, as she would save his life, to disgrace and deform her self with garments and such attire, as the King might take no delighting in her. Elfrida hearing this, what did she, but contrary to the request of her Husband and promise of a Wife, against the Kings coming trimmed her self at the Glass, and decked her in her best array. Whom when the King beheld, he was not so much enamored with her, as in hatred with her Husband, who had so deceived him. Whereupon the King shortly after, making as though he would go to hunt in the Forest of Harwood, sent for Ethelwold to come to him under the pretence of Hunting, and there ran him through and slew him. After this, the Bastard Son of Ethelwold coming to him, the King asked him how he liked that hunting? Who answered again, that which pleaseth the King, ought not to displease him; for the death of which Ethelwold, Elfrida afterward builded a Monastery of Nuns in remission of sins.

Cruelty in K. Edgar noted.

Great detriment happening in this Realm by King Edgar.

Another fault which Malmesbury noteth in him, was the coming in of Strangers into this Land, as Saxons, Flemings and Danes, whom he with great familiarity retained to the great detriment of the Land, as the forefaid ftory of Malmesbury recordeth, whofe words be thefe: Unde factum eſt, ut fama ejus per ora omnium volitante, alienigenæ, Saxones, Flandricæ, ipſi etiam Dani huc frequenter anmavigarent, Edgaro familiares effecti. Quorum adventus magnum protinus exhibitum detrimentum peperit. Inde merito juxque reprehendunt eum literæ, &c. That is, Whereby it W. Malmsb. happened that divers ſtrangers out of foreign Countries allured by his fame came into the Land, as Saxons, Flemings and Danes alſo, all which he retained with great familiarity. The coming of which ſtrangers bred great damage to the Realm, and therefore is Edgar juſtly blamed in ſtories, &c. With the which reprehention the Saxon ſtories alſo do agree.

The inconvenient life of K. Edgar.

The third vice to him objected, was, his incontinent and laſcivious luſt in deflouring Maids, as firſt of a Dukes Daughter being a Nun, and a Virgin named Wilfrida, or Wilſtrud, of which Wilfrid was born Editha a Baſtard Daughter of Edgar. Alſo of another certain Virgin in the Town of Andevar, who was privily conveyed into his Bed by this means: The laſcivious King coming to Andevar, not far from Winchester, and thinking to have his pleaſure of a certain Dukes Daughter, of whofe beauty he heard much ſpeaking, commanded the Maid to be brought unto him. The Mother of the Virgin, grieving to have her Daughter made a Concubine, ſecretly by night conveyed to the Kings Bed inſtead of her Daughter, another Maiden, of Beauty and Favour not uncomely; who in the morning riſing to her work, and ſo being known of the King what ſhe was, had granted unto her of the King ſuch liberty and freedom, that of a ſervant ſhe was made Miſtreſs both to her Maſter, and alſo to her Miſtreſs. Ex Matthæo Pariſ. lib. de regib.

Edith a baſt. Daughter of Wilfrid the Kings Semmin.

Edward born in Bedforde of Elfled, King Edwards Concubine.

Another Concubine he had alſo beſides theſe aforeſaid, which was Egelfleda, or Elfleda, called Candida, the white Daughter of Duke Ordmere (as Guliel. Malmeſburienſ. recordeth) ſhe being alſo a profeſſed Nun, of whom he begot Edward in Baſtardy; for the which he was injoyned by Dunſtan ſeven years Penance. After which Penance being compleat, then he took to him a lawful Wife (as Malmesb. faith) Elfritha, the Mother of Edmund and Ethelred, or otherwiſe called Egelred, whereof more ſhall be ſaid (the Lord willing) hereafter.

King Edgar a great maintainer of Monkery

Over and beſides all theſe Vices noted and objected to King Edgar in our Monkiſh Story-writers, I alſo obſerve another no leſs, or rather greater Vice than the other afore recited, which was, blind Superſtition and idolatrous Monkery brought into the Church of Chriſt, with the wrongful expulſing of lawful married Prieſts out of their Houſes. Whereupon what inconveniences inſued after in this Realm, eſpecially in the Houſe of the Lord, I leave it to the conſideration of them which have heard of the deteſtable enormities of thoſe Religious Votaries: the occaſion whereof firſt and chiefly began in this Edgar, through the inſtigation of Dunſtan and his Fellows, who after they had inveigled the King, and had brought him to their purpoſe, they cauſed him to call a Council of the Clergy, where it was Enacted, that the Canons of divers Cathedral Churches, Colleginers, Parſons, Vicars, Prieſts and Deacons, with their Wives and Children, either ſhould give over that kind of life, or elſe give room to Monks, &c. For execution of which Decree, two principal Viſitors were appointed, Athelwold or Ethelwold Biſhop of Winchester, and Oſwald Biſhop of Worceſter, as is partly before touched. Oſbernus in vita Dunſtani. Malmsbur. de vit. pontif. Rog. Hoved.

King Edgar ſeduced by Dunſtan and Ethelwold Biſhop of Winchester. Ex Oſberno in vita Dunſtani, fol. 97. Malmsb. Houeden. & alibi.

And thus much concerning the Hiſtory of King Edgar, and of ſuch things as in his time happened in the Church, which Edgar after he had entered into the parts of Britany to ſubdue the Rebellion of the Welſhmen, and there had ſpoiled the Country of Glamorgan, and waſted the Country of Odo, within ten days after, when he had reigned the ſpace of ſixteen years, he died, and was buried at Glaſtenbury, leaving after him two Baſtards, to wit, Editha and Edward, and one Son lawfully begotten, named Ethelred, or otherwiſe by corruption called Egelred, for Edmund the elder Son died before his Father.

The death of K. Edgar.

You heard before how King Edgar is noted in all Stories to be an incontinent liver in deflouring Maids and Virgins. Of which Virgins, three notoriouſly are expreſſed in Authors, to wit, Wilſtrude or Wilfride; the ſecond was the Dukes Maid at Andevar, near to Winchester; the third was Elfled Mother of Edward, for the which Elfled he was ſtayed and kept back from his Coronation by Dunſtan Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the ſpace of ſeven years; and ſo the ſaid King beginning his Reign in the ſixteenth year of his Age, being the year of the Lord, nine hundred fifty nine, was Crowned at his Age one and thirty, Anno Domini 974. as is in the Saxon Chronicle of Worceſter Church to be proved. For the more evident declaration of which matter, concerning the Coronation of the King reſtrained, and the preſumptuous behaviour of Dunſtan againſt the King, and his Penance by the ſaid Dunſtan enjoyned, ye ſhall hear both Oſbern, Malmesbur. and other Authors ſpeak in their own words as followeth. Perpetrato itaque in virginem velatam peccato, &c. After that Dunſtan had underſtanding of the Kings offence perpetrated with the profeſſed Nun, and that the fame was blazed amongſt the People, with great ire and paſſion of mind he came to the King, who ſeeing the Archbiſhop coming, eſtſoons of gentleneſs aroſe from his Regal Seat towards him, to take him by the hand, and to give him place. But Dunſtan refuſing to take him by the hand, and with ſtern countenance bending his Brows, ſpake after this effect of words (as Stories import) unto the King, You that have not feared to corrupt a virgin Maid handfaſt to Chriſt, preſume you to touch of Dunſtan the conſecrated hands of a Biſhop? You have defiled to K. Edgar. the Spouſe of your Maker, and think you by flattering ſervice to paciſie the friend of the Bridegroom? No Sir, his friend will not ſo, which hath Chriſt to his enemy, &c. The King terrified with theſe thundering words of Dunſtan and compunCted with inward repentance of his ſin perpetrated, fell down with weeping at the feet of Dunſtan; who after he had raiſed him up from the ground again, began to utter to him the horribleneſs of his fact; and finding the King ready to receive whatſoever ſatisfaction he would lay upon him, enjoyned him this Penance for ſeven years ſpace, as followeth:

Ex Chron. Saxonico Ranulfo Higdenio.

Dunſtan refuſeth to take the King by the hand.

The words of Dunſtan

That he ſhould wear no Crown all that ſpace; that he ſhould faſt twice in the Week; he ſhould diſtribute his Treaſure left to him of his Anceſtors liberally unto the poor, he ſhould build a Monaſtery of Nuns at Shaftſbury, that as he had robbed God of one Virgin through his tranſgreſſion, ſo ſhould he reſtore to him many again in times to come. Moreover he ſhould expel Clerks of evil life (meaning ſuch Prieſts as had Wives and Children) out of Churches, and place Covents of Monks in their room, &c.

Penance injoyned to K. Edgar by Dunſtan.

It followeth then in the Story of Oſbern, that when the ſeven years of the Kings Penance were expired, Dunſtan calling together all the Peers of the Realm, with Biſhops, Abbots, and other Eccleſiaſtical degrees of the Clergy, in the publick ſight of all the multitude, ſet the Crown upon the Kings Head at Bath, which was the one and thirtieth year of his Age, and the thirteenth year of his Reign; ſo that he reigned only but three years crowned King. All the other years beſides Dunſtan belike ruled the Land as he lifted. Furthermore, as touching the Son of the ſaid Elfled, thus the Story writeth, Puerum quoque ex peccatrice quondam progenitum, ſacro fonte regeneratum lavavit, & aptato illi nomine Edwardo in filium ſibi adoptavit, Id eſt, The Child alſo which was gotten of the Harlot, he baptiſed in the holy fountain of regeneration, and ſo giving his Name to be called Edward, did adopt him to be his Son. &c. Ex Oſberno.

Elfled gave birth to Edward a Baſtard.

By

Errors in Malmsbury, and certain other monks ſtories.

By the which Narration of Osbern, agreeing alſo with the Story of the Saxon Book above mentioned, is convinced a double untruth or error, either negligently overſeen, or of purpoſe diſſembled in our later Monkiſh Story-writers, as in Malmesbury, Matth. Paris, Matth. Weſtm. and others more. Who, to conceal the fault of King Edgar, or to bear with Dunſtan's fact, in ſetting up Edward for the maintenance of their Monkiſh Order, firſt do falſly affirm, that Editha the daughter of Ulfride was born after Edward, and that for her this Penance was injoyned to King Edgar. Which neither is, nor can be ſo, as in proceſs hereafter (the Lord willing) ſhall appear.

The firſt error. Editha the daughter of Ulfride was not King Edgar's Penance nor injoyned for Editha, but for Edward.

Secondly, they are deceived in this, that they affirm King Edgar to have two Wives, and that Elfleda the Mother of Edward was not a profeſſed Nun indeed, but diſſembled ſo to be to avoid the violence of the King: whereas indeed the truth of the Story both giveth her to be a Nun, and her Son to be baſe, and ſhe her ſelf never to be married unto the King.

The ſecond error. Elfled the Mother of Edward, proved to be a profeſſed Nun.

Ex Oſberno in vita Dunſtani.

The lying Miracles of Elfled, Dunſtan, and Edgar reproved.

Now forſomuch as we have hitherto entered mention of Elfleda and Editha, alſo of Ulfred and Dunſtan, here would not be let paſs to ſpeak ſomething of their lying Miracles, falſly forged, to the great ſeduction of Chriſtian People by ſuperſtitious Monks, who cared not what Fables and Lies they brought into the Church, ſo they might have the vantage of poor mens Purſes and Oblations. And firſt here cometh in the fabulous Miracles wrought at the Tomb of Elfleda the Kings Concubine, which William Malmesbury in theſe Verſes expreſſeth:

Idolatrous worſhipping the Tomb of Elfled.

Nam nonnullis paſſa annis morborum moleſtiam,
Deſecatam & excoſſam Deo dedit animam.
Funditur ergo vitæ fato beatas exuviæ,
Infinitis clemens ſignis illuſtravit Deitas:
Inops viſus & auditus ſi adorant tumulum,
Sanitati reſtituti probant ſanctæ meritum.
Reſtum greſſum refert domum, qui acceſſit loripes,
Mente captus redit ſanus, boni ſenſus locuples.

The Engliſh of which Verſes is needleſs here to be recited, Briefly, the effect is this; That both the blind, deaf, halt, and ſuch as be mad, receive their health again, if they worſhip the Tomb of this Elfleda, &c.

The like feignings and monſtrous Miracles we read alſo in Chronicles of doting Dunſtan, drowned in all ſuperſtition, if he were not alſo a wicked Sorcerer. Firſt, how he being yet a Boy, chaſed away the Divel, fet about with a great company of Dogs, and how the Angels did open the Church door for him to enter. Then how the Lute or Harp hanging upon the Wall did ſing or play without any finger thefe words, Gaudent in cælis animæ ſanctorum, qui Chriſti veſtigiis ſunt ſequuti, & qui pro ejus amore ſanguinem fuderunt; ideo cum Chriſto regnabunt in æternum.

The falſe fained and forged Miracles of Dunſtan. A doubt whether Dunſtan was a Sorcerer.

Item, where a certain great Beam or maſter-poſt was looſed out of the place, he with making the ſign of the Croſs, ſet it in right frame again. Moreover, how the ſaid Dunſtan being tempted upon a time, of the Devil with the cogitation of Women, caught the Devil by the Noſe with a hot pair of Tongs, and held him faſt. Item, How often Heavenly Spirits appeared to him, and uſed to talk with him familiarly. Item, How he prophefied of the Birth of King Edgar, of the death of King Egelred, of the death of Editha, and of Ethelwald Biſhop of Winchester. Alſo how our Lady with her fellows appeared viſibly to him, ſinging this Song;

Dunſtan a Poſſeſſioner. Dunſtan caught the Devil by the Noſe with a hot pair of Tongs. Our Lady appeared to Dunſtan. What marvel, if certain books and fidles be fully be-ſtalled to the Deſtars, with the Pſalter ſtaves not to affrike other mens Verſes alſo to the vilain Harry ber ſtall?

King Edgar reigned but three years crowned King.

Elfled profeſſed a Nun, and Edward her ſon begotten a Baſtard.

Cantemus domino ſociæ, cantemus honorem;
Dulcis amor Chriſti perſonet ore pio.

Again, how the Angels appeared to him, ſinging the Hymn called Kyrie Rex ſplendens, &c. And yet theſe prodigious Fantaſies with other more are written of him in Chronicles, and have been believed in Churches.

Among many other falſe and lying Miracles, forged in this corrupt time of Monkery, the fabulous or rather filthy Legend of Editha were not to be overpaſſed, if for ſhame and honeſty it might well be recited. But to caſt the dirt of theſe Pope-holy Monks in their own face, which ſo impudently have abuſed the Church of Chriſt, and ſimplicity of the People, with their ungratious vanities; let us ſee what this Miracle is, and how honeſtly it is told.

A fouls, filthy monkiſh Miracle in the ſtory of Editha.

Another Dream of Dunſtan.

Certain years after the death of Editha, faith William of Malmesbury, which years Capgrave in his new Legend reckoneth to be thirteen, the ſaid Editha, and alſo Saint Dennis holding her by the hand, appeared to Dunſtan in a Viſion, willing and requiring him that the body of Editha in the Church of Wilton, ſhould be taken up and ſhrined, to the intent it might be honoured here in Earth of her Servants, according as it is worſhipped of her Spouſe in Heaven. Dunſtan upon this coming from Salisbury to Wilton, where Editha was interred, commanded her body to be taken up with much Honour and Solemnity. Who there in opening her Tomb (as both Malmesbury and Capgrave with ſhame enough record) found all the whole body of this Editha conſumed to Earth, ſave only her Thumb, her Belly, and the part under the Belly. Whereof the ſaid Editha expounding the meaning, declared that her Thumb remained ſound, for the much croſſing ſhe uſed with the ſame. The other parts were incorrupted for a teſtimony of her Abſtinence and Integrity, &c. Ex Malmesburienſ. & Capgravo.

Ex W. Mal. & Capgrave in legenda ſua.

What Satan hath ſo envied the true ſincerity of Chriſtian Faith and Doctrine, ſo to contaminate the ſame with ſuch impudent tales, ſuch filthy vanities, and idolatrous fantaſies as this? Such Monks with their deteſtable Houſes, where Chriſts People were ſo abominably abuſed and ſeduced to worſhip dead Carcaſes of Men and Women, whether they believed not to be raced and pluckt down to the ground, let all chaſt Readers judge. But of theſe matters enough and too much.

The death of K. Edgar.

Sunday firſt hallowed From Saturday at nine of the clock to Monday morning.

King Edward called the Martyr.

AFTER the death of King Edgar no ſmall trouble aroſe among the Lords and Biſhops for ſucceſſion of the Crown; the principal caſe whereof roſe upon this occaſion, as by the Story of Simon of Durham and Roger Hoveden, is declared. Immediately after the deceaſe of the King, Alfarus Duke of Mercia, and many other Nobles which held with Egelred or Ethelred the only right heir and lawful Son of Edgar, miſliking the placing and intruding of Monks into Churches, and the thruſting out of the Secular Prieſts, with their Wives and Children out of their ancient Poſſeſſions, expelled the Abbots and Monks, and brought in again the foreſaid Prieſts with their Wives.

{ Anno } 975. The ſtory of K. Edward. Ex Simone Dunelm.

Contention amongſt the Lords about the putting in of monkes

Wives. Against whom certain other there were on the contrary part that made resistance, as Ethelwin Duke of Eastangles, Elfwoldus his brother, and the Earl Brithnothus, saying in a Council together assembled, That they would never suffer the Religious Monks to be expelled and driven out of the Realm, which held up all Religion in the Land; and thereupon effsoons levied an Army, whereby to defend by force the Monasteries, such as were within the Precinct of Eastanglia.

Contention amongst the Lords for choosing the King.

In this hurly-burly amongst the Lords, about the placing of Monks, and putting out of Priests, rose also the contention about the Crown, who should be their King; the Bishops and such Lords as favoured the Monks, seeking to advance such a King as they knew would incline to their side; so that the Lords thus divided, some of them would have Edward, and some consented upon Egelred the lawful Son. Then Dunstan Archbishop of Canterbury, and Oswald Archbishop of York, with other their fellow Bishops, Abbots, and divers other Lords and Dukes assembled in a Council together. In the which Council Dunstan coming in with his Crosse in his hand, and bringing Edward before the Lords, so perswaded them, that in the end Edward by Dunstan's means was elected, consecrated and anointed for their King.

Edward the Bastard made King, and the right heir put back.

And thus hast thou (good Reader) the very truth of this story, according to the writing of Authors of most antiquity which lived nearest to that Age, as Osbern and others; which Osbern, living in the days of William the Conqueror, wrote this Story of Dunstan through the motion of Lanfrancus, and alledgeth, or rather translateth the same out of such Saxon Stories as were written before his time. Besides which Osbern we have also for witness hereof, Nicholas Triwet, in his English Story written in French, and also Joannes Paris in his French Story written in the Latine Tongue, where he plainly calleth Edward, Non legitimum filium, that is, No lawful Son. Whereunto add moreover, the testimony of Vincentius and Antoninus, who in plain terms likewise report the same.

Ex Osbern. Nic. Triwet. Joan. Paris. Vincentius, Antonius.

Editha proved not to be the Child for whom King Edgar was enjoyn'd Penance.

Now having laid the foundation for the truth and ground of this matter, let us come to examine how truly our later Writers do say, which write that Editha, and not Edward, was the Child for whom Dunstan enjoyned to the King seven years Penance, and also how truly they report Edward to be a lawful Heir, and Elfled to be a lawful Wife to King Edgar.

For first touching Editha, this is confessed by the said Writers themselves, that she was of good years at what time Edgar her Father was enjoyned his Penance. After the which seven years of his Penance expired, he lived at the most but three years and a half, which seven years, and three years and a half, do make in all but ten years and a half. But now the said Authors themselves do grant, that she was made Abbess by her Father, he being then alive. And how can this then stand with her Legend, which saith, that she was not less than fifteen years of Age? By which account it must needs fall out, that she could not be so little as five years old, before the birth of that Child for whom the King did Penance.

The years of Editha & Edward cast by the supputation of legends and stories.

And thus much touching Editha. Now in like manner to consider of the time of Edward. First, this by all Writers is granted, that he was slain in the fifteenth year of his Age. Which years do well agree to that Child which King Edgar begat in Bastardy, and for the which he did his Penance; for the more evidence whereof, let us come to the supputation of the years in this sort.

First the Penance of the King after the birth of this Child, lasted seven years. Then the King after the same lived three years and a half. After whose death Edward reigned other three years and a half, which in all make the full sum of fourteen years. About the count of which age, the said Edward going on his fifteenth year, by their own reckoning was slain.

And thus have ye by manifest demonstration proved by the right casting of the years, after their own grant and reckoning, that Editha Daughter of Ulfride in no case can be the Child which was born after Edward, and for whom the King was enjoyned Penance; but that Edward rather was born after Editha, and was the Child for whom the Penance was injoyned; contrary to the Opinion commonly received in the Church, which for ignorance of the Story hath hitherto holden Edward to be an Holy Martyr, and right Heir unto the Crown. Which Error and Opinion how it first sprang, and by whom, albeit it pertain not to my Story to discuss, yet were it no hard matter to conjecture.

K. Edward, called Martyr, proved to be a Bastard.

First, After that Dunstan and Oswald with other Bishops, Abbots, and certain Lords and Dukes of that Faction, for the maintenance of Monkery, had advanced Edward to be King, against Queen Alfrith Mother of Ethelred, and Alfrus Duke of Mercia, and certain other Nobles which held the contrary side of the Priests against the Monks; in process of time the Monks that came after to write Stories, perceiving Dunstan to be reputed in the Church of Rome for an holy Saint, and the said King Edward for an holy Martyr, and partly also to bolster up their own Religion of Monkery so much as they could; to the intent therefore that they might save both the credit of Dunstan, and of the King, and especially bearing favour to their own Religion, and partly that the reputation of the Church of Rome should not be disdained by opening the truth of this matter, either they did not see, or would not confess herein what they knew; but rather thought best to blanch the Story, and colourably to hide the simple truth thereof, making the People falsely believe that Elfleda the Mother of Edward, was Wife to King Edgar, and Edward to be lawfully born, and also that Editha was born after Edward, and to be the Child for which the King was enjoyned Penance. All which is false and contrary both to the order of time above declared, and also to the plain words of Malmesbury, which speaking of King Edgar's last Concubine, saith in plain words, Dilexit unice inhonestam tegram lecto uni differens fidem, quoad legitimam uxorem accepit Elfthridem, Filiam Ordgari: that is, He rem accepit Elfthridem, Filiam Ordgari: that is, He had a Concubine whom he loved intirely, keeping true faith of his Bed to her alone, until the time he married for his lawful Wife Elfrid the Daughter of Duke Ordgar, &c. Whereby we have to understand, that whatsoever Concubine this was which Malmesbury speaketh of, certain it is, that Edgar lived in Whoredom till the time he married his lawful Wife. Furthermore, and finally to conclude, beside these Arguments and Allegations above recited, let this also be perpended, how the said Dunstan with his Complices, after the killing of King Edward, leaving the right Heir of the Crown (which was Ethelred) went about (as Cantgrave and their own Legend confesseth) to set up Editha the other Bastard to possess the Crown, but that she, more wise than her Brother Edward, refused the same. Whereby what is to be thought of the doings of Dunstan, and what should be the cause why he preferred both Edward and Editha to the Crown, rather than the lawful Heir, I leave to all indifferent Readers thereof to judge.

Malmsb. in Hist. Angl.

Dunstan abuseth Editha the Bastard, to take the crown from the right Heir. Cantgrav. in vita Sancti Dunstani.

After that Dunstan and his fellows had thus set up Edward for their King, they were now where they would be, supposing all to be sure on their side, and that they had established the Kingdom of Monkery for ever, through the help of the young King, and the Duke of Eastangles, and certain other Nobles whom they had drawn to their part. Howbeit this matter passed not so well with them as they hoped. For shortly after the Coronation of the young King, Alfrus Duke of Mercia, who followed much the deeds of the Queen with other great Men, stoutly standing on the other side, drove out the Monks from the Cathedral Churches, which King Edgar before had set in, and restored again the Priests (as Ranulphus saith) with their Concubines; but in the History of the Library of Jornal, I find it plainly expressed with their Wives. The words of Priests with their Wives restored.

of the very Author be these: Alferus princeps Merciorum, cæterique plures, ejectis monachis de magnis monasteriis, quos Rex Edgarus nuper instituerat, Clericos cum uxoribus reduxerunt: that is, Alferus Duke of Mercia, with other great men more, drove out the Monks from the great Monasteries whom King Edgar had there set in before, and restored again the Priests with their wives.

Historia Jornalensis in vita Edgari.

Whereby it doth evidently appear that Priests in those days were married, and had their lawful wives. The like before that in King Inas time is plain, that Bishops then had wives and children, as appeareth by the words of the Law then sent forth, extant in the History of the said Jornalensis, which be these, Si quis filiolum alterius occidat vel patrimum, si famile cognationi, & erefcat emendatio secundum Weram ejus Regi, sicut cognationi. Si de parentela sit qui occidit eum, tunc excedat emendatio patrini, sicut mandata Domini. Si Episcopi filiolus sit, sit dimidium hoc, &c. And thus much by the way for Priests wives and their children.

Bishops and Priests in those days married in England.

Jornalens.

Now to the purpose again of our matter, which is to declare how the Duke and Nobles of England expelled the Monks out of the Monasteries after the death of King Edgar; whereof let us hear what the Monkish story of the Abbey of Crowland recordeth: Monachis de quibusdam Monasteriis ejectis, Clerici sunt introducti, qui statim Monasteriorum maneria ducibus terræ diftribuebant, ut sic in suas partes obligati eos contra monachos defensarent. Time de Monasterio Evesshamensi, monachis expulsis, Clerici fuerunt introducti. Terræque tyranni de terris Ecclesiæ præmiati sunt quibus Regina noverca nequitia, stans cum Clericis in Regis opprobrium, favebat. Cum monachis autem Rex, & sancti Episcopi persisterent. Sed, tyranni, fultis regina favore & potentia, super monachos triumphabant. Multus inde tumultus in omni angulo Angliæ factus est. Ex Chronico Ingulphi abbatis de Crowland, &c. that is, The Monks being expelled out of certain Monasteries, the Clerks again were brought in, who distributed the Mannors or Farms of the said Monasteries to the Dukes and Lords of the land, that they being obliged to them, should defend them against the Monks. And so were the Monks of Evesham thrust out, and the secular-Clerks placed, and the lands of the Church given to the Lords; with whom the Queen, the Kings stepmother holding the same time, took part also with the said Clerks against the King. On the contrary part stood the King and the holy Bishops, taking part with the Monks. Howbeit the Lords and Peers of the Realm, staying upon the favour and power of the Queen, triumphed over the Monks, &c.

Ex Chronico Ingulphi in Crowland.

Great bustle in the land about placing of Monks, and displacing Priests.

A controversie between Priests and Monks. Priests Marriage noted for an old custom in England. The objection of Priests against the Monks. Galtul. de Regibus Ang.

Thus, as much ado there was through all quarters of the Realm about the matter among the Lords, so arose no less contention between the Priests and Monks of England. The Priests complaining to the King and Dunstan, said for themselves that it was uncomely, uncharitable, yea and unnatural, to put out an old known dweller for a new unknown; and that God was not pleased that that should be taken from the ancient possessor which by God was given him; neither that it could be of any good man accepted, to suffer any such injury to be done, lest peradventure the same thing, wherein he was prejudicial to another, might after revert and redound upon himself at length. The Monks on the other side said for their part, that Christ allowed neither the old dweller, nor the new comer, nor yet looked upon the person, but who so would take the Crosse of Penance upon him, and follow Christ in vertuous living, should be his Disciple.

The answer of Monks unto the Priests.

Married mens lives compared with the lives of Monks.

These and such other were the allegations of the Monks. But whether a Monks Cowl, or a wifeless life make a sufficient title to enter into other mens possessions or no, I refer it to the judgment of the godly. The troublous cares in marriage, the necessary provision for House-keeping, the vertuous bringing up of children, the daily helping of poverty, and bearing of publick charges, with other manifest perturbations and combrances daily incident unto Matrimony, might rather appear to godly wife men to come nearer to the right Crosse of Penance, than the easie and loitering idleness of Monkery. In the end, upon this controversie was holden a Council of Bishops, and other of the Clergy. First, at Reading or at Winchester (as Guliel. saith) where the greater part both of the Nobles and Commons judged the Priests to have great wrong, and sought by all means possible to bring them again to their old possessions and dignities. Jornalensis here maketh rehearsal of an Image of the Crucifix, or a Rood standing upon the Frater-wall, where the Council was holden. To this Rood Dunstan required them all to pray, being belike not ignorant of some spiritual provision beforehand. In the midst of their prayer the Rood (or else some blind Monk behind it in a Trunk) through the wall, is reported to speak these words, Absit hoc ut fiat; absit hoc ut fiat: judicabitis bene, mutatetis non bene. In remembrance whereof these verses were written under the Roods feet.

A vain miracle of Dunstans Rood that spake.

Here lacked a Thomas Cromwell to cry out false jugling.

Humano more crux præsens edidit ore,
Calitus affata, qua perspicis hic seharata,
Absit ut hoc fiat, & cætera tunc memorata.

Of this Dunstanical, or rather Satanical Oracle, Henricus maketh no mention, nor Ranulphus, nor yet Hovedenus, nor Fabian in their Histories. Gulielmus in his Book De Regibus reporteth it but by hear-say, in these words saying, Aliæ literæ docent, &c. Wherefore the less it seemeth to be of credit. Albeit if it were of credible truth, yet it proveth in this matter nothing else but Dunstan to be a Sorcerer, as Polydore Virgil also himself seemeth to smell something in this matter.

Another assembly called at Calne.

Notwithstanding, for all this yet the strife ceased not; insomuch that a new assembly of the Clergy and other was appointed after at a place called the Street of Calne, where the Council was kept in an upper loft. In this Council many grievous plaints were objected (as Malmsb. saith) against Dunstan; but yet he kept his opinion, and would not there remove from that which he began to maintain. And while they were in great contention and argument which way should be admitted and allowed (if it be true that in the stories is written) suddenly the Joyces of the Loft failed, and the people with the Nobles fell down, so that certain were slain, and many hurt. But Dunstan (they say, only standing upon a post of the Sollar which remained unbroken) escaped without danger. Which thing whether it so happened to pretend before the ruin of the Realm and of the Nobles (as Henry Huntington doth expound it) which after infued by the Danes, or whether it was so wrought by Dunstan's sorcery (as was not unpossible) or whether it were a thing but feigned of the Monkish writers, and not true; all this I leave to the Readers, to think therein what them liketh. The Stories say further, that upon this the matter ceased, and Dunstan had all his will.

Dunstan an enemy to Priests wives.

A sudden fall of the Council of Calne.

Henricus lib. 5. Guliel. Ranulph. Hovedenus & Fabian.

These things thus done at Calne, it happened not long after the same, that King Edward, whom the writers describe to be a vertuous and a meek Prince, much pitiful and beneficial to the poor, about the fourth year of his reign came upon a season from hunting in the Forest alone, without the company of his servants to the place in the West Country, where Alfrith his mother with her son Egelred did lye. Where the Queen the mother was warned of his coming by her men, unto the calleth a servant of hers which was of her special trust, opening to him all her conceived counsel, and shewing him all points how and what to do for the accomplishing of her wicked purpose. Which thing so done, the made towards the King, and received him with all courtesie, desiring him to tarry that night; but he in like courtesie excused himself, and for speed desired to see his Brother, and to drink upon his Horse sitting, the which was shortly brought.

The horrible wickedness of a Queen-mother.

Now while the Cup was at his mouth, the servant of the Queen (being informed) strake him in the body with a long two edged Dagger. After the which stroke the King took the Horse with the spurs, and ran toward the way where he supposed to meet with his company, but he bled so fore, that with faintness he fell from his Horse, his one foot being in the Stirrup. By reason whereof he was drawn of his Horse over fields and lands till he came to a place named Corsgate, where he was found dead; and for that neither the manner of his death, nor yet he himself was known to be the King, he was buried unhonourably at the Town of Warham, where the body remained the space of three years, and then after was taken up by Duke Alfer above mentioned, and with pomp and honour accordingly was removed to the Minster of Shaftsbury, and there bestowed in the place called Shaftsbury-

Edwards-

Edwardstow. Many tales run (more perchance than be true) concerning the finding and taking up of his body, which our moſt common Hiſtories aſcribe to miracles and great wonders wrought about the place where the King was buried. As firſt, how a poor woman born blind received her ſight by the means of St. Edward, there where he did lie. Alſo how a pillar of fire from Heaven deſcended over the place of his burial. Then how the foreſaid Queen Alfrith taking her Horſe to go to the place, was ſtopped by the way, that neither her Horſe could be driven by any means, nor ſhe her ſelf on foot was able to approach near to the place where the Corpſe of St. Edward was. Furthermore, how the ſaid Queen in repentance of her fact, afterward builded two Nunneries, one at Amesbury by Salisbury; the other at Werewell, where ſhe kept her ſelf in continual repentance all the days of her life. And thus as ye have heard, was this vertuous young King Edward murthered, when he had reigned almoſt four years, leaving no iſſue behind him, whereby the rule of the land fell to Egelredus his Brother.

Two Nunneries founded upon murther.

§ But here by the way is to be noted (upon the name of this Edward) that there were three Edwards before the Conqueſt. The firſt was King Edward the Senior; the ſecond, King Edward the Martyr, which was this King; the third was King Edward called the Confeſſor, whereof hereafter ſhall follow (Chriſt willing) to be declared.

Continuation of the Romiſh Biſhops or Popes.

In the order and courſe of the Roman Biſhops, mention was made laſt of Agapetus the ſecond, after whom next ſucceeded Pope John the thirteenth, of whom Dunſtan Archbiſhop of Canterbury received his Pall, as in the ſtory of King Edgar is before minded. This Pope is noted to be very wicked and infamous, repleat from his firſt bringing up with abominable vices; a Whoremaſter, an Adulterer, Inceſtuous, Libidinous, a Gamſter, an Extortioner, perjured, a fighter, a murtherer, cruel and tyrannous. Of his Cardinals, ſome he put out their eyes, from ſome he cut off their tongues, ſome their fingers, ſome their noſes, &c. In a General Council before the Emperor Otho the firſt of that name (who was the firſt Emperor of the Germans) after the Empire was tranſlated out of France to Germany by Pope Agapetus (as is above Hiſtoried) theſe Objections were articulate againſt him. Firſt, that he never faid his Service; that in ſaying his Maſs he did not Communicate; that he Ordained Deacons in a Stable; that he committed Inceſt with two of his Siſters; that playing at Dice he called for the Devil to help; that for money he made boys Biſhops; that he deflowred Virgins and ſtrangers; that of the Palace of Lateran he made a Stews; that he lay with Stephana his Fathers Concubine; likewiſe with Ramera, and with Anna and her Neece; that he put out the eyes of the Biſhop Benedict; that he cauſed houſes to be ſet on fire; that he brake open houſes; that he drank to the Devil; that he never croſſed himſelf, &c. For the which cauſes (and worthily) he was depoſed by the conſent of the Emperor with the Prelates, and Pope Leo was ſubſtituted in his place. But after his departing (through the Harlots of Rome, and their great promiſes) the ſaid Pope John was reſtored again to his place, and Leo (ſet up by the Emperor) was depoſed. At length about the tenth year of the Popedom of this John, he being found without the City with another mans wife, was ſo wounded of her husband, that within eight days after he died.

After him the Romans Elected Pope Benedictus the fifth, without the conſent of the Emperor; whereupon the ſaid Otho the Emperor being not a little diſpleaſed for diſplacing of Leo, whom he had before promoted, and for the cheoling alſo of Benedict, came with his Army and laid ſiege to Rome, and ſo ſet up Pope Leo again, the Eighth of that name; which Leo to gratifie his Benefactor again, Crowned Otho for Emperor, and intituled him to be called Auguſtus. Alſo the power which Carolus Magnus had given before to the Clergy and people of Rome, this Leo by a Synodal Decree granted to the Emperor and his Succeſſors; that is, touching the Election of the Biſhop of Rome. The Emperor again reſtored to the See of Rome all ſuch Donations and Poſſeſſions which either Conſtantius (as they falſely pretend) or which Carolus Magnus took from the Lombards, and gave to them.

After Pope Leo had reigned a year and three months ſucceeded Pope John the Fourteenth, againſt whom (for holding with the Emperor) Petrus the Head-captain of the City, with two Conſuls, twelve Aldermen, and divers other Nobles, gathering their power together, laid hands upon him in the Church of Lateran, and clapt the Pope in priſon eleven months. The Emperor hearing this, with all ſpeed returned with his Army again to Rome; who after execution done upon the Authors and chief doers of that fact; among other committed the foreſaid Petrus to the Popes arbitrement, whom he cauſed firſt to be ſtript naked, then his beard being ſhaven, to be hanged by the hair a whole day together, after that to be ſet upon an Aſs (his face turned backward, and his hands bound under the Aſſes tayl) and ſo to be led through the City, that all men might ſee him; that done, to be ſcourged with rods, and ſo baniſhed the City. Thus ye ſee how the holy Father followeth the injunction of the Goſpel, Diligite inimicos veſtros, Love your enemies, Luk. 6. &c. From this Pope proceeded firſt the Chriſtening of Bells, Anno. 971.

Then came Pope Donus the Second, after whom Bonifacius the Seventh was Pope, who likewiſe ſeeing the Citizens of Rome to conſpire againſt him, was conſtrained to hide himſelf, and feeing no place there for him to tarry, took the Treaſure of St. Peters Church, and ſo privily ſtole to Conſtantinople. In whoſe ſtead the Romans ſet up Pope John the Fifteenth. Not long after Boniface returning again from Conſtantinople, by his money and treaſure procured a Garriſon or Company to take his part: by whoſe means the foreſaid Pope John was taken, his eyes put out, and ſo thrown in priſon, where he was, as ſome ſay, famiſhed; ſome ſay he was ſlain by Ferrucius. Neither did Boniface reign many days after, but ſuddenly died, whoſe carcaſs after his death was drawn by the feet through the Streets of Rome after a moſt deſpightful manner, the people ſhrieking and exclaiming againſt him, An. 976.

Next Pope after him was Benedictus the Seventh, by the conſent of the Emperor Otho the Second, and reigned nineteen years. In the time of this Pope Hugh Capet the French King took Charles (the right heir to the Crown) by the Treaſon of the Biſhop of Laon, and when he had impriſoned him, he alſo committed to priſon Arnoldus Archbiſhop of Reims, and placed in his room Gilbertus a Monk of Floriack (a Necromancer) who was Schoolmaſter to Doctor Robert the Kings Son. But this Pope Benedictus called a Council at Reims reſtored the ſaid Arnoldus again, and diſplaced Gilbertus, which after by the help of Otho was made Archbiſhop of Ravenna, and at length was Pope, as in proceſs hereafter (Chriſt granting) ſhall be declared.

After Pope Benedictus ſucceeded in the See of Rome Pope John the Sixteenth, and died the eighth month of his Papacy; next to whom came John the Seventeenth, and after him Gregory the Fifth in the year of our Lord 995. This Gregory (called before Bruno) was a German born, and therefore the more maliced of the Clergy and people of Rome. Whereupon Crefcentius with the people and Clergy conventing againſt the ſaid Gregory, ſet up John the Eighteenth. Gregory upon the ſame ſped himſelf in all convenient haſt to the Emperor Otho the Third in Germany; who hearing the complaint of Gregory, and underſtanding his wrongs, ſet forward with his Army well appointed to Italy, got the City, and there took both Crefcentius the Conſul, and John the Pope. Which John firſt having the eyes put out, was deprived after of his life. Crefcentius the Conſul was ſet upon a vile horſe, having his noſe and ears cut off, and ſo was led through the City, his face being turned to the horſe-tayl, and afterward having his members cut off, was hanged upon a Gibbet.

KING Edward thus being murthered, as is aforeſaid, the Crown fell next to Egelred his younger Brother, and Son to King Edgar by the foreſaid Queen Alfrith, as we have declared. This Egelred had a long reign given him of God, which dured the term of eight and thirty years, but very unfortunate and full of great miſeries; and he himſelf (by the Hiſtories) ſeemeth to be a Prince not of the greateſt courage to govern a Commonwealth. Our Engliſh Stories writing of him, thus report of his reign, that in the beginning it was ungracious, wretched in the middle, and hateful in the later end. Of this Egelred it is read, that when Dunſtan the Archbiſhop ſhould Chriſten him, as he did hold him over the Font, ſomething there happened that pleaſed not Dunſtan, whereupon he ſware, Per ſanctam Mariam iſte ignavus homo erit: By the mother of Chriſt he will be a Prince untoward and cowardly: Chron. de Crowland. I find in William of Malmesbury, Lib. 2. de Regib. that this Egelred being of the age of ten years, when he heard his Brother Edward to be ſlain, made ſuch ſorrow and weeping for him, that his mother falling therewith in a rage, took Wax-candles (having nothing elſe at hand) wherewith ſhe ſcourged him ſo ſore (well near till he ſwounded) that after the ſame he could never abide any Wax-candles to burn before him. After this, about the year of our Lord 981, (the day of his Coronation being appointed by the Queen the mother, and the Nobles) Dunſtan the Archbiſhop of Canterbury (who firſt refuſed ſo to do) with Oſwald Archbiſhop of York, were inforced to Crown the King, and ſo they did at Kingſton. In doing whereof, the report of Stories goeth, that the ſaid Dunſtan ſhould ſay thus, prophecying unto the King, That forſomuch as he came to the Kingdom by the death of his Brother, and through the conſpiracy of the wicked conſpirators, and other Engliſhmen, there ſhould not be without blood-ſhedding and ſword, till there came a people of an unknown tongue, and ſhould bring them into thraldom, neither ſhould that treſpaſs be cleanſed without long vengeance, &c.

The Coronation of Egelred.

The Prophecie of Dunſtan as Matthew Paris gives it.

In the Chronicles of Crowland I find theſe words, Quoniam aſcendiſti ad thronum tuum per mortem fratris tui, quem occidit mater tua, propterea audi verbum Domini: Hoc dicit Dominus, non deficiet gladius de domo tua, ſæviens in te omnibus diebus vitæ tuæ, & interficiatum tranſferatur in regnum alienum: cujus ritum & linguam, gens tua non novit, nec expahitum niſi longa vindicta, & multa ſanguinis effuſione peccatum matris tuæ, peccatum virorum peſſimorum, qui conſenſerunt conſilio ejus nequam, ut mitterent manum in Chriſtum Domini ad effundendum ſanguinem innocentem. Chron. de Crowland.

Not long after the Coronation of this King, a Cloud was ſeen throughout the land, which appeared the one half like blood, and the other half like fire, and changed after into ſundry colours, and vaniſhed at the laſt in the morning. Shortly after the appearance of this Cloud, in the third year of his reign the Danes arriving in ſundry places of the land, firſt ſpoiled Southampton, either ſlaying the inhabitants, or leading them captive away. From thence they went to the Iſle of Thanet, then they invaded Cheſter, from thence they proceeded to Cornwal and Devonſhire, and ſo to Suſſex, where in thoſe coaſts they did much harm, and ſo retired to their Ships again. Roger Hoveden writing hereof, ſaith, that London the ſame time, or (as Fabian ſaith) a great part of London was conſumed with fire. About this time fell a variance between the foreſaid Egelred and the Biſhop of Rocheſter; inſomuch that he made war againſt him, and beſieged the City. And notwithſtanding that Dunſtan required the King, ſending him admonithment, to give over for the ſake of Saint Andrew; yet continued he his ſiege till the Biſhop offered him an hundred pounds of Gold; which he received, and ſo departed. The Danes ſeeing the diſcord that then was in the Realm, and eſpecially the hatred of the ſubjects againſt the King, roſe again, and did great harm in divers places of England; inſomuch that the King was glad to grant them great ſums of money for peace to be had. For the aſſurance of which peace, Analafe Captain of the Danes, became a Chriſtian man, and ſo returned home to his Country, and did no more harm. Beſides theſe miſeries before recited, a fore ſickneſs of the Bloody-flux, and hot Fevers fell among the people, whereof many died; with a like Murren alſo among the Beaſts. Moreover for lack of juſtice, many thieves, rioters and bribers were in the land, with much miſery and miſchief.

The Bloody flux and hot Fevers reigned in this land.

About the eleventh year (ſome ſay the ninth year) of this Kings reign died Dunſtan. After whom ſucceeded Ethelgarus, or as Fornalenſis writeth, Stilgerus. After him Elfricus, as affirmeth Guliel. lib. 1. de Pontif. But as Polydorus ſaith, Siricius. After him Elfricus came; but Siricius after the mind of Guliel. lib. 1. but Polydore ſaith, Alluricius, then Elphegus, &c.

The Biſhops See of Duresm ſtript.

About the ſame time in the year of our Lord 995, Aldunus Biſhop tranſlated the body of St. Cuthbert from Cheſter (which firſt was a Northern Iſland, then at Rocheſter) to Durelme or Dunelme. Whereupon the Biſhops See of Duresm firſt began.

Not long after the death of Dunſtan, the Danes again entred England, in many and ſundry places of the land; in ſuch ſort that the King was to ſeek to which coaſt he ſhould go firſt to withſtand his enemies. But in concluſion, for the avoiding of more harm, he was compelled to appeaſe them with great ſums of money. But when that money was ſpent, they fell to new robbing of the people, and aſſalling the land in divers places, not only about the Country of Northumberland, but alſo beſieged the City of London at the laſt. But being from thence repelled by the manhood of the Londoners, they ſtrayed to other Countries adjoyning, as to Eſſex, Kent, Suſſex, and Hampſhire, burning and killing wherſoever they went; ſo that for lack of a good Head or Governour many things in the land periſhed. For the King gave himſelf to the vice of lechery, and polling of his ſubjects, and diſinherited men of their poſſeſſions, and cauſed them to redeem the ſame again with great ſums of money; for he payed great tributes to the Danes yearly, which was called Danegilt. Which tributes ſo increaſed, that from the firſt tribute of ten thouſand pounds, it was brought at laſt in proceſs of five or ſix years to forty thouſand pounds. The which yearly (until the coming of St. Edward, and after) was levied of the ſubjects of this land.

To this ſorrow moreover was joyned hunger and penury among the Commons, inſomuch that every one of them was conſtrained to pluck and ſteal from others. So that what for the pillage of the Danes, and what by inward thieves and bribers, this land was brought into great miſery. Albeit the greateſt cauſe of this affliction (as to me appeareth) is not ſo much to be imputed to the King, as to the diſſention among the Lords themſelves, who then did not agree one with another. But when they aſſembled in conſultation together, either they did draw divers ways; or if any thing were agreed upon any matter of peace between the parties, ſoon it was broken again; or elſe if any good thing were deviſed for the prejudice of the enemy, anon the Danes were warned thereof by ſome of the ſame counſel. Of whom the chief doers were Edrike Duke of Mercia, and Alfrike the Admiral or Captain of the Ships, who betrayed the Kings Navy to the Danes. Wherefore the King apprehended Alfagarus Son of the ſaid Alfrike, put out his eyes, and ſo did he after to the two Sons of Duke Edrike in like manner.

The pride and wretchedness of the Danes toward the Englishmen.

The Danes thus prevailing more and more over the English men, grew in such pride and presumption, that when they by strength caused the Husbandmen to ear and sow the land, and to do all other vile labour belonging to the house, they would sit at home holding the wife at their pleasure, with daughter and servant. And when the Husbandmen came home, he should scantly have of his own, as his servants had; so that the Dane had all at his will, and sill, faring of the best; when the owner scantly had his sill of the worst. Thus the common people being of them oppressed, were in such fear and dread, that not only they were constrained to suffer them in their doings, but also glad to please them, and called every one of them

Lord Dane. in the house where they had rule, Lord-Dane. Which word after (in process of time when the Danes were voided) was for despight of the Danes turned of the English men to a name of opprobry, that when one English man would rebuke another, he would for the more part call him Lurdane.

Lurdane.

{ Anno 1000. } And thus hitherto (through the assistance of Christ) we have brought this History to the year of our Lord 1000. During now and continuing these great miseries upon this English Nation, the land being brought into great ruin by the grievous tributes of the Danes, and also by sustaining the manfold villanies and injuries, as well by them as by other oppressions within the Realm; this year which was the year of our Saviour 1000, this Egelred through the council of certain his familiars about him, in the one and twentieth year of his reign, began a matter, which was occasion either given by the one, or taken by the other, of a new Plague to infue upon the Saxons, who had driven out the Britains before; that was in joyning with the Normans in Marriage. For the King this year abovesaid, for the more strength (as he thought) both of him and the Realm, married Emma the daughter of Richard Duke of Normandy. Which Richard was the third Duke of the Normans, and the first of that name. By reason of which Marriage King Egelred was not a little inbanced in his own mind; and, by presumption thereof, sent secret and brief commissions to the Rulers of every Town in England, that upon St. Brices day at an hour appointed, the Danes should be suddenly slain. And so it was performed, which turned after to more trouble.

Swanus King of Denmark arriveth in England.

After that tidings came into Denmark of the murther of those Danes, anon after Swanus King of Denmark with a great Host and Navy landed in Cornwal; where by treason of a Norman, named Hugh, which by favour of Queen Emma was made Earl of Devonshire, the said Swanus took Excester, and after beat down the walls. From thence proceeding further into the land, they came to Wilton and Shireborne, where they cruelly spoiled the Countries, and slew the people. But anon Swanus hearing that the King was coming to him with the power of his land, took his Ships and set about to Northfolk; where after much wasting of that Country, and spoiling the City of Norwich, and burning the Town of Thetford and destroying the Country thereabout, at length Duke Uskatel met him and beat him, and slew many of the Danes. Wherefore Swanus for that year returned to Denmark, and there made great provition to re-enter the land again the next year following; and so did, landing at Sandwich about the five and twentieth year of the reign of K. Egelred, and there spoiled that Country. And as soon as he heard of any Host of English men coming toward him, then he took Shipping again. So that when the Kings Army fought to meet him in one coast, then would he suddenly land in another. And when the King provided to meet with him upon the Sea, either they would feign to flee, or else they would with gifts blind the Admiral of the Kings Navy. And thus wearied they the English men, and in conclusion brought them into extream and unspeakable misery. Insomuch that the King was fain to take peace with them, and gave to King Swanus 30000 pounds. After which peace thus made, Swanus returned again to Denmark.

But this peace continued not long, for the year next following, King Egelred made Edricus above mentioned Duke of Mercia, who was subtil of wit, gloling and eloquent of speech, untruly, and false to the King and the Realm. And soon after one Turkillus (a Prince of the Danes) landed in Kent with much people, and there did such harm that the Kentish men were fain to make peace with great gifts, and so thence departed. But this perfecution of the Danes (in one Country or other in England) never ceased, nor the King did ever give to them any notable battel. For when he was disposed to give them battel, this Edricus would ever counsel him to the contrary, so that the Danes ever spoiled and robbed, and waxed rich, and the English men ever poor and bare.

After this Swanus being in Denmark, and hearing of the increase of his people in England, brake his Covenants before made, and with a great Army and Navy, in most defensible wise appointed, landed in Northumberland, proclaimed himself to be King of this land. Where after much vexation when he had subdued the people, and caused the Earl with the Rulers of the Country to swear to him fealty; he passed the river of Trent to Ganisburgh, and to Northwatling-street, and subduing the people there, forced them to give him pledges; which pledges he committed with his Navy unto Canutus his Son to keep, while he went further into the land; and so with a great Host came to Mercia, killing and slaying. Then he took by strength Winchester and Oxford, and did there what him liked. That done, he came toward London, and hearing the King was there, passed by the river Thames, and came into Kent, and there besieged Canterbury, where he was refisted the space of twenty days. At length by Treason of a Deacon called Almaricus (whom the Bishop had preferred from death before) he won it, and took the Goods of the People, and fired the City, and tithed the Monks of Saint Augustine's Abby (that is to mean, they slew nine by cruel torment, and the tenth they kept alive as for their slave.) So they slew there of religious men, to the number of 900 persons; of other men, women and children, they slew above 8000. And finally, when they had kept the Bishop Elphegus in strait prison the space of seven months, because he would not condescend to give unto them 3000 Pounds; after many villanies unto him done, they brought him to Greenwich, and there stoned him to death.

King Egelred in the mean time, fearing the end of this Perfecution, sent his wife Emma, with his two Sons Alfred and Edward, to the Duke of Normandy, with whom also he sent the Bishop of London. The Danes proceeded still in their fury and rage, and when they had won a great part of Westsaxony, they returned again to London. Whereof the Londoners hearing, sent unto them certain great gifts and pledges. At last the King about the five and thirtieth year of his reign, was chased unto the Isle of Wight, and with a secret company he spent there a great part of the winter; and finally, without cattel or comfort failed into Normandy to his wife. Swanus being ascertained thereof (inflamed with pride) reared exceeding Impositions upon the people. And among other he required a great sum of money of St. Edmunds lands, which the people there claiming to be free from Kings tributes, denied to pay. For this Swanus entred the territory of St. Edmund, and watled and spoiled the Country, despising the holy Martyr, and menacing also the place of his Sepulture. Wherefore the men of that Country fearing his tyranny, fell to prayer and fasting, so that shortly after Swanus died suddenly, crying and yelling among his Knights. Some say that he was stricken with the Sword of St. Edmund, wherewith he died the third day after.

In fear whereof Canutus his Son, which ruled as King after his Father, granted them the freedom of all their Liberties; and moreover ditched the land of the said Martyr with a deep ditch, and granted to the Inhabitants thereof great freedoms, quitting them from all task or tribute; and after builded a Church over the place of his Sepulture, and ordained there an Houfe of Monks, and endued them with rich poffeffions. And after that time it was ufed, that Kings of England when they were Crowned, fent their Crowns for an offering to Saint Edmunds Shrine, and redeemed the fame again afterwards with a condigne price.

A wicked Judge depofed and deprived by the King.

Of this King Egelred I find noted in the Book of Roger Hoveden, that he depofed and deprived from his Poffeffions a certain Judge or Juftitiar named Walgeatus, the Son of one Leomer, for falfe judgment and other proud doings, whom notwithftanding he loved above all others.

Edmund Ironfide a Saxon, and Canutus a Dane, Kings together in England.

{ Anno 1016. } AFter the death of Egelred variance fell between the Engliffmen for the Election of their King. For the Citizens of London, with certain other Lords, named Edmund the Eldeft Son of Egelred (a young man of lufty and valiant courage in Martial adventures both hardy and wife, who could very well indure all pains; wherefore he was furnamed Ironfide. But the more of the Lords favoured Canutus the Son of Swanus, efpecially the Abbats, Bifhops, and men of the fpiritualty, which before had fworn to his Father. By means whereof, between thefe two Martial Princes were fought many great Battels, firft in Dorfetfhire, where Canutus was compelled to fly the field. And after that they fought another Battel in Worcefterfhire, fo fore that none could tell who had the better; but either for wearinefs or for lack of day, they departed one from the other, and on the next morrow fought again: But then Canutus was compelled to forfake the field. After this they met in Mercia, and there fought again; where Edmund (as ftories fay) by the Treafon of that falfe Edrike Duke of Mercia (whom he before had received to favour) had the worfe. Thus many great conflicts there were between thefe two Princes. But upon a feafon, when the hofts were ready to joyn, and a certain time of Truce was taken before battel, a Knight of the party of Edmund ftood up upon a high place, and faid thefe Words.

Edmund Ironfide a Saxon.

Canutus a Dane.

Two Kings fight hand to hand.

Daily we die, and none hath the victory! And when the Knights be dead on either part, then the Dukes compelled by need fhall accord, or elfe they muft fight alone. And this Kingdom is not fufficient for two men, which fometimes fufficed feven. But if the covetoufnefs of Lordfhip in thefe twain be fo great, that neither can be content to take part and live by the other, nor the one under the other: then let them fight alone that will be Lords alone. If all men fight ftill, at the laft all men fhall be ſlain, and none left to be under their Lordfhip, nor able to defend the King that fhall be, againſt ſtrange Enemies and Nations.

A witty motion to flay blood between two Armies.

Theſe words were fo well allowed of both the Hofts and Princes, that both were content to try the quarrel between them two only. Then the place and time was appointed, where they both met in fight of both Hofts. And when either had affailed other with fharp fwords and ſtrokes; firſt by the motion of Canutus (as ſome write) haſtily they were both agreed, and kiſſed each other to the comfort of both Hoſts. And ſhortly after they agreed upon partition of the land; and after that, during their lives they loved as brethren. Soon after, a Son of wicked Edricus, by the mind (as appeared afterward) of his Father, eſpied, when King Edmund was at the draught, and with a ſpear (ſome ſay with a long knife) thruſt him into the Fundament, whereof the ſaid Edmund ſhortly after died, after that he had Reigned two years. He left behind him two Sons, Edmund and Edward, whom Edrike the wicked Duke after the death of their Father, took from their Mother (not knowing yet of the death of Edmund her Husband) and preſented them to King Canutus, ſaluting him in theſe words, Ave rex ſolus. Thus Canutus after the death of Edmund Ironſide, was King alone of the whole Realm of England, and afterward by the advice of his Council, he ſent the foreſaid Sons of Edmund Ironſide to his brother Swanus King of Sweveland to be ſlain, who, abhorring that deed, ſent them to Salomon King of Hungary, where Edmund being married to the Kings daughter, died; Edward was married to Agatha daughter of his brother Henry the fourth Emperor.

When Canutus was ſtabliſhed in the Kingdom, he called a Parliament at London, where (among other things there debated) it was propounded to the Biſhops, Barons, and Lords of the Parliament there preſent, whether that in the compoſition made between Edmund and Canutus, any ſpecial remembrance was made for the children or brethren of Edmund, for any partition of any part of the land. Whereunto the Engliſh Lords falſly flattering the foreign King, and ſpeaking againſt their own minds, as alſo againſt their native Country, anſwered and ſaid; Nay: Affirming moreover with an oath (for the Kings pleaſure) that they to the uttermoſt of their powers, would put off the blood of Edmund in all that they might. By reaſon of which anſwer and promiſe, they thought (many of them) to have purchaſed with the King great favour. But by the juſt retribution of God it chanced far otherwiſe. For many of them or the moſt part (ſuch eſpecially as Canutus did perceive to be ſworn before time to Edmund, and his heirs, and alſo conſidering that they were native Engliſhmen) he miſtruſted and diſdained ever after Among whom wicked Edrike alſo the Traytor (although with his ſugered words he continued a while in the Kings favour) at length eſcaped not condigne reward for his deceivable dealing. For (as the Hiſtory of Yornalenſis recordeth) as the King was in his Palace beyond Thames, this Edrike (being beſike acuſed, or elſe ſuſpected of the King before) coming unto him, began to reckon up his benefits and labours beſtowed for his ſake. Firſt, in forſaking and betraying Egelred, then in flaying King Edmund his Son, with many ſuch other deeds more, which all for his ſake he had done. Well, ſaith the King, thou haſt here rightly judged thy ſelf, and worthily thou ſhalt die for ſlaying thy natural Prince, and my ſworn brother. And ſo commanded him to be bound immediately hand and foot, and to be thrown into the Thames. Some ſtories ſay, that when he had ſaluted the King with Ave rex ſolus, and ſhewed him the ſlaying of Edmund: Canutus (promiſing that he would make him therefore higher than all the Lords of the Realm) commanded his head to be ſtricken off, and to be ſet upon London Bridge, and his body to be caſt into the Town ditch: And thus with thanne ended he his wretched life, as all they commonly do, which with like diſſimulation ſeek the deſtruction of their Prince, and of their Country.

Duke Edrike, the falſe traytor and murtherer of his King, worthily rewarded for his wicked Falſhood.

The end of pernicious traytors.

The brother of Edmund Ironſide, baniſhed, reconciled, and laſtly ſlain. Edward and Edward two Sons of Edward Ironſide ſent out to be ſlain.

This Canutus (ſhortly after the death of King Edmund) by the Council of Edrike exiled Edmund, being brother unto King Edmund, called Rex ruſticorum, the King of Churles. But afterward he was reconciled again to the Kings favour, and laſtly ſlain by certain of the Kings Secretaries or Servants. Alſo through the Council of the ſaid Edrike, and of Emma his wife, he ſent the two Sons of Edmund Ironſide (Edmund and Edward) to his brother Swanus King of Denmark, to be ſlain, as is aboveſaid.

Canutus King of Denmark, Canutus married Emma, Wife before of Egelred. Laws of King Edgar.

In this mean time, Swanus King of Denmark, brother to Canutus, died. Wherefore that Land fell to Canutus, which anon after ſailed thither, and took thereof poſſeſſion. And after he had ſet it in an Order, he returned into England, and married Emma, late wife before of Egelred, and by her had a Son called Hardeknight or Hardeknoutus. Moreover, this Canutus aſſembled a Parliament at Oxford, where it was agreed that Engliſhmen and Danes ſhould hold the Laws made by King Egdar, becauſe they were thought ſo good and reaſonable above any other Laws.

Thus the Danes being in England began by little and little to be Chriſtian men. And Canutus went to Rome, and ſo, returning again to England, governed that Land the ſpace of twenty years, leaving after him two Sons, Harold and Hardeknoutus; which Hardeknoutus was made King of Denmark in his Fathers time.

Harold Hare foot King of England a Dane.

Harold (called Harefoot for his deliverneſs and ſwiftneſs) Son to Canutus by Elgina his firſt wife, began his Reign over England, in the year 1039. Of him his little left in memory (for he Reigned but four years) ſave that he baniſhed his ſtep-mother Emma, and took her Goods and Jewels from Her.

{ Anno 1039 }

Hardeknout laſt King of the Danes that reigned in England. Earl Godwin.

Hardeknoutus being King of Denmark, and ſecond Son to Canutus by his laſt wife Emma, was next King of England. In the time of theſe Danijh Kings, there was one Godwin an Earl in England, which had been before in great favour with Canutus, for his Acts done in Denmark againſt the Norwegians; and afterward married the Siſter (ſome ſay the Daughter) of Canutus. This Godwin was of a cruel and ſubtil wit, as he declared no leſs by the two Sons of King Egelred. For when theſe two aforeſaid (whoſe names were Alfred and Edward) came from Normandy into England, to viſit their Mother Emma, and brought with them a great company of Normans: This Godwin (having a Daughter called Godith, whom he thought to marry to Edward, and ſet him up to be King,) to bring his purpoſe about, uſed this Practice, that is, to perſwade King Hardeknut, and the Lords, not to ſuffer thoſe Normans to be within the Realm for Jeopardy, but rather to puniſh them for example: By which means he gat authority to order the matter himſelf. Wherefore he met them on Guild-down, and there moſt wretchedly murthered, or rather Martyred the moſt number of the Normans, and that innocently. For as Swanus before had tithed the Monks of Canterbury; ſo he, with the cruel company of Engliſh ſouldiers, ſlew nine of the ſaid Normans, and ſaved the tenth. And yet paſſing the fury of Swanus (as not contented with that tyranny) he tithed again the ſaid tithe, and ſlew every tenth Knight, and that by cruel torment, as winding their Guts out of their bodies, as writeth Ranulphus. And among others, he put out the Eyes of the Elder brother Alfredus, and ſent him to an Abbey of Ely; where he, being fed with Bread and Water, indured not long after. Of ſome writers it was recorded that he was there ſlain with the forenamed torment, and that Edward was conveyed by ſome other unto his Mother; who fearing the Treaſon of Godwin, ſent him ſoon over the Sea into Normandy again. This cruel Fact of Godwin and his men againſt the innocent Normans, whether it came of himſelf, or of the Kings ſetting on, ſeemeth to me to be the cauſe, why the Juſtice of God did ſhortly after revenge the quarrel of theſe Normans, in conquering and ſubduing the Engliſh Nation by William Conqueror, and the Normans which came with him. For ſo juſt and right it was, that as the Normans, coming with a natural Engliſh Prince, were murthered of Engliſh men: So afterward the Engliſhmen ſhould be ſlain and conquered by the Normans, coming with a foreign King, being none of their natural Country.

The Normans ſlain, and yet the tenths reſtored again.

Example of Gods juſtice on Judgment.

Then it followeth in the ſtory, that this King Canute or Hardeknout, when he had Reigned two years (being merry at Lambeth) ſuddenly was ſtricken Dumb, and fell down to the ground, and within eight days after died without Iſſue of his body; who was the laſt that Reigned in England of the blood of the Danes.

The death of King Hardeknout.

This foreſaid Godwin, had by the Daughter of Canutus his Wife, but one Son, which was drowned. Of his ſecond wife he received ſix Sons, to wit, Swanus, Harold, Toſtius, Wilmotus, Sixthus or Surth, and Leofricus, with one Daughter called Goditha, which after was married to King Edward the Confeſſor.

The Sons of Earl Godwin.

Concerning the ſtory of this Alfred, I find it ſomething otherwiſe reported in our Engliſh Chronicles, that it ſhould be after the death of Hardeknout; for ſo much peated. as the Earls and Barons after his death, aſſembled and made a Council, that never after any of the Danes blood ſhould be King of England, for the deſpight that they had done to Engliſhmen. For evermore before, if the Engliſhmen and the Danes had happened to meet upon a Bridge, the Engliſhmen ſhould not be ſo hardy to move a foot, but ſtand ſtill, till the Dane were paſſed forth. And moreover, if the Engliſhmen had not bowed down their heads to do reverence unto the Danes, they ſhould have been beaten and deriled. For the which deſpites and villanies they were driven out of the Land after the death of Hardeknout; for they had no Lord that might maintain them. And after this manner avoided the Danes out of England, that they never came again.

The ſtory of Alfredus repeated.

Taken out of the Engliſh ſtory or chronicle compiled of certain Engliſh Clerkes.

The Earls and Barons, by their common aſſent and Council, ſent unto Normandy for theſe two brethren, Alfred and Edward; intending to Crown Alfred the Elder brother, and to make him King of England. And to this the Earls and Barons made their oath: But the Earl Godwin of Weſt-Sax (falſly and traiterouſly) thought to ſlay theſe two brethren, as ſoon as they came into England, to the intent that he might make Harold his Son King: Which Son he had by his wife Hardeknouts Daughter, that was a Dane. And ſo this Godwin went privily to South-Hampton, to meet there with the two brethren at their landing. And thus it fell, that the Meſſengers that went (faith mine Author) into Normandy, found but only Alfred the Elder brother. For Edward his Younger brother was gone to Hungary, to ſpeak with his Couſin the Outlaw, which was Edmund Ironſide's Son.

When Alfred had heard theſe Meſſengers, and perceived their tidings, he thanked God, and in all haſte ſped him to England, arriving at South-Hampton. There Godwin the falſe Traytor (having knowledge of his coming) welcomed and received him with joy, pretending to lead him unto London, where the Barons waited for to make him King, and ſo they together paſſed forth toward London. But when they came to Guild-down, the Traytor commanded all his men to ſlay all that were in Alfreds company, which came with him from Normandy; and after that, to take Alfred, and to lead him into the the Iſle of Ely, where they ſhould put out both his Eyes; and ſo they did. For they ſlew all the company that were there, to the number of twelve Gentlemen, which came with Alfred, from Normandy; and after that they took Alfred, and in the Iſle of Ely they executed their commiſſion. That done, they opened his body, took out his bowels, ſet a ſtake into the ground, and faſtened an end of his bowels thereunto, and with needles of Iron they pricked his tender body, thereby cauſing him to go about the ſtake, till that all his bowels were drawn out. And ſo died this innocent Alfred or Alured, being the right heir of the Crown, through Treaſon of wicked Godwin. When the Lords of England heard thereof, and how Alfred, that ſhould have been their King, was put to death through the falſe Traytor Godwin, they were wonderous wroth; and ſware between God and them, that he ſhould die a worſe death than did Edrith, which betrayed his Lord Edmund Ironſide, and would immediately have put him to death, but that the Traytor fled thence into Denmark, and there held him four years and more, and loſt all his Lands in England.

God only the King of all Kings, and Lord of Lords.

Another Latin ſtory I have (bearing no name) which ſaith that this coming in of Alfred and the Normans, was in the time of Harold, Canutus Son. And how Godwin (after he pretended great amity to them) ſuddenly in the night came upon them at Gilford, and after he had tithed the Normans, ſent Alfred to Harold at London; who ſent him to the Iſle of Ely, and cauſed his Eyes to be put out.

Of whom ſome write, that ſhe being accuſed to the Emperor of Spouſe-breach, and having no Champion or Knight that would fight for her, (after the manner of that Country) for trial of her cauſe, a certain little dwarfe or boy, whom ſhe brought with her out of England (ſtirred up of God) fought in her cauſe againſt a mighty big German, of a Monſtrous greatneſs, which ſilly dwarfe, cutting by chance the Sinews of his Leg, after ſtroke him to the ground, and ſo cut off his Head, and ſaved the life of the Queen, if it be true that Gulielmus and Fabianus reporteth.

Canutus went to Rome.

The Hoſpital built at Rome for Engliſh Pilgrims.

Rome ſhot confirmed by Canutus.

The Cathedral Church of Vincheſter is built of Free-ſtone.

Of this Canutus, it is ſtoried, that he following much the ſuperſtition of Achelnotus, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, went on Pilgrimage to Rome, and there founded an Hoſpital for Engliſh Pilgrims. He gave the Pope precious gifts, and burdened the Land with a yearly tribute, called the Rome-ſhot. He ſhrived the body of Berinus, and gave great Lands and Ornaments to the Cathedral Church of Vincheſter; he builded S. Benets in Norfolke, which was before an Hermitage. Alſo S. Edmundsbury, which King Athelſtan before ordained for a College of Prieſts, he turned to an Abbey of Monks of Saint Benets Order.

S. Benets in Norfolke builded, Bury Abbey turned to Monks.

Henricus, Archdeacon of Huntington, lib. 6. maketh mention of this Canutus, as doth alſo Polydor, lib. 7. That he after his coming from Rome, walking upon a time by the Port of Sout-Hampton, but Polydor ſaith, and Fabian affirmeth the ſame, that it was by the Thames ſide of London, when his flatterers coming about him, began to exalt him up with high Words, calling him a King of all Kings (moſt mighty) who had under his ſubjection both the People, the Land, and alſo the Sea: Canutus revolving this matter in his mind (whether for pride of his heart exalted, or whether to try and reſel their flattering words) commanded his chair of ſtate to be brought to the Sea ſide, at what time it ſhould begin to flow. Polydor ſaith that no ſeat was brought; but ſitting upon his garments, being folded together under him, there charged and commanded the floods ariſing and coming towards his feet, that they ſhould touch neither him nor his clothes. But the water keeping his ordinary courſe came neerer and neerer; firſt to his feet, and ſo growing higher, began to waſh him well favouredly. Wherewith the King abaſhed, and partly alſo afraid, ſtart back, and looking to his Lords; Lo (ſaith he) ye call me ſuch a mighty King, and yet can I not command back this little water to ſtay at my word, but it is ready to drown me. Wherefore all earthly Kings may know, that all their powers be but vain, and that none is worthy to have the name of a King, but he alone which hath all things ſubject to the power and authority of his Word, which is the Lord of Heaven and Earth, the Creator above of all things, the Father of our Chriſt and Lord, who with him for ever is to be glorified: Him let us worſhip and extol for our King for ever. After this (as Hiſtories witneſs) he never ſuffered the Crown to come upon his head, but went to Wincheſter, or (as ſome ſay) to Canterbury; but both thoſe may be true; for his going to Canterbury, was to acknowledge that there was a Lord much higher, and of more power than he himſelf was, and therewithal to render up his Crown for ever. With that, Egelnothus, Archbiſhop of Canterbury informed him of the Image of the Crucifix before mentioned, which diſſolved the matter between married Prieſts and life of Monks, and did many other miracles more, being then at Wincheſter. Wherewith the King, provoked to go to Winchester to the Rood, there reſigned up his regal Crown, and made the Rood King over all the Land.

The King Crown put on a Rood.

Here is alſo to be noted in this Canutus, that although (as is ſaid) he condeſcended in the beginning of his reign upon King Edgars Laws: Yet after in proceſs of time, he ſet forth peculiar Laws of his own. Among which, divers there be that concern as well cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, as alſo temporal. Whereby it may appear, that the government of ſpiritual matters did not depend then of the Biſhop of Rome: But appertained to the lawful authority of the temporal Prince, no leſs than of matters and cauſes temporal. As for example, by theſe ordinances of the aforeſaid Canutus may be well conſidered as here follow: Pecunia ſepulturæ juſtum eſt ut aperta reddatur. Si aliquod corpus a ſua parœchia deferatur in aliam, pecunia ſepulturæ, &c. In Engliſh.

Kings of England have as much right in cauſes of ſpiritual as temporal.

Certain Laws of King Canutus for the ordering of matters Eccleſiaſtical.

And here is an end of the Daniſh Kings. Now to the Engliſh Kings again, whoſe right line cometh in again in Edward here Following.

King Edward the Confeſſor, England afflicted by the Danes, the ſpace of 255. yeares.

FOr ſo much as God of his mercy and providence who is only the maker of heirs, thought it ſo good, after the woful captivity of this Engliſh nation, to grant now ſome reſpite of deliverance, in taking away the Danijh Kings without any Iſſue left behind them: Who reigning here in England, kept the Engliſh people in miſerable ſubjection, about the ſpace of eight and twenty years, and from their firſt Landing in the time of King Brightricus, waſted and vexed this land the term of 255. years. Now their Tyranny here coming to an end, the next Election and right of the Crown fell (as appertained) to Edward the younger Son of King Egelred and Emma, a meer Engliſhman: Who had been now long baniſhed in Normandy, as is above declared; a man of gentle and ſoft Spirit, more appliable to other mens council, than able to truſt to his own; of nature and condition ſo given from all War and Blood-ſhed, that being in his baniſhment he wilhed rather to continue all his life long in that private eſtate, than by war or blood-ſhed to aſpire to any Kingdom. This Edward, after the death of Canutus the ſecond, or Hardecanute, being ſent for of the Lords into Normandy, to take poſſeſſion of the Realm, although he ſomething miſtruſted the unconſtant and fickle heads of Engliſhmen (yet having ſufficient Pledges laid for him in Normandy) came over, accompanied with a few Normans, and not long after was Crowned at Wincheſter, in the year 1043. by Edſius then Archbiſhop of Canterbury. And not long after that, he married Godiſba, or Editha, Daughter of Earl Godwin, whom he intreated after ſuch ſort, that he neither put her from his bed, nor yet dealt with her ſtefhly. Whether it were for hate of her kin (as moſt like it was) or for love of chaſtity, it remaineth uncertain. But moſt Writers agree, that he continued his life without offence with women; for the which he is highly exalted among our ſtory Writers, and called holy King Edward. After he had thus taken upon him the Government of the Realm, he guided the ſame with much wiſdom and juſtice, the ſpace of four and twenty years, lacking two months; from whom iſſued (as out of a fountain) much godlineſs, mercy, pity, and liberty toward the poor, gentleneſs and juſtice toward all men, and in all honeſt life he gave a vertuous example to his people. He diſcharged the Engliſhmen of the great Tribute called Dane-gilt, which before time was yearly levied to the great Impoveriſhing of the people. He ſubdued the Scots and the Welſhmen, which in their borders began to rebel againſt him. In much peace he continued his Reign, having no forrein Enemy to aſſault him: Albeit, as ſome Chronicles do ſhew, certain Danes and Norgwaines there were, which intended to ſet upon England. But as they were taking ſhipping, there was brought to them firſt one Boul, then another, of Miede or Methe, to drink upon a boun Voyage. Thus one Cup coming after another, after drink came drunkenneſs, after drunkenneſs followed jingling, of jangling came ſtrife, and ſtrife turned unto ſtripes; whereby many were ſlain, and the other returned to their home again. And thus the merciful Providence of the Lord diſpatched that Journey.

King Edward Crowned.

Holy King Edward a virgin in marriage.

Methe in Greek ſignifieth drunkenneſs.

In the time of this Edward, Emma his Mother was accuſed to be familiar with Alwin the Biſhop of Wincheſter: Upon which accuſation (by Counſel of Earl Godwin) he took from her many of her Jewels, and cauſed her to be kept ſome-deal more ſtrictly in the Abbey of Warwel, and the Biſhop commited to the Examination of the Clergy. Polydor ſaith they were both in Priſon at Wincheſter, where ſhe ſorrowing the deſame both of her ſelf and the Biſhop, and truſting upon her conſcience, delireth them of juſtice, offering her ſelf ready to abide any lawful trial, yea, although it were with the ſharpeſt.

Accuſation of the Arch-biſhop againſt Emma the Kings mother.

Then divers of the Biſhops made labour to the King for them both, and had obtained, had not Robert then Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſtopped the ſuit. Who, not well contented with their labour, ſaid unto them; My brethren, how dare you defend her which is no woman but a beaſt? She hath defamed her own Son the King, and taken her Lecherous Leman the Biſhop. And if it be ſo, that the woman will purge the Prieſt, who ſhall then purge the woman, that is accuſed to be conſenting to the death of her Son Alfred, and procured venom to the poyſoning of her Son Edward? But whether ſhe be guilty or guiltleſs; if ſhe will go barefooted for her ſelf four ſteps, and for the Biſhop five, continually upon nine Plough ſhars fire hot; then if ſhe eſcape harmleſs, he ſhall be abſolved of this challenge, and ſhe alſo.

False accuſation purged by hot Iron.

To this ſhe granted: The day was appointed; at which day the King, and a great part of his Nobles were preſent, except only Robert the Archbiſhop. This Robert had been a Monk of a houſe in Normandy, and an helper of the King in his exile, and ſo, by the ſending for of the King, came over and was made firſt Biſhop of London, after Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Then was ſhe led blindfold unto the place between two men, where the Irons lay burning hot, and paſſed the nine ſhares unhurt. At laſt, ſaith the: Good Lord, when ſhall I come to the place of my purgation? When they then opened her eyes, and ſhe ſaw that the was paſt the pain, ſhe kneeled down giving God thanks.

A ſtrange thing if it were true, and without falſe conveyance.

Then the King repented (ſaith the ſtory) and reſtored unto her, that he had before taken from her, and asked her forgiveneſs. But the Archbiſhop fled into Normandy.

Great ſtorm and tempeſt. Hugh. Pop. lond.

Near about this time, about the tenth year of his Reign, fell puffing great ſnow from the beginning of January, to the ſeventeenth day of March. After which inſued a great mortality of men, murren of cattel, and by lightning the Corn was wonderfully Blaſted and Waſted.

Not long after this, a certain Earl of Bologne, who had married King Edwards Siſter, came into England: Through the occaſion of whom, when execution ſhould be done upon the Citizens of Dover, for a fray between them and the Earls men, variance hapned between King Edward, and Earl Godwin; who perceiving that he could not withſtand the Kings malice (although he gathered a great company to work therein what he could) fled into Flanders, and was outlawed with his five Sons. King Edward repudiated his Wife, the Daughter of the ſaid Godwin: But the ſecond year after by mediators, he was reconciled to the King again and called from baniſhment, and for his good abearing he gave for Pledges his two Sons, Biornon and Toſtius, which were ſent to the Duke of Normandy, there to be kept.

During the time of the Outlawry of Godwin, William Baſtard Duke of Normandy, came with a goodly company into England to ſee King Edward, and was honourably received. To whom the King made great chear, and at his return inriched him with great gifts and pleaſures; and there (as ſome write) made promiſe to him, that if he died without iſſue, the ſaid William ſhould ſucceed him in the Kingdom of England.

William Duke of Normandy came to England.

In this Kings reign lived Marianus Scotus the ſtory-writer. As concerning the end of Earl Godwin, the cruel murtherer of Alfred, and of the Normans, although divers Hiſtories diverſly do vary, yet in this the moſt part do agree, that as he ſat at the Table with King Edward at Windſor, it happned one of the Cup-bearers, one of Earl Godwins Sons, to ſtumble and recover again, fo that he ſhed none of the drink, whereat Godwin laughed; and ſaid, how the one brother had ſuſtained the other. With which words the King calling to mind his brothers death that was ſlain by Godwin, beheld the Earl, ſaying, So ſhould my brother Alfred have holpen me, had not Godwin been. Godwin then, fearing the Kings diſpleaſure to be newly kindled, after many words in excuſing himſelf, ſaid; So might I ſafely ſwallow this Morſel of Bread, as I am guiltleſs of the deed. But as ſoon as he had received the Bread, forthwith he was ſtrucken dead. Then the King commanded him to be drawn from the Table, and ſo was conveyed by Harold his Son to Wincheſter, and there Buried.

About the thirteenth year of this Kings reign, the ſaid King Edward ſent Aldred Biſhop of Worceſter to the Emperor Henricus the fourth, praying him that he would ſend to the King of Hungary, that his Coulin Edward, Son of Edmund Ironſide, might come into England, for ſo much as he intended to make him King after him, which was called Edward Outlaw. The which requeſt was fulfilled, ſo that he came into England with his Wife Agatha, and with his children, to wit, Edgar Adeling, Margaret and Chriſtina. But the year after, his return into this Realm, this Edward deceaſed at London, and was buried at Wincheſter, or as Fornalenſis ſaith, at Paul Church in London. After whole deceaſe the King then received Edgar Adeling his Son, as his own child, thinking to make him his heir. But fearing partly the unconſtant mutability of the Engliſhmen, partly the Pride and malice of Harold the Son of Godwin, and of others (perceiving thereby that he could not bring that his purpoſe ſo well to paſs) directed ſolemn Ambaſſadors unto William Duke of Normandy his kinſman, admitting and aſſigning him to be his lawful heir, next to ſucceed after him to the Crown.

After the death of Godwin, Harold his Son waxed ſo in the Kings favour, that he ruled the moſt and greateſt cauſes of the Realm, and was Lieutenant of the Kings Army, who with his brother Toſton or Toſtius (ſent by the King againſt the Welſhmen) ſubdued their rebellion. But afterward, ſuch envy grew between theſe two brethren, for that Toſtius ſaw his brother Harold ſo greatly advanced in the Kings favour, that at Hertford the ſaid Toſtius ſlew all his Brothers men. Whom, when he had cut in pieces, he powdred their quarters and mangled parts in barrels of Salt, Vinegar, Wine, and other Liquors. That done, he made a Power againſt his Brother Harold (being King) with the aid of certain Danes and Norwegians, and fought a battel with him in the North, as after ſhall follow (God willing) to be ſeen. So ungracious were theſe wicked Children of Earl Godwin, that if they had ſeen any fair Manſion or Manor-place, they would play the Owner thereof with all his kindred, and enter the poſſeſſion thereof themſelves.

The envy and diſlike of brethren.

Ungracious children of a wicked Father.

A place of Polydor Virgil examined.

At length it came in the mind of this Harold to ſail over the Sea (as Polydor ſaith) unto Normandy, to ſee his Brother Wilnotus, as alſo his couſin Hacus, whom the King had ſent thither to be kept for pledges, as ye heard before. Polydor ſaith, Theſe pledges were Toſto and Biornon; but that cannot be, for Toſtius was then in England. But as Henricus Archdeacon of Huntington ſaith, his Journey was into Flanders, as ſeemeth more like. For it is not to be thought, that Harold, who was a doer in the cruel murther of Alfred, and of the Normans, would venture into Normandy: and therefore more like it is, that his ſailing was into Flanders. But as the ſtory proceedeth, he, being in the courſe of his ſailing, was weather driven by tempeſt into the Province of Ponntith, where he was taken as Priſoner, and ſent to Duke William of Normandy, to whom he was made to ſwear, that he in time following ſhould marry his Daughter: and that, after the death of King Edward, he ſhould keep the Land of England to his behoof, according to the will and mind of Edward (after ſome Writers) and ſo to live in great Honour and Dignity next unto him in the Realm. This promiſe faithfully made to the Duke, Harold returneth into England, with his couſin Hacus the Son of his Brother Swanus being delivered unto him. But Wilnotus, Brother of Harold, the Duke keepeth ſtill for performance of the Covenants: Thus Harold, I ſay, returning home, (ſheweth the King all that he had done in the foreſaid matters, wherewith the King was well contented. Whereby it may be gathered, that King Edward was right well willing, that Duke William ſhould Reign after him, and alſo it ſeemeth not unlike, but that he had given him his promiſe thereunto before.

Among all that were true and truſty to King Edward of the Engliſh Nobility, none had like commendation, as had Leofricus Earl of Mercia and of Cheſter. This Leofricus purchaſed many great Liberties for the Town of Coventry, and made it free of all manner of things, except only of Horſe. Which freedom there was obtained by means of his wife Godina, by riding (as the fame goeth) after a ſtrange manner through the Town. This Leofricus with his wife Godina builded alſo the Abbey of Coventry, and indued the ſame with great Lands and Riches.

You heard a little before of the coming over of Edward called the Outlaw, Son of King Edmund Ironſide, whom King Edward had purpoſed to have made King after him; but ſoon after his coming over, he deceaſed at London. This Edward had by his wife Agatha, a Son and a Daughter called Edgar Adeling, and Margaret. Which Margaret, being afterward married to the King of Scots, was the Mother of Matild or Mawd the Queen of England, and of Dawid King of Scots, &c.

This was that famous and liberall King Edward, after he had reigned three and twenty years and ſeven months, died, and was buried in the Monaſtery of Weſtminſter, which he had greatly augmented and repaired: but afterward was more inlarged after this form which it hath now, by Henry the third Son of King John.

They that write the Hiſtory of this King, here make mention of a Dream or Revelation that ſhould be ſhewed to him in time of his ſickneſs: how that becauſe the Peers and Biſhops of the Realm were Servants not of God, but of the Devil, God would give this Realm to the hand of others. And the King deſired utterance to be given him, that he might declare the ſame to the people, whereby they might repent. It was anſwered again, that neither would they ſo do; or yet if they did, it ſhould be given to another people. But becauſe it is a Dream, I let it paſs.

The Laws of King Edward.

Divers Laws were before in divers Countries of this Realm uſed, as the Law firſt of Dunuallo Melmucius, with the Laws of Mercia, called Mercenelaga: then the Laws of Weſt-Saxon Kings, as of Ive, Offa, Alfred, &c. which was called Weſt-Saxenelaga: the third were the Laws of Canutus, and of Danes, called Danelaga. Of all theſe Laws, which before were diverſly in certain particular Countries uſed and received, this Edward compiled one univerſal and common Law for all people through the whole Realm, which were called King Edwards Laws; which Laws being gathered out of the beſt and chieſeſt of the other Laws, were ſo juſt, ſo equal, and ſo ſerving the publick profit and wealth of all Eſtates, that, mine Authors ſay, The people long after did rebel againſt their Heads and Rulers, to have the ſame Laws again (being taken from them) and yet could not obtain them.

Ex Mat. Paris.

Furthermore, I read and find in Matthew Paris, that when William Conqueror at his coming in, did ſwear to uſe and practiſe the ſame good Laws of Edward, for the Common Laws of this Realm: afterward (being eſtabliſhed in his Kingdom) he forſwore himſelf, and placed his own Laws in their room, much worſe and obſcurer than the other were, &c.

William Conqueror ſworn to King Edwards Laws, yet wrote from it.

Notwithſtanding, among the ſaid Laws of Edward, and in the firſt Chapter and beginning thereof, this I find among the ancient Records of the Guildhall in London; The Office of a King, with ſuch other appurtenances as belong to the Realm of Britain, ſet forth and deſcribed in the Latine ſtile; which I thought here not unmeet to be expreſſed in the Engliſh Tongue, for them that underſtood no Latine. The tenor and meaning whereof thus followeth.

De jure & appendiis regni Britanniæ, & quod ſit officium Regis.

Ex libro reg. antiquo tam in Pretorio London. The office of a King deſcribed in the Laws of King Edward.

Rex autem, quia vicarius ſummi Regis eſt, ad hoc eſt conſtitutus, ut Regnum terremm & populum Domini, & ſuper omnia ſanctam ejus ueneretur Eccleſiam & regat, & ab injuriis defendat, & malefices ab eo avellat & deſtruat, & penitus diſperdat. Quod niſi fecerit, nomen Regis non in eo conſtabit. Verum Papa Johanne teſtante, nomen Regis perdit: cui Pipinus & Carolus filius ejus (nec dum Reges, ſed Principes ſub Rege Francorum ſtulto) ſcripſerunt, quærentes, ſi ita permanere deberent Francorum Reges, ſolo Regio nomine contenti. A quo reſponſum eſt, illos decet vocare Reges, qui vigilanter defendum & regunt Eccleſiam Dei populum ejus, &c. In Engliſh thus:

The Office of a King.

The King, becauſe he is the Vicar of the higheſt King, is appointed for this purpoſe, to Rule the earthly Kingdom, and the Lords people, and above all things to reverence his holy Church, to govern it, and to defend it from Injuries; to pluck away wicked doers, and utterly to deſtroy them. Which unleſs he do, the name of a King agreeth not unto him, but he loſeth the name of a King, as unthriftie Pope John: to the which Pope, Pipinus and Carolus his Son (being not yet Kings but Princes under the French King, being not very wiſe) did write, demanding this queſtion, whether the Kings of France ought ſo to continue, having but only the name of a King. Unto whom Pope John anſwereth again, that it was convenient to call them Kings, which vigilantly do defend and govern the Church of God and his people, following the ſaying of King David the Pſalmograph, He ſhall not dwell in my houſe which worketh pride, &c.

A King the Vicar of God in earth.

Moreover, the King by right and by his office, ought to defend and conſerve fully and wholly in all ampleneſs, without diminution, all the Lands, Honors, Dignities, Rights and Liberties of the Crown of his Kingdom. And further to reduce into their priſtine ſtate all ſuch things as have been diſperſed, waſted, and loſt, which appertain to his Kingdom. Alſo the whole and univerſall Land, with all Illands about the ſame in Norway and Denmark, to be appertaining to the Crown of his Kingdom, and be of the appurtenances and dignity of the King, making one Monarchy and one Kingdom, which ſometime was called the Kingdom of Britains, and now the Kingdom of England: ſuch bounds and limits as is abovefaid be appointed and limited to the name of this Kingdom.

The limits of the Kingdom of England, how far they do extend.

The office of a King further described.

Moreover, in the forefaid Laws of this King Edward, it followeth in the fame Book, where the forefaid Edward, defcribing the office of a King, addeth in thefe words, A King, faith he, ought above all things to fear God, to love and to obferve his Commandments, and caufe them to be obferved through his whole Kingdom. He ought alfo to keep, cherifh, maintain, and govern the holy Church within his Kingdom, with all integrity and liberty, according to the Conftitutions of his Anceftors and Predeceffors, and to defend the fame againft all Enemies, fo that God above all things be honoured, and ever be before his eyes. He ought alfo to fet up good Laws and Cuftoms, fuch as be wholefome and approved: fuch as be otherwife to repeal them, and thruft them out of his Kingdom. Item, He ought to do Judgment and Juftice in his Kingdom, by the counfel of the Nobles of his Realm. All thefe things ought a King in his own Perfon to do, taking his Oath upon the Evangeliſt, and the bleſſed Relicks of Saints, fwearing in the prefence of the whole State of his Realm (as well of the Temporalty as of the Spiritualty) before he be Crowned of the Archbiſhops and Biſhops. Three ſtates and Servants the King ought to have under him as Vaſſals; fleſhly luſt, avarice, and greedy deſire, whom if he keep under as his Servants and Slaves, he ſhall Reign well and honourably in his Kingdom. All things are to be done with good adviſement and premeditation: and that properly belongeth to a King. For haſty raſhneſs bringeth all things to ruine, according to the ſaying of the Goſpel, Every Kingdom divided in it ſelf ſhall be deſolate, &c.

Three ſtates and ſervants a King ought to have under his ſubjection.

After the duty and office of Princes thus deſcribed, conſequently followeth the inſtitution of Subjects, declared in many good and neceſſary Ordinances very requiſite and convenient for publick Government. Of the which Laws William Conqueror was compelled, through the Clamor of the people, to take ſome, but the moſt part he omitted, contrary to his own Oath at his Coronation, inſerting and placing the moſt of his own Laws in his Language, to ſerve his purpoſe, and which as yet to this preſent day in the Norman Language do remain. Now (the Lord willing) let us proceed in the ſtory as in order followeth.

Anno 1066. Harold laſt King of Saxons.

HArold the ſecond Son of Earl Godwin, and laſt King of the Saxons, notwithſtanding that divers of the Nobles went with Edgar Adeling, the next Heir after Edmund Ironſide: yet he through force and might contemning the young age of Edgar, and forgetting alſo his promiſe made to Duke William, took upon him to be King of England, Anno 1066. When Harold Hareſagar, Son of Gunnutus, King of Norway and Denmark, heard of the death of King Edward, he came into England with three hundred Ships or more: who then joyning with Toſtius, Brother to the ſaid Harold King of England, entred into the North parts, and claimed the Land after the death of Edward. But the Lords of the Country aroſe, and gave them battel, notwithſtanding the Danes had the Victory. And therefore Harold King of England prepared toward them in all haſt, and gave them another ſtrong battel, and there had the Victory, where alſo Harold King of Denmark, and Toſtius ſlain. Harold ſlew the Dane was ſlain by the hand of Harold King of England; and Toſtius was alſo ſlain in the battel. After this Victory, Harold waxed proud and covetous, and would not divide the prey to his Knights that had deſerved it, but kept it to himſelf; whereby he loſt the favour of many of his Knights and people.

In this mean time, William, Duke of Normandy, ſent Ambaſſage to Harold, King of England, admoniſhing him of the Covenants that were agreed between them: which was, to have kept the Land to his uſe after the death of Edward. But becauſe that the Daughter of Duke William (that was promiſed to Harold) was dead, Harold thought him thereby diſcharged, and ſaid, That ſuch a nice fooliſh Promiſe ought not to be holden (concerning anothers laud) without the conſent of the Lords of the ſame: and eſpecially for that he was thereunto for need or for dread compelled.

The Pope ſendeth a Banner to Duke William upon hope of Victory into England.

Upon theſe Anſwers received, Duke William, in the mean while that the Meſſengers went and came, gathered his Knights, and prepared his Navy, and had the aſſent of the Lords of his Land to aid and aſſiſt him in his journey. And over that ſending unto Rome to Pope Alexander, concerning his Title and Voyage into England, the Pope confirmeth him to the ſame, and ſent unto him a Banner, willing him to bear it in the Ship, wherein himſelf ſhould ſail. Thus Duke William being provided of all things concerning his journey, ſped him to the Sea-ſide, and took ſhipping at the Haven of S. Valery, where he tarried a long time ere he might have a convenient Wind, for the which his Souldiers murmured, ſaying, It was a wondreſs, and a thing diſpleaſing God, to deſire to have another mans Kingdom by ſtrength; and namely, when God was againſt it in ſending contrary Wind, &c. At the laſt, the Wind ſhortly after came about, and they took ſhipping with a great Company, and landed at Haſtings in Suſſex. Duke William lands at the Haven of Haſtings.

For three Cauſes Duke William entred this Land to ſubdue Harold. One was, for that it was to him given by King Edward his Nephew. The ſecond was to take wreke for the cruel murther of his Nephew Alfred, King Edwards Brother, and of the Normans, which deed he aſcribed chiefly to Harold. The third was, to revenge the wrong done to Robert Archbiſhop of Canterbury, which was exiled by the means and labour of Harold, in the time of King Edward. Three cauſes why Duke William entred into England.

Thus, while Harold was in the North, Duke William made ſo great ſpeed, that he came to London before the King; out of which he was holden, till he made good ſurety, that he and his people ſhould paſs through the City without tarrying: which promiſe he well obſerving, paſſed the Bridge, and went over to Suſſex, from whence he ſent a Monk unto Harold, and profered him three manner of ways. Firſt, either to render to him the poſſeſſion of the Land, and ſo to take it again of him under Tribute, reigning under him; Secondly, or elſe to abide and ſtand to the Popes arbitrement betwixt them both; or Thirdly, to defend this quarrel in his own Perſon againſt the Duke, and they two only to try the matter by dint of Sword, without any other blood-ſhedding. Three conditions offered to Harold by Duke William.

But Harold refuſed all theſe Offers, ſaying, It ſhould be tried by dint of Swords, and not by one Sword: and ſo gathered his people and joyned battel with the Normans, in the place where afterward was builded the Abbey of Battel in Suſſex. In the beginning of which fight, the Engliſhmen kept them in good Array like to vanquiſh the Normans: wherefore Duke William cauſed his men to give back, as though they fled, whereby the Engliſhmen followed faſt, and broke their Array. Then the Normans, fiercely giving a Charge upon them, in concluſion obtained the Victory through the juſt providence of God. Where King Harold, who before had murthered Alfred the true Heir of the Crown, with his Company of Normans ſo cruelly, was now wounded of the Normans in the left eye with an Arrow, and thereof incontinent died: although Gerardus ſaith he fled away to Cheſter, and lived after that a Monk in the Monaſtery of S. James. Which is not like, but rather that he was there ſlain after that he reigned nine months, and was buried at Waltham (which proveth that he died not at Cheſter) and ſo was he the laſt that reigned in England of the blood of Saxons, the which continued (to reckon from Hengiſtus his firſt Reign in Kent) by the ſpace of 591 years, and if it be reckoned from the years of the Weſt-Saxons, then it indureth the ſpace of 565 years. The fight betwixt the Engliſh and Duke William. King Harold ſlain.

This Duke William and King Edward were by the Fathers ſide couſin germans removed. For Richard the firſt of that name, which was the third Duke of Normandy after Rollo, was Father to Duke Richard the ſecond of that name, and Brother to Emma Mother to King Edward. Which Duke Richard the ſecond was Father to Duke Robert, this Duke Williams Father. The coniunction betwixt King Edward and William the Conquerour.

Albeit in this matter other ſome may gather otherwiſe and better, perchance; yet if I may ſay what I think, verily I ſuppoſe, that there is no Conſanguinity ſo much the cauſe, why God of his unknown Judgments ſuffered the Normans here to prevail, as was rather the cruel murther of Alfred and of the innocent Normans, wrought by the cruel deſpight of Harold and the Engliſhmen, as is before declared. The which mercileſs murther, God here juſtly in this Conqueſt recompenſed. Murther puniſhed by the Conqueſt.

Now it remaineth alſo, to theſe foreign Affairs of Kings and Princes, to add ſomething likewiſe concerning the con- Archbiſhops of Canterbury.

tinuation of the Archbiſhops of Canterbury, beginning there where we laſt left: that is, with Elphegus, whom we declared a little before to be ſtoned by the Danes at Greenwich. After which Elphegus, next ſucceeded Lingus, after him Egelnothus alſo above mentioned. Then Robertus a Norman, a great doer (as is declared) about King Edward, and a faithful Counſellor unto him; but he abode not long. After whom Stigandus invaded the See (as they report) by Symony, being both Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Biſhop of Wincheſter, and alſo Abbot in another place, wherein he continued a great ſpace, gathering and heaping goods together; till at length Duke William clapt him in priſon, and there kept him, placing in his room Lanfrancus a Lombard born, of whom more ſhall follow (Chriſt willing) hereafter to be declared. Lingus, Egelnothus, Robertus, Stigandus.

This Sylveſter was a Sorcerer, which after the ſort of them that work by Familiars (as they call them) and by Conjuration, compacted with the Devil to be made Pope. And ſo he was (through the operation of Satan) according to his requeſt. Which things, ſome Hiſtories ſay, he did greatly repent before his death. But for a more ample declaration hereof, I will bring in the words of Johannes Stella, a Venetian, tranſlated from Latine into Engliſh, concerning the ſaid Sylveſter; to the intent that our Inchanters and Sorcerers now adays (whereof there be too many in England) may the better through his example be admoniſhed. The words of Stella be theſe, agreeing alſo with the Narration of Benno, Platina, and many others. Sylveſter, the ſecond of that name, being Pope, and a Frenchman, called Gilbertus, fate in his Papacy four years, one month, and eight days. He entred into his Papacy through wicked and unlawful means: who from his youth being a Monk, and leaving his Monaſtery, gave himſelf wholly to the Devil, to obtain that which he required. And firſt coming to Hiſpalis a City in Spain; there he applied his Book and profited alſo, inſomuch that he was made Doctor, having amongſt his Auditors, Otho the Emperors Son, and Robert the French King, Lotharius Archbiſhop of Senon, with divers other more. By whoſe advancement he was promoted, firſt Biſhop of Rheme, afterward Biſhop of Ravenna, and at laſt, through the operation of Satan, was exalted to the Papacy of Rome; upon this condition, that after his death, he ſhould give himſelf to the Devil, by whoſe procurement he came to that promotion. Upon a certain time he demanded an Anſwer of the Devil, how long he ſhould injoy his Poſedom. To whom he anſwered again, Until thou ſay Maſs in Jeruſalem thou ſhalt live. At length the fourth year of his Popedom, ſaying Maſs at Lent time in the Temple of the holy Croſs, being called then Jeruſalem, there he knew the time was come when he ſhould die. Whereupon being ſtruck with Repentance, he confeſſed his fault openly before the people, deſiring them to cut his body all in pieces (being ſo ſeduced by deceits of the Devil) and ſo being hewn in pieces, that they would ſay it upon a Cart, and bury it there whereſoever the Horſes would carry it of their accord. And ſo the ſaying is, That by the Providence of God (whereby the wicked may learn, that there is yet hope of remiſſion with God, ſo that they will repent them in their life) the Horſes of their own accord ſtayed at the Church of Lateran, and there he was buried: where commonly by the ratling of Sylveſter the ſecond a fond Sorcerer. Johannes Stella, Platina, Petrus Premoſtratenſis, Naucclerus, Antoninus, Volaterran, Rovere, Johannes Baleus. Ex Johan. Stella.

his bones within the Tomb, is portended the death of Popes, as the common report goeth. Thus much out of Johannes Stella concerning Sylveſter. By whom our Sorcerers and Inchanters, or Magicians may learn to beware of the deceitful operation of Satan, who at the end deceiveth and fruſtrateth all them that have to do with him: as the end of all ſuch doth declare commonly, which uſe the like art or trade. The Lord and God of all mercy, through the Spirit of Jeſus our Redeemer, diſſolve the works of Satan, and preſerve the hearts of our Nobles, and all other Engliſhmen from ſuch Infection. Amen. An admoniſhion for Sorcerers and wicked Conjurers.

After Sylveſter, ſucceeded John the nineteenth, by whom was brought in (as Volaterran ſaith) the Feaſt of All Souls in the year 1004. through the means and inſtigation of one Odilo, Abbot of Cluniake, to be celebrate next after the Feaſt of All Saints. This Monk Odilo, thinking that Purgatory (as he heard) ſhould be in the Mount Aetna, dreamed upon a time, in the Country of Sicil, that he by his Maſſes, had delivered divers Souls from thence: ſaying moreover, That he did hear the voyces and lamentations of Devils, crying out for that the Souls were taken from them by the Maſſes and Dirges Funeral, Ex Baleum thorpo. in profo. 4. lib. ſentent. And not long after him, came John the twentieth, and Sergius the fourth. After whom ſucceeded Benedictus the eighth; then John the one and twentieth, who being promoted by Art Magick, of Theophylact his Nephew, Gratianus, Brazutus, and other Sorcerers, brought in firſt the Faſt of the even of John Baptiſt and Saint Laurence. After him followed Pope Benedictus the ninth, likewiſe aſpiring to his Papacy by like Magick, practiſing Inchantments and Conjuration in Woods, after an horrible manner; who reſiſting the Emperor Henricus the third, Son to Conradus, and placing in his room Petrus the King of Hungary with this verſe, The Feaſt of All Souls brought into the Church. Benedictus the ninth.

Petra dedit Romam Petro, tibi Papa coronam.

Afterward, for fear of Henricus prevailing in battel, he was fain to ſell his Seat to his Succeſſor, Gratianus, called Gregorius the fixth, for 1500 l. At which time were three Popes together in Rome, reigning and raging one againſt another; Benedictus the ninth, Sylveſter the third, and Gregorius the ſixth. For the which cauſe Henricus, ſurnamed Niger, the Emperor coming to Rome, diſplaced theſe three Monſters at one time, placing for them Clement the ſecond, and there-upon inacting that there ſhould no Biſhop of Rome henceforth be choſen, but by the conſent and confirmation of the Emperor. Which Conſtitution, though it was both agreeable, and alſo neceſſary for publick tranquility of that City, yet the Cardinals would not ſuffer it long to ſtand, but did impugne it afterward by ſubtil practice and open violence, as in proceſs (the Lord permitting) ſhall appear, in the time of Henricus the fourth and the fifth. In the time of this Clement, the Romans made an Oath to the Emperor, concerning the election of the Biſhops, themſelves to intermeddle no further therein, but as the aſſent of the Emperor ſhould go withall. Howbeit the Emperor departing thence into Germany again, by and by they forgat their Oath, and within nine months after, poiſoned the Biſhop. Which fact, ſome impute to Stephen his Succeſſor, called Damaſus the ſecond. Some impute it to Brazutus, who (as Hiſtories record) within 13 years poiſoned ſix Popes; that is, Clement the ſecond, Damaſus the ſecond, Leo the ninth, Victor the ſecond, Stephanus the ninth, Nicholaus the ſecond. Gregorius the ſixth. A conſtitution that no Pope ſhould be choſen, but by the confirmation of the Emperour. Pope Clement the ſecond.

Thus Clement being poiſoned, after him ſucceeded Damaſus the ſecond, neither by conſent of the people, nor of the Emperor elected, but by force and invaſion, who alſo within 23 days being poiſoned, in the year 1049. much contention and ſtriving began in Rome about the Papal ſeat. Whereupon the Romans through the counſel of the Cardinal ſent to the foreſaid Emperor, deſiring to give them a Biſhop; and ſo he did, whoſe name was Bruno, an Alman, and Biſhop of Cullen, afterward called Leo the ninth. This Bruno being a ſimple man, and eaſie to be led with evil counſel, coming from the Emperor towards Rome in his pontifical Apparel like a Pope; there meeteth him by the way, the Abbot of Cluniack, and Hildebrand a Monk, who, ſeeing him ſo in his Pontificalibus, began to rate him, laying to his charge, that he would ſo take his authority of the Emperor, and not rather of the Clergy of Rome, and the people thereof, as other his Predeceſſors were wont to do: and ſo Pope Damaſus the ſecond.

so counselled him to lay down that Apparel, and to enter in with his own habit, till he had his Election by them. Bruno following their counsel, and confelling his fault before the Clergy of Rome, obtained their favour, and so was nominate Leo the ninth, whereby Hildebrand was made a Cardinal, and put in high room. Under this Pope Leo, were two Councils; one kept at Verfailis, where the Doctrine of Berengarius against the real presence in the Sacrament was first condemned, although Berengarius yet recanted not, which nevertheless was done after in the Council of Lateran, under Nicholas the second, in the year 1060. The other was kept at Moguntia, where amongst many other Decrees it was inacted, That Priests should be excluded and debarred utterly from marriage. Item, that no lay-man might give Benefice or Bishoprick, or any Spiritual Promotion, &c.

Pope Leo the ninth.

Concilium Moguntinum. Nauclerus Cranz.

This Leo, being at Wormes with the Emperor upon Christmas-day, did Excommunicate the Sub-deacon; because in reading the Epistle, he did it not in the Roman tune, he being there present. The Archbishop, moved therewith, departed from the Altar (being then at Mass) saying, He would not proceed any further in his Service, unless his Sub-deacon were restored, whereupon the Pope commanded him to be released, and so they went forward in their Service.

Alb. Cranz. Saxo. lib. 4 cap. 45.

After the death of Leo, whom Brazutus poisoned the first year of his Popedom, Theophylactus did strive to be Pope: but Hildebrand, to defeat him, went to the Emperor (partly also being sent by the Romans for fear of the Emperors displeasure) who assigned another Bishop, a German, called Victor the second. This Victor, having a Council at Florence, deposed divers Bishops and Priests for Simony and Fornication: for Simony, in that they took of peculiar men their Dignities for money; for Fornication, in that, contrary to their Canon, they were married. &c. The second year of his Papacy, and little more, this Pope also followed his Predecessors, being poisoned by the forefaid Brazutus, through the procurement of Hildebrand and his Master.

Pope Victor the second.

Concilium Florentinum.

Here now began the Church and Clergy of Rome to wring out of the Emperors hand the Election of the Pope: electing Stephen the ninth for Pope, contrary to their Oath, and to the Emperors assignment. Here was the Church of Millan first brought to Obedience of the Romish Church, by this Stephanus the ninth Bishop of Rome; who also shamed not to accuse the Emperor Henry (of whom mention is made before) of Heresie, for minishing the Authority of the Roman See. So this was their Heresie at that time, not to maintain the ambitious Proceedings of the Romish Prelate. And Simony they called this, to take and injoy any Spiritual Living at a fecular mans hand. Wherefore Stephen hearing this Simony to reign in divers places, namely, in the Churches of Burgundy and Italy, sent forth the Cardinal Hildebrand to reform the matter, who was no less earneft in that kind of Commission to help the matter forward.

Pope Stephen the ninth.

The Church of Millan first brought under the Church of Rome.

The Emperor accused of Heresie.

Hildebrand sent in Commission for Simony.

Hildebrand beginneth to rise.

In the mean time Stephanus the Pope falling of Brazutus Cup fell sick. Hildebrand, hearing that, applieth home, with all poft speed. So being returned to Rome, he assembleth all the Companies and Orders of the Clergy together, making them to swear that they should admit none to be Bishop, but which should be appointed by the publick consent of them all together. This being done, Hildebrand taketh his journey into Florence, belike to fetch the Bishop of Florence, to stall him Bishop; the Clergy (swearing unto) him that no Bishop should be ordained before his return again. But the people of Rome not suffering the Election to stand so long, after the death of Stephen, elected one of their own City, called Benedictus the tenth. Hildebrand, hearing of this, was not a little offended: wherefore returning to Rome with one Garbardus Bishop of Florence, he caused the Clergy to proceed to a new Election, saying, That Benedictus was not lawfully called, but came in by force and bribing. But the Clergy not daring to attempt any new Election at Rome, went to Sene, and there elected this Garbardus Bishop of Florence, whom Hildebrand brought with him. So were two Popes in Rome together: But Garbardus, named Nicholas the second, holding a Council at Sutrium, through the help of Duke Godfrid and Guibert, and other Bishops about Italy, caused the other Pope to be depofed. Benedictus understanding them to be fet against him through the means of Hildebrand, unpoped himself, and went to Velitrae; living there more quietly than he should have done at Rome.

Pope Leo the ninth.

Pope Victor the second.

Pope Stephen the ninth.

Hildebrand beginneth to rise.

Pope Benedictus the tenth.

Two Popes together at Rome.

Pope Nicholas the second.

Pope Benedictus unpoped himself.

Here is to be touched by the way the error of the gloss upon the three and twentieth Distinction, which falsely alledgeth out of the Chronicles, that Benedictus the tenth, which succeeded Stephen, was depofed: after whom came Johannes Bishop of Sabine for money, and he again depofed. Benedictus was then restored, and after displaced again, and then Johannes Archdeacon Ad portam latinam, was made Pope, and he again depofed by the Emperor, and all in one year. Which story neither is found in any Chronicle, nor agreeth to any Benedictus, fave only that Benedictus the ninth, which was depofed, and then reigned three Popes together: Benedictus the ninth, Sylvester the third, and Gregorius the fixth, which before was called Johannes ad portam latinam (whom the Emperor depofed) all three together. But that Benedict neither was the tenth, neither did he succeed Pope Stephen, as the gloss recordeth. Nicholas thus being fet up without the mind both of the Emperor and of the people of Rome, after his fellow Pope was driven away, brake up the Synod of Sutrium, and came to Rome, where he assembled another Council, called Concilium Lateranum. In which Council firft was promulgate the terrible Sentence of Excommunication mentioned in the Decrees, and beginneth, In nomine Domini noftri, &c. The effect whereof is this: Firft, that he after a fubtil practife (as far and as plainly as he durft speak) undermineth the Emperors Jurisdiction, and transfereth to a few Cardinals, and certain Catholick Perfons, the full Authority of chufing the Pope. Secondly, againft all fuch as do creep into the Seat of Peter by money or favour, without the full content of the Cardinals, he thundereth with terrible blafts of Excommunication, accurfing them and their Children with Devils, as wicked perfons, to the anger of Almighty God, giving alfo Authority and Power to Cardinals, with the Clergy and Laity, to depofe all fuch Perfons, and call a Council-General, wherefoever they will againft them.

The gloss of the Popes Decrees refuted.

Concilium Lateranum. [1059. Dift. 23. cap. Sanc.]

Item, in the faid Council of Laterane, under Pope Nicholas the fecond, Berengarius Andegavenfis, an Archdeacon, was driven to the recantation of his Doctrine, denying the real fubftance of Chrifts holy body and blood to be in the Sacrament, otherwife than Sacramentally and in myftery.

A terrible Curfe of Nicholas

Berengarius driven to recantation.

In the fame Council alfo was hatched and invented the new found devife and term of Tranfubftantiation.

Tranfubftantiation brought in to the Church.

It were too long here to declare the Confederation between this Nicholas and Robertus Guiscardus, whom this Pope (contrary to all right and good Law, displacing the right Heir) made Duke of Apulia, Calabria, Sicilia, and Captain-General of S. Peters lands: that through his force and arms and violence he might the better fubdue all fuch as fhould rebel to his Obedience, and fo did. Now let all men, which be godly wife, judge and underftand how this ftandeth with the Doctrine of Chrift, the example of Peter, or the fpirit of a Chriftian Bishop, by outward arms and violence to conquer Chriftian men and Countries, under the Obedience of a Bishops See. Thus Pope Nicholas the fecond, well anfwering to his Greek name, by might and force continued three years and an half. But at length he met with Brazutus Cup, and fo turned up his heels.

At the beginning of this Nicholas, or fomewhat before, about the year of our Lord, 1057. Henry the fourth, after the deceafe of Henry the third, was made Emperor, being but a Child, and reigned fifty years: but not without great molestation and much difquietnefs, and all through the ungracious wickednefs of Hildebrand, as hereafter (the Lord fo permitting) fhall be declared.

Heresies the fourth, Emperor.

Here by the way cometh to be noted an example, whereby all Princes may learn and underftand how the Pope is to be handled, whofoever looketh to have any goodnefs at his hand. If a man ftand in fear of his curfe, he fhall be made his flave; but if he be depifed of you, you fhall have him as you luft. For the Popes curfe may well be affimiled to Domitians thunder: If a man give ear to the noife and crack, it feemeth a terrible thing; but if you confider the caufes and effect thereof, it is a moft vain ridicle.

The Pope Curfe compared to Domitian thunder.

Alexander Archbishop of York.

In the Reign of this Nicholas, in the year, 1060. Aldredus Bishop of Worcester, after the deceafe of Kinfius his Predeceffor, fhould be made Archbishop of York; who coming to Rome with Toftius Earl of Northumberland for his Pall (as the manner was) could not obtain it, but was deprived of all his Dignity, for fome default (I cannot tell what) in his anfwer; and furthermore, after his reverfion home, was fpoiled alfo of all that he brought with him. Whereupon, he returning again to Rome with Toftius the forefaid Earl, there made his Complaint, but could not be heard: till Toftius, a man of ftout courage, taking the matter in hand, told the Pope to his face, That his Curfe was not to be feared in far Countries, which his own Neighbours, yea and moft vile Vagabonds derided and defpifed at home. Wherefore he required the Pope, either to reftore Aldredus again to his goods loft, or elfe it fhould be known that they were loft, through his means and fubtilty. And furthermore it would come to pafs that the King of England hearing this would debar him of S. Peters Tribute, taking it for a great fhame to him and his Realm, if Aldredus fhould come from Rome both deprived of Dignity, and fpoiled alfo of his goods, &c. In fine, the Pope thus perfwaded by the argument of his perfon, was content to fend home Aldredus with his Pall, according to his requeft.

Item Toftius perfwaded the Pope.

After the death of Nicholas, the Lombards being oppreffed before by Pope Nicholas, and brought under fear, were the more delirous, and thought it good to have a Bishop of their Company, and fo elected the Bishop of Parmen, called Cadolus, to be Pope: fending to the Emperor, and defiring his favour and fupportation therein, for the Election of the Pope (faid they) moft properly appertained unto him.

Cadolus a Lombard made Pope by the Emperor.

The Emperor, well pleafed and content, giveth his good leave and voice withall. Hildebrand, no lefs a wicked Necromancer than a ftout Maintainer of Popifh Liberties againft good Emperors, hearing this, fetteth up by a contrary Faction another Bishop, Anfelmus, after called Alexander the Second. Cadolus, thus elected by the Emperor and the Cardinals, fetteth forward to Rome with a fufficient Army and ftrength of men. Alexander alfo, no lefs prepared, there received him with another Army, where they had a great Conflict, and many flain on both fides. But Cadolus as he had the better caufe, fo he had the worfe fortune: who being repelled, yet repaired himfelf and came again with a greater Power: albeit he prevailed not. The Emperor feeing this hurly burley, to take up the matter, fent thither his Ambaffador Otho Archbishop of Cullen: who coming to Rome, beginneth ftarply to chide the Pope for taking fo upon him without the leave or knowledge of the Emperor, declaring how the Election of that See ought chiefly to appertain to the right of the Emperor, as it hath done for the moft part in the time of his Predeceffors before. But Hildebrand all fet on wickednefs and ambition, and alfo puft up not a little with his late Victories, not fuffering the Ambaffador to tell to the end, interrupted him in the middle of his tale; affirming, that if they fhould ftand to Law and Cuftom, the Liberty of that Election fhould rather belong to the Clergy than to the Emperor. To make fhort, Otho the Ambaffor bearing (belike) more with the Clergy than with the Emperor, was content to be perfwaded, only required this in the Emperors Name, a Council to be had, to decide the matter, whereat the Emperor fhould be prefent himfelf; and fo he was. In the which Council being kept at Mantua, Alexander was declared Pope, the other had his pardon granted. In this Council, amongft many other confultations, it was concluded concerning Priefts, That they fhould have no Wives: fuch as have Concubines to fay no Mafs: Priefts Children not to be feduled from holy Orders: no Benefices to be bought for money: Alleluja to be fufpended in time of Lent out of the Church, &c. This alfo was decreed (which made moft for Hildebrands purpofe) that no fpiritual man, whatfoever he be, fhould enter into any Church, by a fecular Perfon, and that the Pope fhould be elected only by the Cardinals, &c.

Benno Cardinalis writeth thus of Alexander, that after he perceived the frauds of Hildebrand, and of other the Emperors Enemies, and understanding that he was fet up and inthronifed but only for a purpofe; being at his Mafs, as he was preaching to the people, told them he would not fit in the place, unleſs he had the Licence of the Emperor. Which when Hildebrand heard, he was ftricken in fuch a furry, that fcarcely he could keep his hands off him, while Mafs was done. After the Mafs being finifhed, by force of Souldiers and ftrength of men he had him into a Chamber, and there all to be pommild Pope Alexander with his fifts, rating and rebuking him for that he would feek for favour of the Emperor. Thus Alexander being kept up in cuftody, and being ftinted to a certain allowance, as about five grotes a day, Hilderand incroacheth all the whole Revenues of the Church to himfelf, procuring thereby much treafure. At length Alexander, under the miferable indurance of Hildebrand, died at eventide after eleven years and a half of his Popedom.

Pope Alexander under bonds put by Hildebrand.

And thus much of Romish matters.

Thefe things thus difcourfed concerning the matters of Rome; now returning again to our own Country ftory, the order thereof would require to enter again into the Reign of William Conqueror, the next King following in England. But as a certain Oration of King Edgars, which fhould have been placed before, chanced in the mean time to come to my hands, not unworthy to be read: I thought by the way in the end of this Book to infert the fame (although out of order) yet better I judge it out of order, than out of the Book.

The Oration of King Edgar to the Clergy.

BEcause GOD hath fhewed his great Mercy to work with us; it is meet (moft reverend Fathers) that with worthy Works we fhould anfwer his immortable Benefits. For we poffeſs not the Land by our own Sword, and our own Arm hath not faved us: but his right Hand and his holy Arm, becaufe he hath been delighted in us. Therefore it is meet that we fhould fubmit both our felves and our Souls to him, that hath fubjected all thefe things under our Government: and we ought ftcutly to labour, that they, whom he hath made fubject to us, might be fubject to his Laws. It belongs to me to Rule the Lay-people with the Law of Equity, to do juft Judgment between a Man and his Neighbour, to punifh Church-Robbers, to hold under Rebels, to deliver the helpleſs from the hand of the ftronger, the needy alfo and the poor from them that rob them. It belongs alfo to my care to provide neceffary things to the Miniſters of the Churches, to the flocks of the Monks, to the Company of Virgins, and to provide for their peace and quiet. The examining of all whofe manners belongeth unto us; whether they live chaftly, if they behave themſelves honeſtly toward them that be without, whether they be diligent at Gods Service, if they be earneſt to teach the people, if they be ſober in eating and drinking, if they keep meafure in Apparel, and if they be diſcreet in judgment. If ye had regarded theſe things with a trial of them (O reverend Fathers, by your leaves I ſpeak) ſuch horrible and abominable things of the Clerks ſhould not have come unto our ears. I omit to ſpeak how their crown is not broad, nor their wounding convenient: the wantonneſs in your life, your pride in your geſture, the filthineſs in your words do declare the evil of the inward man.

Furthermore, what negligence is in Gods Service, whence ſcarce they will be preſent at the holy Vigils? And when they come to Maſs, they ſeem rather to be gathered to play and laugh than to ſing. I will tell that, that good men be ſorry for, and the evil laugh at. I will ſpeak with ſorrow (if ſo be I may expreſs it) how they be vicious in Banquetings, in Chambering, Drunkenneſs and Unſhamefac'neſs: that now Clerks houſes may be thought to be a Stews of Harlots, and a Covent of Players. There be Dice, there is Dancing and Singing, there is watching to Midnight, with crying and ſhouting. Than the Goods of Kings, the Alms of Princes, yea (and that is more) the price of that precious blood is not eſteemed. Have our Fathers then ſpent their Treaſure for this purpoſe? Have the Kings Coffers decayed by taking away many Revenues, for this cauſe? Hath the Kings Liberality given Lands and Poſſeſſions to Chriſts Churches for this intent, that Clerks Harlots ſhould be decked with the ſame? that vicious Feaſts might be dreſſed? that Hounds and Hawks and ſuch other toys might be gotten? The Souldiers cry out of these things: the people grudge, Minstrels sing and dance Gen. 34. and yet ye regard it not: ye dissemble it. Where is the Sword of Levi, and the Zeal of Simeon, which killed the Sichemites and the circumcised, which bare the figure of them that defile Christs Church with filthy deeds, because they abused Jacobs Daughter as an Harlot? Where is Moses spirit, which spared not his own Kinsfolk that worshipped the head of the Calf?

Where is Phineas the Priests Dagger, which pacified Exod. 32. Num. 25. Acts 5. 8. Gods anger by holy zeal, when he killed him that played the Harlot with the Midianite? Where is Peters spirit, by whose power covetousness is destroyed, and simoniacal Heresie is condemned? Be earnest ye Priests, be earnest to follow the ways of the Lord, and the righteousness of our God. It is time to do against them that have broken the Law of God. I have Constantines Sword, and ye have Peters Sword in your hands; let us joyn right hands, let us couple Sword to Sword, that the Lepers may be cast out of the Temples, that the holy place of the Lord may be purged, and the Sons of Levi may minister in the Temple, who said to his Father and Mother, I know you not; and to his Brother, I know you not. Go too diligently I pray you, lest we repent to have done that we have done, and to have given that we give, if we shall see that to be spent not in Gods Service, but on the riotousness of wicked men, through vile and corrupt liberty of life, for lack of Chastisement. Let the relicks of holy Saints, which they despise, and the holy Altars before which they play the mad-men, move you. Let the great devotion of our Ancestors move you, whose Alms the madness of the Clerks doth abuse. My great Grandfather (as ye know) gave the tenth part of all his Lands to Churches and Abbies. My great great Grandfather, Athelstan of holy memory, thought it not meet to spare his Treasures, his Goods, nor Costs, nor Rents that he might inrich the Church. My Grandfather the elder, Edward, your Fatherhood is not ignorant how great things he gave to the Churches. It becometh you to remember with what Gifts my Father and his Brothers did inrich Christs Altars. O Father of Fathers, Dunstan, behold (I pray thee) the eyes of my Father looking on thee, from that bright place of Heaven: hearken to his complaining words sounding in thine ears, thus pitifully lamenting, O Father Dunstan, thou, thou (I say) gavest me counsel to build Abbies and Churches, thou wait my Helper and Fellow-worker in all things: I chose thee as a Shepherd and Bishop of my Soul, and a Keeper of my Manners. When did I not obey thee? What Treasures did I prefer in respect of thy counsels? What Possessions did I not despise, if thou baddest me? If thou thoughtest meet to give any thing to the poor, I was ready. If thou thoughtest meet to give any thing to Churches, I deferred not. If thou complainedst that Monks or Clerks wanted any thing, I supplied. Thou saidst that Alms lasted for ever, and that there was none more fruitful than that which was given to Abbies or Churches. For with that both Gods Servants are sustained, and that which remaineth is given to the Poor. O worthy Alms! O worthy price of the Soul! O wholsome remedy for our sins, which now doth stink in the sweet Furrs of Priests Lemmans, wherewith they adorn their Ears and deck their Fingers, apparelling their delicate Bodies with silk and Purple! O Father, is this the fruit of my Alms, is this the effect of my desire, and of thy promise? What wilt thou answer to this complaint of my Fathers? I know, I know: When thou didst see a Thief, thou runnest not with him, neither hast thou put thy portion with Adulterers. Thou hast rebuked, thou hast exhorted, thou hast blamed them: but words have been despised; now we must come to stripes of Correction. Thou hast here with thee, the Worshipful Father Edward Bishop of Winchester. Thou hast the Reverend Prelate Oswald Bishop of Worcester. I commit this business to you, that both by Bishoply Correction, and the Kings Authority, the filthy Livers may be cast out of the Churches, and they that live orderly may be brought in, &c.

The Ignorance and Superstition of the time of King Edgar noted.

In this Oration of King Edgar above prefixed three things are chiefly to be noted and considered of them that have judgment to mark and understand, to wit, The religious zeal and devotion of Kings, both in giving to the Church, and also in correcting the manners of Churchmen. Secondly, the dissolute behaviour and wantonness of the Clergy, then abusing the great Donations and Patrimonies of Princes bestowed upon them. Thirdly, the blind Ignorance and Superstition of that time in both States, as well Ecclesiastical as Temporal, in esteeming Christs Religion chiefly to consist in giving to Churches, and in maintaining of Monkery; being falsely perswaded that remission of their Sins, and remedy of their Souls therein, did lie in building Monasteries, erecting Churches and Cloysters, and in placing Monks in the same, and such other Alms-deeds, and Works of devotion. Wherein appeareth how ignorant that time was of the true Doctrine of Christs Faith, and of free Grace of the Gospel, which promiseth life, remedy, and justification, not by any devout Merits of ours, nor by any Works either of the Law of God, or of the Inventions of man, but only and freely by our Faith in Christ Jesus the Son of God, in whom only consisteth all the Promises of God. Amen.

The Doctrine of Justification unknown.

Justification by Faith in Christ.

Now remaineth as in the former Book before, so in this likewise, to prosecute the Order and Race of Archbishops of Canterbury, as we have done the Race of Kings, beginning with Ethelredus, who succeeded next after Celnocke, the seventeenth Archbishop of that See, mentioned where we left before.

THE

THE FOURTH BOOK.

CONTAINING

Other three hundred years from William Conqueror, to the time of John Wickliffe, wherein is described the proud and mis-ordered Reign of Antichrist, beginning to stir in the Church of CHRIST.

William Conquerer.

WIlliam Duke of Normandy, firnamed Conqueror, base Son of D. Robert, the sixth Duke of Normandy, and Nephew unto King Edward, after the foresaid Victory against Harold and the English-men obtained, was received King over the Realm of England, not so much by assent, as for fear and necessity of time. For else the Londoners had promised their assistance to Edgar Etheling to the uttermost of their power. But being weakned and wasted so greatly in battels before, and the Duke coming so fast upon them, and fearing that they could not make their party good, submitted themselves. Whereupon the said William (of a Duke made a King) was Crowned upon Christmas-day in the year of our Lord, 1067. by the hands of Aldredus Archbishop of York; forasmuch as at that time Stigandus Archbishop of Canterbury was absent, or else durst not, or would not come in the presence of the King. A little before the coming in of this Duke, a terrible blazing Star was seen the space of seven days, which was the year before. In record whereof, as well of the Conquest of the Duke, as of the blazing-Star, these Verses yet remain:

{Anno 1067}

A blazing Star.

Sexagenus erat sextus millesimus annus,
Cum pereunt Angli stella monstrante Cometa.

Which King thus being Crowned, did Reign over the Realm of England the space of one and twenty years and one month, with great severity and cruelnes toward the English-men, burthening them with great Tributes and Exactions; which was, to pay of every Hide of ground containing twenty Acres, six shillings. By means whereof certain parts of the Land rebelled, and specially the City of Excester. But at last William overcame them, and won the City, and punished them grievously. But, for that and for other item deeds of William, divers of the Lords departed into Scotland: wherefore he kept the other Lords that tarried the fraiter, and exalted the Normans, giving to them the chief Possessions of the Land. And forsomuch as he obtained the Kingdom by force and dint of Sword, he changed the whole state of the Governance of this Common-wealth; and Ordained new Laws at his own pleasure, profitable to himself, but grievous and hurtful to the people; abolishing the Laws of King Edward, whereunto notwithstanding he was sworn before, to observe and maintain them. For the which, great Commotions and Rebellions remained long after among the people (as Histories record) to have the said Laws of King Edward revived again.

Tribute.

Rebellion. Earl Morcar, and Earl Edwin, Edgar Atheling, with his mother and two sisters Margaret and Christian fled into Scotland. New Kings, new Laws.

King William forsworn in abolishing King Edwards Laws.

Where by the way speaking of Laws, this is memorable, that even in this Kings time the Authority of the Temporal Magistrate was distinct from that of the Church; but yet in such sort, that if need required, he should deal in Causes Ecclesiastical, and be assistant to the Bishops; whose Jurisdiction what it was, and how qualified by King William now holding the stern of Government in his hand, the words following do declare.

Turris Lond'.

Willielmus Gratia Dei Rex Anglorum, comitibus, vicecomitibus & omnibus Francigenis & Anglis, qui in Episcopatu Remigii Episcopi terras habent, salutem. Sciatis &c. In English thus:

William by the Grace of God King of England, to all Sheriffs, Under-Sheriffs, and to all French-born and English, which in the Bishoprick of Remigius the Bishop have Lands, greeting. Know you all, and the rest my faithful Subjects which abide in England, that the Bishops Laws which have been not well, nor according to the Precepts of holy Canons, even to my time in the Kingdom of England; by the Common Council and the Council of mine Archbishops, and the rest of Bishops and Abbots, with all the Princes of my Kingdom I have judged to be amended. Wherefore I command, and by my Royal Authority give in Charge, That no Bishop or Archdeacon do hold any more Pleas of Law in the Hundred by the Bishops Laws, nor bring any Cause which pertaineth to the Cure of Souls unto the judgement of secular men: but whosoever, according to the Bishops Laws, about any Suit or Default be troubled, shall come to the place, which to this end the Bishop shall have chosen and name, and there answer his cause, and not according as in the Hundred, but according to the Canons and Laws of the Bishop they shall do right unto God and to their Bishop. And if any puffed up with pride, being called once, twice, and thrice to the Court of Pleas, refuseth to come, and will not so be drawn to amendment, let him be Excommunicate. And if need be, to correct and revenge this, let the Power and Justice of the Kings Under-Sheriff be used. And he, which being called or summoned to the Bishops Court, will not come, for every calling shall be put to his answer before the Bishop, and make amends. And this I defend, and by mine Authority forbid, that no Under-Sheriff, or Provost, or Officer of the King, nor any Lay-man meddle or make with the Laws belonging to the Bishop; nor that any Lay-man bring or sue another out of the Bishops Court of Justice unto Judgement. And as for Judgment, let it be given in no place but in the Bishops See, or in that place which in the behalf the Bishop shall appoint.

The first Edict to establish Religion.

King William his Edict to establish Religion.

By this evidence of Record it is manifest (as you see) that Duke William (now King) having assumed unto himself the absolute Authority Royal, endeavoured to establish a form of Government both in the Church and Common-wealth answerable to his own mind: howbeit this is to be noted, that he allowed unto the Clergy a kind of Jurisdiction of conventing persons before them, and likewise of exercising such Ecclesiastical Discipline as the quality of that age and time did use. Wherein we will not stand to debate any thing at large, but proceed in the course of our Story, as the Spirit of God shall vouchsafe to direct us.

Over and besides this, the foresaid William, as he was a Warrior, so he delighting in Forts and Bulwarks, builded four strong Castles; two at York, one at Nottingham, and another at Lincoln, which Garrisons he furnished with Normans.

About the third year of his Reign, Harold and Canutus Sons of Swanus, King of Denmark, entred into the North Country. The Normans within York, fearing that the English-men would aid the Danes, fired the Suburbs of the Town. Whereof the flame was so big, and the wind so strong that it took into the City, and burnt a great part thereof, with the Minster of S. Peter, where no doubt many worthy Works and Monuments of York rich City fired, & how burnt.

Books were consumed. In the time whereof the Danes by the favour of some of the Citizens entred the City, and slew more than three thousand of the Normans. But not long after King William chased them out, and drave them to their Ships, and took such displeasure with the inhabitants of that Country, that he destroyed the land from York to Durham, so that nine years after the Province lay waste and unmanured, only except St. Johns land of Beverly; and the people thereof were so strictly kept in penury by the war of the King; that (as our English story saith) they eat Rats, Cats, and Dogs, with other vermin.

The North Country wasted.

Horrible famine in the North parts of Northumberland.

Also in the fourth year of this King, Malcolm King of Scots entred into Northumberland, and destroyed the Country, and slew there many of the people, both of men, women and children, after a lamentable sort, and took some prisoners. But within two years after, King William made such war upon the Scots, that he forced Malcolm their King to do him homage.

Scots fields to King William.

And thus much concerning the outward calamities of this Realm under his foreign Conquerour, which is now the fifth time that the said land with the inhabitants thereof hath been scourged by the hand of God. First, by the Romans in the time of Julius Cesar; then by the Scots and Picts (as hath been shewed) afterward by the Saxons. Again, the Saxons or Englishmen did not enjoy the possession of Britain with long quiet, but were brought in as much subjection themselves under the Danes, as they had brought the Britains before (and that much more) insomuch that through all England, if an Englishman had met a Dane upon a Bridg, he might not stir one foot before the Lord Dane (otherwise Lordane) were past. And then if the Englishman had not given low reverence to the Dane at his coming by, he was sure to be sharply punished (with more) as above hath been declared. And this subjection continued almost from the reign of King Ethelwolfus 230 years, till the reign of King Edward. And yet the indignation of God thus ceased not, but stirred up the Normans against them, who conquered and altered the whole Realm after their own purpose; insomuch that besides the innovation of the Laws, Coyns, and Possessions, there was in no Church of England almost any English Bishop, but only Normans and foreigners placed through all their Diocels. To such misery was this land then brought, that not only of all the English Nobility not one house was standing, but also it was thought reproachful to be called an Englishman. This punishment of God against the English Nation, Writers do assign diversly to divers causes, (as partly before is touched) of whom some assign this to be the cause as followeth in the words of the story: In primitiva Anglie Ecclesia religio elarissime splendebat, ita ut reges & reginæ, duces & episcopi, vel monachatum, vel exilium pro Dei amore appeterent: processu vero temporis adeo omnis virtus in eis emarcuit, ut gentem nullam proditione & nequitia sibi parem esse permitterent, &c. The meaning whereof is this: That whereas Kings and Queens, Dukes and Prelates, in the primitive time of the English Church, were ready for Religion to forsake either Liberty or Country, and give themselves to a solitary life; in process of time they grew to such dissolutenes, that they left no other Realm unto them in iniquity, &c. Again, some writing of the Vision of King Edward, a little before the Invasion of the Normans, testifie how the King reporting of his own Vision, should hear that for the great enormity and misbehaviour of the head-Dukes, Bishops and Abbots of the Realm, the Kingdom should be given to the hand of their enemies after the decease of him, for the space of one hundred years and one day. Which space was also seen by William the Conquerour, to be one hundred and fifty years; and that his progeny so long should continue. Again, some Writers intreating of this so great wrath of God upon the English people, declare the cause thereof as followeth: Nam licut Angli Britones quos Deus dispersos minare, propulserat (peccatis suis exigentibus) humiliavernat, & a terra Angliæ minus justis fugaverant: sic justi duplici perfecutione, &c. Like as the Englishmen did subdue the Britains (whom God propased for their defervings to exterminate) and them unjustly did dispossess of their land, so they should likewise be subdued and scourged with a double persecution; first by the Danes, and after by the Normans, &c. Moreover to these injuries and iniquities done and wrought by the Englishmen, hitherto recited, let us add also the cruel villany of this Nation, in murthering and tything the innocent Normans before, who coming as strangers with Alfred the lawful heir of the Crown, were despightfully put to death. Which seemeth to me no little cause why the Lord (whose doings be always just and right) did suffer the Normans so to prevail. By the coming in of the which Normans, and by their quarrel unto the Realm, three things we may note and learn. First, to consider and learn the righteous retribution and wrath of God from Heaven upon all iniquity and unrighteous dealing of men. Secondly, we may thereby note, what it is for Princes to leave no issue or sure succession behind them. Thirdly, what dangers often do chance to Realms publickly by foreign marriage with other Princes, &c.

The cruel villanies of the English against all degrees of the Nation of England. Five Conquests which have been in this Realm. Romans, Scots and Picts, Saxons, Danes, Normans.

England scourged for their iniquity.

The Vision of King Edward.

Englishmen scourged for their wicked opposing of the Britains.

Englishmen justly scourged for their unjust cruelty against the Normans.

Three things to be noted.

Gods just judgment.

Lack of Succession.

Forraign Marriages.

In the same fourth year of this King, between Easter and Whitsontide was holden a solemn Council of the Clergy of England at Winchester. At the which Council were present two Cardinals sent from Pope Alexander the Second, Peter and John. In this Council, the King being there himself present, were deposed divers Bishops, Abbots and Priors, (by the means of the King,) without any evident cause; to the intent his Normans might be preferred to the rule of the Church, as he had preferred his Knights before to the rule of the Temporality, thereby to stand in more surety of the land. Amongst whom also Stigandus Archbishop of Canterbury was put down for three causes against him pretended.

A Council holden at Winchester. Might overcometh right.

Divers Bishops, Abbots and Priors deposed in England.

Stigandus Archbishop of Canterbury deprived, and the cause why.

The first was for that he had holden wrongfully that Bishoprick, while Robert the Archbishop (above mentioned) was living.

The second was for that he had received the Pall of Benedict Bishop of Rome, the fifth of that name. Which Benedict, for buying his Popedom had been deposed, as is shewed before.

The third cause, for that he occupied the said Pall without license and lawful authority of the Court of Rome.

Fair countenance not to be trusted.

Then Stigandus well proved the benevolence of King William. For where before the King seemed in friendly countenance to make much of him, and did unto him great reverence; then he changed all his mildnes into fiernes, and excuted himself by the Bishop of Rome's authority. So that in the end, Stigandus was deprived of his dignity, and kept in Winchester as a prisoner during his life. This Stigandus is noted for a man so covetous and sparing, that when he would take nothing of his own, and swearing that he had not a peny, yet by a key fastened about his neck, was found great treasure of his under the ground.

A covetous Bishop.

At the same time was preferred to the Archbishoprick of York, Thomas a Norman, and Canon of Baion.

Thomas made Archbishop of York.

Lanfrancus an Italian, Archbishop of Canterbury.

At which time also Lanfrancus, Abbot of Cadomnency (a Lombard and Italian born) was sent for, and made Archbishop of Canterbury, between which two Archbishops, about their Confecration first began a contention, for giving and taking the Oath of obedience; but that contention was at that time appeased by the King; and Thomas was contented to subscribe to the Archbishop of Canterburies obedience.

The Minster of York builded.

After this it followed within short space, that the said Lanfrancus and Thomas Archbishop of York, who first builded the Minster of York, and gave possessions thereunto, came to Rome with Remigius Bishop of Dorcester for their Palls, as the manner was; without which no Archbishop nor Bishop could be confirmed, although their Election were never so lawful. This Pall must be asked no where but of the Pope or his assigns, and that within three months; also it must be asked not faintly, but mightily. Dist. 100. cap. prisca. Which as it was a chargeable thing to other Nations (especially such as were far from Rome) so it was no small gain to the Romish See, so as they did order it. For although at the beginning the Pall was given without money according to the Decree, Dist. 100. or for little, as percase in this time of Lanfranke; yet in processe of years it grew to such excess, that where the Bishoprick of Mentz was wont to give to Rome but ten thousand Florens; afterward it arose so, that he which asked his Confirmation, could not obtain it without twenty thousand. And from thence it exceeded to five and twenty thousand, and at length to seven and twenty thousand Florens; with sum Jacobus Archbishop of Mentz, was preft to pay a little before the Council of Basil; insomuch that the said Jacobus at his departing (which was within four years after) said, that his death did not so much grieve him as to remember his poor subjects, which should be constrained to pay so terrible a fine for the Popes Pall. Now by this, what riseth to the Pope in whole Germany, containing in it above fifty Bishopricks, it may be easily conjectured. Lanfrancus thus coming to Rome, with the other two Bishops; he for the estimation of his Learning obtained of Alexander two Palls, one of honour, the other of love. Item, he obtained for the other two Bishops also their Confirmation. At which time, they being there present before Alexander, the controversie began first to be moved (or rather renewed) for the Primacy betwixt the two Metropolitans, that is, betwixt the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Archbishop of York, whether of them should have preeminence above the other. For Canterbury challenged to himself the Prerogative and primacy over whole Britain and Ireland; the which contention continued a long season betwixt these two Churches, and was often renewed in the days of divers Kings after this; as in the reign of Henry the First, betwixt Thurstinus of York, and Radulphus of Canterbury. And again, in the seven and twentieth year of the said King, at his second Coronation. For Radulphus would not suffer the first Coronation to stand, because it was done by the Bishop of York, without his assent. Also in the reign of Henry the Second, where Alexander Pope made a Letter Decretal betwixt these two Metropolitans, for bearing the Cross in the year 1150. Also another time, in the reign of the said King, betwixt Richard of Canterbury, and Roger of York. Again, about the year of our Lord 1170, when Thomas Becket bearing the King to be Crowned of Roger Bishop of York, complained thereof grievously to Pope Alexander the Third. Item, another time in the year 1176, betwixt Richard and the said Roger, whether of them should sit on the right hand of Cardinal Hugo in his Council at London. Moreover, in the beginning of the reign of King Richard, in the year 1190, betwixt Baldwinus of Canterbury, and Godfridus of York, &c.

Now to proceed in the story hereof: After this question was brought (as is said) to the Popes presence, he (not disposed to decide the matter) sent them home into England, there to have their cause determined. Whereupon they speeding themselves from Rome to England in the year 1070, and in the sixth year (as is said) of this William, brought the matter before the King and the Clergy at Windsor. Whereas Lanfranke first alledging for himself, brought in from the time of Austin to the time of Beda (which was about 140 years) how that the Bishop of Canterbury had ever the Primacy over the whole land of Britain and Ireland; how he kept his Councils divers times within the precincts of York; how he did call and cite the Bishops of York thereto; whereof some he did constitute, some he did Excommunicate, and some he did remove; besides also he alledged divers privileges granted by Princes and Prelates to the Primacy of that See, &c.

To this Thomas Archbishop of York replieth again, and first beginning with the first original of the Britains Church, declareth in order of time how the Britains, &c.

Enea Silvius writeth that there be fifty Bishopricks in Germany.

Lucius the first King of Britain Christened.

Theonus first Archbishop of London.

Eu Chronic. Eyderi.

5. The Britains first possessioners of this Kingdom of Britain, which endured from Brutus and Cadwalladar 2076 years, under an hundred and two Kings, at length received the Christian Faith in the year 162, in the time of Lucius their King, Eleutherius Bishop of Rome sent Faganus and Damianus Preachers unto them; at which time after their conversion, they ordained in the Realm eight and twenty Bishops, with two Archbishops, Theonus the Archbishop of London, and Theodosius Archbishop of York. Under those Bishops and Archbishops the Church of Britain was governed after their conversion, almost three hundred years, till at length the Saxons being then Infidels, with Hengistus their King, subduing the Britains by fraudulent murther invaded their land, which was about the year of our Lord 440. After this the Britains being driven into Cambria (which we now call Wales) the Saxons over-running the land, divided themselves into seven Kingdoms. And so being Infidels and Pagans, continued till the time that Gregory Bishop of Rome sent Austin to preach unto them; which Austin coming first to Dover, being then the head City of Kent, called in Latin, Dorobernia, and there planting himself, converted first the King of Kent, called Ethelbertus, who had then subdued certain other Kings unto Humber. By reason whereof Austin was made Archbishop of Dover, by the appointment of Gregorius, who sent him certain Palls with his Letter from Rome, as before is expressed. Which Letter being recited, then Thomas expounding upon the same, beginneth to declare for himself, how the meaning of Gregory in this Letter was, to reduce the new Church of Saxons or Englishmen to the order that was in the old time among the Britains; that is, to be under two Metropolitans, one of London, the other of York; for so the Church was ordered in the time of the Britains, as is before declared. Notwithstanding he giveth to Austin this prerogative during his life time, to have authority and jurisdiction, not only over his twelve Bishops, but upon all other Bishops and Priests in England. And after his decease then these two Metropolitans, London and York, to oversee the whole Clergy, as in times past amongst the Britains; whom he joyneth together after the death of Austin, to constitute Bishops, and to oversee the Church. And that he so meaneth London to be equal in authority with York, it appeareth by four arguments: First, That he willeth London to be consecrate by no Bishop, but of his own Synod. Secondly, In that he willeth no distinction of honour to be betwixt London and York, but only according to that as each one of them is elder in time. Thirdly, For that he matcheth these two together in common Council, and with one agreement to consent together in doing and disposing such things as they shall consult upon in the zeal of Christ Jesus; and that in such sort that one should not dissent nor discord from the other. What meaneth this, but that they should govern together, whom he would not to dissent together? Fourthly where he writeth, that the Bishop of York should not be subject to the Bishop of London; what meaneth this, but that the Bishop of London should be equivalent with the Metropolitan of York, or rather superior unto him?

Dunwallo Molmucius King of Britain.

This was done by the procurement of S. Augustine.

If this similitude were framed into a syllogistical fashion, the major term and specially the minor were utterly false.

And thus he expounded the meaning of Gregory to be in the foresaid Letter. To whom Lanfrancus again answereth, That he was not the Bishop of London, and that the question pertained not to London. Thomas replieth, having on his part many fautors, that this priviledge was granted by Gregory to Austin alone, to have all other Bishops subject to him; but after his decease there should be equality of honour betwixt London and York, without all distinction of priority; save the only priority of time should make superiority between them. And although Austin translated the See from London to Kent; yet Gregory, if his mind had been to give the same prerogative to the Successors of Austin (which he gave to him) would expressly have uttered it in the words of his Epistle, writing thus to Austin: That which I give to thee Austin, I give also and grant to all thy Successors after thee. But in that he maketh here no mention of his Successors, it appeareth thereby, that it was not his mind so to do.

Lanfrancus replieth.

Thomas replieth.

To this Lanfrancus argueth again: If this authority had been given to Austin alone, and not to his Successors it had been but a small gift, proceeding from the Apostolick See, to his special and familiar friend; especially seeing also that Austin in all his life did constitute no Bishop of York, neither was there any such Bishop to be subject to him. Again, we have priviledges from the Apostolick See, which confirm this dignity in the Successors of Austin, in the same See of Dover. Moreover, all Englishmen think it both right and reason to fetch the direction of well living from that place, where first they took the sparkle of right believing. Further, whereas you say that Gregory might have confirmed with plain words the same thing to the Successors of Austin, which he gave unto him; all that I grant: yet notwithstanding, this is nothing prejudicial to the See of Canterbury. For, if you know your Logick, that which is true in the whole is also true in the parts and what is true in the more is also true in the less. Now the Church of Rome is as the whole, to whom all other Churches be as parts thereof; and as Homo, mankind

Lanfrancus replieth.

The right of Canterbury established by Gregory.

Well proved also out of the Bible.

A Letter of Lanfrancus sent to Pope Alexander.

mankind is Genus, the general in a certain respect to all his Individua, to all particular persons, yet in every particular person lyeth the property of the general; so in like manner the See of Rome in a certain respect is the general, and the whole to other Churches, and yet in every particular Church is contained the whole fulness of the whole Christian faith. The Church of Rome is greater than all Churches; that which is wrought in it ought to work in the less Churches also; so that the authority of every chief head of the Church ought to stand also in them that do succeed; unless there be any precise exception made by name. Wherefore like as the Lord said to all Bishops of Rome the same thing which he said to Peter, so Gregory in like manner said to all the Successors of Austin, that which he said to Austin. So thus I conclude, Likewise as the Bishop of Canterbury is subject to Rome, because he had his faith from thence; so York ought to be in subjection to Canterbury, which sent the first Preachers thither. Now whereas you alledg that Gregory would Austin to be resident at London, that is utterly uncertain. For how is it to be thought that such a Disciple would do contrary to the mind of such a Master? But grant (as you say) that Austin removed to London, what is that to me, which am not Bishop of London? Notwithstanding all this controverse ceasing betwixt us, if it shall please you to come to some peaceable composition with me (all contention set apart) you shall find me not out of the way, so far as reason and equity shall extend.

Order taken between Lanfrancus Bishop of Canterbury, and Thomas Bishop of York.

With these reasons of Lanfranke, Thomas gave over, condescending that the first of his Province should begin at Humber. Whereupon it was then decreed that York from that time should be subject to Canterbury in all matters appertaining to the Rites and Regiment of the Catholick Church; so that wheresoever within England Canterbury should or would hold his Council, the Bishop of York should resort thither with his Bishops, and be obedient to his Decrees Canonical.

Provided moreover that when the Bishop of Canterbury should decease, York should repair unto Dover, there to consecrate with others the Bishops that should be Elect. And if York should decease, his Successor should resort to Canterbury, or else where the Bishop of Canterbury should appoint, there to receive his Consecration, making his profession there, with an Oath of Canonical obedience. Thomas being content withal, Lanfrancus the Italian triumpheth with no small joy, and putteth the matter forthwith in writing, that the memory thereof might remain to the posterity of his Successors. But yet that Decree did not long stand. For shortly after the same scar, so superficially cured, braft out again. Insomuch that in the reign of King Henry the First, Anno Dom. 1121. Thurstinus Archbishop of York could not be compelled to swear to the Archbishop of Canterbury; and yet notwithstanding by the Letters of Calixtus the Second, was Consecrated without any profession made to the said Bishop, with much more matter of contention, all which to recite it were too long. But this I thought to commit to History, to the intent men might see the lamentable decay of true Christianity amongst the Christian Bishops; who enflamed with glorious ambition, so contended for honour, that without meer forcement of Law no modesty could take place.

Thomas 2. yeeld.

Of such like contentions among Prelates of the Clergy for superiority, we read of divers in old Chronicles, as in the History intitled Chronicon Hirfeldense, where is declared a bloody conflict, which twice happened in the Church of Gosparius, between Hecelon Bishop of Hildesheime, and Wedoratus Bishop of Fulda, and all for the superior place, who should sit next to the Emperor; the Emperor himself being there present, and looking on them, and yet not able to stay them.

Thus I have described the troubulous contention between Lanfrancus and Thomas Metropolitan of York, in the days of Alexander, of which controverse, and of the whole discourse thereof Lanfrancus writeth to Pope Alexander, beginning thus:

Domino totius Christianæ religionis summo speculatori Alex. Pap. æ. Lanfrancus sanctæ Dorobernensis Ecclesiæ antistes, debitam cum omni servitute obedientiam. In concilio quod Angliæ per vestram authoritatem coactum est, ubi querelæ Thomæ Archiepiscopi prolatæ & ventilatæ sunt, allata est Ecclesiastica gentis Anglorum Historia, quam Eboracensis Ecclesiæ Presbyter, & Anglorum doctor composuit: and so forth, in a long process of words which follow. Among which in the middle of the Epistle, speaking of Dover and Canterbury, he hath these words: Urbs namque quæ nunc Cantuarberia nominatur, antiquis temporibus, ab ipsis terræ incolis, Dorobernia vocabatur, &c. With many other words in the said Epistle, which for brevity here I overpass.

In the story before of King Egelred, was declared about the year of our Lord, 1016, how the Bishoprick of Lindaffarne, otherwise named Holyland, in the flood of Tweed, was translated to Durham; so likewise in the days of this Lanfrancus, Archbishop of Canterbury, Anno 1076, divers Bishops Sees were altered and removed from Townships to greater Cities. As the Bishoprick of Selese was removed to Chichester; out of Cornwal to Exceter; from Wells to Bath; from Shireborne to Salisbury; from Dorchester to Lincoln; from Lichfield to Chester; which Bishoprick of Chester, Robert being then Bishop, reduced from Chester to Coventry. Likewise after that in the reign of William Rufus, Anno 1095, Herbert Bishop of Thetford from thence reduced the See to Norwich, &c.

Bishops Sees translated inter Eng-Land.

As concerning Dover and Canterbury, whether the See was likewise translated from the Town of Dover to the City of Canterbury in the time of Theodorus; or whether Canterbury by old time had the name of Dorobernia (as the Letter of Lanfrancus to Pope Alexander above mentioned doth pretend) I find it not in Histories expressly defined; save that I read by the words of William, being yet Duke of Normandy, charging then Harold to make a Well of Water for the Kings use in the Castle of Dorobernia, that the said Dorobernia then was taken for that which we now call Dover; but whether Dorobernia and the City of Canterbury be both one or divers, the matter is not great. Notwithstanding this I read in the Epistle of Pope Bonifacius to King Ethelbert, as also to Justinus Archbishop: Item, in the Epistle of Pope Honorius to Bishop Honorius: Item, of Pope Vitalianus to Theodorus; of Pope Sergius to King Ethelred, Alfred and Adulphus, and to the Bishops of England. Likewise of Pope Gregory the Third to the Bishops of England. Item, of Pope Leo to Athelard Archbishop of Canterbury. Of Formosus to the Bishops of England, and of Pope John to Dunstan; that the name of Dorobernia and of Canterbury indifferently are taken for one matter.

Dorobernia and Canterbury taken both for one.

In this time (and by the procuring of this Lanfrancus) the ninth year of this King, a Council was holden at London, where among the Acts thereof these were the principal things concluded:

A Council holden at London, and what were the Acts thereof.

First, For the order of sitting, that the Archbishop of York should sit on the right hand, and the Bishop of London on the left hand; or in the absence of York, London should have the right, and Winchester the left hand of the Archbishop of Canterbury sitting in Council.

2. The second, that Bishops should translate their Sees from Villages into Cities, whereupon those Sees above named were translated.

3. That Monks should have nothing in proper; and if any so had, he dying unconfessed should not be buried in the Churchyard.

4. That no Clerk or Monk of any other Diocess should be admitted to Orders, or retained without Letters Commendatory or Testimonial.

5. That none should speak in the Council except Bishops and Abbots, without leave of the Arch-Metropolitans.

6. That none should marry within the seventh degree, with any either of his own kindred, or of his wives departed.

7. That none should either buy or sell any Office within the Church.

8. That no Sorcery or any Divination should be used or permitted in holy Church.

9. That no Bishop nor Abbot, nor any of the Clergy should be at the judgment of any mans death or dismembring, neither should be any fautor of the said Judicants.

Bishops of England abrout to drive out Monks, and to place Priests against their head.

Moreover in the days of this Lanfrancus, divers good Bishops of the Realm began to take part with Priests against the Monks, in displacing these out of their Churches, and to restore the married Priests again; insomuch that Walkelmus Bishop of Winchester had placed above forty Canons instead of Monks for his part; but this godly enterprize was stopped by stout Lanfranke the Italian Lombard. This lusty Prelate sat nineteen years, but at his latter end he was not so favoured of William Rufus, and died for sorrow. Although this Italian Frank being Archbishop had little leisure to write, yet something he thought to do to set out his famous learning, and wrote a Book against Berengarius, intituling it Opus Scintillarum. The old Church of Canterbury he plucked down and builded up the new.

Opus Scintillarum. Lanfranci.

{Anno 1074.} After the death of Pope Alexander above mentioned, next unto him followed Hildebrand, Simamed Gregory the seventh. This Hildebrand as he was a Sorcerer, so was he the first and principal cause of all this perturbation that is now and hath been since his time in the Church; by reason that through his example all this ambition, stoutnes, and pride entred first into the Church of Rome, and hath ever since continued. For before Hildebrand came to Rome working there his feats, setting up and displacing what Bishops he lifted, corrupting them with pernicious counsel, and setting them against Emperors, under pretence of Chastity destroying Matrimony, and under the title of liberty breaking peace, and resisting authority; before this (I say) the Church of Rome was in some order, and Bishops quietly governed under Christian Emperors, and also were defended by the same; as Marcellus, Miltiades, and Sylvester were subdued, and under obedience to Constantinus, Ann. 340. Siricius to Theodosius, Ann. 388. Gregorius to Mauricius, Ann. 600. Hilarius to Justinian, Ann. 528. Adrianus and Leo to Carolus Magnus. An. 801. Paschalis and Valentius to Ludovicus Pius, Ann. 830. Sergius the nine and twentieth to Lotharius, Ann. 840. Benedictus the third, and Johannes the ninth unto Ludovicus, Son of Lotharius, Ann. 856. But against this obedience and subjection Hildebrand first began to spurn, and by his example taught all other Bishops to do the like.

Hildebrand the cause of all the stoutness and pride in Prelates.

The o'ersight of Bishops in ancient time to Emperors.

Insomuch that at length they wrought and brought to pass that it should be lawful for a few Cardinals and Cardinals (contrary to ancient Ordinance and Statutes Decretal) to chuse what Pope they list, without any consent of the Emperor at all. And whereas before it stood in the Emperors gift to give and to grant Bishopricks, Archbishopricks, Benefices, and other Ecclesiastical Preferments within their own limits, to whom they list; now the Popes through much wrestling, wars, and contention, have extorted all that into their own hands, and to their assigns; yea, have pluckt in all the riches and power of the whole world: and not content with that, have usurped and prevailed so much above Emperors, that (as before) no Pope might be chosen without the confirmation of the Emperor; so now no Emperor may be elected without the confirmation of the Pope, taking upon them more than Princes to place or displace Emperors at their pleasure for every light cause; to put down or set up when and whom they lifted; as Fredericus Primus, for holding the left Stirrup of the Popes Saddle, was persecuted almost to Excommunication. The which cause moveth me to strain more diligence here, in setting out the story, acts and doings of this Hildebrand, from whom as the first Patron and founder sprang all this ambition and contention about the liberties and dominion of the Roman Church; to the intent that such as cannot read the Latin Histories may understand in English the original of evils; how and by what occasion they first began, and how long they have continued.

What Popes have done.

Popes more than Princes.

Frederick, the first stunt for holding the Popes left Stirrup.

And first how this Hildebrand hitherto had behaved himself, before he was Pope, I have partly declared. For though he was not yet Pope in name, yet he was then Pope indeed, and ruled the Popes and all their doings as him lifted. Item, what ways and fetches he had attempted ever since his first coming to the Court of Rome, to magnifie and maintain false liberty against true authority; what practice he wrought by Councils, what factions and conspiracies he made, in stirring up Popes against Emperors, striving for superiority; and what wars followed thereof, I have also expressed. Now let us see further (by the help of Christ) the worthy vertues of this Princely Prelate, after he came to be Pope, as they remain in Histories of divers and sundry writers described.

In English.

Hitherto the Bishops of Rome have been elected by voices and suffrages of all sorts and degrees, as well of the Priests and the Clergy, as of the Nobility, people, and Senate, all conventing and assembling together. And this Election so I find to stand in force, if to be it were ratified and confirmed by the consent of Roman Emperors who had authority to call and to assemble all these, as well as Bishops, together unto Councils as case required. Under the authority and jurisdiction of these Emperors were content tained both in Germany, France, Italy, and through the whole Dominion of Rome, all Patriarchs, Bishops, Masters of Churches and Monasteries, by the Decree of Councils, according to the old custom of our Ancestors, as is declared in a certain story in the life of Carolus Magnus. The holy and ancient Fathers (like as Christ our Lord with his Disciples and Apostles both taught and did) honoured and efteemed their Emperors as the supreme Potestate next under God on earth, let up, ordained, elected and crowned of God, above all other mortal men, and so counted them, and called them their Lords. To them they yielded tribute, and paid their subsidies, also prayed every day for their life. Such as rebelled against them they took as rebels and resisters against God, his Ordinance and Christian piety. The name of the Emperor then was of great Majesty, and received as given from God. Then these Fathers of the Church never intermedled nor intangled themselves with Politick affairs of the Commonweal; much less occupied they Martial arms and matters of Chivalry. Only in poverty and modesty was all their contention with other Christians, who should be poorest and most modest among them. And the more humblenesse appeared in any, the higher opinion they conceived of him. The sharp and two edged-sword they took, given to the Church of Christ, to save, and not to kill; to quicken, and not to destroy; and called it the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, the life and light of men, and revoketh from death to life, making of men, gods; of mortal, immortal. Far were they from that, to thrust out any Prince or King (though he were never so far out of the way, yea an Arrian) from his Kingdom, or to curse him, to release his subjects from their Oath and their Allegiance, to change and translate Kingdoms, to subvert Empires, to pollute themselves with Christian blood, or to war with their Christian Brethren for Rule and Principality. This was not their spirit and manner then, but rather they loved and obeyed their Princes. Again, Princes loved them also like Fathers and fellow-Princes with them of the souls of men. Now this Gregorius the seventh, otherwise named Hildebrandus, trusting upon the Normans, which then ruffled about Apulia, Calabria, and Campania, intisting also upon the power of Machtilda, a stout woman there about Rome; and partly again bearing himself bold for the discord among the Germans; first of all others (contrary to the manner of Elders) contemning the authority of the Emperor, invaded the Cathedral See of Rome, vaunting himself, as having both the Ecclesiastical and Temporal Sword committed to him by Christ, and that fulness of power was in his hand to bind and loose what so he lifted. Whereupon thus he presumed to occupy both the Regiments, to challenge all the whole Dominion, both of the East and West Church, yea, and all power to himself alone, abiding none to be equal, much less superior unto him, derogating from others, and arrogating to himself their due right and honour, setting at light Cesars, Kings and Emperors, and who reigned but by his own Godamercy? Bishops and Prelates as his Underlings he kept in awe, suspending and cursing, and chopping off their heads, stirring up strife and wars, sowing of discord, making factions, releasing Oaths, defeating fidelity and due allegiance of subjects to their Princes. Yea, and if he had offended, or injured the Emperor himself, yet notwithstanding he ought to be feared, as he himself glorieth in a certain Epistle, as one that could not err, and had received of Christ our Saviour, and of Peter, authority to bind and unbind at his will and pleasure. Priests then in those days had wives openly and lawfully (no Law forbidding to the contrary) as appeareth by the deed and writings of their Chapter-seals and Donations, which were given to Temples and Monasteries, wherein their wives also be cited with them for witnes, and were called Presbyteriffæ. Also for Bishops, Prelates, Parsons of Churches, Governours of the Clergy, Masters of Monasteries, and Religious Houses; all these were then in those times in the Emperors Ordination, to assign by voice or consent to whom he would. Now these two things Gregorius this Pope could not abide; for the which two causes only was all his striving and driving from his first beginning to abolish the marriage of Priests, and to translate the Authority Imperial to the Clergy. For to this scope only tended all his labour, practises and devices, as appeared before in the Council of Lateran under Pope Nicholas, and also in the Council of Mantua under Alexander, making their marriage herese, and the other to be simony. And that which before he went about by others, now he practiseth by himself, to condemn Ministers that were married for Nicholaitans, and to receive any Spiritual Regiment of secular persons for simony, directing forth his Letters upon the same to Henricus the Emperor, to Dukes, Princes, Potestates, Tetrarchs; namely to Berchtoldus, to Rodulphus of Suevia, to Welfo, Adalberon, and their wives. Item, to Bishops, Archbishops, Priests, and to all the people; in the which Letters he denounceth them to be no Priests, so many as were married, forbidding men to salute them, to talk, to eat, to company with them, to pay them tythes, or to obey them if they would not be obedient to him. Amongst all others he directed special Letters to Otho Bishop of Constance concerning this matter. But Otho perceiving the ungodly and unreasonable pretence of Hildebrand, would never separate them that were married from their wives, nor yet forbid them to marry which were unmarried, &c.

GREGORY Bishop, Servant of Servants of God, to the Clergy and Laity both more and less, within the Diocese of Constance, Salvation and Benediction. We have directed to our Brother Otho your Bishop our Letters Exhortatory; wherein we enjoyned him, according to the necessity of our duty, by the authority Apostolical, that he should utterly abolish out of his Church the hereste of Simony, and also should cause with all diligence to be preached the Chastity of Priests. But he neither moved with reverence of St. Peter's precept, nor yet with the regard of his duty, neglected to do these things, whereunto we so fatherly have exhorted him, incurring thereby a double offence, not only of disobedience, but also of rebellion, in that he hath gone and done clean contrary to our commandment (yea rather the commandment of blessed St. Peter) so that he hath permitted his Clergy, not only such as had wives, not to put them away, but also such as had none, to take unto them. Whereupon we being truly informed thereof, and grived therewith, have directed to him another Letter, declaring the motion of our displeasure and indignation. In which Letters also we have cited him up to our Council at Rome, there to appear and give account of his disobedience in the audience of the whole Synod. And now therefore we thought it best to signifie this to you (our dear children) whereby in this behalf we might the better provide for your health and salvation. For if your Bishop shall continue so obstinately to repugn and resist against our Commandment, he is not mete to sit over you, &c. Wherefore these shall be to command you, and all them that be obedient to God, and to blessed St. Peter, by our Apostolical authority, that if this your Bishop shall persist in his obstinacy, you that be his subjects hereafter geve to him no service nor obedience. For the which thing doing, we here discharge you before God and your souls. For if your Bishop shall seem contrary to the decreements and injunctions Apostolical, we through the Apostolical authority of St. Peter, discharge and absolve you from the band of your allegiance to him. So that if you be sworn to him, so long as he is a rebel against God and the Apostolick Seat, we loose you from the peril of your Oath, that you shall not need to fear therein any danger, &c.

Otho Bishop of Constance thus being cited, whether he did appear personally himself, I do not read. Thus I read and find, that in the said Council holden at Rome, Hildebrand with other Bishops of Rome did then Enact among many others these three things most special: First, That no Priest hereafter should marry wives. Secondly, That all such as were married should be divorced. Thirdly, That none hereafter should be admitted to the Order of Priesthood, but should swear perpetual Chastity, &c. This Council of Rome being ended, forthwith the act of Hildebrand concerning the single life of Priests was proclaimed and published in all places, and strait Commandment given to Bishops to execute the same.

Three evil things Enacted by Hildebrand. Here cometh in the vow of Chastity.

The Copy of his Bull sent into Italy and Germany was this.

GREGORY the Pope, otherwise Hildebrand, the Servant of the Servants of God, sendeth the Apostles blessing to all them within the Kingdoms of Italy and Germany, that shew their true obedience to St. Peter. If there be any Priests, Deacons and Subdeacons, that still will remain in the sin of fornication, we forbid them the Churches entrance, by the omnipotent power of God, and by the authority of St. Peter, till in time they amend and repent. But if they persevere in these sin, we charge that none of you presume to bear their service; for their blessing is turned into cursing, and their prayer into sin, as the Lord doth testifie to us by his Prophets, I will turn your blessing, &c.

The Clergy of France repugning for divorcing from their wives.

The Bishops of France being called upon daily with the Popes Letters, were compelled to obey the Decree of the Council; but the residue of the Clergy manfully and stoutly withstanding the Popes Decree and inforcement of their Bishops, would not agree, but repined thereat, and said, that the Council did manifestly repugn against the Word of God, and that the Pope did take from Priests that which both God and nature had given them; and therefore that person to be an heretick, and author of a wicked Doctrine, which ruled and governed not by the Spirit of God, but by Satan. The Decree and Act set forth to tend directly against the Word of God and the saying of Christ. Non omnes capiunt verbum hoc: All men have not the gift and capacity of this word. Item, to be against the found Doctrine of St. Paul writing these words, As concerning virginity I have no Commandment of the Lord, &c. Again, He that cannot otherwise live continent, let him marry. Item, that it was against the Canons both of the Apostles, and of the Nicen Council. Moreover, that it was against the course of nature which he required, that men being fequestred from their natural wives and women, should be coached to live as Angels; that is, to perform that which nature doth not give. And therefore the Bishop therein did open a pernicious window to uncleanness and to fornication. In sum, giving up their answer, thus they concluded, That they had rather give up their Benefices than to forsake their natural and lawful wives against the word of Christ. And finally, if married Priests could not please them, they should call down Angels from Heaven to serve the Churches. But Hildebrand nothing moved, neither with honest reason, nor with the authority of holy Scripture, nor with the determination of the Nicen Council, nor any thing else, followeth this matter, calleth upon the Bishops still, with his Letters and legates doth follicite their minds, accuseth them of negligence and dastardnes, threateneth them with Excommunication, unless they cause their Preists to obey his Decree injoyned them. Whereupon a great number of Bishops, for fear of the Popes tyranny, laboured the matter with their Priests, by all means possible to bereave them of their accustomed Matrimony.

Amongst other, the Archbishop of Mentz, perceiving this act of taking away Priests marriage might breed him no little trouble, talketh with his Clergy gently, admonisheth them of the Popes mind and decree, and giveth them half a years respite to deliberate upon the case; exhorting them diligently to shew themselves obedient to the Pope and to him, and to grant with good will that which at length (will they nill they) needs they must be forced unto, and therefore of their own accord to stand content therewith, lest the Pope should be compelled to attempt ways of sharper severity. The time of deliberation expired, the Archbishop assembleth his Clergy at Erpsford the mouth of Oſtober, and there willeth them, according to the Pontifical Decree, either to abjure for ever all Matrimony, or else to abrenounce their Benefices and Ecclesiastical Livings. The Clergy again defend themselves against

Acts of General Councils, with examples of Ancestors, by divers strong arguments, declaring the Popes Decree not to be constant, nor ought to take effect. But the Archbishop said he was compelled so of the Pope, and could not otherwise do, but to execute that which was injoyned him.

The Clergy seeing that no reason nor prayer, nor disputation would serve, laid their heads together, consulting among themselves what was best to be done; some gave counsel not to return again to the Synod, some thought it good to return and to thrust out the Archbishop from his See, and to give him due punishment of death for his deserving, that by the example of him others may be warned hereafter never to attempt that thing any more to the prejudice of the Church, and the rightful liberty of Ministers. After that this was signified to the Archbishop by certain spies that were amongst them, what the Clergy intended to do, the Archbishop to prevent and salve the matter, sendeth to the Priests as they were coming out, certain messengers, bidding them be of good hope, and to return again to the Metropolitan, and they should have that should content their minds. So being perswaded, they come again to the Council. The Bishop promiseth he would do his endeavour what he could, to revoke and turn the mind of the Bishop of Rome from that sentence, willing them in the mean time to continue as they had done in their Cure and Ministry. The next year following, Hildebrand the Souldier of Satan fendeth his Legate (a certain Bishop called Curiensis) unto the Archbishop of Mentz, and assembled there a Council. In the which Council the Archbishop again propoſeth the matter, commanding all the Clergy, under pain of the Popes curse, there perpetually either to abrenounce their wives or their livings. The Clergy defendeded their cause again with great constancy. But when no defension could take place, but all went by tyranny and meer extortion, it burſt in the end to an uproar and tumult, where the Legate and the Archbishop being in great danger, hardly escaped with their lives, and so the Council broke up. By this schism and tumult it followed, that the Churches after that in chusing their Priests, would not send them to the Bishops (the enemies and suppressors of Matrimony) to be confirmed and inducted, but did elect them within themselves, and so put them in their office without all leave or knowledg of the Bishops, who then agreed and were determined to admit no Priests, but such as should take an Oath of perpetual singleneſs, never to marry after. And thus first came up the Oath and profession of single Priesthood. Notwithstanding, if other Nations had followed the like constancy and concord of those German Ministers, the Devillish drift and decree of this Hildebrand (or rather Helbrand) had been frustrate and avoided. But this greediness of Livings in weak Priests made them to yield up their godly liberty to wicked tyranny. Yet this remaineth in their Germans to be noted, what concord can do in repressing the unordinate requests of evil

Single Priesthood how it began.

Bishops, if they constantly stand to the truth, and hold together. And thus much for banishing of Matrimony.

Now let us proceed to the contents between wicked Hildebrand and the godly Emperor. But before, by the way of digreſſion, it ſhall not be much wide from the purpoſe to touch a little of the properties of this Pope, as we find them deſcribed in certain Epiſtles of Benno a Cardinal, writing to other Cardinals of Rome; which Benno lived in the ſame time of Hildebrand, and deteſteth the prodigious acts and doings of this monſtrous Pope.

Firſt, declaring that he was a Sorcerer moſt notable, and a Necromancer, an old companion of Sylveſter, of Laurentius and Theophylactus, called otherwiſe Benedictus Nonus. Amongſt others Benno Cardinalis writeth this Hiſtory of him: 'How upon a certain time this Gregorius 'coming from Albanus to Rome, had forgot behind him 'his familiar Book of Necromancy, which he was wont 'commonly to carry always with him. Whereupon re- 'membring himſelf, entring the Port of Lateran, he call- 'eth two of his moſt truſty familiars to fetch the Book, 'charging them at no hand to look within it. But they 'being ſo reſtrained, were the more deſirous to open it, 'and to peruſe it, and ſo did. After they had read a little 'the ſecrets of the Satanical Book, ſuddenly there came 'about them the meſſengers of Satan, the multitude and 'terrour of whom made them almoſt out of their wits. At 'length they coming to themſelves, the Spirits were inſtant 'upon them to know wherefore they were called 'up, wherefore they were vexed; quickly (ſaid 'they) tell us what ye would us to do, or elſe we will 'fall upon you, if ye retain us longer. Then ſpake one of 'the young men to them, bidding them go and pluck 'down yonder walls, pointing unto certain high walls 'there nigh to Rome, which they did in a moment. The 'young men croſſing them for fear of the Spirits (ſcarce re- 'covering themſelves) at length came to their Maſter.

Ex Benno Cardinali.

And it followeth moreover in the Epiſtle of the ſaid Benno to the Cardinals.

'We have made mention to you before of divers Col- 'ledges of the Church of Rome which refuſed to Commu- 'nicate with him; as Leo then Archpriest of the Cardi- 'nals, Benno, Ugobaldus, Johannes the Cardinal, Peter 'Chancellor and Cardinal, being all inſtituted before this 'Hildebrand. Theſe three alſo being Conſecrated by him, 'that is, Natro, Innocentius, and Leo, forſook him, cur- 'ſing the deteſtable errors which he held. In like caſe Theo- 'dinus whom he conſtituted Archdeacon, and other Car- 'dals more, Johannes Simamed Primicerius, Petrus Ob- 'lationarius, with all that appertained to them, ſaving one 'only man. And now when this Hildebrand ſaw that 'the Biſhops alſo would forſake him, he called unto 'him the Laymen, and made them privy of his Council, 'thinking thereby to ſeparate the Biſhops, that they ſhould 'have no conference with the Cardinals. After that he 'called together thoſe Biſhops, and being guarded with 'bands of Lay-men he inforced the Biſhops partly for fear, 'and partly for his menacing words, to ſwear unto him, 'that they ſhould never diſagree unto that which he would 'have done, that they ſhould never defend the Kings quar- 'rel, and that they ſhould never favour nor obey the Pope 'that ſhould in his ſtead be inſtituted. Which thing be- 'ing done he ſent them by means of the Prince of 'Salernites into Campania, and thus did he ſeparate them 'from the company of the Cardinals, and from the City 'of Rome. And not only the Biſhops, but alſo the Prieſts 'of the City, and Clerks of inferior Orders, as alſo the 'Lay-men he bound by their Oaths, that at no time, nor 'for any cauſe they ſhould condeſcend unto the King.

Pope Hildebrand ſeparateth the Biſhops from the Cardinals.

Pope Hildebrand compelleth the Biſhops and Prieſts of Rome to ſwear unto him.

'As ſoon as Pope Alexander was dead, which died 'ſomewhat before night, the ſame day contrary to the 'Canons, he was choſen Pope of the Lay-men. But the 'Cardinals ſubſcribed not to his Election. For the Canons 'preſcribed (under pain of curſing) that none ſhould be 'choſen Pope before the third day after the burial of his 'Predeceſſor. But he (by miniſter means thus climbing to 'the See) removed the Cardinals of the ſaid See from be- 'ing of the Council. But with what perſons he conſulted 'night and day, Rome well heard and ſaw. And he now 'putting the Cardinals from his Council, his life, faith, and 'doctrine, no man could accuſe or bear witneſs of; whereas 'in the Canons is commanded, that in every place where- 'ſoever the Pope is, ſhould be with him three Cardinals 'being Prieſts, and two Deacons, becauſe of his Eccleſia- 'ſtical teſtimony, and ſtile of verity; of which Canonical 'Decree loose gentle Reader before. He violently wreſted 'the Sacred Scriptures to cover his falſhood, which kind 'of Idolatry how great it is, manifeſtly throughout all the 'Scripture it appeareth. Contrary to the minds and conſe 'ſel of the Cardinals, and beſides the determinate order of 'pronouncing judgment by the Canons, he raſhly did Ex- 'communicate the Emperour, being in no Synod ſolemn- 'ly accuſed before. The ſentence of which Excommuni- 'cation

Pope Hildebrand pronounceth raſhly and unadvisedly ſentence againſt the Emperour.

'cation, after rehearſal of theſe preſents, ſhall alſo be ma- 'niſeſted (Chriſt willing) to the which Excommunica- 'tion, ſaith Benno, none of the Cardinals would ſub- 'ſcribe. As ſoon as he aroſe out of his Seat Papal, to Ex- 'communicate the Emperor, the ſame Seat (being made 'but a little before with big Timber) ſuddenly by the ap- 'pointment of God was rent and ſhivered in pieces; ſo 'that all men might plainly underſtand, what and how 'great and terrible Schiſms that Lubber had ſown againſt 'the Church of Chriſt, againſt the Seat of St. Peter, and 'how cruelly he had diſperſed the Chair of Chriſt, in de- 'ſiling the Laws of the Church, ruling by might and aufe- 'rity in that his ſo perilous and preſumptuous Excommu- 'cation.

The Pope clafe brake under him as he rode to excommunicate the Emperour.

'In the deſcription of the ſame Excommunication he 'inſerteth thoſe things wherein he himſelf erred, when he 'abſolved the Emperor being unjuſtly Excommunicate, and 'the Biſhops alſo communicating with him, and to the ut- 'termoſt thus cutting and mangling the Unity of the 'Church, and thoſe that communicated with them, did as 'much as in him lay to make two Churches.

The Pope diſſolveth the unity of the Church.

'Alſo the ſame bold Merchant commanded that the 'Cardinals ſhould faſt, to the intent that God would re- 'veal whoſe Opinion was better (either of the Church 'of Rome, or of Berengarius) touching the controverſie 'of the Lords Body in the Sacrament. And hereby he 'proved himſelf to be a manifeſt Infidel, for that in the 'Nicene Council it is written, he that doubteth is an In- 'fidel.

Of this Miracle we read in no approved Hiſtory.

'Further, he fought for a Sign to eſtabliſh his Faith con- 'cerning the Article of the Lords Body; as did Gregory to 'confirm the Womans Faith, when the conſecrated Bread 'was tranſubſtantiated into the form of a fleſhly Finger. 'He alſo ſent two Cardinals (Attones and Cunones) unto 'Anaſtaſe, that with the Archpriest of the ſame Church 'they ſhould begin a Faſt of three days ſpace, and that ev- 'ry of them (every day during thoſe three days) ſhould 'ſay over the Pſalter, and ſing Maſſes, that Chriſt would 'ſhew unto them ſome ſuch like ſign of his Body, as he 'did to the foreſaid Gregory; which thing they could not 'ſee.

The Pope kiſseth one to day the Emperour.

'The Emperor was wont oftentimes to go to St. Maries 'Church in the Mount Aventine to pray. Hildebrand, 'when he had by his Eſpials ſearched out and knew all 'the doings of the Emperor, cauſed the place where the 'Emperor was accuſtomed (either ſtanding or proſtrate on 'his face to pray) to be marked, and for Money he hired 'a naughty pack (like himſelf) to gather and lay toge- 'ther a heap of great ſtones directly over the place in the 'Vault of the Church, where the Emperor would ſtand, 'that in throwing the ſame down upon his Head, he 'ſhould ſlay the Emperor. About which purpoſe as the 'Hireling haſted, and was buſie, removing to the place 'a ſtone of great hugeneſs and weight, it broke the Plank 'whereon it lay, and the Hireling ſtanding thereupon, 'both together fell down from the Roof to the Pavement 'of the Church, and with the ſame ſtone was daſht all in 'pieces. And after the Romans had underſtanding of 'the handling of this matter, they fattened a Rope to one 'of the feet of this Hireling, and cauſed him to be 'drawn through the Streets of the City three days to- 'ther in example to others. The Emperor notwithſtand- 'ing, according to his wonted clemency, cauſed him to be 'buried.

Hildebrand caſteth the Sacrament of the Lords Body in the fire, becauſe it would give him no anſwer.

'Johannes Biſhop of Portua (being one of the ſecret 'Council of Hildebrand) came up into the Pulpit of St. 'Peter, and amongſt other things in the hearing both of the 'Clergy and People, ſaid, Hildebrand and we have com- 'mitted ſuch a fact, and ſo horrible, for the which we are 'all worthy to be burned alive (meaning of the Sacrament 'of the Body of Chriſt) which Sacrament Hildebrand, 'when he thereof required a Divine Anſwer againſt the 'Emperor, and it would not ſpeak, threw into the fire 'and burned it, contrary to the perſwaſion of the Cardi- 'dinals that were there preſent, and would have reſiſted 'the fame.

'In the ſecond holy day in the Eaſter-week, when the 'Clergy and the People were aſſembled at St. Peter's Church 'to hear Maſs, after the Goſpel he ſent up into the Pulpit 'as he was in his Pontifical Attire, and in the preſence of 'divers Biſhops and Cardinals (a great company both of 'the Senate and the People of Rome being gathered to- 'gether) openly preached (among many other words of 'Divination) that the King, whoſe name was Henry, 'ſhould die (without all peradventure) before the Feaſt 'of S. Peter next enſuing: or elſe at leaſtwiſe, that he 'ſhould be ſo dejected from his Kingdom, that he ſhould 'not be able any more to gather together above the num- 'ber of ſix Knights. This he preached to the Biſhops and 'Cardinals, and all that were preſent, crying out of the 'Pulpit in theſe words, Never accept me for Pope any The Pope a falſe Prophet. more, but pluck me from the Altar, if this Prophecie be not fulfilled by the day appointed. About the ſame time 'he went about by help of privy Murtherers to kill the The Pope ſeeketh again to murther the Emperour. 'Emperor, but God preſerved him. And many there 'were even at that time, which thought Pope Hildebrand 'to be guilty, and to be the deviſer of the Treaſon, becauſe 'that then he (before the deed put in execution) pre- 'ſumed of the death of the King, being by him falſly pro- 'phecied of before; which words of his wounded many 'mens hearts. And it came to paſs that Hildebrand by 'his words was openly condemned in the Congregation, 'which (as is ſaid) gave judgment of himſelf to be no 'Pope, neither that he would be counted for Pope any 'longer, but thought to be both a Belier and a Traitor, 'unleſs that before the Feaſt of S. Peter next coming, the 'Emperor ſhould die, or elſe ſhould be deprived of all The Pope by his own mouth condemned for an heretick. 'Kingly Honour, inſomuch as he ſhould not be able to 'make above ſix Knights on his part. And thus by the 'appointment of God it came to paſs, that by his own 'mouth he was condemned for an Heretick.

'Thus ſaith the Lord: The Prophet which of arrogan- 'cy will propheſie in my name thoſe things I have not 'commanded him, or elſe will propheſie in the name of 'other Gods, let him be ſlain. And if thou ſhalt ſay with 'thy ſelf, How ſhall I know what thing it is that the 'Lord hath not commanded to be ſpoken? This token ſhalt 'thou have to know it by; Whatſoever things the Prophet 'in the Name of God, ſhall propheſie, and the ſame come 'not to paſs, that manyſt thou be ſure the Lord hath not 'ſpoken, but the Prophet hath imagined through the haugh- 'tineſs of his own mind, and therefore thou ſhalt not be a- 'fraid of him.

The Emperor preſerved by the power of God from the Pope.

'When the time was expired that Hildebrand in his 'Divination had ſet, and that neither the King was dead, 'neither the power of the Empire impaired, and fearing 'leſt by the words of his own mouth he ſhould be repre- 'hended and condemned, ſubtilly he turned his Tale, fay- 'ing, and perſwading the ignorant People, that he meant 'not of the Body of the King, but of his Soul; as though 'the Soul of the King had loſt all, having ſix of his Knights 'or Souldiers, or elſe had been dead during that ſpace; and A ſubtill ſhift of Hildebrand to ſave his tydings Prophecy. Three perſons before they were convict, put to execution by Hildebrand againſt all law.

'Over and beſide, the ſaid Hildebrand judged to death 'three men before they were convict, or elſe confeſſed 'their crime, without the ſentence of any Secular judge, 'and cauſed them to be hanged upon a pair of Gallows 'over againſt the Church of St. Peter in a place called Pala- 'tiolum, without any delay or adviſement, contrary to the 'Laws which command that every publick offender ſhould 'have thirty days ſpace before he be put to execution. Which 'thing even amongſt the Pagans is in use and obſerved, as 'teacheth the authority of S. Ambroſe, and the Martyrdom 'of holy Marcellianus and Marcus.

Centius taken by the Pope, and put into a Barrel of Nails.

'He caſt Centius the Son of Stephan the Alderman into 'Priſon, being before his truſty friend; and in a Veſſel be- 'ing thick ſet with ſharp Nails, he tormented him to the 'point of death, who, after that he was eſcaped, appre- 'hended the ſaid Hildebrand. Of this apprehenſion, be- The Pope taken of Centius. 'fore he was ſet at liberty, he openly forgave all the Con- 'ſpirators. Which thing afterwards, contrary to his fide- 'lity, he brake and revenged, and cauſed Centius, to whom Centius executed by the Pope contrary to promiſe and faith. 'he had forgiven all offences, to be taken, and hanged him 'and nine of his Men upon the Gallows before St. Peter's 'Porch.

There

'There was at the apprehenſion of Pope Hildebrand a certain Widows Son, to whom (and others more for their Penance) he enjoyned a years Baniſhment. Which time being expleat or run out, the Widow in token of more ample ſatisfaction, thinking thereby to have appeaſed the mind of Hildebrand, put a Halter upon her Sons Neck, and drawing her Son by the rope unto the foot of Hildebrand, ſaid, My Lord Pope, at your hands will I receeive again my Son, which one whole year hath indured baniſhment, and other Penance, by your Holineſs injoyned. Then the ſaid Hildebrand for that inſtant, becauſe of thoſe which were with him in company (diſſembling his wrath) delivered her her Son very churliſhly, ſaying, Get thee hence Woman, I bid thee, and let me be in reſt. After this, he ſent his Officers, and apprehended the Widows Son, and gave commandment to the Juſtices to put him to death; who all together making anſwer, ſaid, That they could no more condemn or meddle with him, for that he had for his crime committed appealed once to the Pope, and abiden the baniſhment, and done the Penance by him injoyned. Hereupon this glorious Hildebrand, diſpleaſed with the Judges, cauſed the foot of the Widows Son to be cut off; making neither Repentance, nor the Laws and Ordinances to be of any eſtimation with him; and thus his foot being cut off, he died within three days after with the pain thereof. Many other wicked deeds did this Hildebrand, upon whom the bloud of the Church crieth vengeance, ſhed by the Sword (that is) the miſerable treachery of his tongue: for which things (and that juſtly) the Church refuſed to communicate with him. Hæc Benno.

The villany of the Pope in killing a widows ſon whichebefore had done his penance.

Another Epiſtle of Benno to the Cardinals.

Another Letter of Benno.

TO the reverend Fathers of the Church of Rome, and to his beloved in Chriſt, and to his Brethren that ſtuff for ever be beloved, Benno the Cardinal of the Church of Rome, witheth faithful ſervice, health, and communion with the ſervants of the Catholick Church. Of the which communion, diſcipline and power he vainly braggeth, that by the preſumption of his Authority ſhall unjuſtly bind or looſe any manner of perſon. And he doth unjuſtly bind whatſoever he be, that curſeth any man (being willing to make ſatisfaction, and bewailing his boldneſs, being alſo unconvict, and not confeſſing the crime) but rather curſing that party in vain, he curſeth and condemneth himſelf, turning his weapon upon his own perſon to his deſtruction. O ſtrange and new found treachery proceeding from the Sanctuary, nay rather, from him which as High-Prieſt ſeemeth to rule the Church, and to be a Judge over the Judges.

The deviliſh practice of Hildebrand in ſeizing the Biſhops againſt the Emperor.

'Hildebrand was earneſtly in hand with the Emperor, that he ſhould deprive thoſe Biſhops, which came in by Simony. The Emperor (thinking, as a zealous Prince, that this Commiſſion had proceeded from the Throne of God) without delay obeyed the ſame, and forthwith without any conſideration, or judicial order, deprived certain Biſhops, and thought that by this his obedience to Hildebrand he offered an acceptable Sacrifice to God; not knowing the craftly handling of him. But Hildebrand then again placed thoſe, whom the Emperor for Simony at his commandment had before depoſed, and thoſe whom by that means he made to bear a hateful heart to the Emperor, he reconciled again to himſelf in great familiarity; and by many and great Oaths taken of them, for their fidelity towards him, he promoted them above all the reſt. And thus by theſe pranks, the Imperial Seat of the King being ſhortly after impaired, and deſtitute almoſt of friends, he craftily purchaſing the friendſhip and favour of the greateſt Princes, the better to bring his matters to paſs; ſuddenly again, without any lawful accuſation, without any Canonical vocation, without all judicial order, he excommunicated the Emperor (ſo obedient always unto him) and ſet the Princes of the Empire all againſt him. And notwithſtanding (as the Apoſtle ſaith) that no Man ought to circumvent his Brother in his buſineſs, asmuch as in him lay, he rather mortified and killed him, than brotherly corrected him. Thus the Emperor being many ways circumvented, as excommunicated beſides the Canonical Order, and by the conſent and counſel of Hildebrand, ſpoiled of the greateſt part of his Imperial Honour, and overcharged with great Wars and Slaughters of his own Subjects, in vain deſired and ſued to have the Canon read and heard, cauſing him by force and violence at Canuſium, in the preſence of Hildebrand, to accuſe himſelf by his own confeſſion.

The Emperor cruſed by Hilde-brand to accuſe himſelf.

'Say you now (I pray you) all ſuch as love juſtice, and love not to lean either upon the left hand, or elſe the right hand, in favour of any perſon; ſay your minds, whether that ſuch a confeſſion being forced upon never ſo poor a Man (much more upon an Emperor) ought at ſuch a time to be prejudicial or not? Or whether he, which extorted the ſame confeſſion is guilty of the Canon? Or elſe he, which being ſo perverſly judged, ſuffered the injury of a moſt perverſe Judge? Which alſo moſt patiently and publickly ſuffered this violence with lamentable affliction upon his bare feet, clothed in thin garments, in the ſharp Winter, which never was ufed, and was three days together at Canuſium made a ſpectacle both of Angels and Men, and a ludibrious Mocking-ſtock to that proud Hildebrand. Never truſt me, if that fourteen Cardinals, the Archdeacon himſelf, and he that is called Primicerius, being all wiſe and religious Men, beſides many other of the Clerks of Lateran (to the judgment and priviledge of whoſe holy ſeat the whole World is obedient) weighing and conſidering his intolerable Apoſtaſie, departed not from participating, and refuſed communicating with him.

The great patience of the godly Emperor.

'This glorious Hildebrand, and his affinity, by their new Authority, breaking the Decrees of the Chalcedon Council, not only in words, but alſo in publick Writings have agreed, that it is tolerable both to baptiſe and communicate being out of the Church of God: and how blind theſe men were, and alſo what Hereticks they be, their own writings do declare. What a miſchief is this (ſaith Benno) they preſume to judge of the Church, which ſwarm themſelves in all errors, who alſo eſteem the verity but as a lye; and leſt their poyſoned falſhood both in words and writings ſhould appear, they have like ſubtil poyſoners (the ſooner to deceive) mixed honey therewithal. A lie, ſaith St. Auguſtine, is every thing pronounced with the intent of deceiving of others.

Monſtrum quid.

It were too long and tedious here to recite all the deteſtable doings, and diabolical practices of Conjurings, Charms and filthy Sorceries, exerciſed between him and Laurentius, and Theophylact, otherwiſe named Pope Benedict the ninth, whereof a long narration followeth in the foreſaid Epiſtle of Benno to the Cardinals, to be ſeen, to whom the Reader may repair, whoſo hath either leiſure to read or mind to underſtand more of the abominable parts and deviliſh acts of this Hildebrand.

Pope Hildebrand a worker of Sorcery and Conjurie.

Thus having ſufficiently alledged the words and teſtimonies of Benno and Aventinus, concerning the acts and facts of this Pope; now let us proceed (in the order as followeth in his ſtory) to ſet forth the miſerable vexation which the vertuous and godly Emperor ſuſtained by that ungodly perſon.

About what time Hildebrand was made Pope, Henricus the fourth Emperor was incumbred and much vexed with civil diſſention in Germany, by reaſon of certain grievances of the Saxons againſt him and his Father Henricus the third. Whereupon the matter growing to ſedition, ſides were taken, and great Wars enſued betwixt Otho Duke of Saxony, and Henricus the Emperor. This buſie time ſeemed to Hildebrand very opportune to work his feats, whoſe ſtudy and drift was ever from the beginning to advance the Dominion of the Romiſh ſeat above all other Biſhops, and alſo to preſs down the authority of the Temporal Rulers, under the Spiritual Men of the Church. And although he went about the ſame long before by ſubtil traines and acts ſet forth concerning Simony; yet now he thought more effectuouſly to accomplish his purpoſed intent after that he was exalted thither where he would be. And therefore now bearing himſelf the bolder, by the authority of St. Peter's Throne, firſt he began to purſue the act ſet out by his Predeceſſor, as touching Simony, curſing and excommunicating, whoſoever they were, that received any ſpiritual living or promotion at Lay mens hands, as alſo all ſuch as were the givers thereof. For this he called then Simony, that under that colour he might defeat the Temporal Poſſeſſates of their right, and and ſo bring the whole Clergy at length to the lure of Rome. And forſomuch as the Emperor was the Head, thinking firſt to begin with him, he ſendeth for him by Letters and Legates to appear in the Council of Lateran at Rome. But the Emperor buſied in his Wars againſt the Saxons, had no leiſure to attend to Councils. Notwithſtanding Gregorius the Pope proceedeth in his Council, rendring there the cauſe and reaſon before the Biſhops, why he had Excommunicated divers of the Clergy, as Hermannus Biſhop of Bamberge, Chancellor to the Emperor, and other Prieſts more for Simony. And there moreover, in the ſaid Council he threateth to Excommunicate likewiſe the Emperor himſelf, and to depoſe him from his Regal Kingdom, unleſs he would abrenounce the Hereſie of Simony, and do Penance. The Council being ended, Gimbertus Archbiſhop of Raverna perſwaded with one Centius (a Roman, the Captains Son, whom the Pope had Excommunicated) to take the Emperors part againſt the Pope, who watching his time in the Temple of St. Mary, upon Chriſtmaſs day in the morning, taketh the Pope and poureth him faſt in a ſtrong Tower. The next day the People of Rome hearing this, harneſs themſelves with all expedition to help the Biſhop, whom when they looſed out of Priſon, they beſieged the Houſe of Centius, and pluckt it down to the ground; his Family having their Noſes cut off, were caſt out of the City; Centius himſelf eſcaping, fled to the Emperor. Guibert the Archbiſhop, pretending good will to the Pope, departed from Rome, who likewiſe had wrought with Hugo Candidus Cardinal, and with Theobaldus Archbiſhop of Millain, alſo with divers other Biſhops about Italy, to forſake the Pope and take the Emperors part. Gregory the Pope called Hildebrand, hearing the Conſpiracy, layeth the ſentence of Excommunication upon them all, and depriveth them of their Dignity. The Emperor being moved (not unworthily) with the arrogant preſumption of the proud Prelate, called together a Council at Wormes. In which Council all the Biſhops not only of Saxony, but of all the whole Empire of Germans, agree and conclude upon the Depoſition of Hildebrand, and that no obedience hereafter ſhould be given to him. This being determined in the Council, Roulandus a Prieſt of Parmen, was ſent to Rome with the ſentence, who in the name of the Council, ſhould command Gregory to yield up his Seat, and alſo charge the Cardinals to reſort to the Emperor for a new Election of another Pope. The tenor of the Sentence ſent by Roulandus was this.

FOrſomuch as thy firſt ingreſs and coming in hath been ſo ſpotted with ſo many perjuries, and alſo through thine abuſe and new fangleneſs: moreover, becauſe thou haſt defamed thine own life and converſation, with ſo much and great diſhoneſty, that we ſee no little peril or ſlander to riſe thereof; therefore the obedience, which yet we never promiſed thee, hereafter we utterly renounce, and never intend to give thee. And as thou haſt never taken us yet for Biſhops (as thou haſt openly reported of us) ſo neither will we hereafter take thee to be Apoſtolick.

Gregory the Pope, tickled with this Sentence, firſt condemneth it in his Council of Lateran with Excommunication. Secondly, depriveth Sigifridus Archbiſhop of Mentz of his Dignities and Eccleſiaſtical Livings, with all other Biſhops, Abbots and Prieſts, as many as took the Emperors part. Thirdly, accuſeth Henricus the Emperor himſelf, depriveth him of his Kingdom and Regal poſſeſſion, and releaſeth all his Subjects of their Oath of Allegeance given unto him, after this form and manner.

The Tenor of the Sentence Excommunicatory, againſt Henricus the Emperor by Pope Hildebrand.

Ex Platina.

OBleſſed St. Peter Prince of the Apoſtles, bow down thine ears I beſeech thee, and hear me thy Servant, whom thou haſt brought up even from mine infancy, and haſt delivered me until this day from the hands of the wicked, which hate and perſecute me, becauſe of my faith in thee. Thou art my witneſs, and alſo the bleſſed Mother of Jeſus Chriſt, and thy Brother St. Paul, fellow partner of thy Martyrdom, how that I entred the Function not willingly, but inforced againſt my will; not that I take it ſo as a Robbery, lawfully to aſcend into thy Seat: but becauſe that I had rather paſs over my life like a pilgrim or private perſon, than for any fame or glory to climb up to it; I do acknowledge (and that worthily) all this to come of thy grace, and not of my merits, that thou charge over Chriſtian people, and thou power of binding and looſing is committed to me. Wherefore, truſting upon this aſſurance for the dignity and tuition of Holy Church in the Name of God Omnipotent, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, I do here depoſe Henry, the Son of Henry once the Emperor, from his Imperial Seat, and Princely Government, who hath ſo boldly and preſumptuouſly laid hands upon thy Church. And furthermore, all ſuch as heretofore have ſworn to be his Subjects, I releaſe them of their Oath, whereby all Subjects are bound to the Allegiance of their Princes. For it is meet and convenient, that he ſhould be void of Dignity, which ſeeketh to diminiſh the Majeſty of thy Church. Moreover, for that he hath contemned my monitions, tending to his health and wealth of his People: and hath ſeparate himſelf from the fellowſhip of the Church (which he, through his ſeditions, ſtudieth to deſtroy) therefore I bind him by vertue of Excommunication, truſting and knowing moſt certainly, that thou art Peter (in the Rock of whom as in the true foundation) Chriſt our King hath built his Church.

Mark this Ye Papiſts, that ſay, the Pope cannot err.

The Pope threatneth the kindneſs of St. Peter.

The Emperor, thus aſſaulted with the Popes cenſure, ſendeth abroad his Letters through all Nations to purge himſelf, declaring how wrongfully, and againſt all right he was condemned. The Princes of Almany partly fearing the crack of the Popes Thunderclap, partly again rejoycing that occaſion was renewed to rebel againſt the Emperor, aſſembled a Commenſement, where they did conſult and ſo conclude to elect another Emperor, and ſo fall from Henry, unleſs the Pope would come to Germany, and he would there be content to ſubmit himſelf and obtain his pardon.

The Saxons take the Popes part againſt the Emperor.

Wherein is to be conſidered the lamentable affections of the Germans in thoſe days, ſo to forſake ſuch a valiant Emperor, and ſo much to repute a vile Biſhop. But this was the rudeneſs of the World then, for lack of better knowledge. The Emperor, ſeeing the chief Princes ready to forſake him, promiſeth them with an Oath, that if the Pope would repair to Germany, he would ask forgiveneſs.

Upon this the Biſhop of Triers was ſent up in Commiſſion to Rome, to intreat the Pope to come into Germany. The Biſhop (at the inſtant of the Legat and of the Princes, was content. He entred into Germany, thinking to come to Auguſta. After he was come to Vercellos (the Biſhop of that City being the Chancellor of Italy, and deſirous to diſturb peace for the old grudge he had to the Emperor) falſly perſwaded with the Pope, that he was certain the Emperor was coming with a mighty great Army againſt him, counſelling him therefore to provide betimes for his own ſafeguard in ſome ſtronger place. Whereby the Popes mind being altered, he retired back to Canuſium or Canuſſus, a City being ſubject to Matilda, a Counteſs of Italy, where he ſhould not need to fear the Emperor.

Peace ſtabliſhed through wicked Counſels.

Henricus underſtanding the falſe fear of the Pope, and of his retire to Canuſium, incontinent (coming out of Spires with his Wife and his young Son, in the deep and ſharp of Winter) reſorteth to Canuſſus. All his Peers and Nobles had left him for fear of the Popes curſe, neither did any accompany him. Wherefore the Emperor, being not a little troubled (laying apart his Regal Ornaments)

came barefooted with his Wife and Child to the Gate of Canossus, where he from Morning to Night (all the day fasting,) most humbly desireth absolution, craving to be let in, to the speech of the Bishop. But no ingress might be given him once within the Gates. Thus he continuing three days together in his petition and sute; at length answer came, that the Popes Majesty had yet no leisure to talk with him. The Emperor nothing moved therewith, that he was not let into the City, patient and with an humble mind abideth without the Walls, with no little grievance and painful labour; for it was a sharp Winter, and all frozen with cold. Notwithstanding, yet through his importunate sute at length it was granted, through the intreating of Matilda the Popes Paramour, and of Arelans Earl of Sebaudia, and the Abbot of Clumiake, that he should be admitted to the Popes speech. On the fourth day being let in, for a token of his true repentance, he yieldeth to the Popes hands his Crown, with all other ornaments imperial, and confessed himself unworthy of the Empire, if ever he do against the Pope hereafter, as he hath done before, desiring for that time to be absolved and forgiven. The Pope answereth, he will neither forgive him, nor release the bond of his Excommunication, but upon conditions. First, to promise that he shall be content to stand to his arbitrement in the Council, and to take such Penance as he shall injoyn him; also that he shall be prest and ready to appear, in what place or time the Pope shall appoint him. Moreover, that he, being content to take the Pope Judge of his cause, shall answer in the said Council to all objections and accusations laid against him, and that he shall never seek any revengement herein. Item, that he (though he be quit and cleared therein) shall stand to the Popes mind and pleasure, whether to have his Kingdom restored, or to lose it. Finally, that before the trial of his cause, he shall neither use his Kingly Ornaments, Scepter or Crown, nor usurp the authority to govern, nor to exact any Oath of Allegiance upon his Subjects, &c. These things being promised to the Bishop by an Oath, and put in writing, the Emperor is only released of Excommunication.

The form and tenor of the Oath, which Henricus made to the Pope.

HEnricus King, after peace and agreement made to the mind and sentence of our Lord Gregorius the Seventh, promise to keep all Covenants and Bonds betwixt us, and to provide that the Pope go safely whereso∣ever he will, without any danger either to him, or to his Retinue; especially in all such places as be subject to our Empire. Nor that I shall at any time stay or hinder him, but that he may do that belongeth to his Function, where and whensoever his pleasure shall be. And these things I bind my self with an Oath to keep. Actum Canos. 5. Calend. Februarii, indic. 15.

Thus the matter being decided between them after the Popes own prescribement, the Emperor taketh his journey to Papia. The Pope with his Cardinals did vaunt and triumph with no little pride, that they had so quailed the Emperor, and brought him on his knees to ask them forgiveness. Yet notwithstanding, mistrusting themselves, and mistrusting time, what might befall them hereafter if fortune should turn, and God give the Emperor to enjoy a more quiet Kingdom; therefore to prevent such dangers betime, they study and consult privily with themselves how to displace Henry clean from his Kingdom, and how that device might safely be conveied. They conclude and determine to derive the Empire unto Rodulphus, a Man of great Nobility amongst the chiefest States of Germany; and also to incite and stir up all other Princes and Subjects (being yet free and discharged from their Oaths) against Henry, and so by force of Arms to expel the Emperor out of his Kingdom. To bring this purpose the better to pass, Legates were sent down from the Pope, Sigebardus Patriarch of Aquilia, and Altimanus Bishop of Padway, which should perswade through all France, that Henry the Emperor was rightfully excommunicated, and that they should give to the Bishop of Rome their consents in chooling Rodulphus to be Emperor. This being done, there was sent to the said Rodulphus, Duke of Suevia, a Crown from the Pope with this Verse;

The crafty conspiracy of the Cardinals against the Emperor.

Petra dedit Petro, Petrus Diadema Rodulpho.

The Verse.

The Rock gave the Crown to Peter,
Peter giveth it to Rodulph.

The gloss upon the Verse of Hildebrand.

Here by the way of digression (to make a little gloss upon this barbarous Verse) two notable lies are to be noted. One, where he lyeth upon Christ, the other, where he lyeth upon St. Peter. First, that Christ gave any Temporal Diadem to Peter, it is a most manifest lie, and and against the Scriptures, when as he would not take it, being given to himself, and saith, his Kingdom is not of the World. Again, where he saith that Peter giveth it to Rodulph, here he playeth the Poet; for neither had Peter any such thing to give; and if he had, yet he would not have given it to Rodulphus from the right Heir; neither is it true that Peter did give it, because Hildebrand gave it. For it is no good argument, Hildebrand did give it, Ergo, Peter did give it; except we will say, Hildebrand stirred up great Wars and Bloudshed in Germany; Ergo, Peter stirred up great Wars in Germany. So Peter neither could, nor would, nor did give it to Rodulphus, but only Hildebrand the Pope; who after he had so done, he gave in commandment to the Archbishop of Mentz and of Cullen to elect this Rodulphus for Emperor, and to annoint him King, and also to defend him with all force and strength they might.

The Pope proved a double liar.

While this Conspiracy was in hand, Henricus the Emperor was absent, and the Popes Ambassadors with him also. In the mean space Rodulphus was elected Emperor, unknown to Henry. Upon this cometh the Bishop of Straborough unto the Emperor, certifying him what was done. He suspecting and seeing the stomach and doings of the Saxons to bent against him, musstereth his Men with expedition, and marcheth forward to defend his right; but first sendeth to Rome (trusting upon the League betwixt him and his Pope) and requireth the Bishop to proceed with his Sentence against Rodulphus, for the rebellious Invasion of his Empire. But the Bishop, minding nothing less, sendeth word again, that it was not right to condemn any person, his cause being not heard; thus under pretence of the Law colouring his unlawful treachery. Henricus, thus disappointed and forsaken on every side, with his Men about him, attempteth Battel against Rodulphus. In which Battel a marvellous great slaughter was on both sides, but the Victory on neither part certain; so that both the Captains yet challenged the Empire. After the Battel, and great murther on both sides, they both sent to Rome, to know of the Popes determination, to whether of them two he judged the right Title of the Empire to appertain. The Bishop commanded them both to break up their Armies, and depart the Field, promising that he shortly would call a Council where this matter should be disputed; in the mean time they should cease from War. But before the Messengers returned again (their Armies being refreshed) they had another conflict together, but not Victory got on either part. Thus both the Captains being wearied in Wars, the Romish Beast the Bishop, which was the cause thereof, perceiving whither these cruel Wars would tend, to the great calamity not only of the Germans, but also of other Nations (trusting to find another way to help Rodulphus and his adherents) sendeth down a Commission by Otho Archbishop of Trevers, Bernardus Deacon, and Bernardus Abbot of Massilia, to whom he gave in charge that they should call together a Council or sitting in Alimany, and that there it should be defined to whether part the Empire should pertain, by moft right and publick consideration; promising that what they should therein determine, he flooking upon the matter through the authority of God omnipotent, and of St. Peter and St. Paul) would ratifie the same. Moreover, for that no let nor impeachment should happen to the Legates by the way, he giveth with them Letters to the Princes and Nations of Germany; whereof the contents be declared briefly in Platina, if any lift to read them.

The Pope Traitor to the Emperor.

Great Wars stirred up by the Pope.

But the Emperor would not so permit the Legates to have any Council within Germany, except they would first deprive Rodulphus of his Kingdom. The Legates, considering that to be against the drift and intention of the Pope, returned again from whence they came. The Pope hearing this, and seeing his purpose was so disappointed by the Emperor, draweth out another Excommunication against him, and again bereaveth him of his Kingdom; sending about his Letters Excommunicatory throughout all places, thinking thereby to further the part of Rodulphus the better. Platina hath in his Book the whole effect of the writing, which tendeth after this fort:

The Copy of the second Excommunication of Hildibrand against the Emperor.

BLessed St. Peter, Prince of the Apostles, and thou St. Paul also, the teacher of the Gentiles, give ear unto me I beseech you a little, and gently hear me, for you are the disciples and lovers of truth. The things that I shall say are true. The matter I take in hand for truth sake, that my brethren (whose salvation I seek) may the more obediently obey me, and better understand how that I trust∣ing upon your defence (next to Christ, and his Mother the immaculate Virgin) resist the wicked, and am ready to help the faithful. I did not enter this Seat of mine own accord, but much against my will, and with tears, for that I accounted my self unworthy to occupy so high a Throne. And this I say, not that I have chosen you, but you have chosen me, and have laid this great burthen upon our shoulders. And now, whereas by this your assignment, I have ascended up this Hill, crying to the people, and shewing them their faults, and to the children of the Church their iniquities: the members of Satan have risen up against me, and have laid hands together to seek my blood. For the Kings of the Earth have risen up against me, and the Princes of this World, with whom also have conspired certain of the Clergy, Subjects against the Lord, and against us his anoint∣ed, saying, Let us break asunder their bonds, and cast off from us their yoke. This have they done against me, to bring me either to death or to banishment. In the number of whom is Henricus, whom they call King, the Son of Henry the Emperor, which hath lift up so proudly his horns and heel against the Church of God, making Conspiracy with divers other Bishops, both Italians, French and Germans. Against the pride of whom hitherto your authority hath resisted; who rather being broken than amended, coming to me in Calsipistia, made humble sute to me for Pardon and Absolution. I, thinking nothing else but true repentance in him, received him again to favour, and did restore him to the Communion only, from which he was Excommuni∣cate; but to his Kingdom (from which in the Synod of Rome he was worthily expelled) I did not restore him, nor to the rents and fruits thereof, (that he might return to the Faith again) that I granted not to him. And that I did for this purpose, that if he should defer to fall to agreement with certain of his Neighbours whom he hath always vexed, and to restore again the Goods both of the Church and otherwise, then he might be compelled by the Censures of the Church, and force of Arms thereunto. Whereby divers and sundry Bishops and Princes of Ger∣many (such as he had long troubled) being helped by this opportunity, Elected Rodulphus their Duke to be King in the place of Henricus, whom they for his trans∣gressions had removed and dispatched from his Empire. But Rodulphus, first in this matter using a Princely modesty and integrity, sent up his messengers to me, de∣claring how he was constrained (would he, wild he) to take that Regal Government upon him, albeit he was not so desirous thereof, but that he would rather shew him∣self obedient to us, than to the other that offered him the Kingdom; and whatsoever our arbitrement should be therein, he would be under obedience both of God and of us. And for more assurance of his obedience, he hath sent his own children hither for pledges. Upon this Hen∣ricus began to snuff, and first intreated us to refrain and inhibite Rodulphus, through the pain of our curse, from the usurpation of his Kingdom. I answered again, I would see whether of them had more right and title thereunto, and so send our Legates thither upon the same, to know the whole state of the matter; and thereupon I would decide betwixt them, whether of them had the truer part. But Henricus would not suffer our Legates to come to take up the matter, and slew divers, both Se∣cular Men, and of the Clergy, spoyling and prophaning Churches; and so by this means hath endangered himself in the Bonds of Excommunication. I therefore trusting in the judgment and mercy of God, and in the suppor∣tation of the Blessed Virgin, also upon your authority, do lay the Sentence of Curse upon the said Henricus, and all his adherents; and here again I take his Regal Go∣vernment from him, charging and forbidding all Christian Men that have been sworn unto him, whom I discharge here of their Oath, that hereafter they obey him in nothing,

Therefore, O you blessed Princes of the Apostles, grant to this, and confirm with your authority that I have said, so that all men may understand, if you have power to bind and loose in Heaven, you have also power in Earth to give and take away Empires, Kingdoms, Principalities, and whatsoever here in Earth belongeth to mortal men. For if you have power to judge in such matters as appertain to God: what then should we think you have of these inferiour and prophane things? And if it be in your power to judge the Angels, ruling over proud Princes, what then shall it beseem you to do upon their Servants? Therefore let the Kings understand by this example, and all other Princes of the World, what you be able to do in Heaven, and what you are with God; that thereby they may fear to contemn the Commandment of Holy Church. And now do you exercise this judgement quickly upon Henricus, whereby all men may see this son of iniquity to fall from his Kingdom, not by any chance, but by your provision and only work. Notwithstanding this I would crave of you, that he, being brought to repentance through your intercession, yet in the day of judgment may find favour and grace with the Lord. Actum Romæ, nonis Martii, indictione 3.

Cocker this clause with the history of the story hereafter. O double Hypocrites.

Guibertus Archbishop deputed.

Furthermore, Hildebrand, not yet content with this, interdicteth and deposeth also Guibertus Archbishop of Ravenna, for taking the Emperors part, commanding al Priests to give no manner of obedience to him, and sendeth thither to Ravenna another Archbishop with full authority.

The 4. battel betwixt Henry and Rodolph. Henricus Victor.

After and upon this, Henricus and Rodulphus, to try the matter by the sword, coped together in Battel, not without Bloudthed, where Henricus, by the favour of God, against the judgement of Hildebrand, had the Victory. Rodulphus there greatly wounded in the conflict, was had out of the Army, and carried to Hyperbolis, where he commanded the Bishops and chief doers of his conspiracy to be brought before him. When they came, he lifted up his right hand in which he had taken his deadly wound, and said, This is the Hand which gave the Oath and Sacrament unto Henricus my Prince, and which through your instigation so oft hath fought against him in vain; now go and perform your first Oath and Allegiance to your King; for I must to my fathers, and so died. Thus the Pope gave Battel, but God gave the Victory.

Rodulphus at his death repenteth. The Pope giveth War. God giveth Victory.

Conciliorum Brixiense. Anno 1083.

Henricus (after his enemy being thus subdued, and Wars being ceased in Germany) forgat not the old injuries received of Hildebrand, by whom he was twice excommunicated, and expelled from his Kingdom, and three days making humble sute (yea and that in sharp Winter) could find no favour with him. Besides that, he incited moreover, and aided his enemy against him. Wherefore he calleth together a Council or Assembly of divers Bishops of Italy, Lombardy, and Germany at Brixia 1083. where he purged himself, and accused the Bishop Hildebrand of divers crimes, to be an usurper, perjured, a Necromancer and Sorcerer, a fower of discord; complaining moreover of wrongs and injuries done by the Bishop and Church of Rome, in that the Church of Rome preferred the Bishop before him; when that his Father, being Emperor before him, had inthronized and set in divers and sundry Bishops there by his assignment, without all others Election. And now this Bishop, contrary to his Oath and Promise made, thrust in himself without the will and knowledge of him, being their King and Magistrate. For, in the time of his Father Henricus the third, this Hildebrand with other, bound themselves with a Corporal Oath, that so long as the Emperor, and his Son now being King, should live, they should neither themselves presume, nor suffer any other to aspire to the Papal Seat, without the assent and approbation of the foresaid Emperors; which now this Hildebrand, contrary to his Corporal Oath, had done. Wherefore the foresaid Council, with one agreement condemned this Gregory, that he should be deposed. The Tenor of which Condemnation is thus expressed in Abbate Uspergensi.

No Bishop of Rome can be chosen without consent of the Emperor.

Abbas Uspergensis.

The Sentence of the Council of Brixia against Hildebrand.

Because it is not unknown, this Bishop not to be elected of God, but to have intruded himself by fraud and money, who hath subverted all Ecclesiastical Order, who hath disturbed the government of the Christian Empire, menacing death of body and soul against our Catholick and peaceable King, who hath set up and maintained a perjured King, sowing discord where concord was, causing debate amongst friends, slanders and offences amongst brethren, divorcements and separation amongst the married, for he took away the Marriage of Priests, as Henr. Mutius witnesseth, and finally disquieting the peaceable state of all quiet life: Therefore we here in the Name and Authority of God congregate together, with the Legates and hands of nineteen Bishops, the day of Pentecost at Mentz, do proceed in canonical judgement against Hildebrand, a man most wicked, preaching sacrilege and burning, maintaining perjury and murthers, calling in question the Catholick Faith of the Body and Bloud of the Lord, a follower of Divination and Dreams, a manifest Necromancer, a Sorcerer, and infected with a Pythonical Spirit, and therefore departed from the true faith, and we judge him to be deposed and expelled, and unlesse he hearing this, shall yield and depart the Seat, to be perpetually condemned. Enacted 7. Calend. Julii, feria. 5. Indictione 3.

Henricus Mutius.

Note here the Pope judged and deposed of the council.

This being enacted and sent to Rome, they elected Guibertus Archbishop of Ravenna in the place of Hildebrand, to govern the Church of Rome, named Clement the third. But when Hildebrand neither would give over his hold, nor give place to Clement; the Emperor, gathering an Army to send to Italy, came to Rome to depose Gregory, and to place Clement. But Hildebrand, sending to Matilda the Countess before mentioned, required her (in remission of all her sins) to withstand Henry the Emperor, and so she did. Notwithstanding Henricus prevailing came to Rome, where he besieged the City all the Lent, and after Easter got it, the Romans being compelled to open the Gates unto him; so he coming to the Temple of St. Peter, there placeth Clement in his Papacy. Hildebrand straight flyeth into Adrian's Tower with his adherents, where he, being beset round about, at length sendeth for Robert Guiscardus his friend, a Norman. In the mean time, while Robertus collecteth his power, the Abbot of Clumiake, conferring with Gregory, exhorteth him to Crown Henricus Emperor in Lateran. Which if he would do, the other promiseth to bring about that Henry should depart with his Army into Germany; whereunto the People of Rome also did likewise move him. To whom Gregory answered, That he was content so to do, but upon condition that the Emperor would submit himself to ask pardon, to amend his fault, and to promise obedience. The Emperor not agreeing to those conditions, went to Senae, taking Clement, new stalled Pope with him.

The Pope forsaken for cour of his Patrones. The Soldiers unable to fight for oppression of Hildebrand.

Platina. Massæus. Sabellicus. Cromicles. Benny, &c.

After the return of the Emperor, the foresaid Robert Guiscardus, approaching with his Souldiers, burst in at one of the Gates, and spoileth the City. And not long after, delivereth Hildebrand out of his enemies hands, and carried him away to Campania; where he not long continuing, after died in Exile.

Hildebrand the first author and patron of all usurped drag followers after in Popes.

Antonius writeth, that Hildebrand as he did lie a dying, called to him one of his chief Cardinals, bewailing to him his fault and misorder of his spiritual Ministery, in stirring up Discord, War and Dissention, whereupon he desired the Cardinal to go to the Emperor, and desire of him forgiveness, absolving from the danger of Excommunication both him and all his partakers both quick and dead.

Thus hath thou (gentle Reader) the full History of Pope Gregory the seventh, called Hildebrand; which I have laid out more at large, and desire thee to mark, because that from this Pope (if thou mark well) springeth all the occasions of mischief, of pomp, pride, stoutnesse, presumption and tyranny, which since that time hath reigned in his successors hitherto, in the Cathedral Church of the Romish Clergy. For here came first the subjection of the temporal regiment under the spiritual jurisdiction; and Emperors, which before were their Masters, now are made their their underlings. Also here came in the suppression of Priests Marriage, as is sufficiently declared. Here came in moreover the authority of both the Swords Spiritual and Secular into spiritual Mens hands. So that Christian Magistrates could do nothing in Election, in giving Bishopricks or Benefices, in calling Councils, in hearing and correcting the excesses of the Clergy, but only the Pope must do all. Yea moreover, no Bishop nor Pastor in his own Parish could excommunicate or exercise any discipline among his Flock, but only the Pope challenged that Prerogative to himself. Finally, here came in the first example to persecute Emperors and Kings with Rebellion and Excommunication, as the Clergy themselves hereafter do testifie and witness in proceeding against Paschalis. Thus these Notes being well observed, let us (by the grace of Christ) now repair again to our Country History of England.

The death of William the Conquerour.

About the death of Pope Hildebrand (or not long after) followed the death of King William the Conqueror, in the year 1090. after he had reigned in England the space of one and twenty Years, and ten Months. The cause of his sickness and death is said to be this: For that Philip the French King, upon a time (jesting) said, that King William lay in Child-bed, and nourished his fat Belly. To this the foresaid William, hearing thereof, answered again and said, When he should be Churched, he would offer a thousand Candles to him in France, wherewithal the King should have little joy. Whereupon King William in the Month of July (when the Corn, Fruit and Grapes were most flourishing) entred into France, and set on fire many Cities and Towns in the West side of France. And lastly, coming to the City of Meaux, where he burning a Woman being as a recluse in a Wall inclosed (or as some say, two Men Anchorites inclosed) was so fervent and furious about the fire, that with the heat partly of the fire, partly of the time of the year, thereby he fell into sickness, and died upon the same.

By the life and acts of this King it may appear true, as stories of him report, that he was wise, but guilefull; rich, but covetous; a fair speaker, but a great dissembler; glorious in victory, and strong in arms, but rigorous in oppressing whom he overcame, in levying of tasks passing all others. Insomuch that he caused to be enrolled and numbred in his Treasury every Hide of Land, and owner thereof, what fruit and revenues surmounted of every Lordship, of every Township, Castle, Village, Field, River and Wood within the Realm of England. Moreover, how many Parish Churches, how many living Cattel there were, what and how much every Baron in the Realm could dispend, what Fees were belonging, what Wages were taken, &c. The tenor and contents of which taskment yet remaineth in Rolls. After this tasking or numbring, which was the year before his death, followed an exceeding Mutren of Cattel and barrennes of the ground, with much Pestilence and hot Fevers among the People, so that such as escaped the Fever were consumed with Famine. Moreover, at the same season, among certain other Cities, a great part of the City of London, with the Church of St. Pauls, was wasted with fire in the Year of our Lord 1085.

Pestilence in England and Mutren of Beasts.

London with the Church of Pauls burnt.

In hunting and in Parks the foresaid King had such pleasure, that in the County of Southampton, by the space of 30 Miles, he cast down Churches and Townships, and there made the new Forest; loving his Deer so dearly, as though he had been to them a Father, making sharp laws for the increasing thereof, under pain of losing both the eies. So hard he was to Englishmen, and so favourable to his own Country, that as there was no English Bishop remaining, but only Wolfan of Worcester, who being commanded of the King and Lanfrank to resign up his Staff, partly for inability, partly for lack of the French Tongue, refused otherwise to resign it, but only to him that gave it, and so went to the Tomb of King Edward, where he thought to resign it, but was permitted to enjoy it still; so likewise in his days there was almost no Englishman that bare office of honour or rule in the Land. Insomuch that it was half a shame at that time to be called an Englishman. Notwithstanding he some deal favoured the City of London, and granted unto the Citizens the first Charter that ever they had, written in the Saxon, with green Wax sealed, and contained in few lines.

Wolfan Bishop of Worcester.

Among his other conditions, this in him is noted, that so given he was to peace and quiet, that any Maiden being laden with Gold or Silver, might pass through the whole Realm without harm or resistance. This William in his time builded two Monasteries, one in England at Battel in Sussex, where he won the Field against Harold, called the Abby of Battel; another besides, named Barmondsey in his County of Normandy.

After the Life and Story of King William thus briefly described, with the acts and order of Battel between him and King Harold, (although much more might have been written of that matter, if the Book had come sooner to my hands, which afterwards I saw) now remaineth in the end of this Story to describe the Names of such Barons and Nobles of Normandy, which entred with him into this Land, as well of them which were imbarqued with him, and slain also (as appeareth) in the Battel, as also of them who were planted and advanced by the said Conqueror in the Lands and Possessions of English Lords, whom he expelled, or else beheaded. The Names of which Normans here follow under-written.

Out of the Annals of Normandy in French, whereof one very ancient written Book in Parchment remaineth in the custody of the Writer hereof.

THE day after the Battel, very early in the Morning, Odo Bishop of Bajeux sung Mass for those that were departed. The Duke after that desirous to know the estate of his Battel, and what People he had therein lost and were slain, he caused to come unto him a Clerk that had written their Names when they were embarqued at Saint Valeries, and commanded him to call them all by their Names, who called them that had bin at the Battel, and had passed the Seas with Duke William. Over and beſides the great number of Knights and Eſquires that were under them. In the ſame Battel between the ſaid William the Baſtard, Duke of Normandy on the one part, and King Harold on the other part, there were ſlain on King Harold's ſide of Engliſhmen, ſixty ſix thouſand, ſix hundred fifty four. And on Duke William's ſide there were ſlain ſix thouſand thirteen Men, as it is to be found in the Chronicle of S. Peter of Weſtminſter, beſides thoſe that were drowned in the River of Thames.

When as the above named, and many other great Lords were ſo called, ſome of them appeared, other ſome did not, for ſome of them were ſlain there in the Field, and others ſo wounded, that they could not come forth to ſhew themſelves. Then gave the Duke commandment, that the dead ſhould be buried, and thoſe that were ſick comforted, and eaſed the beſt that might, &c.

The 56th Biſhop of Salisbury, viz. and Biſhop of Sarum, ordinis ecclesiastici ipſis formulam ipſum Sarum.

Ex Eulogio lyber. ubi ſupra. The uſe and ordinary of Sarum, love and reverence was deviſed.

A little above, mention was made of the Biſhops See of Shireborne, tranſlated from thence to Salisbury. The firſt Biſhop of Salisbury was Hermannus a Norman, who firſt began the new Church and Minſter of Salisbury. After whom ſucceeded Osmundus, who finiſhed the work, and replenished the houſe with great living, and much good linging. This Osmundus firſt began the Ordinary which was called Secundum uſum Sarum. Anno 1076. The occaſion whereof was this, as I find in an old Story-book intituled Eulogium. A great contention chanced at Glaſtenbury between Thurſtanus the Abbot and his Convent, in the days of William the Conqueror. Which Thurſtanus the ſaid William had brought out of Normandy from the Abby of Cadonum, and placed him Abbot of Glaſtenbury. The cauſe of this contentious Batrel was, for that Thurſtanus contemning their Quire-ſervice, then called the uſe of S. Gregory, compelled his Monks to the uſe of one William a Monk of Fiſcam in Normandy. Whereupon came ſtrife and contentions amongſt them, firſt in words, then from words to blows, after blows then to armour. The Abbot, with his guard of harneſt Men, fell upon the Monks, and drave them to the ſteps of the High Altar, where two were ſlain, eight were wounded with Shafts, Swords and Pikes. The Monks then driven to ſuch a ſtraight and narrow ſhift, were compelled to defend themſelves with Formes and Candleſticks, wherewith they did wound certain of the Souldiers. One Monk there was (an aged Man) who inſtead of hisſhield took an Image of the Crucifix in his Arms for his defence, which Image was wounded in the breaſt by one of the Bowmen, whereby the Monk was ſaved. My ſtory addeth more, that the ſtriker incontinent upon the ſame fell mad, which favoureth of ſome Monkiſh addition beſides the Text. This matter being brought before the King, the Abbot was ſent again to Cadonum, and the Monks by the commandment of the King were ſcattered in far Countries. Thus, by the occaſion hereof, Osmundus Biſhop of Salisbury deviſed that Ordinary, which is called the uſe of Sarum, and was afterward received in a manner through all England, Ireland and Wales. And thus much for this matter, done in the time of this King William.

Which William after his death, by his Wife Matilda or Maud, left three Sons, Robert Courteſey, to whom he gave the Dutchy of Normandy; William Rufus his ſecond Son, to whom he gave the Kingdom of England; and Henry the third Son, to whom he left and gave treaſure; and warned William to be to his People loveing and liberal, Robert to be to his people ſtern and ſturdy.

In the Hiſtory called Jornalenſis, it is reported of a certain great Man, who about this time of King William was compaſſed about with Mice and Rats, and flying to the midſt of a River, yet when that would not ſerve, came to the Land again, and was of them devoured. The Germans ſay that this was a Biſhop, who dwelling between Cullen and Mentz, in time of Famine and Dearth, having ſtore of Corn and Grain, would not help the poverty crying to him for relief but rather wiſhed his Corn to be eaten up of Mice and Rats. Wherefore being compaſſed with Mice and Rats (by the juſt judgment of God) to avoid the annoiance of them, he built a Tower in the midſt of the River of Rhein (which yet to this day the Dutchmen call Rats Tower) but all that would not help; for the Rats and Mice ſwam over to him in as great abundance as they did before, of whom at leaſth he was devoured.

Example of Gods juſt Judgment upon a Biſhop, who being unmerciful to the poor, was eaten with Rats and Mice.

William Rufus.

{Anno 1088. William Rufus}

WILLIAM Rufus, the ſecond Son of William the Conqueror, began his Reign in the year of our Lord 1088. and Reigned thirteen Years, being crowned at Weſtminſter by Lanfrancus; who, after his Coronation, releaſed out of Priſon, by the requeſt of his Father, divers Engliſh Lords, which before had bin in cuſtody. It chanced that, at the death of William the Conqueror, Robert Courteſey his eldeſt Son was abſent in Almany, who hearing of the death of his Father, and how William his younger Brother had taken upon him the Kingdom, was therewith greatly moved; inſomuch that he laid his Dukedom to pleage unto his Brother Henry, and with that good gathered unto him an Army, and ſo landed at Hampton, to the intent to have expelled his Brother from the Kingdom. But William Rufus hearing thereof ſent to him fair and gentle words, promiſing him dedition and ſubjection, as to the more worthy and elder brother; this thing only requiring, that ſeeing he was now in place and poſſeſſion, he might enjoy it during his life, paying to him yearly three thouſand Marks, with condition that which of them overlived the other should enjoy the Kingdom. The occasion of this variance between these brethren wrought a great dissention between the Norman Lords and Bishops, both in England and in Normandy. Insomuch that all the Norman Bishops within the Realm almost rebelled against the King, taking part with Duke Robert, except only Lanfrancus, and Wolstan Bishop of Worcester above mentioned, an Englishman; who for his vertue and constancy was so well liked and favoured of his Citizens, that (emboldened with his presence and prayer) they stoutly maintained the City of Worcester against the Siege of their enemies, and at last vanquished them with utter ruine. But Duke Robert at length by the advice of his Council (hearing the words sent unto him, and wagging his head thereat, as one conceiving some matter of doubt or doublenes) was yet content to assent to all that was desired, and so returned shortly after into Normandy, leaving the Bishops, and such others, in the Briers, which were in England, taking his part against the King.

Wolstan Bishop of Worcester.

This Rufus was so ill liked of the Normans, that between him and his Lords was oft dissention. Wherefore (well near) all the Normans took part against him; so that he was forced of necessity to draw to him the Englishmen. Again, so covetous he was, and so immeasurable in his tasks and takings, in selling Benefices, Abbies and Bishopricks, that he was hated of all Englishmen.

{Anno 1091.} The death of Lanfrancus Archbishop of Canterbury.

In the third year of this King died Lanfrancus Archbishop of Canterbury; from whose commendation and worthiness, I list not to detract any thing (being so greatly magnified of Polydorus his Countryman) so neither do I see any great cause why to add any thing thereto. This I think, unlesse that Man had brought with him less superstition, and more sincere science into Christ his Church, he might have kept him in his Country still, and have confuted Berengarius at home. After the decease of Lanfrank the See of Canterbury stood empty four years.

Remigius Bishop of Lincoln.

After the Council of Lanfrancus above mentioned, wherein was concluded for translating of Bishops Sees from Villages into Head Cities, Remigius Bishop of Dorchester (who, as ye heard, accompanied Lanfrancus unto Rome) removed his Bishops See from Dorchester unto Lincoln, where he builded the Minster there, situate upon an Hill within the said City of Lincoln. The Dedication of which Church Robert Archbishop of York did resist, saying, that it was builded within the Ground of his Precinct. But after, it had his Romish Dedication by Robert Blevet, next Bishop that followed. By the same Remigius also was founded the Cloyster or Monastery of Stow, &c.

{Anno 1092.} Winchcomb Steeple burnt with Lightning.

In the fourth year of this King great Tempests fell in sundry places of England, specially at Winchcombe, where the Steeple was burned with Lightning, the Church wall burst through, the head and right Leg of the Crucifix, with the Image of our Lady on the right side of the Crucifix, thrown down, and such a stink left in the Church, that none might abide it. At London the force of the Weather and Tempest overturned six hundred Houses. In which Tempest the Roof of Bow Church was hurled up in the Wind, and by the vehemency thereof was pitched down a great deepness into the ground.

Six hundred houses blown down with Wind. The roof of Bow Church overthrown.

Robert Blet. not paid five thousand Marks for his Bishoprick.

King William (as ye have heard) an exceeding poller or ravener rather of Church Goods, after he had given the Bishoprick of Lincoln to his Chancellor Robert Blevet above minded, began to cavil; avouching the See of Lincoln to belong to the See of York; till the Bishop of Lincoln had pleased him with a great sum of money of five thousand Marks, &c.

And as nothing could come in those days without money from the King, so Herbert Losinga, paying to the King a piece of Money, was made Bishop of Thetford, as he had paid a little before to be Abbot of Ramsey. Who likewise, the same time removing his See from Thetford to the City of Norwich, there erected the Cathedral Church with the Cloyster in the said City of Norwich, where he furnished the Monks with sufficient Living and Rents of his own charges, besides the Bishops Lands. Afterward, repenting of his open and manifest Simony, he went to Rome, where he resigned into the Popes hands his Bishoprick, but so, that incontinent he received it again. This Herbert was the Son of an Abbot called Robert, for whom he purchased of the King to be Bishop of Winchester, whereof run these Verses:

Herbert Losinga Bishop of Norwich. Losinga 1. adulator.

Filius est Præsul, pater Abba, Simon uterque:
Quid non fiercivus si nummos possideamus?
Omnia nummus habet, quod vult facit, addit & aufert.
Res nimis injusta, nummus fit Præsul & Abba, &c.

Ye heard a little before of the death of Pope Hildebrand, after the time of which Hildebrand the German Emperors began to lose their authority and right in the Popes election, and in giving of Benefices. For next after this Hildebrand came Pope Victor by the setting up of Matilda, and the Duke of Normandy, with the faction and retinue of Hildebrand, who likewise shewed himself stout against the Emperor. But God gave the shrewd Cow short horns. For Victor being poysoned (as some say in his Chalice) fate but one year and a half. Notwithstanding the same imitation and example of Hildebrand continued still in them that followed after. And like as the Kings of Israel followed most part the steps of Jeroboam, till the time of their desolation; so for the greatest part all Popes followed the steps and proceedings of this Hildebrand their spiritual Jeroboam, in maintaining of false worship, and chiefly in upholding the dignity of that See, against all rightful authority, and the lawful Kingdom of Sion. In the time of this Victor began the Order of the Monks of Charterhouse, through the means of one Hugo Bishop of Gracianople, and of Bruno Bishop of Cullen.

Next to Victor sat Urbane the second, by whom the acts of Hildebrand were confirmed, and also new Decrees enacted against Henry the Emperor. In this time were two Popes at Rome, Urbanus, and Clemens the third, whom the Emperor set up. Under Pope Urban came in the white Monks of the Cistercian Order, by one Stephen Harding a Monk of Shireborne, (an English man) by whom this Order had his beginning in the Wilderness of Cistery, within the Province of Burgoin, as witnesseth Cesvensis. Others write that this Harding was the second Abbot of that place, and that it was first founded by the means of one Robert Abbot of Molisme in Cistercium, a Foreft in Burgundy, Anno 1098. perswaded perchance by Harding's and afterwards, in the year of our Lord 1125. it was brought into England by a certain man called Esseke, which builded an Abby of the same Order called Merinale. In this Order the Monks did live by the labour of their hands; they payed no Tithes nor Offerings, they wore no Fur nor Lining, they wore red Shoes, their Cowls white, and Coats black, all from save a little circle, they eat no flesh but only in their journey. Of this Order was Bernardus, &c.

This Urban held divers Councils; one at Rome, where he Excommunicated all such Lay persons as gave investiture of any Ecclesiastical Benefice; also all such of the Clergy as abjected themselves to be underlings or servants to lay persons for Ecclesiastical Benefices, &c.

Another Council he held at Cleremount in France where among other things, the Bishop made an Oration to the Lords being there present, concerning the Voyage and recovering the Holy Land from the Turks and Saracens. The cause of which Voyage first sprang by one Peter a Monk or Hermit, who being in Jerusalem, and seeing the great misery of the Christians under the Pagans, made thereof declaration to Pope Urban, and was therein a great follicitor to all Christian Princes. By reason whereof, after the foresaid Oration of Pope Urban, 30000 Men (taking on them the Sign of the Cross for their cognisance) made preparation for that Voyage, whose Captains were Godfrey Duke of Lorain, with his two brethren Eustace and Baldwin, the Bishop of Pody, Bohemund Duke of Puell and his Nephew Tancredus, Rasmund Earl of St. Egidius, Robert Earl of Flanders, and Hugh le Grand, Brother of Philip the French King. To whom also was joyned Robert Curthoise Duke of Normandy, with divers other Noblemen, with the foresaid Peter the Hermit, who was the chief causer of that Voyage.

The Voyage unto the Holy Land.

At

At that time many of the said Noblemen laid their Lands and Lordships to mortgage, to provide for the forenamed Voyage; as Godfrey Duke of Lorain, who sold the Dukedom of Bollogn to the Bishop of Elburone for a great summ of money. Also Robert Curthoise Duke of Normandy laid his Dukedom to pledge to his Brother William King of England for ten thousand pounds, &c.

{Anno 1096.} Thus the Christians, which passed first over Bosphorus, having to their Captain Peter the Hermit (a man perchance more devout than expert to guide an Army) being trapped of their enemies, were slain and murthered in great numbers among the Bulgars, and near to the Town called Civitot.

When the Nobles and the whole Army met together at Constantinople (where Alexius was Emperor) passing over by Hellespontus going to Jerusalem, they took the Cities of Nicea, Eraclea, Tarsis, and subdued the Country of Cicilia, appointing the possession thereof to certain of their Captains.

Antioch taken by the Christians.

Antioch was besieged, and in the ninth Month of the Siege it was yielded to the Christians by one Pyrrhus; about which feaven were fought many strong Battels, to the great slaughter and desolation of the Saracens, and not without lois of many Christian Men. The governance of this City was committed to Bohemund Duke of Puel, whose martial Knighthood was often proved in time of the Siege thereof.

And not long after, Corbona master of the Persians Chivalry was vanquished and slain, with an hundred thousand Infidels. In which discomfiture were taken 15000 Camels.

Jerusalem on the nine and thirtieth day of the Siege, was conquered by the Christians. Robert also Duke of Normandy was elect to be King thereof. Howbeit he refused it, hearing of the death of King William Rufus of England; wherefore he never sped well in all his affairs after the same. Then Godfrey, Captain of the Christian Army, was proclaimed the first King of Jerusalem. At the taking of the City was such a murther of Men, that blood was congealed in the Streets the thickness of a foot. Then after Godfrey reigned Baldwin his Brother: After him Baldwin the second, Nephew. Then Gaufridus Duke of Gaunt, and after him Gaufridus his Son, by whom many great Battels there were fought against the Saracens, and all the Country thereabout subdued, save Ascalon, &c. And thus much hitherto touching the Voyage to the Holy Land. Now to our own Land again.

The Kings of England submit themselves unto the Pope.

About this time (as Matthew Parisiensis writeth) the King of England favoured not much the See of Rome, because of their impudent and unstable exactions which they required, neither would he suffer any of his Subjects to go to Rome, alledging these words in the Author thus expressed: Quod Petri non inhærent vestigiis, præmiis inhiantes; non ejus potestatem retinent, cujus sanctitatem prohantur non imitari; that is, Because they follow not the steps of Peter, hunting for rewards; neither have they the power and authority of him, whose holiness they declare themselves not to follow, &c.

In the sixth year of this Kings Reign, Malcolme King of Scots, which former times before had made great slaughter of old and young in the North parts, as is before shewed, burst into Northumberland with all the power he could make, and there by the right judgment of God was slain, with his Son Edward, and also Margaret his Wife, Sister to Edgar Adeling above minded, a vertuous and devout Lady, within three days after.

The same year he gave the Archbishoprick of Canterbury after that he had detained the same in his own hands four years) to Anselm Abbot of Beck in Normandy.

Anselm made Archbishop of Canterbury.

This Anselm was an Italian, in the City of Augusta, born and brought up in the Abby of Beck in Normandy; where he was so strict a follower of virtue, that (as the Story recordeth) he wished rather to be without sin in Hell, than in Heaven with sin. Which saying and with of his (if it were his) may seem to proceed out of a mind, neither speaking orderly according to the phrase and understanding of the Scripture, nor yet sufficiently acquainted with the justification of a Christian man. Further, they report him to be so far from singularity, that he should say, it was the Vice which thrust the Angels first out of Heaven, and Man out of Paradise.

The saying of Anselm pondered.

The vice of singularity.

Of this Anselm it is moreover reported, that he was so ill willing to take the Archbishoprick, that the King had much ado to thrust it upon him: and he was so desirous to have him take it, that the City of Canterbury (which before Lanfrancus did hold but at the Kings good will and pleasure) he gave now to Anselm wholly, which was about the year of our Lord 1092. But as desirous as the King was then to place the said Anselm, so much did he repent it afterward, seeking all manner of means to defeat him if he might. Such strife and contention rose between them two for certain matters; the ground and occasion whereof first was this:

Anselm ill willing to take the Archbishoprick. Canterbury first given to the Archbishop wholly.

Strife and contention between the K. and Anselme

After that Anselm had been thus elected to the See of Canterbury, before he was fully consecrate, the King communed with him (assaying by all gentle manner of words to intreat him) that such Lands and Possessions of the Church of Canterbury as the King had given and granted to his friends since the death of Lanfrancus, they might still enjoy the same as their own lawful possessions through his grant and permission. But to this Anselm in no case would agree. Whereupon the King, conceiving great displeasure against him, did stop his Confecration a great season, till at length in long process of time the King, enforced by the daily complaints and desires of his People and Subjects, for lack of an Archbishop to moderate the Church, was constrained to admit and authorize him unto them. Thus Anselm with much ado taking his Consecration, and doing his Homage to the King, went to his See of Canterbury; and not long after, the King fayled over to Normandy.

Anselm stopped from his Consecration.

Anselm consecrated.

Anselm doth homage to K. Williams.

About this time there were two striving in Rome for the Popedome, as is afore touched, Urbanus and Guibertus. Divers Realms diversly consenting, some to the one, some to the other. England taking part with their King, was rather inclined to Guibertus, called Clement the third; but Anselm did fully go with Urbanus, making so his exception with the King, entring to his Bishoprick. After the King was returned again from Normandy, the Archbishop cometh to him, and asketh leave to go to Rome, to fet his Pall of Pope Urban; which when he could not at first obtain, he maketh his appeal from the King to the Pope. Whereat the King being justly displeased, charged the Archbishop with breach of his Fealty, contrary to his promise made; that is, if he without his licence, should appeal either to Urban or to any other Pope. Anselm answereth again, that it was to be referred unto some greater Council, where it is to be disputed, whether this be to break a Mans Allegiance to a terrene Prince, if he appeal to the Vicar of Saint Peter. And here much arguing and contending was oft both sides. The Kings reason proceedeth thus: The custome (saith he) from my fathers time hath been in England, that no person should appeal to the Pope without the Kings licence. He that breaketh the customs of the Realm, violateth the pow-er and Crown of the Kingdom. He that violateth and taketh away my Crown, is a Traytor and Enemy against me, &c. To this Anselm replieth again. The Lord (saith he) easily discusseth this question, briefly teaching what Fidelity and Allegiance we ought to give unto the Vicar of Saint Peter, where he saith, Thou art Peter, *and upon this Rock will I build my Church, &c. And to thee will I give the Keies of the Kingdom of Heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt bind in Earth, it shall be bound in Heaven: and whatsoever thou loosest in Earth, shall be loosed in Heaven, &c. Again, to them all in general he saith, He that heareth you, heareth me; and whoso despiseth you, despiseth me. And in another place, He that toucheth you, toucheth the Apple of mine Eye. On the other side, what duty we owe to the King, he sheweth also, Give (saith he) to the Emperor, what belongeth to the Emperor, and to God, that which to God belongeth. Wherefore, in such things as belong to God, I will yield, and must yield by good right and duty, my obedience to the Vicar of S.*Peter, and in such things as belong again to terrene dignities of my Prince, in those I will not deny to him my faithful help and counsel, so far as they can extend.

Thus have ye the grounded arguments of this Prelate to stand so stiffly against his Prince, whereunto peradventure was joyned also some piece of a stubborn heart. But in this conclusion none of his fellow Bishops durst take his part, but were all against him; namely, William Bishop of Duresme; to whom Anselm thus protesteth, saying, Whosoever he were that would presume to prove it any breach of Allegiance or Fealty to his Sovereign, if he appealed to the Vicar of S.Peter, he was ready to answer at all times to the contrary. The Bishop of Duresme answered again, That he which would not be ruled by reason, must with force be constrained, &c. The King, having on his part the agreement of the Bishops, thought to deprive the Archbishop both of his Pastoral See, and to expel him out of the Realm. But he could not perform his purpose; for Anselm, as he was ready to depart the Realm, he said, whensoever he went, he would take his office and authority with him, though he took nothing else. Whereupon that matter was deferred till a longer time. In the mean season the King had sent privily two Messengers unto Pope Urban, to intreat him to send his Pall to the King, for him to give it where he would. Which Messengers by this time were returned again, bringing with them from Rome, Gualter Bishop of Alban, the Popes Legate, with the Pall to be given unto Anselm. This Legate, first landing at Dover, from thence came privily (unknown to Anselme) to the King, declaring ard promising, that if Urban was received Pope in England, whatsoever the King required to be obtained, he by his priviledge from the Apostolical See would ratifie and confirm the same; save only that when the King required of the Legate that Anselm might be removed, the Legate thereunto would not agree; saying, that it was unpossible to be obtained, that such a man as he, being lawfully called, should be expelled without manifest cause. In conclusion, so it followed, that although he could not obtain his request of the Legate, yet the Legate so wrought with the King, that Urban was proclaimed lawful Pope throughout all the Realm.

Then were sent to Anselm certain Bishops to move and prove his mind, declaring what charges and pains the King had been at in his behalf, to procure the Pall for him from Rome, which otherwife would have stood him in great expences, and that all this the King had done for his sake. Wherefore it were good reason and convenient, that he (to gratifie the King) should somthing condescend to his request again. But with all this Anselm the stout Archbishop would not be moved. Wherefore the King, seeing none other remedy, was compelled to grant unto him the full right of his Archbishoprick. And to the day appointed, when the Pall should be brought to Canterbury, (being carried with all solemnity in a thing of Silver) the Archbishop, with a great concourse of people, came forth barefoot with his Priestly Vestments, after a most goodly manner to meet the same; and so being brought in, it was laid upon the Altar: whiles Anselm (spreading over his shoulders his Popish Vestments) proceeded unto his Popish Mass.

Thus agreement being made between the King and the Bishop, to long as it would hold; it happened the year following, the King with his Army entred into Wales, to subdue such as there rebelled against him. After the Victory gotten, the King returned home again with triumph; to whom Anselm thought to have come to congratulate his prosperous success. But the King prevented him by Messengers, laying to the Bishops charge both the small number and the evil service of his Souldiers sent to him at his need. At the hearing hereof, all the hope of Anselm was dasht, who at the same present had thought to have obtained and done many great matters with the King touching the state of the Church. But here all turned contrary to his expectation; insomuch that he was charged, against the next Court of Parliament, to make his answer. But he avoided that by appealing to Rome. Wherefore he made his sute and friends to the King for licence to go to the Pope. Unto the which sute the King answered again, that he should not go, neither was there any cause for him so to do; for that both he knew him to be of so sound a life, that he had done no such offence, whereof he needed to crave Absolution at Rome, neither was there any such lack of science and knowledge, that he needed to borrow any counsel there: Insomuch (saith the King) I dare say, Pope Urban rather hath to give place to the wisdom of Anselm, than Anselm to have need of Urban. Wherefore as he hath no cause to go, so I charge him to tarry. And if he continue in his stubbornnesse still, I Will assuredly seize upon his possessions, and convert his Archbishoprick into my Coffers, for that he transgresseth and breaketh his fidelity and obeisance, promising before to observe all the customs of my Kingdom. Neither is it the fashion in this Realm, that any of my Nobles should go to Rome without my sending. And therefore let him swear unto me, that he shall neither for any grievance appeal hereafter to the See of Rome, or else let him void my Realm.

Another quarrel of the King against Anselm.

Anselm despiseth the Kings Letters.

Anselm is pursued with rebuke.

The Kings answer to Anselm for his appealing to Rome.

The nobles of England.

No Prelate or Noble-man to go to Rome without the Kings licencing.

Against these words of the King, Anselm thinking not best to reply again by any Message, but by word of mouth, coming himself personally to the King, he placeth himself (after his order) on the right hand of the Prince, where he made his reply unto the Message sent to him by the King, Whereas you say, I ought not to go to Rome, either in regard of any trespass, or for abundance of counsel and knowledge in me (albeit I grant neither of them to be true) yet what the truth is therein, I refer it to the judgment of God. And whereas ye say that I promised to keep and observe your customs; that I grant, but with a condition; so far to keep them, and such of them to observe, as were consonant to the lawes of God, and ruled with right and equity. Moreover, whereas ye charge me with breach of my Fidelity and Allegiance, for that contrary to your customs I appeal to the See Apostolick (my reverence and duty to your sovereignty reserved) if another would say it, that is untrue. For the fidelity and obeysance that I owe to thee (O King) I have it of the faith and fidelity of God, whose Vicar S.Peter is, to whose seat I do appeal. Further, whereas ye require me to swear, that I shall for no cause hereafter at any time appeal to Rome, I pronounce openly that a Christian Prince requireth such an Oath of his Archbishop unjustly. For if I should forswear S.Peter, I should deny Christ. And when I shall at any time deny Christ, then shall I be content and ready to stand to the satisfaction of my transgression to you, for asking licence to go to Rome. And peradventure when I am gone, the Goods of the Church shall not so serve your temporal desires and commodities as ye ween for. As these words of the Bishop the King and his Nobles were not a little incensed: they defending again, that in his promise of observing the Kings Customs, there was neither condition, nor any clause put in, either of God or Right. No was? faid Anselm. If so be, that in your customs was neither mention made of God nor of right, whereof was there mention then? For God forbid that any Christian should be bound to any Customs which go contrary to God and to right. Then on both sides passed much altercation between them.

The Bishops part from Anselm.

At length the King, after many threatning words, told him he should carry nothing out of the Realm with him. Well, said the Bishop, if I may neither have my horse nor garments with me, they will I walk on foot; and so addressed addressed him toward his journey (all the other Bishops forsaking him) whereof none would take his part; but if he came to them for counsel, they said he was wise enough, and needed not their counsel, as who for his prudence knew best what was to be done, as also for his holinesse, was willing and able to persecute the same that he did know. As for them, they neither durst nor would stand against the King their Lord; whose favour they could not lack, for the peril that might happen both to themselves and their kindred. But for him, because he was both a stranger, and void of such worldly corruption in him, they willed him to go forward as he had begun; their secret consent he should have, but their open voice they would not give him. Thus Anselm, remaining at Dover fifteen days tarrying for Wind, at last sped him toward his passage. But his packing being secretly known in the Court, the Kings Officer William Warlwast, prevented his purpose, searching by the Kings Commandment, all his Trusses, Cofters, Satchels, Sleeves, Purse, Napkin and Bosom, for Letters, and for Money, and so let him pass. Who, sailing into France, first rested a while at Lions, from thence came to Rome to Pope Urban, according to the tenor and form of a certain Epistle of his; wherein, among many other things in the same Epistle contained, these words he writeth to Pope Paschalis, the third year after his banishment, after the death of Urban, and a little before the death of the King.

To the Lord and reverend Father Paschalis, High Bishop, Anselm servant of the Church of Canterbury, offereth due subjection from his heart, and prayers, if they can stand in any stead, Ex Epist. 36. paulo post initium.

A fragment or portion of a Letter of Anselm to Pope Paschalis. Ex Legend. Anf. ant Eadmerum, circ. finem Anfel. pa.

'SEe in England many evils, whose correction belongeth
'to me, and which I could neither amend, nor suffer
'without mine own fault. The King defireth of me, that 'under the name of right I should consent to his pleasures,
'which were against the law and will of God. For he 'would not have the Pope received nor appealed unto in 'England, without his commandment; neither that I 'should send a Letter unto him, or receive any from him,
'or that I should obey his Decrees. He suffered not a Coun'cil to be kept in his Realm now these thirteen years,
'since he was King. In all these things, and such like,
'if I asked any Counsel, all my Suffragan Bishops of his 'Realm, denied to give me any counsel, but according to 'the Kings pleasure. After that I saw these and such other 'things that are done against the will and law of God:
'I asked a Licence of him to go to Rome unto the See
'Apostolical, that I might there take counsel for my soul,
'and the office committed unto me. The King said, that 'I offended against him for the only asking of licence;
'and propounded to me, that either I should make him
'amends for the same as a trespass (affuring him never to 'ask his licence any more to appeal to the Pope at any 'time hereafter) or else that I should quickly depart out
'of his Land. Wherefore choosing rather to go out of the 'Land, than agree to so wicked a thing; I came to Rome,
'as you know, and declared the whole matter to the Lord
'Pope. The King by and by (as soon as I went out of 'England) invaded the whole Archbishoprick, and turned 'it to his own use, taxing the Monks only with bare
'Meat, Drink and Cloth. The King being warned and 'defied of the Lord Pope to amend this, contemned
'the same, and yet continueth in his purpose still. And 'now is the third year since I came thus out of England,
'and more. Some men, not understanding, demand why
'I did not excommunicate the King. But the wiser fort,
'and such as have understanding, counsel me that I do
'not this thing; because it belongeth not unto me both to 'complain and to punish. To conclude, I was fore-warned by my friends that are under the King, that mine Excommunication (if it should be done) would be laughed
'to scorn and despised, &c.

The King would not have the Pope received nor appealed unto in England.

Anselm complaineth of the King and of Inclosing Bishops.

The King contemneth the Popes warning.

By these here above prefixed, appeareth how Anselm the Archbishop, coming unto Rome, made his complaint to Pope Urban of the King: and how the Pope writeing unto the King in the behalf of Anselm his Letters and Commandments were despised. And now to our Story. In the mean time, while the Popes Letters were sent to the King, Anselm was bid to wait about the Pope to look for answer back. Who perceiving at length, how little the King reputed the Popes Letters, began to be weary of his office, defiring the Pope that he might be discharged thereof; but the Pope in no case would thereto consent, charging him upon his obedience, that wheresoever he went, he should bear with him the Name and Honour of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Whereunto Anselm again said, his obedience he neither durst nor would refuse, as who for Gods cause was ready to suffer whatsoever should happen (yea though it were death it self) as he thought no less would follow thereof. But what should we think, saith he, if there to be done, where justice not only taketh no place, but is utterly oppressed? And whereas my Suffragans do not only not help (for dread) the righteous cause, but also for favour do impugn the same? Well (saith the Pope) as touching these matters we shall sufficiently provide at the next Council to be holden at Baion, whereas I will you the same time and place to be present.

Concilium Baionense.

When the time of the Council was come, Anselm amongst others was called for, who, first sitting in an utter side of the Bishops, afterwards was placed at the right foot of the Pope, with these words, Includamus hunc in orbe nostro, tanquam alterius urbis Papam. Whereupon the same place after him was appointed to the Successors of the See of Canterbury, in every General Council by the Decree of Pope Urban, to sit at the right foot of the Pope. In this said Council great stir and much reasoning there was against the Grecians, concerning the matter and order of proceeding of the Holy Ghost. Where is to be noted, that the Greek Church hath of long time differed from the Latine Church in many and sundry points, to the number of twenty, or almost 29. Articles, as I have them collected out of the Register of the Church of Hereford: whereof like as occasion hereafter may serve (God willing) for a further and more ample tractation to be made; so here by the way partly I mean to touch some. The first is:

Anselm and his successors placed at the right foot of the Pope in his General Councils.

De præcipuis quæ differunt Græci: Third difference between the Greek Church and the Latine

Wherein the Greek Church differeth from the Latine.

THE first Article wherein the Greek Church altereth from the Latine or Romish Church is this:

Quod sunt extra obedientiam Romanæ Ecclesiæ, pro eo quod Ecclesia Constantinopolitana non est subjecta, sed ei æqualis. Dicunt dominum Apostolicum non habere majorem potestatem, quam quatuor patriarchæ. Et quicquid fit præter scientiam eorum per Papam, vel sine eorum approbatione, nullius est valoris, &c.

Eu. registus Eccles. Græcorum.

In English.

First, They are not under the obedience of the Church of Rome, because that the Church of Constantinople is their subject, but equal to the same.

The Article and Opinions of the Greek Church, differing from the Latine Church of Rome.

2. They hold that the Bishop of the Apostolick See of Rome hath not greater power than the four Patriarchs. And whatsoever the Pope doth beside their knowledge, or without their approbation, it is of no value.

3. Item, They say whatsoever hath been done or concluded, since the second General Council, it is of no full authority; because from that time they recount the Latines to be in error, and to be excluded out of the Holy Church.

4. Item, Dicunt Eucharistiam consecratam per Romanam Ecclesiam non esse verum corpus Christi. That is, They hold the Eucharist consecrated by the Church of Rome not to be the very body of Christ. Also where the Romish Church doth consecrate in unleavened bread, they consecrate in bread leavened.

5. Item, They say that the Romish Church doth err in the words of Baptism, for saying, I baptise thee, when they should say, Let this Creature of God be baptised, &c.

6. They hold more over, to be no Purgatory, nor that the Suffrages of the Church do avail the dead, either to lessen the pain of them that be destinate to Hell, or to increase the glory of them that be ordained to salvation.

7. Item,

7. Item, they hold that the souls out of the bodies departed (whether they have done good or evil) have not their perfect pain nor glory; but are reserved in a certain place till the day of Judgment.

8. Item, they condemn the Church of Rome for mixing cold water in their sacrifice.

9. Item, they condemn the Church of Rome, for that as well women as Priests anoint children (when they baptize them) on both shoulders.

10. Item, Dicunt panem nostrum panagium: That is, they call our bread panagia.

11. Item, they blame the Church of Rome for celebrating their Masse on other days besides Sundays, and certain other Feasts appointed.

12. Also in this the Greek Church varieth from the Latin; for they have neither Cream nor Oyl, nor Sacrament of Confirmation.

13. Neither do they use extream unction, or annoiling after the manner of the Roman Church, expounding the place of St. James of the spiritual infirmity, and not corporal.

14. Item, they enjoyn no satisfaction for penance, but only that they shew themselves to the Priests, anointing them with simple oyl in token of remission of sins.

15. Item, only on Maunday-thursday they consecrate for the sick, keeping it for the whole year after, thinking it to be more holy on that day consecrated than upon any other. Neither do they fast any Saturday through the whole year, but only on Easter-eve.

16. Item, they give but only five Orders, as of Clerks, Subdeacons, Deacons, Priests and Bishops; when as the Roman Church giveth nine Orders after the nine Orders of Angels.

17. Moreover the Grecians in their Orders make no vow of Chastity, alledging for them the fifth Canon of N. § Ego presbyter vel diaconus, uxorum causa honestatis non reticiam, &c. that is, I. N. Priest or Deacon will not forsake my wife for honesty sake.

My copy here seemed to want somewhat.

18. Item, every year the Grecians use upon certain days to Excommunicate the Church of Rome, and all the Latins as Hereticks.

19. Item, among the said Grecians they are Excommunicate that beat or strike a Priest. Neither do their Religious men live in such Priestly chastity as the Roman Priests do.

20. Item, their Emperor amongst them doth ordain Patriarchs, Bishops, and other of the Clergy, and depoſeth the ſame at his pleaſure; alſo he giveth Benefices to whom he liſteth, and retaineth the fruits of the ſame Benefices as pleaſeth him.

This Article ſeemeth not to be rightly collected out of the Grecians.

21. Item, they blame the Latin Church becauſe they eat no fleſh, Eggs and Cheeſe on Fridays, and do eat fleſh on Saturdays.

22. Item, they hold againſt the Latin men for celebrating without the conſecrated Church, either in the houſe or in the field; and faſting on the Sabbath-day; and for permitting menſtruous women to enter into the Church before their purifying; alſo for ſuffering Dogs and other beaſts to enter into the Church.

23. The Grecians uſe not to kneel in all their devotions, yea not to the body of Chriſt (as the Regiſter termeth it) but one day in the whole year; ſaying and affirming that the Latins be Goats and beaſts, for they are always proſtrating themſelves upon the ground in their prayers.

24. The Grecians moreover permit not the Latins to celebrate upon their Altars. And if it chance any Latin Prieſt to celebrate upon their Altar, by and by they waſh their Altar in token of abomination and falſe ſacrifice. And diligently they obſerve that whenſoever they do celebrate, they do but one Liturgy or Maſs upon one Altar or Table that day.

25. Item, they diſſent from the Church of Rome touching the order and manner of the proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt.

Theſe Articles wherein is declared the difference between the Eaſt and Weſt Church, of the Grecians and Romans, as I found them articulated and collected in an ancient and authentical Regiſter of the Church of Hereford, ſo I thought here to inſert them, and leave them to the conſideration of the Reader. Other four Articles more in the ſame Regiſter be there expreſſed concerning Simony, Uſury, not with them forbidden; and touching alſo their Emperor; and how they teach their children to hurt or damniſie by any manner of way the Latin Prieſts, &c. Which Articles, for that either they ſeem not truly collected out of their teachings, or elſe not greatly pertinent to the Doctrine of Religion; I overpaſs them. To the purpoſe now of our ſtory again.

When certain of theſe above prefixed were moved in the foreſaid Council to be diſcuſſed, namely concerning the aſſertion of proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt, and concerning leavened bread in the Miniſtration of the Lords Supper, Anſelm, as is above ſaid, was called for, who in the tranſlation of the ſame Articles ſo beſtirred him in that Councel, that he well liked the Pope and them about him, as one Author recordeth. Whereupon touching the matter of unleavened bread, how indifferently he ſeemed there to reaſon, and what he writeth to Waltram Biſhop of Nurenburgh, thereof ye ſhall hear by a piece of his Letter ſent to the ſaid Biſhop, the Copy whereof inſueth.

A Letter of Anſelm ſent to Waltram Biſhop of Nurenburgh. Ex Epiſt. Anſel. 325.

AS concerning the Sacrifice in which the Grecians think not as we do; it ſeemeth to many reaſonable to Catholick men, that which they do not to be againſt the Chriſtian Faith; for both he that ſacrificeth unleavened and leavened, ſacrificeth bread. And where it is read of our Lord (when he made his body of bread) that he took bread and bleſſed; it is not added unleavened or leavened. Yet it is certain that he bleſſed unleavened bread (peradventure) not becauſe the thing that was done required that, but becauſe the Supper in which this was done did give that. And whereas in another place he calleth himſelf and his fleſh bread, becauſe that as man liveth temporally with this bread, ſo with that bread he liveth for ever. He ſaith not unleavened or leavened, becauſe both alike are bread; for unleavened and leavened differ not in ſubſtance, as ſome think; like as a new maſs afore ſin, and an old man rooted in the leaven of ſin, differ not in ſubſtance. For this cauſe therefore only he might be thought to call himſelf and his fleſh, bread, and made his body of bread, becauſe that that bread (unleavened or leavened) giveth a tranſitory life; and his body giveth everlaſting life, not for that it is either leavened or unleavened. Although it be a Commandment in the Law to eat unleavened bread in the Paſſover, where all things are done in a figure, that it might be declared that Chriſt whom they for-ſhadowed, was pure and clean; and we that ſhould eat his body were admoniſhed to be likewiſe pure from all leaven of malice and wickedneſs. But now after we are come from the old figure to the new truth, and eat the unleavened fleſh of Chriſt, that old figure in bread (of which we make that fleſh) is not neceſſary for us. But manifeſt it is, to be better ſacrificed of unleavened, than of leavened, &c.

A Bread in the Communion to be unleavened not neceſſary.

To this Letter I have alſo adjoyned another Epiſtle of his to the ſaid Waltram, appertaining to matters not much unlike to the ſame effect; wherein is intreated touching the variety and diverſs uſages of the Sacraments in the Church; whereby ſuch as call and cry ſo much for Uniformity in the Church, may note peradventure in the ſame ſomething for their better underſtanding.

A piece of another Letter of Anſelm to the ſaid Waltram Biſhop of Nur.

Another Letter. Ex Epiſt. Anſel. 325.

To the Reverend Father and his Friend Waltram, by the Grace of God the Worſhipful Biſhop of Nurenburgh, Anſelm the Servant of the Church of Canterbury, Greeting, &c.

YOUR Worſhip complaineth of the Sacraments of the Church, that they are not made every where after one ſort, but are handled in divers places after divers ſorts. And truly if they were miniſtred after one ſort and agreeing through Diverſity of uſages in the Church to be born with peace, rather than to be condemned with offence.

through the whole Church, it were good and laudable. Yet notwithſtanding, becauſe there be many diverſities which differ not in the ſum of the Sacrament in the ſtrength of it, or in the Faith, or elſe can be gathered into one cuſtom: I think that they are rather to be born with in agreement of peace, than to be condemned with offence. For we have this from the holy fathers, that if the unity of charity be kept in the Catholick faith, the diverſity of cuſtoms hurteth nothing. But if it be demanded whereof this diverſity of cuſtoms doth ſpring; I perceive no other cauſe thereof but the diverſity of mens wits, which although they differ not in ſtrength and truth of the thing, yet they agree not in the ſtineſs and comelineſs of the miniſtring. For that which one judgeth to be meeter, oftentimes another thinketh leſs meet; wherefore not to agree in ſuch diverſities, I think it not to ſwerve from the truth of the thing, &c.

Diverſities in the Church hurt nothing.

Excommunication denounced againſt the Grecians.

Then in the ſtory it followeth, after long debating and diſcuſſing of theſe matters in the Council, when they had given forth their determination upon the ſame, and the Pope had blaſted out his thundring Excommunications againſt the Grecians, and all that took their part: at length were brought in the complaints and accuſation againſt the King of England. Upon the hearing whereof, Pope Urban with his adherents was ready to proceed in Excommunication againſt the King. But Anſelm kneeling before the Pope, after he had firſt accuſed his King, then after obtained for him longer time to be given upon further trial.

Excommunication againſt K. William.

Firſt breek his bond, and then give him a Fliſher.

Meſſages between the King and the Pope.

Thus the Council breaking up, the Pope returning again to Rome, directeth down his Letters to the King, commanding him that Anſelm with all his partakers (in ſpeedy wiſe) ſhould be revelled again into his Archbiſhoprick, and all other poſſeſſions thereunto appertaining. To this the King ſendeth anſwer again by meſſengers; who coming to the Pope, declared in the Kings behalf on this wiſe, That the King their Maſter did not a little marvel what came in his mind to command Anſelm to be revelled and reſeized again into his former Archbiſhoprick; ſeeing he told him before plainly, that if he went out of England without his leave, he would ſo do unto him. Well (ſaith the Pope) have ye no other matter againſt Anſelm but only this? No (quoth they.) And have ye taken all this travel (ſaith the Pope) to come hither ſo far to tell me this, that the Primate of your Country is therefore diſſeized and diſpoſſeſſed, becauſe he hath appealed to the See and judgment Apoſtolical? Therefore if thou loveſt thy Lord, ſpeed thee home and tell him, if he will not be Excommunicated, that he quickly reveſt Anſelm again to all that he had before. And leſt I make thee to be hanged for thy labour, look to thy term, and ſee that thou bring me anſwer again from him into this City, againſt the next Council the third week after Eaſter. The meſſenger or ſpeaker being ſomewhat aſtonied at the hearing of this ſo Tragical anſwer, thinking yet to work ſomething for his King and Maſter, came ſecretly to the Pope, ſaying that he would confer a certain myſtery from his King privately with his Holineſs between them two. What myſtery that was, or what there paſſed from the King to the Pope and the Court of Rome, mine Author doth not ſhew; but ſo cunningly that myſtery was handled, that with a full conſent both of the Pope and all the Court of Rome, a longer day was given, from Eaſter to Michaelmas, and the Popes choleriek heat ſo aſſwaged, that when the Council came (which then was holden at St. Peter's Church in Rome) albeit great complaints were then denounced againſt the King; yet ſuch favour was found that he took no harm. Only the ſentence of Excommunication was there pronounced againſt ſuch lay-perſons as gave Inveſtiture of Churches, and them that were ſo inveſted. Alſo againſt them that do conſecrate ſuch, or which gave themſelves in ſubjection to lay-men for Eccleſiaſtical livings, as is before touched, &c.

A fond crack of thunder for without a thunder-bolt.

Conciliom Romanum, ſupremum Conſilium.

Abſt of the Council of Rome.

This Council being finiſhed, the Archbiſhop ſeeing the unſatisfineſs of the Pope (which pleaſed him but a little) took his journey to Lions, where he continued his abode a long time, till the death firſt of Pope Urban, then after of the King.

Of this King William many things be diverſly recorded, ſome to his commendation, and ſome to his diſcommendation; whereof this is one, which ſome will aſcribe to hardineſs, but I rather to raſhneſs in him. As this King upon a time was in his diſport of hunting, ſuddenly word came to him that Cenowrna (a City in Normandy) was beſieged. The King without longer tarrying or adviſement took the ſtraight way toward the Sea-ſide, ſending to his Lords that they ſhould follow after. They being come to his preſence, adviſed him to ſtay till the time his people were aſſembled, but he would not be ſtayed, ſaying that ſuch as him loved (he knew) would follow him ſhortly, and ſo went to take Ship. The Ship-maſter ſeeing the weather ſo dark and cloudy was afraid, and counſelled the King to tarry till the wind did turn about, and the weather more favourable. But the King perſiſting in his journey, commanded him to make all the ſpeed he might for his life; ſaying, That he never heard that any King yet was ever drowned. And ſo paſſed the Sea in ſafety, and came to Normandy.

The hardineſs reſt or rather raſhneſs of K. William.

The ſaying of K. William, never kn. ve any King drowned.

The thirteenth year of his reign the ſaid King William, having the ſame time in his hand three Biſhopricks, Canterbury, Winchcſter and Sarum; alſo twelve Abbeys in farm; as he was in his diſport of hunting in the new Foreſt, by glancing of an arrow (ſhot of a Knight named Walter Tirrel) was wounded to death, and ſo ſpeechleſs was carried to Weſtminſter, and there was buried. Where alſo is to be noted, that Richard the Couſin-German of King William, and Son to Duke Robert his Brother, was likewiſe ſlain in the foreſaid Foreſt. See the juſt hand of God upon Kings uſurping wrongfully upon other mens grounds, as did William the Conqueror their Father, in making this new Foreſt, plucking down divers Churches and Townſhips, the compaſs of thirty miles about. Here therefore appeareth, that although men cannot revenge, yet God revengeth either in them, or in their poſterity, &c. This King as he always uſed Concubines, ſo left he no iſſue legitimate behind him. His life was ſuch that it is hard for a ſtory that ſhould tell the truth, to ſay whether he was more to be commended or reproved. Among other vices in him, eſpecially is to be rebuked in him unmeaſurable and unreaſonable covetouſneſs; inſomuch that he coveted (if he might) to be every mans heir. This one example of a liberal and Princely nature I find in him: that upon a time when a certain Abbot of a place was dead, there came to his Court two Monks of the ſame houſe, who before had gathered much money, and made their friends to the King, and offered large offers, either of them to be promoted to that dignity. There was alſo the third Monk of the ſame place, which of meekneſs and humility followed the other two, to the intent that upon him whom the King had admitted for Abbot, he ſhould give attendance, and as his Chaplain with him return. The King called before him the two Monks ſeverally, of whom the one out-proffered the other. As the King caſt his eye aſide, he eſpied the third Monk ſtanding by, ſuppoſing that his coming had been alſo for the like cauſe. Then the King calling him, aſked what he would do, whether he would give more than his brethern had offered to be Abbot. He anſwered to the King, and ſaid, that he neither had nor would (if he might) offer any peny for it by any ſuch unlawful means.

Urban Excommunicated.

Urban Biſhop of Rome, who (as is ſaid) ſucceeded after Victor, ruled the Church of Rome about the ſpace of twelve years; and amongſt his other acts he Excommunicated the Emperor Henry the Fourth of that name, as a man not much devout to that See of Rome. But yet a worthy and victorious Prince he was, in whom albeit ſome vice perchance might be noted, yet none ſuch, wherefore any Prelate or Miniſter of Chriſt ought to excite his ſubjects to rebel againſt publick Authority of God appointed. This Emperor Henry the Fourth was by four Popes ſeverally Excommunicated: firſt by Hildebrand, by Victor, Urban, and Paſchal. Which Excommunication wrought ſo in the ignorant and blind hearts of the people, that many (as well of the Nobles as of the multitude, contrary to their ſworn allegiance) rebelliouſly conſpired againſt their King and Emperor. In number of whom, amongſt the reſt was one certain Earl named Ludovicus, to whom Henry the fourth Emperor, by four Popes Excommunicated.

Ludovicus Earl conſpiring and rebellious againſt the Emperor.

Waltramus Bishop of the Church of Mergburgh (a godly and faithful man as appeareth) doth write Letters of Fatherly admonition, exhorting and instructing him in the office of obedience. Unto the which Letters he likewise doth answer again by cavilling sophistication, and by meer affection rather disposed to discord, than seeking sincerity of truth. And forsomuch as in these two Letters the argument of Christian obedience on both sides is so debated by proofs and reasons, as may be profitable for the Reader to peruse and understand, I thought therefore not to defraud the English Reader of the same, whereof peradventure some utility might be taken. The tenor of the Bishops Letter to the Earl here followeth.

The Epistle of Waltramus Bishop of Merglurgh, to the Earl Ludovicus, exhorting to concord and obedience.

Anno 1590. Ex oppos. ex Mariana Scoti.

WAltramus Dei gratia id quod est, Ludovico serenissimo Principi, cum instantia orationum frequentia ad omnia devotissimum, Omni regno utilis est concordia, desiderabilis est justitia, &c.

In English.

'Waltram by the Grace of God being that he is, to 'Ludovick the noble Prince, with instance of prayers of-'fereth himself serviceable to all things. To every Realm 'concord is a thing profitable, and justice much to be de-'fired. For this vertue is the mother of godliness, and 'the consecration of all honesty. Whosoever seeketh after 'civil diffention, and incenseth others to effusion of blood, 'he is a murtherer, and partaker with him, who ever 'gaping and thirsting for anothers blood, goeth about 'seeking whom he may devour. You therefore consider-'with your self (moſt noble Prince) how God is the God 'of peace and not of diſſention (ſo much as in you doth 'lie) have peace with all men. God is charity, the Devil 'is hatred. The whole Law and Prophets conſiſt in love 'and charity. He that hateth and maligneth his brother is 'a murtherer, and hath no part with Chriſt in the Kingdom of God. This we read teſtified and protefted both 'by him which is the truth himſelf, and by him which 'was the ſchoolar of the truth; who upon the breaſt of 'the Lord (drinking a more full draught of the Goſpel) 'rejoyceth the City of God with abundance of plentiful 'floods. In like manner that worthy veſſel of Election, 'who being rapt up to the third Heaven (not by man, but 'by revelation of Jeſus Chriſt) proteſteth alſo, ſaying, Let 'every ſoul ſubmit himſelf to the higher powers: There is 'no power, ſaith he, but of God. If that be true there-'fore, which certain of our friends do jangle among wo-'men and the vulgar ſort, that we ought not to be ſubdu-'ed to Kingly power; then is it falſe which the Apoſtle 'teacheth, that every ſoul muſt ſubmit himſelf under pow-'er and ſuperiority. But can the Verity lie? Or do we 'ſeek for experiment of him who ſpake in the Apoſtle, 'Chriſt the Lord? Or do we provoke the Lord? Be we 'ſtronger than he? For what doth he but think himſelf 'ſtronger than the Lord, that reſiſteth the ordinance of 'God? For there is no power but of God. But what 'ſaith the Prophet? Confounded be all they that ſtrive 'againſt thee, O Lord; and the men which repugn againſt 'thee ſhall periſh. Rodolph, Hildebrand, Egbert, with 'many other Princes, reſiſted the Ordinance of God in 'Henry the Emperor. And lo even as they had never been, 'ſo are they now periſhed; and as their end was evil, ſo 'their beginning could not be good.

'Now therefore,forſomuch as they which be contrary to 'us do earneſtly ſtrive againſt us even with their own ar-'guments, whereas of right (I dare refer me to your 'judgment) we ought to uſe the authority of Chriſt and 'ancient Fathers,before that which our adverſaries take out 'of their own treaſury: And becauſe I will not refuſe the 'order of Law in this behalf; let it be the end of the 'ſtrife,that either I may be openly ſhamed before the peo-'ple, either elſe (the victory falling on our ſide) we may 'win you to the obedience of our Soveraign Lord the Em-'peror. Alſo take you heed to this ſaying, If any man do 'preach otherwiſe than that which is preached, let him be Concord & juſt obedience neceſſary in a Commonwealth.

Gal.

'of you accurſed. This curſe, I ſay, doth not proceed from 'any new prophane authority, but is thundred down from 'the third Heaven. And of them which know not the 'righteouſneſs of God, but go about to ſtabliſh their own 'righteouſneſs, and therefore be not ſubject to the righte-'ouſneſs of God, I may boldly ſay, let ſuch be accurſed. So 'may you well ſay, Confounded be all they that proudly 'riſe up againſt the Lord; but thy ſervant (O Lord) ſhall 'rejoyce. For as thou haſt well ſaid, Without me you can 'do nothing, ſo in judging of the wicked thou doſt not 'condemn the juſt. Who art thou that judgeſt another mans 'ſervant? to his own Lord he doth either ſtand or fall.

The Anſwer of Earl Lewis to Biſhop Waltram.

A railing Anſwer to the former Letter of Biſhop Waltram.

THE Earl Lewis to the Lord Waltram, howſoever unworthy or unmeet he be for the name. Like as a 'good man from the good treaſure of the heart bringeth 'forth good fruit, ſo doth the evil man from the evil trea-'ſure of the heart bring forth evil fruit. What arrogancy 'hath ſo poſſeſt you, to provoke my diſpleaſure with ſuch 'injurious contumelies? For indeed thoſe my good Lords 'and Spiritual Fathers, which ſtrengthen me in the way of 'righteouſneſs, you (raillingly) call bloody men like unto 'Satan, and the wholeſome leſſons which they teach, you ſay 'they are but dreams of the common people amongſt foo-'liſh women. Hath God any need of your judgment that 'you ſhould ſpeak leaſings for him? Iniquity hath taught 'you mouth to follow blaſphemous tongues; ſo that well 'may the Prophet ſay of you, He would not underſtand to 'do well, he hath deviſed wickedneſs upon his bed. Al-'though therefore you being altogether froward, have only 'ſpoken froward things; yet we have determined to ſet a 'watch before our mouth,like as if a ſhameleſs perſon ſhould 'ſtand up before us; and the Word of God doth provoke 'us,ſaying,Anſwer a fool according to his own fooliſhneſs, 'leſt he ſhould ſeem wiſe in his own opinion. Shall folly 'ſpeak, and wiſdom hold her peace? Shall lyes be freely 'uttered, and truth compelled to keep ſilence? Shall dark-'neſs cover the Earth, and ſhall not the Lord ariſe and 'ſhine? yea rather the light hath lightned the darkneſs,and 'darkneſs hath not comprehended it:In conſideration here-'of our hearts have melted, and our zealous meditations 'have ſet us on fire. We therefore ſpeak and cry, and the 'little Foxes which undermine the Lords Vineyards (as 'much as in us is) we drive away, fearing the threatning 'Prophecy: You have not withſtood our adverſaries neither 'have you made a Bulwark for the defence of the Houſe of 'Iſrael,that you might be able to ſtand in battel in the day 'of the Lord. Let them hear (I ſpeak not to you which 'have ears and hear not,eyes and ſee not,which have made 'dark the light that is in you) but let them hear, I ſay, that 'be well diſpoſed,and have ears to hear withal: as for you, 'you have no underſtanding, and if you have, you cloak it. 'Neither have you any thing to ſay or to prove, by what 'reaſon we ſhould be ſubject to the Lord Henry,whom you 'call Emperor. And yet (as it is given us to underſtand) 'you go about to perſwade, that of neceſſity we ought to 'be ſubject to him, and that by the argument of St. Paul, 'Let every ſoul be ſubdued to the higher powers, for there 'is no power but of God; he therefore that doth withſtand 'power, doth reſiſt Gods Ordinance. The which ſentence 'of the Apoſtle we ſay that you do evil conceive and there-'fore evil interpret; for if every power be of God (as you 'underſtand) what is meant by that, that the Lord doth 'ſpeak of ſome by the Prophet? They did reign and were 'not made Princes by me, and I knew them not. If every 'power be of God as you take it, what is to be thought of 'that, that the Lord doth ſay,If thine eye offend thee,pluck it out, and caſt it from thee? For what is power, but the 'eye? Certainly Auguſtin in the Expoſition of this ſentence 'of the Apoſtle (Let every ſoul, &c.) doth ſay, that if the 'powers do command any thing againſt God, then have 'them in contempt: but yet nevertheleſs fear them. Is 'there any iniquity with God? Is Chriſt the Miniſter of 'ſin? God forbid. What ſhall we therefore ſay? Doth the 'Apoſtle preach contrary to truth? Auguſt. ſaith, No. One 'wind filleth many Pipes of divers tunes. Therefore let us 'bear the Apoſtle agreeing, and expounding himſelf, and 'deſtroying his enemy and avenger: There is (ſaith he) no 'power but of God. What followeth? He therefore, ſaith 'he,

Rom. 13.

Well ſaid, when you are not able to withſtand his wiſdom, call him a fool.

Note here the Earl bare calleth light darkneſs, and darkneſs light.

He hath ofttimes more reaſon than you are able to anſwer, ever to-fore too.

Yea whom they ſhall ſlay you, they ſhall think they do God great ſervice, Joh. 16

Yea true, if he had compelled you to forſake the name of Chriſt, which he never did.

'he, that doth reſiſt the power, &c. God forbid, doth no-'thing follow? But what doth follow? Thoſe powers 'which be ordained of God truly,that is it we look for. O 'crafty tongue! O heart imagining miſchief! O confu-'ſing breath that ſhall not return! Why haſt thou lyed 'to the Holy Ghoſt? Thine own conſcience ſhall accuſe 'thee. Behold the wicked fleeth, and no man doth purſue 'him. Why would you ſuppreſs the truth to the intent to 'deceive? Why ſtole ye away the pith and effect of this 'ſentence? for if theſe words ſhould be taken away from 'the midſt of the ſentence,it ſhould lie (contrary to it ſelf) 'inconvenient and half dead. The word of the Lord is 'herein fulfilled, He that diggeth a pit for his neighbour 'ſhall fall therein himſelf. Verily you can neither excuſe 'you of theſt, neither avoid the puniſhment due for the 'ſame. O unhappy man! what ſhall you anſwer to the 'Judg, when he ſhall require an account of his ſervants of 'whom he putteth you in truſt, ſeeing you ſhall be ſet be-'fore him in the midſt,and proved a picker of your Maſters 'treaſure? Wherefore did you not fear the judgment and 'execution, when as the guiltineſs of offence doth require 'condign puniſhment? The Apoſtle through the Holy 'Ghoſt did foreſee, that you and ſuch Hereticks as you are 'ſhould ſpring in the Church, which ſhould call good evil, 'and evil good, and that ſhould put darkneſs in place of 'light, and light in place of darkneſs, which alſo ſhould 'take occaſion by the ſentences of truth to bring in error, 'when as he did ſet this before, There is no power but of 'God: to the intent he might take away the conjecture of 'falſe underſtanding. For (ſaith he) thoſe powers that be, 'are ordained of God. Give therefore an ordinary power, 'and we do not reſiſt,yea we will forthwith do our homage. 'But I do marvel (if at the leaſt there remain in you any 'one drop of blood) that you are not aſhamed to call the 'Lord Henry King, or to allow him any ordinary place.

'Is this a feemly order (think you) to give place to wick-'edneſs, and to make a general confuſion in mixing good 'and evil,Gods and mans devices together? Either do you 'think this good order for man to fin againſt his own 'body, as (Oh ſhameful wickedneſs!) to make his own wife 'a common harlot, a miſchief not heard of at any time 'ſince the beginning of the world before now? Or do you 'allow this for good order,' when as the Lord ſaith, De-'fend the widows, eſpecially ſuch as require equity of ju-'ſtice, and then them to ſend away moſt filthily deniled? 'Mad Oreſtes doth proteſt him to be out of his wit that 'will ſay theſe things to be orderly or well done. Until 'this moſt miſerable time nature hath ever loved ſecrecy; 'but your King given up to a reprobate ſenſe, hath unco-'vered the privities of nature, who hath not let to lay a-'broad all ſhamefulneſs. We will not ſpeak of other things 'which cannot be numbred, that is to ſay, burning of 'Churches, Robberies, firing of Houſes, Man-ſlaughters, 'Murders, and ſuch like, the number whereof he knoweth, 'and not we; for let us ſpeak chiefly of thoſe things which 'moſt grieve the Church of God. Hearken therefore to 'true and not fained things: Hearken I ſay, to mat-'ters of earneſt, and to no trifles. Every one that doth ſell 'ſpiritual dignities is an Heretick. But the Lord Henry, 'whom they call a King, doth ſell both Biſhopricks and 'Abbacies; for truly he ſold for money the Biſhoprick of 'Conſtance, Babemberge, Mentz, and many others. The 'Biſhopricks of Ratiſbon, Auguſta, and Strausbrough, he 'ſold for a Sword, and the Abbey of Fulda for Adultery; 'and for filthy Sodomitry he ſold the Biſhopric of Aton. A 'wickedneſs it is to ſpeak or hear of ſuch a fact. The which 'things if without ſhame ye will deny,he is to be condem-'ned by the witneſs of Heaven and Earth; yea and of the 'ſilly poor Idiots that come from the Smiths forge. Where-'fore the Lord Henry is an Heretick; for the which moſt 'wicked evils he is Excommunicate from the See Apoſto-'lick,ſo that he may not exerciſe either Kingdom or pow-'er over us which be Catholick. And whereas you burthen 'us with hatred of our Brethren, know you that we pur-'poſe not to hate any of affection, but of a godly zeal. 'God forbid that we ſhould think Henry worthy to be ac-'counted amongſt our Chriſtian Brethren, who indeed is 'reputed for an Ethnick and Publican, in that he refuſed 'to hear the Church which ſo oft hath reproved him. The 'hatred of whom we offer unto God for a great ſacrifice, 'ſaying with the Pſalmiſt, Lord ſhall not I hate them that 'hate thee? and ſhall not I triumph over thine enemies? 'I hate them with an inward hatred that be enemies to me 'for thy ſake. The truth it ſelf, commending the worthi-'neſs of this hatred, doth ſay, If any do not hate Father 'and Mother, Brethren and Siſters for my ſake, he cannot 'be my Diſciple. We are not therefore juſtly to be repro-'ved of hatred, which do give over our ſoul to be in 'the way of God; who indeed are commanded to hate 'Father and Mother,and every affection which doth with-'ſtand us for walking in the path of God. Hereof it com-'eth, that we labour with all our ſtudy and endeavour to 'beware of the enemies of the Church, and them to hate; 'not for that they be our enemies, but Gods. Further, 'where you perſwade peace to be had with all men, you 'muſt remember what the Apoſtle doth put before, If it 'may be. But if it cannot be that we can have peace with 'them,who can be contrary to God? Who doth not know 'the Lord our Saviour not only to commend peace, when 'as he ſaith, My peace I give unto you, my peace I leave 'unto you; But that he is the peace (as ſaith the Apoſtle) 'he is the peace which made of both one; for he calleth 'him our peace, ſpeaking in commendation of the peace: 'Think not (ſaith he) that I came to ſend peace, for I came 'not to ſend peace, but the Sword. What is meant by this? 'Why is peace called a ſword? Or doth peace bid battel? 'Yea truly, to deſtroy the peace of the Devil. For the Di-'vel hath his peace, whereof the Lord ſpeaketh, When as 'the ſtrong man keepeth his Houſe, he doth poſſeſs all his 'ſubſtance in peace. Oh how mightily doth the Devil keep 'his ſoldiers and his houſe in this time! Who with the 'ſhield of falſhood, and the helmet of untruth ſo doth de-'fend him, that he will not ſuffer either arrow or dart of 'truth to pierce him. Nevertheleſs our Lord being more 'ſtrongly armed, and fiercely coming upon your Giant, is 'able to overcome him and to take away his weapons, 'wherein he putteth his truſt. We are not therefore to be 'blamed, if we do deteſt that peace, more cruel than any 'war, the which the truth it ſelf did reprove in ſeeing over 'Jeruſalem, and ſaying, Truly, it grieveth me this day to 'ſee ſinners in peace; being like unto that peace whereat 'the Pſalmiſt was offended. Whereas you condemn Pope 'Gregory, King Rodulphus, and Marquis Eggebertus, as 'men that have died of an unhappy death, and do magni-'fie your Lord, becauſe he doth over-live them; it doth 'plainly (forſooth) appear,that you retain void of all ſpi-'ritual conſideration. Is it not better to die well, than to 'live ill? They be truly happy who ſuffer perſecution for 'righteouſneſs ſake. By the ſame reaſon may you eſteem 'Nero, Herod, and Pilat happy, in that they over-lived 'Peter, Paul, James, Apoſtles, and Jeſus Chriſt. What 'can be ſaid more foolith and wicked than this opinion? 'Wherefore refrain your babling tongue from this blaſ-'phemy, left that you place your ſelf in the number of 'them, which ſeeing the end of the juſt to be glorious '(themſelves doing late and unfruitful penance, bewailing 'in the anguiſh of the Spirit) ſhall ſay,Theſe be they whom 'ſometimes we had in deriſion and laughed to ſcorn; we 'being out of our wits thought their lives madneſs, and 'their end to be without honour. Behold how they be al-'lowed to be amongſt the Children of God,and their por-'tion is amongſt the Saints. Wherefore we have erred from 'the way of truth, and the brightneſs of righteouſneſs did 'not ſhine upon us. What did our pride avail us? and what 'profit did the boaſting of our riches bring us? They are 'all vaniſhed away like a ſhadow. The which words we 'have regiſtred up into perpetual memory, and we do de-'ſpiſe every attempt that ſhall lift up it ſelf againſt the truth 'of God; and rejoycing in troubles, we may be reproved, 'put to ſhame and rebuked, yea and finally be ſlain and 'killed, but we will neither yield, nor be overcome. And 'with great triumph will we rejoyce in our fathers doings; 'of whom you (as a beardleſs boy,and of ſmall knowledg) 'have nothing rightly conceived; who indeed deſpiſing 'Princes commandments,have deſerved everlaſting reward.

Diſobedience puniſhed of God.

Evil, but far from knowledg.

Oh how ſubtil craftily doth Satan bere ſhape himſelf to be an Angel of light.

Ex vetuſto Chronico.

There is a certain Chronicle in old Engliſh Meeter, which among other matters, ſpeaking of William Rufus, declareth him to be ſo ſumptuous and exceſſive in pompous Apparel, that he being not contented with a pair of Hoſe of a low price, which was three ſhillings, cauſed a pair to be bought of a mark; whereupon his Cham-

That they softened a Mark, and unneth he them so bought: Yea Belamy (quoth the King) they are well bought.

Whereby is to be noted what difference is to be seen between the Hose of Princes then, and the Hose of Servingmen now.

Appendix Historiæ.

Kings ceased in Peter. After the time of this King William, the name of Kings ceased in the Country of Wales among the Britains, since King Res, who in the reign of this King, the year of our Lord 1093, was slain in Wales. Ex continuatione Rogeri Hoved.

King HENRY the First.

Anno 1100. Henry Beauclerk the I. King of England. What Learning doth in a Prince. The laws of King Edward renewed. The measure of England made after the length of King Henry's arm.

HENRY the First of that name, the Third Son of William the Conqueror, succeeding his Brother Rufus, began his Reign in England, the year of our Lord 1100, who for his knowledg and science in the Seven Liberal Arts, was Simamed Clerk or Beauclerk. In whom may well appear how Knowledg and Learning doth greatly condace to the Government and Administration of any Realm or Country. At the beginning he reformed the state and condition of the Clergy, releafed the grievous payments, reduced again King Edward's Laws, with Emendation thereof; he reformed the old and untrue measures, and made a measure after the length of his arm; he greatly abhored excefs of meats and drinks; many things misused before his time he reformed; and used to vanquilh more by counsel than by sword. Such persons as were nice and wanton he secluded from his Court. This man (as appeareth) little favoured the usurped power of the Bishop of Rome. Soon after he was King, he married Matild, or Maud, Daughter of Malcolm King of Scots, & of Margaret his wife, Daughter of Edward the Outlaw, as is before specified, being a professed Nun in Winchester; whom notwithstanding (without the Popes dispensation) he married by the counsel of Anselm, by the which Maud he received two Sons, William and Richard, and two Daughters, Maud and Mary, which Maud afterward was married to Henry the fifth Emperor, &c.

Wanton persons removed out of the Court.

Ex Mat. Paris. Eius. Hist.

In the second year of his Reign, Robert his Elder Brother, Duke of Normandy, being occupied in the Christian Wars against the Turks, and being elect (as you heard) King of Jerusalem, hearing of the death of Rufus, refused the Kingdom thereof; for the which (as is thought) he never sped well after. Thus the faid Robert having off the Lords business, and returning into Normandy, made there his preparation, and came over into England with a great Host to challenge the Crown; but by mediation of the Lords it was agreed upon that Robert should have yearly during his life three thousand Marks, as was likewise promised him before by King Rufus his Brother; and whether of them overlived the other, to be the others heir. And thus Robert departed again into Normandy, to the great discontentation of his Lords there. But in few years after, the forenamed tribute of three thousand Marks, through the means of Queen Maud, was releafed to the King his Brother. In proceis of time, variance falling between King Henry and the faid Robert his Brother; at length Robert in his Wars was taken prisoner and brought over into England, and was put into the Castle of Cardiff in Wales, where he continued as prisoner while he lived.

Example, that it is to leave off the Lords business.

Duke Robert taken prisoner.

The Hospital of Bartholomew founded. Rafer and Richard Whittington founders of St. Bartholomews in London.

In this time, as about the third year of this King, the Hospital of Saint Bartholomew in Smithfield was founded (by means of a Minstrel belonging unto the King, named Rafer) and after it was finished by Richard Whittington, Alderman and Mayor of London. This place on Smithfield was at that day a Layftall of all ordure or filth, and the place where the felons and other transgressors of the Kings Laws were put to execution.

Divers strict Laws were by this King provided, especially against thieves and felons; that whosoever were taken in that fault, no money should save them from hanging.

Item, That whoso did counterfeit false Money, should have both his eyes and neather parts of his body cut off.

Item, In the same Council was decreed an order for Priests to be sequestred from their wives, which before were not forbidden, according as the words of mine Author do purport, whose words be these: Anselmus probibuit uxores sacerdotibus Anglorum ante non prohibitas. Quod quibusdam mundissimum visum est, quibusdam periculosum, ne dum mundicias viribus majores appeterent, in immundicias horribiles ad Christianæ nominis summum dedecus inciderent, &c. Henr. Hunt.

Ex Hoveden. & Matthæo Paris.

Item, It was then decreed that Monks and Priests should bear no rule over Lay-persons.

Item, It was then decreed concerning broidering of hair, and wearing of garments.

Item, That the secret contract between a young lad and a young maid should not stand; with other things more concerning the Excommunication of Sodomites, &c.

In the story of William Rufus, before was declared how Anselm the Archbishop of Canterbury, departing out of the Realm, went unto the Pope; who after the death of King William was sent for again by the foresaid King Henry, and so returned again, and was at the Council of the King at Westminster; where the King in the presence of the Lords, as well Temporal as Spiritual, ordained and invested two Bishops, Roger Bishop of Salisbury, and Roger Bishop of Hereford. During which Parliament or Council of the King, Anselm in his Convocation deposed and displaced divers Abbots and other Prelates from their rooms and dignities; either for that they lawfully came not by them, or uprightly did not administer the same.

The King ordained and invested Bishops without the Pope.

After this Council, and the other before set forth by Anselm, Herbert Bishop of Norwich had much ado with the Priests of his Diocese; for they would neither leave their wives, nor yet give over their Benefices. Whereupon he wrote to Anselm the Archbishop for counsel, what was to be done therein. Which Anselm required him (as he did others more the same time by writing) to persuade the people of Northfolk and Suffolk; that as they professed Christianity, they should subdue them as rebels against the Church, and utterly drive both them and their wives out of the Country, placing Monks in their rooms, as by the Epistles of the said Anselm doth appear. Whereof certain parcels shall hereafter (by the Grace of Christ) ensue for the better evidence of this and the other his acts above recited.

Herbert Bishop of Thetford. Ex Epist. Anselmi.

The like business also had Gerard the Archbishop of York, in depriving the Priests of his Province from their wives; which thing with all his Excommunications and thundrings he could hardly bring about. Upon this ruffling of Anselm with married Priests, were riming verses made to help the matter withal, when reason could not serve. Which verses for the folly thereof I thought here to annex.

Verses made against the Priests.

O male viventes, versus audite sequentes;
Uxores vestras, quas odit summa potestas,
Linquite propter eum, tenuit qui morte trophæum,
Quod si non facitis, infernæ claustra petetis.
Christi sponsa jubet, ne Presbyter ille maniseret,
Qui tenet uxorem, Domini quia perdit amorem:
Contradicentem fore dicimus insipientem:
Non ex rancore loquor hæc, potius sed amore.

About the end of the third year of this King, which was by computation of our Lord 1103, a variance fell between King Henry and Anselm, the occasion whereof was this: Ye heard a little before how Henry the foresaid King had of his own authority invested two Bishops, one Roger which was Chancellor, Bishop of Salisbury; and another Bishop of Hereford. Besides them divers also he invested, and divers other like things took he upon him in the Ecclesiastical State, which he might lawfully do, Gods Word allowing well the same; but because he was restrained by the Bishop of Rome, and forbidden so to do, this Anselm swelled, fretted, and waxed so mad, that he would neither consent to it, neither yet confirm them, nor communicate nor talk friendly with them, whom the King

King had instituted and invested; but opprobriously called them abortives, or children of destruction, disdainfully rebuking the gentle King as a desiler of Religion, and pollutor of their holy Ceremonies; as witnesseth Polydor. With this uncomly outrage the King was much displeased (as he might full well) and required Gerard the Archbishop of York (as he ought him allegiance) to consecrate them: Who without delay did so, well performing the same; saving that one William Gifford, to whom the King had given the Bishoprick of Winchester, refused to take his consecration by the hands of the Archbishop of York. For the which cause the King (worthily with him offended) deprived him both of Bishoprick and goods, and banished him the Realm.

Gifford Bishop of Winchester refused to be consecrated by the Archbishop of York.

Moreover, the King required of Anselm the Archbishop of Canterbury, to do unto him Homage, after the manner of his Ancestors, as witnesseth Guliel. de gestis pontif. Anglo. Also it was asked of the said Anselm, whether that he would be with the King in giving investitures, as Lanfrancus his Predecessor was with his Father. To whom Anselm said, that he promised not at any time, that he would enter into this Order, to keep the Law or Custom of his Father, as Lanfrancus did. Moreover, as concerning Homage to be done to the King, that he refused; alledging the censures of the Popes excommunication, who, in his council of Rome a little before, had given forth open sentence of excommunication upon all such lay persons (whatsoever they were) that should from henceforth confer or give any spiritual promotions: Also upon them that received them at their hands, either yet should consecrate any such receivers. Moreover, he accursed all them that for benefices or other Ecclesiastical promotions should subject themselves under the Homage or service of any great man, King, Prince, Duke, or Earl of the Laity. For it was unseemly (said the Pope) and a thing very execrable, that the hands which were converted into so high a working, as was granted to no angel (that is, to create him with their crosses, which created all, and to offer up the same before the sight of the Father for the salvation of the whole World) should be brought to such a slavery, as to be subject to those filthy hands, which both day and night are polluted with shameful touchings, robberies, and bloodshed, &c. This decree of Pope Urban Anselm alledging for himself, denied to subject himself to the Kings Homage, fearing (as he said) the Popes excommunication. Upon this, messengers were sent to Rome on both parts unto the Pope (then Paschalis) who, stoutly standing to the steps and determinations of Urban his predecessor, would in no case yield to the Kings investing.

Ex Matthæo Paris. Ex Guliel. lib. 1. de gestis pontif. Ang.

In the mean time, while there was long disputation on both sides for investing, the Nobles of the Realm contended, that investings did belong to the Kings dignity: Wherefore the King, calling for Anselm again, required him either to do Homage to him, or else to void his Kingdom. To whom Anselm replying again, required the Popes Letters to be brought forth, and, according to the Tenor thereof, so the matter to be decided. For now the messengers were returned from Rome, with the Popes answer; altogether bearing with Anselm. Then said the King: What have I to do with Popes Letters? I will not forgo the liberties of my Kingdom for any Pope. Thus the contention continued between them. Anselm saith, he would not out of the Realm, but depart home to his Church: And there see who would offer him any violence, and so did. Not long after, message came from the King to Anselm, requesting him, after a gentle sort, to repair to the Kings presence again, to set an end of the controversie begun: Whereunto Anselm granted and came. Then were new Ambassadors sent again to the Pope, that he would something qualifie and moderate (or rather abolish) the straitnels of the Roman decree before mentioned. On the part of Anselm went two Monks, Baldwinus and Alexander. On the Kings behalf were sent two Bishops, Robert Bishop of Lichfield, and Herbert Bishop of Norwich, with the Kings Letters written unto the Pope, containing in form as followeth.

Patri venerabili Paschali summo pontifici, Henricus Dei gratia rex Anglorum, salutem. Promotioni vestræ in sedem sanctæ Romanæ ecclesiæ plurimum congaudeo, petens ut amicitia quæ patri meo cum antecessoribus vestris fuit, inter nos quoque illibata permaneat. Unde, ut delectio & benignitas a me videatur sumere initium, beneficium quod ab antecessoribus meis beatus Petrus habuit, vobis mitto: eosq; honores & eam obedientiam quam tempore patris mei antecessores vestri in regno Angliæ habuerunt, tempore meo ut habeatis volo, eo videlicet tenore, ut dignitatis ipsius & consuetudines, quas pater meus tempore antecessorum vestrorum in regno Angliæ habuit, ego tempore vestro in eodem regno meo integre obtineam. Notumq; habeat sanctitas vestra, quod me vivente (Deo auxiliante) dignitates & usus regni Angliæ non minuentur. Et si ego (quod absit) in tanta me dejectione ponerem; optimates mei (imo totius Angliæ populus) id nullo modo pateretur. Habita igitur (charissime pater) utiliori deliberatione, ita se erga nos moderatur benignitas vestra, ne quid inviisus faciam, & a vestra me cogatis recedere obedientia.

To the Reverend Father Paschal chief Bishop, Henry by the Grace of God, King of England, Greeting. For this your promotion unto the See of the holy Church of Rome, as I am heartily glad; so my requeast is to you, that the friendship and amity, which hath been before between my Father and your Predecessors in times past, may now also between us in like manner continue undiminished. And that love and gentleness may first begin on my part; here I send to you that Gift that S. Peter had in former time of my Predecessors. And likewise the same honors and obedience, which your Predecessors have had in the Realm of England before in the time of my Father, I will you to have the same in my time also: After this form I mean and tenor, that the usage and manner of Dignity and Customes, which my Father hath had in this Realm of England, in the time of your Ancestors; I in like ample manner also now in your time may fully injoy the same in this the said Realm of England. Thus therefore be it known to your Holiness, that during this life of mine (God Almighty ablning me to the same) these above named Dignities, Usages, and Customs of this Realm of England, shall in no part be lessened. Yea, and if that I (as God forbid I should) would so much deject my self unto such cowardness: Yet my Nobles, Yea, the whole People of England in no case would suffer it. Wherefore (dear Father) using with your self a better deliberation in this matter, let your gentleness so moderate it self toward us, lest ye compel me (which I shall do against my will) to recede and d e utterly from your Obedience.

The King is at a point to leave the Popes Obedience.

At the same Term also he sent another Letter or Epistle to the said Pope, Craving of him the Pall for Gerardus Archbishop of York, the form whereof here also followeth.

Another Letter of King Henry the first, sent to the Pope.

Reverendo & diligendo patri universali papæ Paschali, Henricus Dei gratia rex Anglorum, salutem. Amor quem plurimum erga vos habeo, & benignitas quæ multum vestros actus exornat, &c.

In English.

To the Reverend and Welbeloved Father Universal, Pope Paschalis, Henry, by the Grace of God, King of England, Greeting. The great love which I bear to you, and the no less gentleness in you, which not a little beautifieth your doings, minisireth to me boldness to write. And whereas I thought to have retained still this Gerardus with me, and to have craved your Pall for him by Letters: Yet notwithstanding, when his desire could not otherwise be satisfied, but he would needs present himself before your presence, by his own heart to crave of you the same, I have sent him up unto you, desiring your benigne Fatherhood in this behalf, that he, obtaining the Pall at your hands, may be sent home again to me. And thus requiring the assistance of your Prayers, I pray the Lord long to conserve your Apostleship.

This second Letter of the King in sending for the Pall was well taken of all the Court of Rome, which (as mine Author saith) procured such favour to Gerardus Archbishop of York, and bringer thereof, that no complaint of his adversaries afterwards could hurt him with the Pope. Notwithstanding he was accused grievously for divers things, and specially for not standing to the consecration of Anselm Archbishop of Canterbury.

Polydorus in his eleventh Book of his English History affirmeth, that Anselmus also went up to Rome with Gerardus, about the same cause. But both the premisses and sequel of the story argue that to be untrue, for what need the two Monks to be sent up on Anselms side, if he had gone up himself? Again, how could the Pope write down by the said Messengers to Anselm, if he had there been himself present? For so proceedeth the story by the Narration of Malmesbury and Others.

A place of Polydorus Virg. found faulty. Ex Guliel. lib. 8. de pont. Ang.

After the Ambassadors (thus on both sides sent unto Rome) had laboured their cause with instant suite, one against the other; the Pope glad to gratifie the King (yet loath to grant his request, being against his own profit, and therefore more inclining to Anselms side) sendeth down his Letters to the said Anselm, signifying that he would not repeal the Statutes of his holy Fathers for one mans Pleasure: Charging him Moreover, not only not to yield in the cause of investing, but constantly to adhere to the foresaid Decreement of Pope Urban his Predecessor, &c. Besides this Letter to Anselm, he directed also another to the King himself: Which Letter, mine Author saith, the King suppressed and did not shew, only declaring by word of Mouth, what the Ambassadors had said unto him from the Pope. Which was, that he permitted unto him the Licence of Investing, upon condition that in other things he would execute the office of a good Prince, &c. To this also the Testimony of the two Bishops above minded did accord; which made the matter more probable. But the two Monks on the other side Replyed again, bringing forth the Letter of Anselm to the contrary, &c. To them was answered again, that more credit was to be given to the degree and Testimony of the Bishops, than to theirs. And as for Monks, they had no Suffrage nor Testimony (said they) in fecular matters, and therefore they might hold their Peace. But this is no fecular matter, said Baldwin Abbat of Ramsey. Whereunto the Nobles again of the Kings part answered, saying, that he was a good Man, and of such Demeanour as they had nothing to say against him, neither would if they might: But yet both Human and Divine reason taught them so, to yield more credit and confidence to the Testimony of three Bishops, than of two Monks. Whereby may well appear, that Anselm at that time went not with them. Then Anselm seeing the King and his Peers how they were set; and hearing also the Testimony of the three Bishops, against whom he saw he could not prevail; and also having the Popes Seal, which he saw to be so evident on the contrary side, made his answer again; that he would send to Rome for a more certainty of truth. Adding moreover, that he neither would, nor durst give over his cause, though it should cost him his life, to do or proceed against the Determination of the Church of Rome, unless he had a perfect warrant of absolution from thence, for his discharge. Then was it agreed by the King and his Nobles, that he should not send, but go himself to Rome. And much intreaty was made, that he would take that journey in hand himself, in his own person, to present himself to the Pope for the peace of the Church and of his Country. And so at length by perswasion, he was content, went to Rome and spake with the Pope. In short time after followeth also the Kings Ambassador, (William Warlwast) new Elect Bishop of Exceter, who there Pleading on the Kings side for the Ancient Customs of the Realm, and for the Kings Right of Investing, &c. First declared, how England of a long continuance had ever been a Province peculiar to the Church of Rome, and how it payed duly his yearly Tribute unto the same. Inferring moreover how the King, as he was of nature very liberal, so also of courage a Prince stout and valiant. Then what a shame would he think it should be to him (as it were indeed) if he, who in might and dignity far exceeded all his Progenitors, should not defend and maintain the Liberties and Customs by them procured? Wherefore he desired the Pope to see to the matter, so as might stand both with the Kings Honour, and also with his own profit and advantage; who otherwife no doubt should lose a great piece of Money out of the Realm, unless he did remit something of the severity of his Canons and Laws Decretal.

The Pope loth to go against his own profit.

He meaneth beside the two Bishops, Gerardus, which made them.

Anselm a devout Chaplain to the Church of Rome.

Anselms journieth again to Rome.

The effect of the Narration of William Warlwast at the Popes Court.

With these and such other like perswasions to the same Effect, the Court of Rome was well contented, agreeing that the Kings request ought with all favour to be granted. But the Pope and Anselm sat still marking their doings. The Ambassador, supposing their silence to be half a yielding unto him, added moreover and said; that the King, no not for the Crown of his Realm, would lose the authority of investing or admitting his Prelates within his Dominion. Whereunto the proud Pope answering again burst out in these Words: Nor I (said he) for the Price of this Head (as thou sayest) will lose the giving of spiritual Promotions in England, and confirming it with an Oath (Before God saith he I speak it) know it for a certain, &c. Then it followeth in the story of Malmesbury, With this Word of the Pope the minds of the rest were changed, saying, Benedicta sit cordis tui constantia, benedicta oris loquela. The Kings Attorny also was therewith dashed, who notwithstanding yet brought to pass, that certain of the Kings, Customs, used before of his Father, were released unto him. At the which time in the same Court it was decreed, that (the King only, which had Invested them, being excepted) the other, which were Invested by the King, should be Excommunicated: The absolution and satisfaction of whom was left to Anselm the Archbishop.

Ex Guil. de gestis pontif. lib. 3. Ex Matth. Paris. lib. 3. A proud answer of the Pope.

Excommunication abused.

Thus Anselm, being dismissed from Rome, took his Journey toward England. But the Ambassador, pretending to go to S. Nicholas, remained behind, to see whether he could win the Popes mind to the Kings purpose. Which when he saw it would not be, he overtaketh Anselm by the way, at Placentia, and opened to him the Kings pleasure. The King (saith he) giveth to you in charge and commandment, that if you will come to England, and there behave your self to him, as your Predecessors did to his Father, you should be received and retained in the Realm accordingly: If not, you are wife enough (saith he) ye know what I mean, and what will follow, &c. And so with these Words, parting from him, he returned again to the King. Anselm remained at Lions a year and a half, writing divers Letters to the King, after this Effect, and in Words as followeth.

Anselm refused from coming to England. Eadmerus. Lambertus.

To his Reverend Lord, HENRY, King of England, Anselm, Archbishop of Canterbury, faithful Service with Prayers. Epist. 224.

A Letter of Anselm to King Henry.

Although you understand by William Warlwast what we have done at Rome; yet I shall shortly shew you that which belongeth to me. When I came to Rome, I declared the cause wherefore I came to the Lord Pope. He answered that he would not swarve from the Statutes of his Predecessors. Furthermore, he commanded me that I should have no Fellowship with them that received Investings of Churches at your hands, after the knowledge of this Prohibition, except they will do Penance, and forsake that they had received, without hope of recovery; neither that I should communicate with the other Bishops that had consecrated such men, except they would present themselves to the Judgment of the Apostolique See. The aforesaid William can be a witness of all these things if he will. This William, when we departed asunder (reckoning up in your behalf, she love and liberality which you had always towards me) warned me as your Archbishop, that I should shew my self such an one, that if I would come into England, I might be with you as my Predecessor was with your Father, and ye might intreat me with the same Honour and Liberty that your Father intreated my Predecessor. By which Words I understand, that except I should shew my self such a one, you would not have me come into England. For your Love and Liberality I think you: But that I should be with you as my Predecessor was with your Father, I cannot do it. For I dare not do Homage to you, nor dare communicate with them that take Investings of Churches at your hands: Because of the foresaid inhibition made, I my self hearing it. Wherefore I desire you to send me your pleasure herein (if it please you) whether I may return into England (as I said) with your Peace and Power of mine Office.

The Popes Answer to the foresaid Request of Prelate in wrong cause.

In the mean while, great business there was, and much Posting went to and fro between the King, the Archbishop, and the Pope, but nothing was done: For neither would the Pope agree to the King, neither would the King condiscend to the Archbishop. At last the Archbishop,

Anselm about to excommunicate the King.

bishop, seeing by no means he could prevail against the King, thought to revenge himself by Excommunication, and so went about the same. The King, having word thereof by the Countess Adela his Sister, delireth her to come to him into Normandy, and bring Anselm with her: Whereupon (through the means of the Countess) reconcilment was made, and the Archbishop was restored to his former possessions again. Only his return into England was deferred, because he would not communicate with those whom the King had Invested. So the King took his Passage over into England, and Anselm made his abode at the Abbey of Becke.

Reconcilment made between the King and Anselm.

Ambassage to Rome.

Then were Ambassadors again directed unto Rome, William Warlwast, and Baldwin above named, Abbat of Rameseie, who at length concluded the long controversie between the King and the Pope upon this agreement, that the King should take Homage of the Bishops Elect, but should not deal with Investing them by Staffe and Ring, &c. While the Ambassadors were thus in their suite at Rome, divers complaints were daily brought from England to Anselm, against the Priests and Canons, who in his absence, contrary to the late Council holden at London, received their Wives unto their Houses again, and so were permitted by the King, paying him certain Money for the same. Anselm (the fore Enemy against lawful marriage) grieved therewith, addreseth his Letters unto the King, requiring him to refrain from any more taking of such Exactions, declaring moreover and affirming, that the offenders of all such Ecclesiastical Ministers must be Corrected by the instance of Bishops, and not of Laymen. To this the King answereth Gently again by Letters, tempering himself; how he purposed shortly to come over into Normandy, and if he had done any thing amiss, either in these or other things, he would reform it by his Obedience.

Guil. Malmesb. lib. 2. de gestis pontif. Priests received their Wives again by the silence of Anselm.

The fault of Ecclesiastical Ministers belong to Bishops to correct, quoth Anselm.

It was not long after (the Messengers being now returned from Rome) but the King, as he had promised, sped him into Normandy, where he, warring against his Brother Robert, brought both him and the Country of Normandy at the last under his Subjection. But first meeting with Anselm at the Abbey of Becke, he covenanted and agreed with him in all such points as the Archbishop required. As first, that all his Churches, which before were made tributary unto King William his Brother, now should remain free from all tribute. Item, that he should require nothing of the said Churches or Provinces, in the time of the seat being vacant. Moreover, concerning such Priests and Ministers as had given Money to the King for their company with their Wives, it was agreed that they should surcease from all Ecclesiastical Function, the space of three years, and that the King should take no more after such manner. Item, that all such goods, fruits and possessions, as had been taken away before from the Archbishoprick, should be restored at his coming again into England, &c.

The King brought to order the Archbishop.

Conditions granted by the King to Anselm.

Anselm returneth into England.

This Anselm, the stout Champion of Popery and Superstition, after this Victory gotten upon the King, for the which he so long fought, with Joy and Triumph filleth into England, having all his Popish requests obtained. Where first he flieth like a Lion upon the married Priests contrary to the Word of God, divorcing and punishing that by mans Authority, which the Eternal and Almighty God had coupled. Next, he looketh to them, which did hold any Church by Farm under the King. Against Simony likewise, and against them that married within the seventh degree, he proceedeth with his full pontifical Authority.

Priests Act-wenches from their Wives.

Anno 1106.

Shortly after, as King Henry had finished his War in Normandy, and with Victory returned again into England, about the sixth year of his Reign, Anselm Archbishop of Canterbury (by the permission of the King) assembled a great Council at Westminster in London, of the Clergy and Prelates of England.

In the which (by the Bishop of Romes Authority) he so wrought with the King, that at length (albeit, as the story saith, not without great difficulty) it was newly confirmed and enacted, that no Temporal man after that day should make Investiture with Crosse or with Ring, or with Pastoral Hook. In this Council, sundry and divers Injunctions were given forth to Priests and Deacons: As divers other Synodal Acts also by the same Anselm had been concluded in other Councils before. And because here falleth in mention of the Acts Synodal concluded in the time of this Anselm, I thought here good to Pack them all in one general Heap together, as we find them in Malmesbury, and in other sundry Authors scatteringly recited.

Ex lib. Guliel. de gestis pontif. Ex Matth. Paris. Ex Malmesb. Ex Simeone Dunelm. Ex Ailr.

The first thing, decreed by this Anselm in his Synodal Councils, was touching the fault of Simony, whereby divers, both Bishops and Abbats (as is aforesaid) were at the same time deposed. And Lay-men forbidden to confer any Ecclesiastical Promotion.

Also it was decreed, that no Bishop should bear any Office in Secular mens business or meetings. Item, that no Buying and Selling be uſed hereafter in England of men, as of other Cattel.

Sodomitry.

Item, after the reſtraint of Prieſts marriage, when filthy Sodomitry began to come in the place thereof, then were they forced alſo to make an Act for that, which was this.

A ſtep with a Foot all for Sodomitry.

With a grievous curſe we condemn both them that occupied the ungracious vice of Sodomitry, and them alſo that willingly aſſiſt them, or be wicked doers with them in the ſame; till ſuch time as they may deſerve abſolution by penance and confeſſion.

So that whatſoever he be that is noyſed or proved to be of this wickedneſs (if he be a religious perſon) he ſhall from thenceforth be promoted to no degree of honour, and that which he hath ſhall be taken from him.

If he be a Lay Perſon, he ſhall be deprived of all his Freedom within the Land, and be no better than a foreiner.

And becauſe it ſhall be known, the abſolution of ſuch as be ſecular to belong only to Biſhops: It was therefore inacted, that on every Sunday, in every Pariſh Church of England, the ſaid Excommunication ſhould be Publiſhed, &c.

Rauulph. Ceſtrenſis lib. 7. Note the Prepoſterous proceeding of Anſelm in ceaſing the vice of Sodomitry.

But mark in this great matter what followed. For, as Ranulphus Ceſtrenſis witneſſeth, this grievous general curſe was ſoon called back again by the ſute of certain, which perſwaded Anſelm, that the publication, or opening of that vice, gave kindlings to the ſame in the hearts of lewd Perſons, miniſtring occaſion of more boldneſs to them to do the like. And ſo to ſtop the occaſion of filthy Sodomitry, the publication thereof was taken away; but the forbidding and reſtrainment of Prieſts lawful marriage (which chiefly was the cauſe thereof) remained ſtill. And thus ever ſince horrible Sodomitry remained in the Clergy, both for lack of marriage more uſed, and for lack of publication leſs puniſhed.

Beſides all theſe Synodal Acts above comprehended, and given out by Anſelm in his Councils before, here alſo in this prefent Council at Weſtminſter, in the yeer of this King aforeſaid, he alſo directed other new Injunctions to the Prieſts.

Penalties and forfeits againſt Prieſts that keep their Wives.

Firſt, that they and their Wives ſhould never more meet in one houſe, neither yet have dwelling in their Territories.

Item, that the Prieſts, Deacons, and Subdeacons ſhould keep no woman in their Houſe, unleſs they were of their next kin.

Item, for ſuch as had diſſevered themſelves from the Society of their Wives, yet for ſome honeſt cauſe they had to common with them, they might, ſo it were without door, and with two or three lawful witneſſes.

In the latter days ſhall come falſe teachers, forbidding marriage and eating of meats, &c.

Item, if any of them ſhould be accuſed by two or three witneſſes, and could not purge himſelf again by ſix able men of his own order (if he be a Prieſt) or if he be a Deacon by four, or if he be a Subdeacon by two) then he ſhould be Judged a Tranſgreſſor of the Statutes, deprived of his Benefice, and be made Infamous, or be put to open reproach of all men.

Item, he that rebelled, and in contempt of this new Statute held ſtill his Wife, and preſumed to ſay Maſs, upon the eighth day after (if he made not due ſatisfaction) ſhould be ſolemnly Excommunicated.

Item, all Archdeacons and Deacons to be ſtraitly Sworn not to Wink or Diſſemble at their Meetings, nor to bear with them for Money. And if they would not be Sworn to this, then to loſe their offices without recovery.

Puniſhment of Prieſts that had been married.

Item, ſuch Prieſts, as forſaking their Wives were willing to ſerve ſtill and remain in their holy Order, firſt muſt ceaſe forty days from their miniſtration, ſetting Vicars for them in the mean time to ſerve, and taking ſuch penance upon them, as by their Biſhop ſhould be injoyned them.

Thus have ye heard the tedious Treatiſe of the life and doings of Anſelm, how Superſtitious in his Religion, how Stub born againſt his Prince he was, what occaſion of War and Diſcord he miniſtred by his complaints (if they had been taken) what zeal without right knowledge, what fervency without cauſe he pretended, what pains without profit he took. Who if he had beſtowed that time and Travel in Preaching Chriſt at Home to his flock, which he took in Gadding to Rome, to complain of his Country, in my mind he had been better occupied. Moreover, what Violent and Tyrannical Injunctions he fet forth of Inveſting and other things, ye have heard; but eſpecially againſt the lawful and godly marriage of Prieſts. Wherein, what a vehement Adverſary he was, here may appear with theſe Minutes or Pieces Extracted out of the Letters, which we have here Annexed; in Form and Effect as Followeth.

After that I returned to my Biſhoprick, in England I ſhewed the Apoſtolical Decree, which I being preſent heard in the Romiſh Council. 1. That no man ſhould receive Inveſting of Churches at the Kings hand, or any Lay perſon, or ſhould become his man for it, and that no man ſhould preſume to conſecrate him that did offend herein. When the King and his Nobles, and the Biſhops themſelves, and others of the lower degree heard theſe things, they took them ſo grievouſly, that they ſaid, they would in no caſe agree to the thing, and that they would drive me out of the Kingdom, and forſake the Romiſh *Church, rather than keep this thing. wholeſome counſel and commandment. When the Archdeacon would amend this thing, they utterly deſpiſed with wicked pride his warning and worthy commandment to be received. Then he, calling together many Religious men and obedient Prieſts, Excommunicated worthily the proud and diſobedient, that ſhaſtly deſpiſed the curſe, and were not afraid to defile the holy miniſtry, as much as lay in them, &c.

Unto theſe Letters above Prefixed, I have alſo adjoyned another of the ſaid Anſelm, touching a great caſe of conſcience, of a Monks whipping himſelf. Wherein may appear both the blind and lamentable ſuperſtition of thoſe Religious men, and the Judgment of this Anſelm in the ſame matter.

Another Letter of Anſelm.

Anſelm Archbiſhop, to Bernard Monk of the Abby of S. Warburg, Greeting and Prayer.

A Letter of Anſelm. Ex conſt. 24. Whether it more merit for a Monk to cauſe himſelf in the Chapter to be whipped or to abſtain from obediently the whipping of his Abbot.

I Heard it ſaid of your Lord Abbot, that thou judgeſt it to be of greater merit, when a Monk either beaten himſelf, or cauſeth himſelf to be beaten of another; than when he is beaten (not of his own will) in the Chapter, by the Commandment of the Prelacy. But it is not ſo as you think. For that judgment, that any man commandeth to himſelf, is kingly. But that, which he ſuffereth by obedience in the Chapter, is Monkiſh. The one is of his own will, the other is of obedience, and not of his own will. That which I call kingly, Kings and Rich proud men commending to be done to themſelves. But that which I call Monkiſh, they take not commanding, but obeying. The Kingly is ſo much eaſier, by how much it agreeth to the will of the ſufferer. But the Monkiſh is ſo much the grieveuſer, by how much is differeth from the will of the ſufferer. In the Kingly judgment, the ſufferer is judged to be his own: In Monkiſh he is proved not to be his own. For although the King or Rich man, when he is beaten, willingly ſubmitteth himſelf humbly to be a ſinner; yet he would not ſubmit himſelf to this Humbleneſs at any others Commandment, but would withſtand the Commander with all his ſtrength. But when a Monk ſubmitteth himſelf to the whip humbly in the Chapter at the will of the Prelate; the truth judgeth him to be of ſo much greater merit, by how much he humbleth himſelf more and more, and more truly than the other. For he humbleth himſelf to God only, becauſe he knoweth his ſins. But this man humbleth himſelf to man for obedience. But he is lowlier that humbleth himſelf both to God and Man for Gods cauſe, than he which humbleth himſelf to God only, and not to Gods Commandment. Therefore if he that humbleth himſelf ſhall be exalted; Ergo he that more humbleth himſelf, ſhall be more exalted. And where I ſaid, that when a Monk is whipped, it differeth from his will; you muſt not ſo underſtand it, as though he would not patiently bear it with an obedient will, but becauſe by a natural appetite he would not ſuffer the ſorrow. But if ye ſay, I do not ſo much flie the open beating for the pains (which I feel alſo ſecretly) as for the ſhame: Know then that he is ſtronger that rejoyceth to bear this for obedience ſake. Therefore be thou ſure, that one whipping of a Monk by obedience is of more merit than innumerable whippings taken by his own mind. But whereas he is ſuch, that always he ought to have his Heart ready without murmuring obediently to be whipped, we ought to judge him then to be of a great merit, whether he be whipped privily or openly, &c.

The Judgment or concluſion of Anſelm upon the caſe.

{ Anno } 1105.

And thus much concerning Anſelm Archbiſhop of Canterbury; whoſe ſtout example gave no little courage to Thurſtinus and Becket his ſucceſſors, and others that followed after, to do the like againſt their Kings and Principes, as in proceſs hereafter by the grace of Chriſt ſhall appear.

About this time, 1105. two famous Archbiſhops of Mentz, being right vertuous and well diſpoſed Prelates, were cruelly and tyrannouſly dealt withall, and intreated by the Biſhop of Rome: Their names were Henry and Chriſtian. This Henry, having intelligence that he was complained of to the Pope, ſent a learned man (as ſpecial friend of his) to excuſe him, named Arnold, one for whom he had done much, and promoted to great livings and promotions. But this honeſt man Arnold, inſtead of an excuſer, became an accuſer, bribing the two chiefeſt Cardinals with good Gold; by which means he obtained of the Pope, thoſe two Cardinals, to be ſent as Inquiſitors, and only doers in that preſent caſe. The which (coming to Germany) ſummoned the ſaid Henry, and depoſed him of his Archbiſhoprick (for all he could do either by Law or juſtice) ſubſtituting in his place the foreſaid Arnold, upon hope (truly) of the Eccleſiaſtical Gold. Whereupon that vertuous and honorable Henry (as the ſtory telleth) ſpake unto thoſe his Perverſe Judges on this wiſe: If I ſhould appeal unto the Apoſtolick See for this your unjuſt Proceſs had againſt me, perhaps the Pope would attempt nothing more therein than ye have, neither ſhould I wirt any thing by it, but only toil of body, loſs of goods, affliction of mind, care of heart, and miſſing of his favour.

Judges Corrupted.

A terrible example for corrupt Judges to beware.

Wherefore I do appeal unto the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as to the moſt high and juſt Judge, and cite you before his Judgment, there to anſwer me before the high Judge. For neither juſtly nor godly (but by corruption as it pleaſeth you) you have judged. Whereunto they ſcoffingly anſwering: Go you firſt, and we will follow. Not long after (as the ſtory is) the ſaid Henry died. Whereof the ſaid two Cardinals having intelligence, faid one to the other jeſtingly; Behold, he is gone before, and we muſt follow according to our promiſe. And verily they ſaid truer than they aware of: For within a while they died in one day. For the one, ſitting upon a Jakes to eaſe himſelf, voyded out all his intrails into the draught, and miſerably ended ended his life. The other, gnawing off his fingers of his hands, and ſpitting them out of his mouth (all deformed in devouring himſelf) died. And in like wiſe, not long after the end of theſe men, the foreſaid Arnold (moſt horrible) in a fedition was ſlain; and certain days (lying ſtinking above the ground unburied) lay open to the ſpoil of every Raſcal and Harlot. The Hiſtoriographer in declaring hereof crieth upon the Cardinals in this manner: O ye Cardinals, ye are the beginning and Authors hereof: Come ye hither, and heap end carry unto your Countries the Divel, and offer your ſelves to him with that Money, whereof ye have been moſt glutonous and inſatiable.

About the ſame time and year when King Henry began his Reign, Pope Paſchalis entred his Papacy, ſucceeding after Urbanus, about the year of our Lord 1100. nothing ſwarving from the ſteps of Hildebrand his Superior. This Paſchalis being Elected by the Cardinals, after that the people had cryed thrice, S. Peter hath choſen good Rainerus; he then putting on a purple Veſture, and a Tire upon his head, was brought upon a white Palfray into Lateran, where a Scepter was given him, and a Girdle put about him, having ſeven Keies, with ſeven Seals hanging thereupon for a recognizance or token of his ſeven-fold power, according to the ſeven-fold Grace of the holy Ghoſt, of binding, looſing, ſhutting, opening, ſealing, reſigning, and judging, &c. After this Paſchalis was Elected Pope, Henry the forth, the foreſaid Emperor (of courage moſt valiant, if the time had ſerved thereto) thought to come up to Italy to Salute the new Pope. But, underſtanding the Popes mind bent againſt him, he changed his purpoſe. In the mean time, Paſchalis, to ſhew himſelf inferior to Hildebrand in no point, began firſt to depoſe all ſuch Abbats and Biſhops whom the Emperor had ſet up. Alſo he baniſhed Albertus, Theodoricus, and Maginulphus, ſtriving at the ſame time for the Papacy. I ſpake before of Guibert, whom Henry the Emperor had made Pope againſt Hildebrand. Againſt this Paſchalis made out an Army; who, being put to flight, not long after departed.

About the ſame time, Anno 1101. the Biſhop of Florence began to Teach and to Preach of Antichriſt then to be born and to be manifeſt, as Sabellicus teſtifieth: Whereupon Paſchalis, aſſembling a Council, put to ſilence the ſaid Biſhop, and condemned his Books. In this Council at Trecas, Prieſts that were married were condemned for Nicolaitans. Item, according to the Decree of Hildebrand, all ſuch of what degree or eſtate ſoever they were (being Laymen) that gave any Eccleſiaſtical Diſquities, were condemned of Simony. away thereof as a sin against the holy Ghost. Concerning the Excommunication and other troubles, that Hildebrand wrought against Henricus the forth Emperor, it is declared sufficiently before. This Excommunication Paschalis the Pope renewed afreth against the said Henry. And not only that, but also, conventing the Princes of Germany unto a general assembly, set up his own Son against him, causing the Bishop of Mentz, of Cullen, and of Worms to deprive him of his Imperial Crown, and to place his Son Henricus the fifth in his Fathers Kingdom, and so they did. Coming to the place at Hilgesthem, first they required his diadem, his purple, his ring, and other ornaments pertaining to the Crown, from him. The Emperor demanded the cause, being then Excommunicate and void of friends. They pretending again (I cannot tell what) for selling of Bishopricks, Abbacies, and other Ecclesiastical Dignities for money: Also alledging the Popes pleasure and of other Princes. Then required he first of the Bishop of Mentz (and likewise of the other two, whom he had preferred to their Bishopricks before) asking them in order, if he had received of them any penny for his promoting them to their dignities. This when they could not deny to be so; Well (saith he) and do you require me again with this? With divers other words of exhortation, admonishing them to remember their Oath and Allegiance to their Prince. But the perjured Prelates, neither reverencing his Majesty, nor moved with his benefits, nor regarding their fidelity, ceased not for all this, but first plucked from him (sitting in his Throne) his Crown Imperial, then disvestured him, taking from him his Purple and his Sceptre. The good Emperor, being left desolate and in contution, saith to them: Videat Deus & judicet: That is, Let God see and judge. Thus leaving him, they went to his Son to confirm him in his Kingdom, and caused him to drive his Father out. Who then being chased of his Son (having but nine persons about him) did flie by the Dukedom of Limbrugh, where the Duke being then in hunting, perceiving and hearing of him, made after to follow him. The Emperor fearing no other but present death (for he had displaced the same Duke before out of his Dukedom) submitted himself, craving of him pardon, and not revengement. The Duke full of compassion, and pitying his estate, not only remitted all his displeasure, but also received him to his Castle. Moreover, collecting his soudiers and men of War, he brought him to Cullen, and there he was well received. His Son hearing this besieged the City of Cullen. But the Father, by night escaping, came to Leodium, where reforted to him all such as were men of compassion and constant heart. In so much that his power, being strong enough, he was now able to pitch a field against his Enemies, and so did: desiring his friends, that if he had the victory, they would spare his Son. In fine (the battel joyned) the Father had the victory, the Son was put to flight: many being slain on both sides. But shortly after, the battel renewed again, the Son prevailed, the Father was overcome and taken. Who then, being utterly dispossessed of his Kingdom, was brought to that extremity, that coming to Spire, he was fain to crave of the Bishop there (whom he had done much for before) to have a prebend in the Church: and for that he had some skill of his Book, he defired to serve in our Ladies quire, Yet could he not obtain so much at his hand, who swore by our Lady, he should have none there. Thus the woeful Emperor (most unkindly handled, and repulsed on every side) came to Leodium, and there for sorrow died, after he had Reigned fifty years; whole body Paschalis, after his Funeral, caused to be taken up again, and to be brought to Shires, where it remained five years unburied. Hæc ex Helmoldo.

{Anno 1105.} The Emperor five years without burial.

After the decease of this Emperor Henry the fourth, his Son Henricus the fifth Reigned the space of twenty years. Who, coming to Rome to the Crown of the Pope, could not obtain it, before he would fully assent to have this ratified, that no Emperor should have any thing to do with the Election of the Roman Bishop, or with other Bishopricks. Besides that (about the same time) such a stir was made in Rome by the said Bishop, that if the Emperor had not defended himself with his own hands, he had been slain. But as it happened, the Emperor having victory, amongst many other Romans (which were partly slain, partly taken in the same skirmish) he taketh also the Pope and leadeth him out of the City: where he indenteth with him upon divers conditions, both of his coronation, and of recovering again his right and title in the Election of the Pope, and of other Bishops: whereunto the Pope assenting, agreed to all. So the Emperor (being Crowned of Paschalis) returned again with the Pope of Rome.

The Pope taken prisoner.

All the conditions between the Emperor and the Pope (so long as the Emperor remained at Rome) stood firm and ratified. But as soon as the Emperor was returned again to Germany, forthwith the Pope, calling a Synod, not only revoked all that he had agreed to before, but also Excommunicated Henricus the Emperor, as he had done his Father before, reproved the former Privilegium for pravilegium. The Emperor, returning from Rome to France, there married Mathild daughter to King Henry. Who then hearing what the Pope had done (grieved not a little) with all expedition marched to Rome, and putteth the Pope to flight, and finally placeth another in his stead. In the mean time the Bishops of Germany (the Popes good friends) flept not their business, incensing the Saxons all that they might against their Cesar: Insomuch that a great commotion was stirred up, and it grew at length to a pitche field: which was fought in the month of February, by the wood called Sylva Catularia, in the year of our Lord one thousand one hundred and fifteen.

War raised by the Pope and his Faction.

The Emperor seeing no end of these conflicts (unless he would yield to the Pope) was fain to give over, and forgo his privilege, falling to a compotition, not to meddle with matters pertaining to the Popes Election, nor with Investing, nor such other things belonging to the Church and Churchmen. And thus was the peace between them concluded, and proclaimed to no small rejoycing of both the Armies, then lying by Worms, near the River of Rhene.

Peace concluded between the Emperor and the Pope.

In the time of this Paschalis lived Bernardus, called Abbas Claravallensis, in the year 1108. of whom sprang the Bernardine Monks.

The City of Worcester almost all consumed with fire.

All this while Henricus the Emperor had no Issue (having to Wife Mathildis, the daughter of Henry the first, King of England) and that by the just judgment of God, as it may appear. For as he, having a Father, persecuted him by the Popes setting on, contrary to the part of a natural Son: so Gods providence did not suffer him to be the Father of any child, naturally to love him, or to succeed him.

After the death of Paschalis, Anno 1118. succeeded Pope Gelasius, chosen by the Cardinals, but without the consent of the Emperor, whereupon rose no little variance in Rome. And at length another Pope was set up by the Emperor called Gregorius the eighth, and Gelasius driven away into France, and there died. After whom came Calixtus the second (chosen likewise by a few Cardinals, without the voice of the Emperor) who, coming up to Rome to injoy his seat, first sent his Legat into Germany to Excommunicate the Emperor Henricus, who then having divers conflicts with his fellow Pope Gregorius, at length drave him out of Rome. At this time by this occation great disputation and controversie was between the Emperor and the Popes Court, whether of them in dignity should excel the other: whereof reasons and arguments on both sides were alledged, which in the verses here following are comprehended.

In conclusion, the Emperor being overcome so much with the vain reasons of the Popes side, and fearing the dangerous Thunderbolt of his curse (talking with Princes, and perswaded by his friends) was fain to condescend to the unreasonable conditions of the Pope. First, to ratifie his Election, notwithstanding the other Pope (whom the said Emperor had set up) yet was alive. Secondly, that he should resign up his right and title in matters partaining to the Election of the Pope, and Investiture of Bishops.

This being done and granted, and the writings thereof set up in the Church of Lateran, for a triumph of the Emperor thus subdued, the Pope maketh out after Gregorius his fellow Pope, being then in a Town called Sutrium; which being besieged and taken, Gregorius also was taken. Whom Calixtus the Pope setting upon a Camel (his face to the Camels tail) brought him so through the streets of Rome, holding the tail in his hand in stead of a Bridle; and afterward being thrust into a Monastery.

Amongst many other Acts done by this glorious Pope, first he eftablished the decree of the Papal See against this Emperor. He brought in the four quarter Fasts, called Ember days. Dist. 70. cap. Jejunium.

By the same Calixtus the order of Monks, called Præmonstratenses, were brought in.

Further, by him it was decreed to be judged for Adultery, if any person (by his life time) had put from him either Bishoprick or Benefice, grounding upon this Scripture of S. Paul to the Romans, Alligata est uxor legi viri quamdiu vir ejus vivit: eo defuncto, soluta est a lege viri, &c. That is, The Wife is bound to the Law of her Husband, so long as the Husband liveth: after he is dead, she is loose from the Law of her Husband, &c.

Item, the same Calixtus, holding a general Council at Rhemis, decreed that Priests, Deacons, and Subdeacons should put away their Concubines and Wives: and whosoever was found to keep his Wife, should be deprived of Benefice, and all other Ecclesiastical livings: whereupon a certain English Writer made these verses following;

O bone Calixte, nunc omnis clerus odit te:
Quondam presbyteri poterant uxoribus uti,
Hoc destruxisti, postquam tu papa fuisti, &c.

{Anno 1109.} And thus much of the Roman matters. Now to our Country story again. After the death of Anselm before mentioned (who deceased the year of Christ 1109. after he had been in the See fixteen years) the Church of Canterbury stood voyd five years: and the goods of the Church were spent to the Kings use. And when he was prayed to help the Church that was so long without a Pastor, his answer was: pretending that as his Father and Brother had accuftomed thereto to set the best tried and approved men that might be found, so to the intent that he might do the same (in choosing such, which either should equal the former examples of them before, or at least follow their foosteps as near as they could) he took therein the more time and leasure. And so with shift of answer he delayed out the time, while he had filled his coffers with the commodities of that benefice. The same year (after the death of Anselm) the King converted the Abbey of Ely to a Bishoprick, which before was under the Bishoprick of Lincoln, placing there Henry Bishop of Bangor, the Bishop of that See. And as, of late years before this, divers wonders were seen, as Stars falling from Heaven so thick that they could not be numbred, at the setting forth of the Christians to the holy Land; Fornalens. A blazing Star over Constantinople; A spring boyling out blood (seen at Finchamsted in Barkshire) three weeks together; Anno 1090. Gisburnensis. Then Thurstin(by the Instigation of certain of his Clerks at York) took his Journey to Rome; who, there making his complaint to Pope Paschalis, brought with him a Letter from the Pope to the King, where among other Words was contained as followeth, Audivimus electum Eboracensis Ecclesiæ, virum sapientem & strenuum, sine judicio ab Eboracensi sequestratum Ecclesia: quod nimirum divinæ justitiæ & Sanctorum institutionibus adversatur. Nos quidem neque Cant. Ecclesiam nimis, neque Eboracensem volumus præjudicium pati, sed eam constitutionem quæ a B. Gregorio Anglicæ gentis Apostolo, inter eadem Ecclesias, constituta est, firman censemus illibatamque servari. Idem ergo electus, ut justitia exigit, ad suam Ecclesiam omnibus modis revocetur. Si quid autem quæstionis inter eas dem Ecclesias nascitur, præsentibus utrique patribus in vestra præsentia pertractetur, &c.

The Letter of Paschalis to King Henry.

In English thus,

We hear and understand, that the Archbishop Elect of the Church of York (a discreet and industrious man) is sequestred from the Church of York; which standeth against both divine Justice, and the Institution of holy Fathers. Our purpose is, that neither the Church of Canterbury should be impaired, nor again that the Church of York should suffer any prejudice, but that the same constitution, which was by blessed Gregory (the Apostle of the English Nation) set and decreed between those two Churches, should remain still in force and effect unviolate. Wherefore, as touching the forefaid Elect, let him be received again by any means, as right and meet it is, unto his Church. And if there be any question between the forefaid Churches, let it be handled and decided in your presence, both the two parties being there present.

to give imposition of hands unto him, unless he would make his profession of obedience. Thurstin again said, he would willingly receive and imbrace his Benediction: but as touching the profession of his subjection, that he would not agree unto.

Thurstin prohibiteth to renounce his Archbishoprick.

Then the King, declaring his mind therein, signified unto Thurstin, that, without his subjection and obedience professed to the Archbishop of Canterbury, he should not enjoy his confecration to be Archbishop of York. Whereunto Thurstin, nothing replying again, renounced his Archbishoprick, promising moreover to make no more claim unto it, nor to molest them that should enjoy it.

{ Anno 1118.

Shortly after this, it happened that Pope Paschalis died: After whom, as is above rehearsed, succeeded Pope Gelasius, who lived not past a year, and died in France. Whereupon the Cardinals (which then followed the faid Pope Gelasius unto Cluniack) created another Pope of their choising, whom they called Calixtus the second. The other Cardinals which were at Rome did chuse another Pope called Gregory, as mention before is made: about which two Popes much stir there was in Christian Realms. As this Calixtus was remaining in France, and there calling a general Council at Rhemis, as ye heard before; Thurstinus the Archbishop of York desired Licence of the King to go to the Council, purpoting there to open the cause of his Church, which ettsoons he obtained: First promising to the King that he should there attempt nothing that should be prejudicial to the Church of Canterbury. In the mean time, the King had sent secret word unto the Pope, by Rodulph and other Procurators, that in no case he would confecrate Thurstinus. Yet, notwithstanding the faithful promise of the Pope made to the King, so it fell out, that the said Pope through the sute of his Cardinals, whom Thurstinus had won to him, was inclined to confecrate him, and gave him the Pall. For this deed the King was sore discontented with Thurstin, and warned him the entry of this Land.

Pope Calixtus breaketh promise with the King. Thurstin confecrated Archbishop of York by the Pope against the Kings mind.

Concilium Rhemense.

In this Council at Rhemis (above mentioned) where were gathered 434. Prelates, these five principal Acts were concluded.

Acts of the Council of Rhemis.

1. That no man should either buy or sell any Bishoprick, Abbatship, Deanry, Archdeaconship, Priesthood, Prebendship, Altar, or any Ecclesiastical promotion, or Benefice, Orders, Confecration, Church hallowing, fear or stall within the Quire, or any Office Ecclesiastical, under danger of Excommunication, if he did persist.

2. That no Lay person should give Investiture or any Ecclesiastical possession; and that no spiritual man should receive any such at any Lay mans hand, under pain of deprivation.

3. That no man should invade, take away, or detain the goods or possessions of the Church; but that they should remain firm and perpetual, under pain of perpetual curse.

4. That no Bishop or Priest should leave any Ecclesiastical Dignity or Benefice to any, by way of inheritance. Adding moreover, that for Baptism, Chrisim, Annoiling, or Burial, no Money should be exacted.

The Acts sent to the Emperor.

5. Item, that all Priests, Deacons, and Subdeacons, should be utterly debarred and sequestred from company of their Wives and Concubines, under pain of excluding from all Christian Communion.

The Acts thus determined were sent ettsoons to Henricus the Emperor, to see and try, before the breaking up of the Council, whether he would agree to the Canonical Elections, free confecration, and investing of spiritual Persons, and to other Acts of the said Council. The Emperor maketh answer again, that he would lose nothing of that ancient Custom which his Progenitors had given him. Notwithstanding, because of the Authority of the general Council, he was content to consent to the reliduc, save only the investing of Ecclesiastical Function to be taken from him, to that he should never agree. Upon this, at the next return of the Pope to the Council, the Emperor was appointed to be Excommunicated. Which thing, when divers of the Council did not well like, and therefore did separate themselves from the rest; the Pope applying against them the multitude of the seventy Disciples which were offended at the Lord, when he taught them of eating of his flesh and blood, and therefore divided themselves from him, declaring moreover to them, how they which gathered not with him, scattered, and they that were not with him, were against him: By these and such like perswations reduced them again to his side; and so by that Council Henricus the Emperor was Excommunicated.

The Emperor Excommunicated.

The Emperor agreeth not to the Popes Investing.

The Council divided. Ex Rog. Hoved.

It was not long after but the Pope came to Gisortium, where Henry King of England resorted to him, desiring and also obtaining of him, that he would send henceforth no Legate, nor permit any to be sent from Rome to England: unless the King himself should so require, by reason of some occasion of strife, which else could not be otherwise decided by his own Bishops at home. The cause why the King required this of the Pope was, for that certain Roman Legates had been in England a little before (to wit) one Guido, and another Roman named Anselmus, and another also called Petrus, who had spoyled the Realm of great Treasure, as the accustomed manner of the proud Popes Legates is wont to be, Guli. de pont. lib. 1. Also he required of the Pope, that he might use and retain all the customs used before of his forefathers in England and in Normandy.

Agreed that England should have no other Legate from Rome, but only the Archbishop of Canterbury.

To these petitions the Pope did easily consent, requiring again of the King, that he would Licence Thurstinus, the Archbishop above minded, to return with favour into his Realm. But that the King utterly denied, unless he would profess subjection to the Church of Canterbury, as his Predecessors had done before; and confessed himself by his Oath which he before had made. To this the Pope answered again, that he, by his authority Apostolical, both might, and would also easily dispence with him for his promise or oath. Then the King said, that he would talk with his Council thereof, and so send him an answer of his mind; which answer was this, That, for the love and requeit of the Pope, he was content that Thurstinus should re-enter his Realm, and quietly enjoy his Prelateship, upon this condition that he would (as his Predecessors did) profess his subjection to the Church of Canterbury. Otherwise (said he) so long as he was King, he should never sit Archbishop of the Church of York. And thus ended that meeting between the King of England and the Pope for that time.

All the customs of the Realm granted of the Pope.

The year following after that, which was, Anno 1120. the forefaid Pope Calixtus directeth his Letters for Thurstinus to the King, and to Rodulph Archbishop of Canterbury. In which Epistle, by his full power Apostolical, he doth interdict both the Church of Canterbury, and the Church of York, with all the Parish Churches within the same Cities, from all Divine service, from the burial also of the dead, except only Baptising of Children, and absolution of them that lie on dying; unless, within a month after the receit of the same, Thurstinus (without any exception of subjection made) were received and admitted to the See of York, and that the King likewise should doubtless be Excommunicated, except he would consent unto the same. Whereupon Thurstinus, for fear of the Popes curse, was immediatly sent for and reconciled to the King, and was placed quietly in his Archiepiscopal See of York.

It followed not long after (within two years) Rodulph Archbishop of Canterbury departed, in whose See succeeded after him Guliemus de Turbine. About which time (in the seven and twentieth year of the Kings Reign) the Gray-Friers, by procuring of the King, came first into England, and had their House first at Canterbury. About the same season or a little before, the King called a Council at London, where the spirituality of England) not knowing to what purpose it was required) condescended to the King to have the punishment of married Priests: By reason of which grant (whereof the spirituality afterwards much repented) the Priests, paying a certain to the King, were suffered to retain their Wives still, whereby the King gathered no small sum of Money, *Rog. It was above touched, how Matild or Maud, Daughter to King Henry, was married to Henry the fifth Emperor; who, after the decease of the said Emperor her Husband, returned about this present time with the Imperial Crown to her Father in Normandy, bringing with her a great part of the hand of Saint James. For the joy whereof the King builded builded the Abbey of Reading, where the said Hand was reposed. This Matild was received by the said Council to be next Heir to the King, her Father in possession of the English Crown, for lack of Issue Male. And soon after upon the same, she was sent over to Normandy, to marry with Geffrey Plantaginet Earl of Anjou, of whom came Henry the Second, who (after Stephan) was King of England. And about this time also was founded the the Priory of Norton in the Province of Chester, by one William the Son of Nichelle. In the story of Polychronicon, Fornel. and Polydorus is declared, how the King was troubled greatly with three sundry visions appearing unto him by night. The first was of a great multitude of Husbandmen of the Countrey, which appeared to fly upon him with their Mattocks and Instruments, requiring of him his debt which he did owe unto them. In the second, he saw a great number of Souldiers and harnessed men to come hercely upon him. In the third, he saw a company of Prelates and Church-men, threatning him with their Bishops Staves, and hercely aproaching upon him. Whereupon (being dismaied) in all haste he ran and took his Sword to defend himself, finding there none to strike: Who afterward, asking Counsel concerning these Visions, was monished by one of his Phylitians (named Grimbald) by Prepentance, Almes, and amendment of life to make some amends to God, and to his Country whom he offended.

Secondly, he went to S. Edmundsbury, where he shewed great benefits to the Church-men. Thirdly, he procused Justice to be Administred more rightly throughout his Realm, &c. Also he Ordained and Erected a new Bishoprick at Carlile.

Hoveden the second.

After Calixtus (whose story and time is before discoursed) succeded Pope Honorius the Second; notwithstanding that the Cardinals had Elected another, yet he by the means of certain Citizens obtained the Papacy, Anno 1125. About the Second year of his Induction (as is to be read in Mat. Paris) there was a certain Legat of his, called Johannes Cremensis, sent down to England from the Pope for the redreis I cannot well tell whereof. But indeed the chiefest purpose of his coming, as of all others after him in those days, was to fill their Pouches with English Money, as may further appear by their proceedings. This Legat coming then with the Popes Letters directed both unto England and into Scotland, after he had well refreshed himself in Bishops houses, and amongst the Abbats, at length resorted to London, where he assembled the whole Clergy together, inquired of Priests Concubines, otherwise called their Wives, and made thereupon a Statute in the said Synod of London, after this Tenor, Presbyteris, diaconibus, subdiaconibus, & canonicis, uxorum, concubinarum, & omnium omnino feminarum cantubernia, authoritate apostolica inhibemus, præter matrem aut sororem, vel amitam, aut ejusmodi quæ omnino careant suspicione. Et qui decreti hujus violator extiterit (confessim vel convictus) vinum ordinis patiatur. Inter consanguineos fas affinitate propinquos, ad quead septimam generationem, matrimonia contracta prohibemus. That is, To Priests, Deacons, Subdeacons, and Canons, we do utterly Inhibit by Authority Apostolical, all manner society and conversation with all kind of women, except only their Mother, Sister, or Aunt, or such whereof can rise no suspition. And whosoever shall be found to violate this Decree, being convict thereof, shall sustain thereby the loss of all that he hath by his Order. Moreover, amongst kindred or such as be joyned in affinity, we forbid Matrimony unto the seventh Generation, &c. But see how God worketh against such ungodly Proceedings. The next night after it happened the same Cardinal (trifling and revelling with his Concubines) to be apprehended in the same vice, wherof he had so strictly given out precepts the next day before, to the no little slander and shame, as Mat. Paris doth write, of the whole Clergy.

Certain Histories make mention of one Arnulphus, in the time of this Pope Honorius the Second. Some say he was Archbishop of Lugdune, as Hugo, Platina, Sabellicus. Tritemius saith he was a Priest, whole History, as it is set forth in Tritemius, I will briefly in English expres. About this time, saith he, in the days of Honorius the Second, one Arnulphus Priest, a man Zealous and of great Devotion, and a worthy Preacher, came to Rome, which Arnulphus in his Preaching rebuked the dissolute and lascivious loosenesis, incontinency, avarice, and immoderate Pride of the Clergy, provoking all to follow Christ and his Apostles in their poverty rather, and in parsimonis of life. By reason whereof, this man was well accepted, and highly liked of the Nobility of Rome for a true Disciple of Christ; but of the Cardinals and the Clergy he had no lesis hated than favoured of the other. In so much that privily in the night season they took him and destroyed him. This his Martyrdom, saith he, was revealed to him before from God by an Angel, he being in the desert, when he was sent forth to Preach; whereupon he said unto them publickly with these Words, I know (saith he) ye seek my life, and know you will make me away privily: But why? Because I Preach to you in the Truth, and blame your pride, sleshlyness, avarice, incontinency, with your unmeasurable greedines in getting and heaping up of riches, therefore you be displeased with me. I take here Heaven and Earth to witness, that I have Preached unto you that which I was commanded of the Lord. But you contemn me and your Creator, who by his only Son hath redeemed you. And no marvel if you seek my death, being a sinful person, preaching unto you the truth, when as S. Peter were here this day and rebuked your Vices, which do so multiply above all measure, you would not spare him neither. And as he was expreiling this, with a loud voice he said moreover: For my part I am not afraid to suffer death for the truth sake; but this I say unto you, that God will look upon your iniquities, and will be revenged. Yea, being full of all impurity, slay the blind guides to the people committed unto you, leading them the way to Hell; a God he is of vengeance. Thus the hatred of the Clergy being incensed against him for Preaching truth, they conspired against him, and so, laying privy wait for him, took him and drowned him. Sabellicus and Platina say they hanged him.

Arnulphus Martyred.

The Martyrdom of Arnulphus.

In the second Tome of the General Councils imprinted at Cullen, is mentioned a certain Book called Opus tripartitum, written, as the Author supposeth, above four hundred years ago, either of this Arnulphus, or just about the same time. In this Book, the Writer complaineth of many Enormities and abuses in the Church. First, of the number of Holy-days, declaring what occasions of vice grew thereby, according unto the common saying of Whores and naughty women, which, say they, Vantage more in one Holy-day, than in fifty other days besides.

Tritemius. A book called Opus tripartitum, written 400. years ago.

Number of Holy-days.

Item, he complaineth of the curious singing in Cathedral Churches, whereby many be occasioned to bestow much good time, yea, many years about the same which otherwise they might give to the learning of better Sciences.

Curious singing in Cathedral Churches.

Likewise he complaineth of the rabble and the multitude of begging Friers, and religious men and professed women, shewing what great occasion of idle and uncomly life cometh thereof.

The world overcharged with begging religious.

Also of the inconsiderate promotion of evil Prelates, and of their great negligence in correcting and reforming the evil demeanor of the same.

Promotion of evil Prelates.

Item, of the great wantonnels and lasciviousnes in their servants and families, concerning their excessive wearing of Apparel.

Superfluity of apparel in Bishops families.

Item, he complaineth also of the outragious and excessive gains that Prelates and other under them take for their seal, especially of Officials, Scribes, and such like; which give out the seal they care not how, nor wherefore, so they may gain Money.

Bishop Seals abused to get Money.

He complaineth in like manner, that Prelats be so slack and negligent in looking to the residents in their benefices.

Non residents in Benefices.

Further,

Rash bestowing of Benefices.

Further, he lamenteth the rash giving of Benefices to Parsons, Vicars and Curats, not for any godliness or learning in them, but for favour or friendship, or intercession, or else for hope of some gain, whereof springeth this great ignorance in the Church.

Wasteful spending of the Church goods.

After this, he noteth in Prelats, how they waste and expend the goods of the Church in superfluities; or upon their kinsfolks, or other worse ways, which should rather be spent on the poor.

Old Books of councils lost by the negligence of the Clerks.

Nextly, in the tenth Chapter he complaineth, for that through the negligence of men of the Church (especially of the Church of Rome) the Books and Monuments of the old Councils, and also of the new, are not to be found: Which should be referred and kept in all Cathedral Churches.

The unchaste life of Priests condemned by the nature of the Storks.

Item, that many Prelates be so cold in doing their duties. Also he reproacheth, the unchaste and voluptuous demeanour of Ecclesiastical Persons, by the examples of Storks, whose nature is (saith he) that if any of their company, leaving his own mate, joyneth with any other, all the rest flieth upon him, whether it be he or the, beateth him, and plucketh his Fathers off: What then, saith he, ought good Prelates to do to such a Person of their company, whose filthiness and corrupt life both deserveth so many, and stinketh in the whole Church?

Amendment of life ought first to begin with the Priests.

Again, for so much as we read in the Book of Esdras, lib. 2. cap. 9. that he, purging Israel of strange Women, began first with the Priests; so now likewise in the purging and correcting of all forts of men, first the Purgation ought to begin with these, according as it is written by the Prophet Ezechiel; begin first with the Sanctuary, &c.

The Realm of France interdicted.

Moreover, how that in the time of Philip King of France, the whole Realm was interdicted, for that the King had but one Woman instead of his Wife, which was not his Wife by Law. And again, seeing in these our days the King of Portugal hath been sequestred from his Dominion, by the Authority of the Church, being thought not sufficient to Govern: What then ought he said to that Prelate who abuseth other mens Wives, Virgins, and Nuns, which also is found unable and insufficient to take upon him the charge of Souls?

King of Ferrara deposed.

The Knights of the Rhodes and Templars.

About the year of our Lord, 1128. the Orders of the Knights of the Rhodes, called Johannits, also the Order of Templars rose up, Pope Innocentius the second.

After Honorius, next in the same usurpation succeeded Pope Innocentius the second, Anno. 1130. But as it was with his Predecessors before him, that at every mutation of new Popes, came new perturbations, and commonly never a Pope was Elected, but some other was set up against him (sometimes two, sometimes three Popes together) so likewise it happed with this Innocentius: for after he was chosen, the Romans Elected another Pope, named Anacletus. Betwixt these two Popes, there was much ado, and great conflicts through the partaking of Rogerius, Duke of Sicile, taking Anacletus part against Innocentius, until Lotharius the Emperor came; who refusing Innocentius, drove Rogerius out of Italy. Our stories record, that King Henry was one of the great helps in setting up and maintaining this Pope Innocentius against Anacletus: Cisbumensis.

Horribly between Popes.

The Popes curse proclaimed against such as strike any Priest.

Amongst many other things, this Pope decreed that whosoever did strike a Priest or Clerk, being shaven, he should be Excommunicated, and not be absolved, but only of the Pope himself.

The death of King Henry. ¶ Anno 1135.

About the time of doing these things, being the year of our Lord, 1135. King Henry being in Normandy, as some say, by taking there a fall from his Horse, as others say, by taking a surfet in eating Lampries, fell sick and died, after he had Reigned over the Realm of England five and thirty years and odd months; leaving for his heirs Matilda the Empress his Daughter, with her young Son Henry to succeed after him; to whom all the Prelats and Nobility of the Realm were Sworn. But, contrary to their Oath made to Maud in the presence of her Father before, William the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Nobles of the Realm, Crowned Stephen Earl of Bologne, and Sisters Son to King Henry, upon Saint Stephens day in Christmas week; which Archbishop the next year after dyed, being, as it was thought, justly punished for his Perjury. And many other Lords, which did accordingly, went not quit without punishment. In the like justice of punishment is numbred also Roger, Bishop of Salisbury; who contrary unto his Oath, being a great doer in the Coronation of Stephen, was apprehended of the same King, and miserably, but justly, extermined.

Perjury justly punished.

A certain Written English story I have, which addeth more, and saith, that King Stephen, having many foes in divers quarters keeping their holds and castles against him, went then to Oxford, and took the Bishop of Salisbury, and put a Rope about his neck, and so led him taken to the Castle of Vies, that was his, and commanded them to render up the Castle, or he would slay and hang their Bishop. Which Castle being given up, the King took the spoyl thereof. The like also he did unto the Bishop of Lincoln, named Alexander; whom in like manner he led in a Rope to a Castle of the Bishops, that was upon Trent, and had them deliver up the Castle, or else he would hang their Lord before the gate. Long it was before the Castle was given up; yet at length the King obtaining it, there entred and took all the Treasure of the Bishop, &c. Roger Hoveden and Fabian alledging a certain old Author, whom I cannot find, referreth a great cause of this perjury unto one Hugh Bigot, Steward sometime with King Henry. Who, immediately after the death of the said Henry, came into England, and before the said Archbishop, and other Lords of the land, took wilfully an Oath, and Swore, that he was present a little before the Kings death, when King Henry admitted for his heir (to be King after him) Stephen his Nephew, for so much as Maud his daughter had discontented him. Whereunto the Archbishop with the other Lords, gave too hatty credence. But this Hugh, saith he, scaped not unpunished, for he died miserably in a short time after. Ex Fabian. Albeit all this may be supposed rather to be wrought not without the practice of Henry, Bishop of Winchester, and other Prelates by his setting on, which Henry was brother unto King Stephen, &c.

King Stephen.

¶ Anno 1136.

THus, when King Stephen, contrary unto his Oath made before to Maud the Empress, had taken upon him the Crown (as is above said) he Swore before the Lords at Oxford, that he would not hold the Benefices that were voided, and that he would remit the Danegilt, with many other things, which after he little performed. Moreover, because he dreaded the coming of the Empress, he gave licence to his Lords, every one to build upon his own ground strong Castles or Fortresses, as them liked. All the time of his Reign he was vexed with Wars, but especially with David, King of the Scots, with whom he was at length accorded: But yet the Scottish King did him no Homage, because he was Sworn to Maud the Empress. Notwithstanding, yet Henry the Eldest Son to King David, did Homage to King Stephen. But he, after repenting thereof, entred into Northumberland with a great host, and burnt and slew the people in most cruel wise, neither sparing man, woman, or child. Such as were with child they ript, the children they tost upon their Spears points, and laying the Priests upon the Altars, they mangled and cut them all to pieces, after a most terrible manner. But by the manhood of the English Lords and Souldiers, and through the means of Thurstan, Archbishop of York, they were met withal, and slain a great number of them, and David their King constrained to give to Henry his Son Hostage for surety of peace. In the mean time, King Stephen was occupied in the South Countries, besieging divers Castles of divers Bishops and other Lords, and took them by force, and fortified them with his Knights and Servants, to the intent to withstand the Empress, whose coming he ever feared.

The death of King Stephen.

¶ Anno 1140. Maud the Empress come into England and by the aid of Robert, Earl of Glocester, and Ranulph of Chester, made strong War upon King Stephen. In the end whereof the Kings party was chased, and himself taken prisoner; and sent to Bristow, there to be kept in sure hold. The same day when King Stephen should joyn his Battel, it is said in a certain Old Chronicle before minded, that he being at the Mass (which then the Bishop of Lincoln said before the King) as he went to offer up his Taper, it brake in two pieces. And when the Mass was done, (at what time the King should have been housseled) the rope, whereby the Pix did hang, did break, and the Pix fell down upon the Altar.

After this field, the Queen, King Stephens wife, (lying then in Kent) made great labour to the Empress and her Council, to have the King delivered and put into some house of Religion, but could not obtain it. Also the Londoners made great Suit to the said Empress, to have and to use again Saint Edwards Laws, and not the Laws of her Father, which were more strict and strange unto them than the other. Which when they could not obtain of her and her Council; the Citizens of London, being therewith discontented, would have taken the Empress: but she having knowledge thereof, fled privily from London to Oxford. But then the Kentish-men and Londoners, taking the Kings part, joyned battel against the Empress; where the foresaid Robert, Earl of Glocester, and base Brother to the Empress was taken, and so by exchange, both the King and the Earl Robert were delivered out of prison. Then Stephen without delay, gathering to him a strong Army, straitly pursued the foresaid Matild or Maud, with her friends, befieging them in the Castle of Oxford. In the Siege whereof fell great Snow and Frost so hard, that a man well laden might pass over the water: upon the occasion whereof, the Empress bethinking her self, appointed with her Friends and Retinue cloathed in white Sheets, and so issuing out by a Postern-Gate, went upon the Ice over Thames, and so escaped to Walingford. After this, the King (the Castle being gotten) when he found not the Empress, was much displeased, and molested the Country about divers ways. In conclusion, he pursued the Empress and her Company so hard, that he caused them to fly the Realm, which was the sixth year of his Reign.

King Stephen and Robert, Earl of Glocester delivered by exchange.

Ex inventi Andrew Chronico.

The second year after this, which was the eighth year of his Reign, there was a Parliament kept at London, unto the which all the Bishops of the Realm resorted, and there denounced the King accursed, and all them with him that did any hurt to the Church, or to any Minister thereof. Whereupon the King, began somewhat to amend his conditions for a certain space: but afterward (as my story saith) was as ill as he was before; but what the causes were, my Author maketh no relation thereof, &c. To return again to the story, the Empress compelled, as is said, to fly the Realm, returned again into Normandy to Geoffery Plantaginet her Husband. Who, after he had valiantly won and defended the Dutchy of Normandy, against the puissance of King Stephen a long time, ended his life, leaving Henry his Son to succeed him in that Dukedom. In the mean while, Robert Earl of Glocester, and the Earl of Chester, who were strong of people, had divers Conflicts with the King, insomuch that at a battel at Wilton between them the King was well near taken, but yet escaped with much pain.

Henry Duke of Normandy.

It was not long after, but Eustace, Son to King Stephen, who had married the French Kings Sister, made War on Duke Henry of Normandy, but prevailed not. Soon after, the said Henry, Duke of Normandy, (in the quarrel of his Mother Maud) with a great puissance entred into England, and at the first won the Castle of Malmesbury, then the Tower of London, and afterward the Town of Nottingham, with other Holds and Castles, as of Wallingford, and other more. Thus between him and the King were fought many battels, to the great annoyance of the Realm. During which time, Eustace the Kings Son departeth. Upon the occation whereof, the King caused Theobald (which succeeded next after William above mentioned) Archbishop of Canterbury, to make means to the Duke for peace, which upon this condition between them was concluded, that Stephen, during his life time, should hold the Kingdom, and Henry in the mean time to be proclaimed Heir-apparent in the chief Cities throughout the Realm. These things thus concluded, Duke Henry taketh his Journey into Normandy (King Stephen and his Son William bringing him on his way) where William the Kings Son taking up his horse before his Father, had a fall, and brake his Leg, and so was had to Canterbury. The same year King Stephen, about October (as some say for sorrow) ended his life, after he had reigned nineteen years perjuredly.

In the time of this King, and about the sixteenth year of his Reign, Theobald Archbishop of Canterbury, and Legate to the Pope, did hold a Council at London. In the which Council first began new found Appellations from Councils to the Pope, found out by Henry, Bishop of Winchester. For as the words of mine Author do record, In Anglia namque Appellationes in usu non erant, donec eas Henricus Wintoniensis Episcopus, dum Legatus esset, malo suo crudeliter intrusit. In eodem namque concilio ad Romani Pontificis audientiam ter appell atus est, &c. In the time of King Stephen died Gratianus a Monk of Bonony, who compiled the Book called The Popes Decrees. Also his Brother Petrus Lombardus, Bishop of Paris, which is called the Master of Sentences, compiled his four Books of the Sentences. These two Brethren were the greatest doers in finding out and establishing this blind opinion of the Sacrament, that the only similitude of bread and wine remained, but not the substance of them: and this they call the Spiritual understanding of the mystery. And therefore no marvel if the Sun in those days were seen black and dim.

We read moreover of one named Johannes de Temporibus, which by the affirmance of most of our old Histories, lived 361. years (servant once to Carolus Magnus) and in the Reign of Stephen, King of England died, *Polychron. lib. 7. In the daies also of this King, and by him, was builded the Abbey of Feversham, where his Son and he were buried. He builded the Monastery of Fimerneis and of Fomitance, the Castle of Wallingford, with a number of other Castles more.

Alſo Latharius ſucceeded in the Imperial Crown Conradus, the Nephew of Henricus the fifth afore mentioned, {Anno 1138. Anno 1138. who only amongſt many Emperors, is not found to receive the Crown at the Popes hand.

In the days of this Emperor, who reigned fifteen years, were divers Popes, as Celeſtinus the ſecond, Lucius the ſecond, Eugenius the third, at which time the Romans went about to recover their former old manner of chuſing their Conſuls and Senators. But the Popes, then being in their ruff, in no caſe would abide it; whereupon aroſe many Commotions, with much civil War amongſt them.

Pope Lucius the ſecond warring againſt the Senatours. Informach that Pope Lucius (ſending for aid to the Emperor, who otherwiſe letted at that time could not come) armed his Souldiers, thinking to invade them, or elſe to deſtroy them in the Senate-houſe. But this coming to their knowledge before, the people was all in array, and ſo much ado was amongſt them. Pope Lucius being alſo amongſt them in the fight (well pelted with ſtones and blows) lived not long after. Likewiſe Pope Eugenius after him, Anno 1145. purſuing the Romans for the ſame matter, firſt did curſe them with Excommunication; after, when he ſaw that would not ſerve, he came with his Hoſt, and ſo compelled them at length to ſeek his peace, and to take his conditions, which were theſe, That they ſhould aboliſh their Conſuls, and take ſuch Senators as he by his Papal Authority ſhould aſſign them.

Spiritual Excommunication abuſed in Temporal Cauſes.

Adrianus a Pope, an Engliſhman. Then followed Anaſtaſius the fourth, and after him Adrian the fourth an Engliſhman, by his name called Breakſpeare, belonging once to S. Albans. This Adrianus kept great ſtir in like ſort with the Citizens of Rome for aboliſhing their Conſuls and Senate, curſing, excommunicating, and warring againſt them with all Power he could make, till the time he removed the Conſuls out of their Office, and brought them all under his ſubjection. The like buſineſs and rage he alſo ſtirred up againſt Apulia, and eſpecially againſt the Empire, bluſtering and thundering againſt Fredericus the Emperor, as (the Lord granting) you ſhall hear anon, after we have proſecuted ſuch matter, as neceſſarily appertaineth firſt to the continuation of our Engliſh ſtory.

King Henry the Second.

{Anno 1154. King Henry the ſecond. HEnry the Second of that name, the Son of Geffery Plantaginet and of Maud the Empreſs, and Daughter of King Henry the firſt, began his Reign after King Stephen, and continued five and thirty years. The firſt year of his Reign he ſubdued Ireland; and not long after, Thomas Becket was made by him Lord Chancellor of England. This King caſt down divers Caſtles which were erected in the ſame time of King Stephen. He went into the North parts, where he ſubdued William King of Scotland, who at that time held a great part of Northumberland, unto New-Caſtle upon Tine, and joyned Scotland to his own Kingdom, from the South Ocean to the North Iſles of Orcades. Alſo he put under his Dominion the Kingdom of Wales, and there felled many great Woods, and made the ways plain. So that by his great manhood and policy, the Seigniory of England was much augmented, with the addition of Scotland, Ireland, the Iſles Orcades, Britain, Poictou, and Guien. Alſo he had in his Rule Normandy, Gaſcoin, Angeou, and Chinon: alſo Alnerne and the City of Thalous he won, and were to him ſubject. Over and beſides (by the Title of his Wife Elenor, Daughter to the Earl of Poictou) he obtained the Mount Pyrame in Spain: ſo that we read of none of his Progenitors, which had ſo many Countries under his Dominion.

{Anno 1157. In England were ſeen in the Firmament two Suns, and (as it is in Chronico Chronicorum) in Italy appeared three Suns by the ſpace of three hours in the Weſt, and the year following appeared three Moons, whereof the middle Moon had a red Croſs overthwart the face, whereby was betokened (by the judgment of ſome) the great Schiſme that after fell among the Cardinals for the Election of the Biſhop of Rome: or elſe rather the buſineſs between Fredericus the Emperor and the Popes, whereof partly now incidently occaſion giveth us to diſcourſe after that I have firſt written of Gerhardus and Dulcinus Navarenſis; who, in their time, according to their gift, did earneſtly labour and preach againſt the Church of Rome, defending and maintaining, that Prayer was not more holy in one place than in another; that the Pope was Antichriſt; that the Clergy and Prelates of Rome were reject, and the very Whore of Babylon prefigured in the Apocalypſe, &c. Peraventure theſe had received ſome light of knowledge of the Waldenſes, who at length with a great number of their Followers were oppreſſed and ſlain by the Pope. And although ſome inconvenient Points of Doctrine and diſhoneſty in their Aſſembles be againſt them alledged of ſome, yet theſe times of ours do teach us ſufficiently what credit is to be given to ſuch Popiſh flanders, forged rather upon hatred of true Religion, than upon any judgment of truth. Illiricus, in his Book De teſtibus, referreth the time of theſe two to the year of our Lord, 1218. but as I find in the ſtory of Robert Guisburne, theſe two about the year of our Lord, 1158. brought thirty with them into England, who by the King and the Prelates, were all burnt in the Forehead, and ſo driven out of the Realm, and after (as Illiricus writeth) were ſlain by the Pope.

{Anno 1158.

And now (according to my promiſe premiſed) the time requiſeth to proceed to the Hiſtory of Frederick the firſt (called Barboroſſa) Succeſſor unto Conradus in the Empire, who marched up to Italy, to ſubdue there certain Rebels. The Pope hearing that, came with his Clergy to meet him by the way, in a Town called Sutrium, thinking by him to find Aid againſt his Enemies. The Emperor ſeeing the Biſhop, lighteth from his Horſe to receive him, holding the ſtirrop to the Prelate on the left ſide, when he ſhould have held it on the right, whereat the Pope ſhewed himſelf ſomewhat grieved. The Emperor ſmiling, excuſed himſelf, that he was never accuſtomed to hold ſtirrops. And ſeeing it was done only of good will, and of no duty, the leſs matter was what ſide of the Horſe he held. The next day to make amends again to the Biſhop, the Emperor finding for him a preſent, him, holding the right ſtirrop unto the Prelate, and ſo all the matter was made whole, and he the Popes white Son again.

Frederick Barbaroſſa Emperor.

The Pope diſpleaſed that the Emperor did not hold his right ſtirrop.

The Emperor holdeth the Popes ſtirrop.

After this, as they were come in and fate together, Adrianus the Pope beginneth to declare unto him, how his Anceſtors before him, ſuch as fought unto the See of Rome for the Crown, were wont always to leave behind them ſome ſpecial token or monument of their Benevolence for the obtaining thereof, as Carolus Magnus in ſubduing the Lombards, Otho the Berengarians, Lotharius the Normans, &c. Wherefore he required ſome benefit to proceed likewiſe from him unto the Church of Rome, in reſtoring again the Country of Apulia to the Church of Rome. Which thing if he would do, he for his part again would do that which appertained unto him to do: meaning in giving him the Crown, for at that time the Popes had brought the Emperors to fetch their Crown at their hands.

The Pope old praiſes his ſitting Princes to ſubmit to the Church.

Frederick with his Princes perceiving that, unleſs he would offend his own proper Coſis and Charges fetch in again Apulia out of Duke Williams hands, he could not ſpeed of the Crown, was fain to promiſe to all that the Pope required, and ſo the next day after was Crowned.

The Emperor refuſeth into Germany.

This done, the Emperor returneth into Germany, to refreſh his Army and his other Furnitures, for the ſubduing of Apulia. In the mean while Adrianus, not thinking to be idle, firſt giveth forth Cenſures of Excommunication againſt William, Duke of Apulia. Beſides, not content with this, he ſendeth alſo to Emmanuel, Emperor of Conſtantinople, incenſing him to War againſt the ſore- ſaid William. The Duke perceiving this, ſendeth to the Pope for peace, promiſing to reſtore to him whatſoever he would.

War ſtirred up thereby.

But the Pope, through the malignant Counſel of his Cardinals, would grant to no peace, thinking to get more by War. The Duke, ſeeing nothing but War, prepareth himſelf with all Expedition to the ſame. To be brief, making all his Power out of Sicilia, he arrived at Apulia, and there putteth the Emperor Emmanuel to flight. This done, he proceedeth to the City of Bonaventure, where the Pope with his Cardinals were looking for Victory. He planting there his Siege, ſo ſtraitly preſſed the City, that the Pope with his Cardinals were glad to intreat for peace, which they refuſed before. The Duke granted unto their peace upon certain conditions, that is, that neither neither he ſhould invade ſuch Poſſeſſions as belonged to Rome, and that the Pope ſhould make him King of both Sicilies. So the matter was concluded, and they departed. The Biſhop, coming to Rome, was no leſs troubled there about their Conſuls and Senators, inſomuch that when his Curſes and Excommunications could not prevail nor ſerve, he was fain to leave Rome, and removed to Arimimum.

The Emperor, all this while ſitting quietly at home, began to conſider with himſelf, how the Pope had extorted from the Emperors, his Predeceſſors, the inveſting and induing of Prelates; how he had pilled and polled all Nations by his Legates, and alſo had been the Sower of Seditions through all his Empery; he began therefore to require of all the Biſhops of Germany Homage, and Oath of their Allegiance; commanding alſo the Popes Legates, if they came into Germany without his ſending for, not to be received. Charging moreover all his Subjects that none of them ſhould Appeal to Rome. Beſides this, in his Letters he ſet and preſixed his Name before the Popes name: whereupon the Pope, being not a little offended, directed his Letters to the foreſaid Frederick Emperor, after this tenor and form as followeth.

A Letter of Pope Adrian to the Emperor Frederick.

Adrian Biſhop, Servant of the Servants of God, to Frederick Emperor, Health and Apoſtolical benediction. The Law of God ex it promiſeth to them that honour Father and Mother long life, ſo it threateneth the ſentence of death to them that curſe Father and Mother. We are taught by the word of truth, that every one the which exalteth himſelf, ſhall be brought low. Wherefore (my welbeloved Son in the Lord) we marvel not a little at your Wiſdom, in that you ſeem not to ſhew that reverence to bleſſed S. Peter, and to the holy Church of Rome, which you ought to ſhew. For why? In your Letters ſent to us you prefer your own Name before ours, wherein you incur the note of Inſolency, yea rather (to ſpeak it) of Arrogancy. What ſhould I here recite unto you the Oath of your Fidelity, which you ſware to bleſſed S. Peter and to us, and how you obſerve and keep the ſame? Seeing you ſo require Homage and Allegiance of them that be gods, and all the Sons of the High God, and preſume to joyn their holy Lands with yours, working contrary to us: ſeeing alſo you excludde, not only out of your Churches, but alſo out of your Cities, our Cardinals, whom we direct as Legates from our ſide: what ſhall I ſay then unto you? Amend therefore I adviſe you, amend: for while you go about to obtain of Us your Conſecration and Crown, and to get thoſe things you have not, I fear much your Honour will loſe the things you have. Thus fare ye well.

The Emperors name before the Popes.

The Anſwer of Frederick the Emperor to the Pope.

FRederick by the Grace of God, Roman Emperor, ever Auguſtus, unto Adrian Biſhop of the Roman Church, and unto all ſuch that be willing to cleave unto thoſe things which Jeſus began to work and teach, greeting. The Law of Juſtice giveth to every perſon accordingly that which is his. Neither do we derogate from our Parents: of whom according as we have received this our Dignity of the Imperial Crown and Governance; ſo in the ſame Kingdom of ours, we do render their due and true honour to them again. And for ſo much as duty in all ſorts of men is to be ſought out, let us ſee firſt in the time of Conſtantine (Silveſter then being Biſhop of Rome) what Patrimony or Regality he had of his own, due to him that he might claim. Did not Conſtantine of his liberal benignity give liberty, and reſtored peace unto the Church? And whatſoever Regality or Patrimony the See of your Papacy hath, was it not by the donation of Princes given unto them? Revolve and turn over the ancient Chronicles (if either you have not read, or neglected that we do affirm) there it is to be found. Of them which he gods by adoption, and hold our Lordſhips of us; why may we not juſtly require their Homage, and their ſworn Allegiance, when as he which is both your Maſter and ours (taking nothing of any King or any man, but giving all goodneſs to all men) paid Toll and Tribute for him and Peter, unto Cæſar? giving you example to do the like. And therefore he ſaith to you and all men, Learn of me, for I am meek and humble of heart, &c. Wherefore either render again your Lordſhips and Patrimonies which ye hold of us: or elſe if ye find them ſo ſweet unto you, then give that which is due to God, unto God's and that which is due to Cæſar, unto Cæſar. As for your Cardinals, we ſhut them out both of Churches and Cities, for that we ſee them not Preachers, but Pollers; not Repairers of Peace, but Rakers for money; not Pillars and Upholders of the Church, but Pollers inſatiable of the World, and Moylers of money and gold. What time we ſhall ſee them to be other men (ſuch as the Church requireth them to be) members and makers of peace, ſhining forth like lights to the people, aſſiſting poor and weak mens cauſes in the way of equity, &c. then ſhall they find us preſt and ready to relieve them with ſtipends, and all things neceſſary. And whereas you infer ſuch queſtions as theſe unto ſecular men (little conducing to Religion) you incur thereby no little note and blemiſh of your humility (which is keeper of all vertues) and of your manſuetude. Therefore let your Fatherhood beware and take heed, leſt in moving ſuch matters as ſeem to us unſeemly for you, ye give thereby offence to ſuch as depend of your word (giving ear to your mouth, as it were to an evening ſhower:) for we cannot but tell you of that we hear; ſeeing now the deteſtable beaſt of Pride doth creep into the Seat of Peter, providing always as much as we may (by Gods Grace) for the peace of the Church. Fare ye well.

A ſeditious and proud Letter of Pope Adrian the Fourth to the Biſhops of Germany.

Upon this Adrian the Pope directeth out a Bull againſt Frederick, Excommunicating him with publick and ſolemn Ceremonies. Moreover, conſpiring with William Duke of Apulia he fought all manner of ways to inſeft the Emperor, and to ſet all men againſt him, eſpecially the Clergy. Amongſt many other writing to Hillinus Biſhop of Trivers, to Arnulphus Biſhop of Mentz, and to Frederick Biſhop of Cullen, he ſeeketh firſt to make them of his ſide. His Epiſtle to them ſoundeth to this effect:

THe Empire of Rome was transferred from the Greeks to the Almans; ſo that the King of Almans could not be called Emperour, before he was crowned of the Biſhop Apoſtolical. Before his Conſecration he is a King, afterwards Emperor. Whence hath he his Empire then, but of us? By the election of his Princes he hath the Name of a King, by our Conſecration he hath the name of the Emperor, of Auguſt, or of Cæſar. Ergo by us he reigneth as Emperor. Search ancient Antiquities. Zacharias P. promoted Carolus and made him a great Name, that he was made and called Emperor: and after that, ever the King of Almans was named Emperor and Advocate to the Sea Apoſtolical: ſo that Apulia (conquered by him) was ſubdued to the Biſhop of Rome: which Apulia with the City of Rome is ours, and not the Emperors. Our Seat is at Rome; the Seat of the Emperour is at Aquis in Arduina, which is a wood in France. The Emperor whatſoever he hath, he hath it of us. As Zacharias did tranſlate the Empire from the Greeks to the Almans; ſo we may tranſlate it again from the Almans to the Greeks. Behold it lieth in our Power to give it to whom we will, being therefore ſet up of God above Gentiles and Nations, to deſtroy and pluck up, to build and to plant, &c.

Wells begged, and like a Pope.

Scripture well wreſted.

And yet further to underſtand the ambitious preſumption of this proud See of Rome; it ſo chanced, this Emperor Fredericus, at his firſt coming up to Rome, did behold there in the Palace of Lateran a certain Picture brought forth unto him, how Lotharius the ſecond Emperor was crowned of the Pope, with the inſcription of certain Verſes in Latine, declaring how the foreſaid Emperor, coming to Rome, firſt did ſwear to the City, after was made the Popes man, and ſo of him received the Crown. Fredericus, offended with this Picture, deſired the Pope it might be abolliſhed, for that it ſhould be no cauſe of any diſſention hereafter.

after. The Pope underſtanding the intent of the Emperor, how loth he was to come under ſubjection to his See, deviſed by all craſty ways to bring it to paſs. And firſt taking his occaſion by the Biſhop of Laodicea (being then detained in cuſtody, I cannot tell by whom) ſent divers and ſharp Letters unto him; and yet not ſo ſharp, as proud and diſdainful. Wherein the firſt ſalutation by his Legates was this in Latine, Salutat vos beatiſſimus pater noſter Papa, & univerſitas cardinalium, ille ut pater, hi ut fratres. That is, our moſt Bleſſed Father the Pope Greeteth you, and the Univerſal Company of the Cardinals, he as your Father, they as your Brethren. Meaning thereby that he ſhould underſtand himſelf to be ſubject and underling to the Pope, no leſs than the Cardinals were. Moreover in his Letters Objecting divers things againſt him, he reciteth how many and great Benefits he had received of the Church of Rome, by the which Church he had obtained the fulneſs of his Honour and Dignity, &c. The Emperor with his Princes, perceiving whereunto the Pope by his Legates did ſhoot (being a Prince of courage) could not abide ſuch intollerable preſumption of a proud meſſage, whereupon much contention fell between the Legates and the Princes. And of whom then, ſay the Legates, receiveth Ceſar the Empire, if he take it not of the Pope? With the which word the German Princes were ſo much offended that had not the Emperor ſtayed them with much ado, they would have uſed violence againſt the Legates. But the Emperor, not permitting that, commanded the Legates away, ſtraightly charging them to make no turn by the way, to any perſon or perſons, but ſtraight to depart home. And he, to certifie the whole ſtate of the Empire of the truth of the matter, directeth forth theſe Letters that follow.

Ex Radevic. in appendice Friſing.

See the ambitious preſumption of a proud Prieſt.

The Tenor of the Emperors Letter ſent through all his Empire.

FOr ſo much as the providence of God (whereof dependeth all power both in Heaven and Earth) hath committed to us, his anointed, this our regiment and Empire to be governed, and the peace of his Churches by our Imperial Arms to be protected; we cannot but lament and complain to you with great ſorrow of heart, ſeeing ſuch cauſes of diſſention the root and fountain of evils, and the infection of peſtiferous corruption thus to riſe from the holy Church, imprinted with the ſeal of Peace and Love of Chriſt.

By reaſon whereof (except God turn it away) we fear the whole body of the Church is like to be pollated, the unity thereof to be broken, and ſchiſm and diviſion to be betwixt the ſpiritual and temporal regiment. For we being of late at Biſunze, and there intreating buſily of matters pertaining as well to the honour of our Empire, as to the wealth of the Churches, there came Ambaſſadors of the See Apoſtolical, declaring that they brought a legacy to our Majeſty of great importance, redounding to the no ſmall commodity of our honour and Empire.

Whereon, the firſt day of their coming, being brought to our preſence, and received of us (as the manner is) with honour accordingly, audience was given them to hear what they had to ſay. They forthwith burſting out of the mammon of iniquity, Haughty pride, ſtoutneſs and arrogancy, out of the execrable preſumption of their ſwelling heart did their meſſage with Letter Apoſtolical, whereof the Tenor was this: That we ſhould always have before our eyes, how that our Sovereign Lord the Pope gave us the Imperial Crown, and that it doth not repent him, if ſo be we have received greater Benefits at his hand. And this was the effect of that ſo ſweet and Fatherly legation, which ſhould nouriſh peace both of the Church and of the Empire, to unite them faſt together in the band of Love.

At the hearing of this ſo falſe, untrue, and moſt vain glorious preſumption of ſo proud a meſſage, not only the Emperors Majeſty conceived indignation, but alſo all the Princes (there preſent) were moved with ſuch anger and rage thereat, that if our preſence and requeſt had not ſtaied them, they would not have held their hands from theſe wicked Prieſts, or elſe would have proceeded with ſentence of death againſt them.

Furthermore, becauſe a great number of other Letters (partly written already, partly with ſeals ready ſigned, for Letters to be written according as they ſhould think good to the Churches of Germany*) were found about them, whereby to work their conceived intent of iniquity here in our Churches, to ſpoil the Altars, to carry away the Jewels of the Church, and the fley off the limbs and plates of golden Croſſes, &c. To the intent their avaricious meaning ſhould have no further power to Reign, we gave them commandment to depart the ſame way they came. And now ſeeing our Reign and Empire ſtandeth upon the Election of Princes from God alone, who in the paſſion of his Son ſubdued the world to be governed with two Swords neceſſary; and again, ſeeing Peter the Apoſtle hath ſo informed the world with this Doctrine,* Deum timete, regem honorificate: That is, Fear God, Honour your King: therefore, who ſo ſaith that we have and poſſeſs our Emperial Kingdom by the benefit of the Lord Pope, is contrary both to the Ordinance of God, and to the Doctrine of Peter, and alſo ſhall be reproved for a lier.

Note how Princes ſometimes bear in a willful humour.

Note.

Therefore as our endeavour hath been heretofore to help and to deliver the ſervile captivity of Churches out of the hand and from the yoke of the Egyptians, and to maintain the right of their liberties and dignities, we deſire you all with your compaſſion to lament with us this ſlanderous ignominy inferred to us and our Kingdom, trufting that your faithful good will, which hath been ever truſty to the Honour of this Empire (never yet blemiſhed from the firſt beginning of this City, and of religion) will provide that it ſhall have no hurt through the ſtrange novelty and preſumptuous pride of ſuch. Which thing rather than it ſhould come to paſs, know you this for certain; I had rather incurr the danger of death, than ſuffer ſuch confuſion to happen in our days.

This Letter of Ceſar fretted the Pope not a little, who wrote again to the Biſhops of Germany, accuſing the Emperor, and willing them to work againſt him what they could. They anſwer again with all obedience to the Pope, ſubmitting themſelves, and yet excuſing the Emperor, and blaming him rather; and exhorted him henceforth to temper his Letters and Legacies with the more gentleneſs and modeſty; which Counſel he alſo followed, perceiving otherwiſe that he could not prevail.

Much trouble had good Fredericus with this Pope; but much more with the other that followed. For this Pope continued not very long, the ſpace only of four years and odd months. About whoſe time roſe up the order of the Heremits by one William once Duke of Aquitania, and afterward a Frier. This Adrianus walking with his Cardinals abroad, to a place called Anagnia or Arignanum (as Volateran calleth it) chanced to be choked with a Fly getting into his throat, and ſo was ſtrangled; who in the later time of his Papacy was wont to ſay, that there is no more miſerable kind of life in the Earth, than to be Pope, and to come to the Papacy by Blood, that is (ſaid he) not to ſucceed Peter, but rather Romulus, who to Reign alone did ſlay his Brother.

The order of Heremits.

Anno 1159.

Although this Adrian was bad enough, yet came the next much worſe, one Alexander the third of that name; who yet was not elect alone; for beſide him the Emperor with nine Cardinals (albeit Sabellicus ſaith but with three) did ſet up another Pope, named Victor the fourth. Between theſe two Popes roſe a foul ſchiſm and great diſcord, and long continued. Inſomuch that the Emperor, being required to take up the matter, ſent for them both to appear before him, that in hearing them both he might judge their cauſe the better. Victor came, but Alexander (diſdaining that his matter ſhould come in controverſie) refuſed to appear. Whereupon the Emperor, with a full conſent of his Biſhops and Clergy about him, aſſigned and ratified to all Chriſtendom againſt themgas men to be avoyded and caſt out of all Chriſtian company. Alſo to get him friends at Rome, by flattery and money he got on his ſide the greateſt part of the City, both to the favouring of him, and to the ſetting up of ſuch Conſuls as were for his purpoſe. After this, Alexander coming from France to Sicil, and from thence to Rome, was there received with much favour, through the help of Philip the French King.

Thereby the Pope ſeeketh to exclude the Emperor from the Election.

Victor the fourth.

Alexander the third.

The Emperor, hearing this rebellion and conſpiracy in Rome, removed with great power into Italy, where he had deſtroyed divers great Cities. Coming at length to Rome, he required the Citizens that the cauſe betwixt the two Popes might be decided, and that he which had the beſt Right might be taken. If they would ſo do, he would reſtore again that which he took from them before. Alexander miſtruſting his part and doubting the wills of the Citizens (having Ships ready prepared for him, from William Duke of Apulia) fetcht a courſe about to Venice.

Anno 1167. Victor the fourth dieth.

Anno 1174.

To declare here the difference in Hiſtories, between Blondus, Sabellicus, and the Venetian Chroniclers, with other Writers, concerning the order of this matter, I will over-paſs. In this moſt do agree, that the Pope being at Venice, and required to be ſent of the Venetians to the Emperor, they would not ſend him. Whereupon Fredericus the Emperor ſent thither his Son Otho, with men and ſhips well appointed, charging him not to attempt any thing before his coming. The young man more hardy than circumſpect (joyning with the Venetians) was overcome; and ſo taken, was brought into the City. Hereby the Pope took no ſmall occaſion to work his feats.

The Father, to help the captivity and miſery of his Son, was compelled to ſubmit himſelf to the Pope, and to intreat for peace. So the Emperor coming to Venice (at S. Marks Church, where the Biſhop was, there to take his Abſolution) was bid to kneel down at the Popes feet.

Pope Alexander treading on the necke of Frederick the Emperour.

Holy Scripture abuſed.

The Pope treading on the Emperors neck.

Thereby and ſubmiſſion of the Emperor.

The Pope rather ſeeketh to reſtore than to Peter. For Alexander the third.

Platerus taken with a contradiction.

The proud Pope, ſetting his foot upon the Emperors Neck, ſaid the verſe of the Pſalm, Super aſpidem & baſiliſcum ambulabis, & conculcabis Leonem & Draconem. That is, Thou ſhalt walk upon the Adder and on the Baſiliſk, and ſhalt tread down the Lion and the Dragon. To whom the Emperor anſwering again, ſaid, Non tibi ſed Petro; that is, Not to thee but to Peter. The Pope again, Et mihi & Petro; Both to me and to Peter. The Emperor, fearing to give any occaſion of further quarrelling, held his peace, and ſo was abſolved, and peace made between them. The conditions whereof were theſe: Firſt, That he ſhould receive Alexander for the true Pope. Secondly, That he ſhould reſtore again to the Church of Rome all that he had taken away before. And thus the Emperor, obtaining again his Son, departed.

Here as I note in divers Writers a great diverſity and variety touching the order of this matter (of whom ſome ſay that the Emperor Campt in Paleſtina before he came to Venice, ſome ſay after) ſo I marvel to ſee in Volateran (ſo great a Favourer of the Pope) ſuch a contradiction, who in his two and twentieth Book ſaith, that Otho the Emperors Son was taken in this Conflict, which was the cauſe of the peace between his Father and the Pope. And in his three and twentieth Book again ſaith, That the Emperor himſelf was taken Priſoner in the ſame battel: and ſo afterwards (peace concluded) took his Journey to Aſia and Paleſtina. This Pope in the time of his Papacy (which continued one and twenty years) kept ſundry Councils both at Turo and at Lateran, where he confirmed the wicked proceedings of Hildebrand, and others his Predeceſſors; as to bind all Orders of the Clergy to the vow of Chaſtity; which were not greatly to be reprehended, if they would define Chaſtity aright. For whoſo liveth not a chaſte life (ſaith he) is not fit to be a Miniſter. But herein lieth an Error full of much blindneſs, and alſo peril, to think that Matrimony immaculate (as S. Paul calleth it) is not Chaſtity, but only a ſingle life, that they eſteem to be a chaſte life.

Now for ſo much as our Engliſh Pope holy Martyr, called Thomas Becket, happened alſo in the ſame time of this Pope Alexander, let us ſomewhat alſo ſtory of him, ſo far as the matter ſhall ſeem worthy of knowledge, and to ſtand with truth: to the end that the truth thereof being ſifted from all flattery and lyes of ſuch Popiſh Writers as paint out his ſtory, men may the better judge both of him what he was, and alſo of his cauſe.

The Life and Hiſtory of Thomas Becket, Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

IF the cauſe make a Martyr (as is ſaid) I ſee not why we ſhould eſteem Thomas Becket to die a Martyr, more than any other whom the Princes Sword doth here temporally puniſh for their temporal deſerts. To die for the Church I grant is a glorious matter. But the Church (as it is a Spiritual and not a Temporal Church) ſo it ſtandeth upon Cauſes ſpiritual, and upon an heavenly Foundation, as upon Faith, Religion, true Doctrine, ſincere Diſcipline, Obedience to Gods Commandments; and not upon things pertaining to this World, as Poſſeſſions, Liberties, Exemptions, Priviledges, Dignities, Patrimonies, and Superioirities. If theſe be given to the Church, I pray God Church-men may uſe them well; but if they be not given, the Church cannot claim them; or if they be taken away, that ſtandeth in the Princes Power. To contend with Princes for the ſame, it is no matter (in my mind,) materrial to make a Martyr, but rather a Rebellion againſt them to whom we owe ſubjection. Therefore as I ſuppoſe

Thomas Becket Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Becket no Martyr.

Thomas Becket to be far from the cauſe and title of a Martyr (neither can he be excuſed from a plain Rebel againſt his Prince) ſo yet would I have wiſhed again the Law rather publickly to have found out his fault, than the Swords of men (not hidden nor ſent) to have ſmitten him, having no ſpecial Commandment either of the Prince, or of the Law ſo to do. For though the indignation of the Prince (as the wiſe Prince ſaith) is death, yet it is not for every private perſon ſtraightways to revenge the ſecret indignation of his Prince, except he be publickly authorized thereunto. And this had been (as I ſuppoſe) the better way, the Laws firſt to have executed their Juſtice upon him. Certes, it had been the ſafeſt way for the King, as it proved after; who had juſt matter enough, if he had proſecuted his Cauſe againſt him. And alſo thereby his death had been without all ſuſpition of Martyrdom, neither had there followed that ſhining and ſainting of him as there did. Albeit the ſecret Providence of God which governeth all things, did ſee this way neceſſe to be beſt, and moſt neceſſary for thoſe days. And doubteſs (to ſay here what I think, and yet to ſpeak nothing againſt Charity) if the Emperors had done the like to the Popes contending againſt them, what time they had taken them Priſoners, that is, if they had uſed the Law of the Sword againſt them, and chopped off the heads of one or two, according to their trayterous Rebellion, they had broken the neck of much diſturbance, which long time after did trouble the Church. But for lack of that, becauſe Emperors having the Sword, and the truth on their ſide, would not uſe their Sword; but ſtanding in awe of the Popes vain curſe, and reverencing his Seat for S. Peters ſake, durſt not lay hand upon him, though he were never ſo abominable and traytorous a Malefactor; the Popes perceiving that took ſo much upon them, not as the Scripture would give, but as much as the ſuperſtitious fear of Emperors and Kings would ſuffer them to take; which was ſo much, that it paſt all order, rule, and meaſure; and all becauſe the Superior Powers either would not, or durſt not practiſe the Authority given unto them of the Lord, upon thoſe Inferiors, but ſuffered them to be their Maſters.

But as touching Thomas Becket, whatſoever is to be thought of them that did the act, the example thereof yet bringeth this proſit with it, to teach all Romiſh Prelates not to be ſo ſtubborn (in ſuch matters not pertaining unto them) againſt their Prince, unto whom God hath ſubjected them.

Herbertus de Boſham, Joan Chartreſ. Alanus Abbot of Tewkbury. Guliel. Cantuarienſis. Thomas Bec. &c. deſcribed.

Now to the ſtory, which if it be true that is ſet forth in Quadrilogo, by thoſe four, who took upon them to expreſs the life and proceſs of Thomas Becket, it appeareth by all conjectures, that he was a man of a ſtout nature, ſevere, and inflexible. What perſwaſion or opinion he had once conceived, from that he would in no wiſe be removed, or very hardly. Threatnings and flattering were to him both one; in this point ſingular, following no mans counſel ſo much as his own. Great helps of nature there were in him (if he could have uſed them well) rather than of learning; albeit ſomewhat skilful he was of the Civil Law, which he ſtudied at Bonony; in memory excellent good, and alſo well broken in courtly and worldly matters. Beſides this, he was of a chaſte and ſtrait life, if the Hiſtories be true; although in the firſt part of his life (being yet Archdeacon of Canterbury, and after Lord Chancellor) he was very civil, courtly, pleaſant, given much both to hunting and hawking, according to the guiſe of the Court; and highly favoured he was of his Prince, who not only had thus promoted him, but alſo had committed his Son and heir to his Inſtitution and Governance. But in this his firſt beginning he was not ſo well beloved, but afterward he was again as much hated (and deſervedly) both of the King, and alſo of the moſt part of his Subjects, ſave only of certain Monks and Prieſts, and ſuch others as were perſwaded by them, who magnified him not a little for upholding the Liberties of the Church; that is, the licentious life and exceſs of Church-men. Amongſt all others, theſe Vices he had moſt notable, and to be rebuked; full of devotion, but without all true Religion; zealous, but clean without knowledge. And therefore as he was ſtiff and ſtubborn of nature, ſo (a blind Conſcience being joyned withall) it turned to plain Rebellion. So ſuperſtitious he was to the Obedience of the Pope, that he forgot his Obedience to his natural and moſt beneficial King:

What cometh of blind zeal and deſſitute of right knowledge.

and in maintaining (ſo contentiouſly) the vain Conſtitutions and Decrees of men, he neglected the Commandments of God. But herein moſt of all to be reprehended, that not only (contrary to the Kings knowledge) he ſought to convey himſelf out of the Realm (being in that place and calling) but alſo being out of the Realm ſet matter of Diſcord between the Pope and his King, all honeſty, good order, natural ſubjection, and true Chriſtianity. Whereupon followed no little diſquietneſs after to the King, and damage to the Realm, as here (in proceſs and order following, by the Grace of Chriſt) we will declare; firſt beginning with the firſt riſing up of him, and ſo conſequently proſecuting in order his ſtory, as followeth:

The life of Thomas Becket.

And firſt here to omit the Progeny of him and of his Mother named Roſe, whom Polyd. Virgilius falſly nameth to be a Saracen, when indeed ſhe came out of the parts bordering near to Normandy; to omit alſo the fabulous Viſion of his Mother, mentioned in Roberto Crikeladenſi, Fofters of a burning Torch iſſuing out of her body, and reaching up to Heaven; his firſt preferment was to the Church of Bransfield, which he had by the gift of S. Albans. After that, he entred into the Service of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, by whom he was then preferred to be his Archdeacon; and after by the ſaid Theobald was put (as a man meet for his purpoſe) to King Henry to bridle the young King, that he ſhould not be fierce againſt the Clergy; whom in proceſs of time the King made Lord Chancellor, and then he left playing the Archdeacon, and began to play the Chancellor. He faſhioned his conditions like to the Kings both in weighty matters and trifles; he would hunt with him, and watch the time when the King dined and ſlept. Furthermore, he began to love the merry jeſtings of the Court, to delight himſelf with the great laud of men, and praiſe of the people. And that I may paſs over his Houſholdſtuff, he had his Bridle of ſilver, and the boſſes of his Bridle were worth a great treaſure. At his Table and in other Expences he paſſed any Earl: ſo that on the one ſide men judged him little to conſider the Office of an Archdeacon; and on the other ſide they judged him to uſe wicked doings. He played alſo the good Soldier under the King in Gaſcoigne, and both won and kept Towns. When the King ſent Thomas being Chancellor home into England (Ambaſſador with other Nobles, after the death of the Archbiſhop) he willed Richard Lucy one of the chiefeſt) to commend in his name this Thomas to the Covent of Canterbury, that they might chooſe him Archbiſhop, which thing he did diligently. The Monks ſaid, It was not meet to chooſe a Courtier and a Souldier to be Head of ſo holy a Company; for he would ſpend (ſaid they) all that they had. Others had this ſurmiſe alſo, becauſe he was in ſo great favour with the Prince the Kings Son, and was ſo ſuddenly diſcharged of the Chancellorſhip which he had born five years: in the four and fortieth year of his age (on Saturday in Whitſonweek) he was made Prieſt, and the next day conſecrated Biſhop.

Diverſe in Chronicles elſe.

As touching the Prieſthood of this man, I find the Hiſtories to vary in themſelves: for if he were beneficed, and Chaplain to Theobald, and afterwards Archdeacon (as ſome ſay) it is no other like, but that he was Prieſt before, and not (as our moſt Engliſh ſtories ſay) made Prieſt in one day, and Archbiſhop the next.

But howſoever this matter paſſeth, here is in the mean time to be ſeen, what great benefits the King had done for him, and what great love had been between them both. Now after that Becket was thus promoted, what variance and diſcord happened between them, remaineth to be ſhewed: the cauſes of which variance were divers and ſundry.

The cauſe of variance pretied between the King and the Archbiſhop.

As firſt, when (according to the cuſtom) the Kings Officers gathered of every one Hide-money through the Realm, for the defence of their own Country; the King would have taken it to his Coffers. But the Biſhop ſaid, That the which every man gave willingly, he ſhould not count as his proper rent.

Another cauſe was, that where a Prieſt was accuſed of Murder, and the Kings Officers and the Friends of the dead accuſed the Prieſt earneſtly before the Biſhop of Salisbury his Diocеſan to whom he was ſent, deſiring juſtice to be done on him, the Prieſt was put to his purgation.

gation. But when he was not able to defend himſelf, the Biſhop ſent to the Archbiſhop to aſk what he ſhould do. The Archbiſhop commanded he ſhould be deprived of all Eccleſiaſtical Benefices, and ſhut up in an Abbey to do perpetual Penance. After the ſame ſort were divers others handled for like cauſes, but none put to death, nor loſt joynt, nor burned in the hand, or put to the like pain.

The third cauſe was, that, where a Canon of Bruis did revile the Kings Juſtices, the King was offended with the whole Clergy. For theſe and ſuch like, the Archbiſhop (to pacifie the Kings anſwer) commanded the Canon to be whipped and deprived of his benefices for certain years. But the King was not content with this gentle punihment, becauſe it rather increaſed their boldneſs, and therefore he called the Archbiſhop, Biſhops, and all the Clergy to aſſemble at Weſtminſter. When they were aſſembled together; the King earneſtly commanded that ſuch wicked Clerks ſhould have no priviledge of their Clergy, but be delivered to the Jaylors, becauſe they paſſed ſo little of the ſpiritual correction; and this he ſaid alſo their own Canons and Laws had decreed. The Archbiſhop, counſelling with his Biſhops and learned men, anſwered probably: and in the end he deſired heartily the Kings gentleneſs (for the quietneſs of himſelf and his Realm) that under Chriſt our new King, and under the new Law of Chriſt he would bring in no new kind of puniſhment into his Realm (upon the new choſen people of the Lord) againſt the old Decrees of the holy Fathers: and oft he ſaid, That he neither ought nor could ſuffer it. The King moved therewith (and not without cauſe) alledgeth again and exacteth the old Laws and Cuſtoms of his Grandfather, obſerved and agreed upon by Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Prelates, and other priviledged Perſons, inquiring likewiſe of him whether he would agree to the ſame, or elſe now (in his Reign) would condemn that which in the Reign of his Grandfather was well allowed? To which Laws and Cuſtoms the ſaid Thomas did partly grant, and partly not grant. The Copy of the which foreſaid Laws are contained in the number of eight and twenty or nine twenty, whereof I thought here to recite certain not unworthy to be known.

1 THat no Order ſhould be given to Husbandmens Children and Bondmens Children, without the aſſent or Teſtimonial of them, which be the Lords of the Country where they were born and brought up: and if their Sons become Clerks, they ſhall not receive the Order of Prieſthood without licence of their Lords.

Out of an Engliſh Chronicle. It appeareth, drawn out of French by Earl Rivers, Lord Scales.

2. And if a man of holy Church hold any fee in his hand, he ſhall do therefore the King the ſervice that belongeth thereto, as upon Juries, Aſſize of Lands and Judgments, ſaving only at execution doing of death.

3. If any man were the Kings Traytor, and had taken the Church, that it ſhould be lawful for the King and his Officers to take him out.

4. And if any Felons goods were brought to holy Church, that there ſhould none ſuch keep there; for every Felons goods be the King.

5. That no Land ſhould be given to the Church, or to any Houſe of Religion, without the Kings Licence.

Theſe Articles following, Thomas agreed not unto.

1. IF that between a Clerk and a Lay-man were any ſtriving for Church-goods, they would the Plea ſhould be done in the Kings Court.

2. That there ſhould neither Biſhop nor Clerk go out of the Land without the Kings Licence, and then he ſhould ſwear upon a Book he ſhould procure no hurt againſt the King, nor none of his.

3. If any man were denounced accurſed, and were come again to amendment, the King would not that he ſhould be ſworn, but only find Sureties to ſtand to that, that holy Church ſhould award.

4. The fourth, that no man, that held of the King in chief, or in Service, ſhould be accurſed without the Kings Licence.

5. That all the Biſhopricks and Abbies, that were vacant, ſhould be in the Kings hands, until ſuch time that he ſhould chooſe a Prelate thereto, and he ſhould be choſen out of the Kings Chappels; and firſt before he were confirmed, he ſhould do his Homage to the King.

6. If any Plea were brought to the Conſiſtory, they ſhould appeal from thence to the Archdeacon, and from thence to the Biſhops Court, and from the Biſhops Court to the Archbiſhops, and from thence to the King, and no further. So that in concluſion, the Complaints of holy Church muſt come before the King, and not the Pope.

7. That debts, that were owing through troth plight, ſhould not be pleaded in Spiritual, but in Temporal Courts.

8. That the Peter-pence, which to the Pope were gathered, ſhould be taken to the King.

9. If any Clerk for Felony were taken and ſo proved, he ſhould be firſt degraded, and then through Judgment be hanged, or if he were a Traytor, be drawn.

Other Laws and Conſtitutions made at Clarendon in Normandy, and ſent to England, whereunto Becket and the Pope would not agree, he being then fled out of the Realm.

The Laws of Clarendon.

1. IF any perſon ſhall be found to bring from the Pope, or from the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, any writing containing any Indict or Curſe againſt the Realm of England, the ſame man to be apprehended without delay for a Traytor, and Execution to be done upon the ſame.

2. That no Monk nor any Clerk ſhall be permitted to paſs over into England without a Paſport from the King or his Juſtices: who ſo doth the contrary, that man to be attached and impriſoned.

3. No man to be ſo ſold once to appeal to the Pope, or to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury out of England.

4. That no Decree or Commandment, proceeding from the Authority of the Pope, or the Biſhop of Canterbury, be received into England, under pain of taking and impriſoning.

5. In general, to forbid any man to carry over any Commandment or Precept, either of Clerk, or lay-man, to the Pope, or to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, under pain of Impriſonment.

6. If any Biſhop, Clerk, Abbot, or Lay-man ſhall do contrary to this Inhibition, or will keep the Sentence of interdicting, the ſame incontinent to be thruſt out of the Land, with all their kindred, and to leave all their goods behind them.

7. All the Poſſeſſions, Goods and Chattels of ſuch as favour the Pope or the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to be ſeized and confiſcate for the King.

8. All ſuch of the Clergy as be out of the Realm, having their Rents and proffits out of the Land, to be ſummoned and warned through every Shire within three months to repair home, or elſe their rents and goods to return to the King.

9. That S. Peters-pence ſhould be no more paid to the Apoſtolical See, but to be referred diligently in the Kings Coffers, and there to be at his Commandment. Atque hæc ex Quadrilogo.

10. That the Biſhops of Salisbury and Norwich be at the Kings mercy, and be ſummoned by the Sheriff, and Bedels, that they before the Kings Juſtices do right to the King and his Juſtices, becauſe (contrary to the Statutes of Clarendon) by Commandment they interdicted the land of Earl Hugh, and publiſhed the ſame in their Dioceſs without Licence of the Kings Juſtices.

¶ By theſe and ſuch other Laws and Decrees it may appear, that the abolithing of the Pope is no new thing in the Realm of England. This only difference there is, that the Pope being driven out then, could not be kept out ſo long as now he is. The cauſe is, that the time was not yet come that Antichriſt ſhould ſo fully be revealed; neither was his wickedneſs then ſo fully ripe in thoſe days, as it hath been now in our time. Now theſe premiſed, let us return where we left, to the matter between the King and Thomas Becket.

The Communication and Controversie between the King and Thomas Becket, with his Clergy.

THE King (as is aforesaid) conventing his Nobles and Clerks together, required to have the punishment of certain miſ-doers of the Clergy; but Thomas Becket not assenting thereunto, the King came to this point, to know whether he would consent with his Clergy, that the customs then set forth in the Realm (meaning the first part of those Decrees above specified) should be observed. To which the Archbiſhop, consulting together with his Brethren, giveth answer again, That he was contented the Kings Ordinances should be observed, adding this withall, Salvo ordine ſuo; that is, Saving his order. And so in like manner all the other Biſhops after, being demanded in order, answered with the same addition, Salvo ordine ſuo. Only Hilarius Biſhop of Chicheſter, perceiving the King to be exaſperate with that addition, in ſtead of Salvo ordine, agreed to obſerve them Bona fide. The King hearing them not ſimply to agree unto him, but with an exception, was mightily offended; who then turning to the Archbiſhop and the Prelates, ſaid, That he was not well contented with that Clauſe of theirs, Salvo ſuo ordine, which he ſaid was captious and deceitful, having ſome manner of venome lurking under it; and therefore required an abſolute Grant of them, without any exception, to agree to the Kings Ordinances. To this the Archbiſhop anſwered again, That they had ſworn unto him their fidelity, both life, body, and earthly honour, Salvo ordine ſuo; and that in the ſame earthly honour alſo thoſe Ordinances were comprehended, and to the obſerving of them they would bind themſelves after no other form, but as they had ſworn before. The King with this was moved, and all his Nobility not a little. As for the other Biſhops, there was no doubt but they would eaſily have relented, had not the ſtoutneſs of the Archbiſhop made them more conſtant than otherwiſe they would have been. The day being well ſpent, the King (when he could get no other anſwer of them) departed in great anger, giving no word of ſalutation to the Biſhops, and likewiſe the Biſhops every one to his own houſe departed. The Biſhop of Chicheſter (amongſt the reſt) was greatly rebuked of his Fellows for changing the exception contrary to the voice of all the others. The next day following, the King took from the Archbiſhop all ſuch Honours and Lordſhips, as he had given him before in the time that he was Chancellor; whereby appeared the great diſpleaſure of the King againſt him and the Clergy. Not long after this, the King removing from London (unknown to the Biſhops) ſailed over to Normandy, whither the Biſhop of London called Gilbert (not long after) reſorted to crave the Kings Favour, and gave him counſel withall to joyn ſome of the Biſhops on his ſide; leſt if all were againſt him, peradventure he might ſooner be overthrown. And thus the greateſt number of the Biſhops were by this means reconciled again to the King; only the Archbiſhop with a few others remained in their ſtoutneſs ſtill. The King (thinking to try all manner of ways) when he ſaw no fear nor threats could turn him, did aſſay him with gentleneſs; it would not ſerve. Many of the Nobles laboured betwixt them both, exhorting him to relent to the King; it would not be. Likewiſe the Archbiſhop of York with divers other Biſhops and Abbots, eſpecially the Biſhop of Cheſter, did the ſame. Beſides this, his own Houſhold daily called upon him, but no man could perſwade him. At length underſtanding partly by them that came to him what danger might happen not only to himſelf, but to all the other Clergy upon the Kings diſpleaſure: partly conſidering the old love and kindneſs of the King towards him in time paſt, he was content to give over to the Kings requeſt, and came to Oxford to him, reconciling himſelf about the addition, which diſpleaſed the King ſo much. Whereupon the King being ſomewhat mitigated, receiveth him with a more chearful countenance, but yet not ſo familiarly as before, ſaying, That he would have his Ordinances and Proceedings after the form confirmed in the publick Audience and open ſight of all his Biſhops and all his Nobles. After this, the King (being at Clarendon) theſe called all his Peers and Prelates before him, requiring to have all that performed, which they had promiſed, in conſenting to the obſerving of his Grandfathers Ordinances and Proceedings. The Archbiſhop ſuſpecting I cannot tell what in the Kings promiſe, drew backward, and now would not that he would before; at laſt with much ado he was inforced to give aſſent. Firſt, came to him the Biſhop of Salisbury and of Norwich, who (for old matters indangered to the King long before) came weeping and lamenting to the Archbiſhop, deſiring him to have ſome compaſſion of them, and to remit this pertinacy to the King, leſt if he ſo continued (through his ſtoutneſs to exaſperate the Kings diſpleaſure) happily it might redound to no ſmaller danger, not only of them which were in jeopardy already, but alſo of himſelf to be impriſoned, and the whole Clergy to be indangered. Beſides theſe two Biſhops, there went to him other two noble Peers of the Realm, labouring with him to relent and condeſcend to the Kings deſire: if not, they ſhould be inforced to uſe ſuch violence, as neither would ſtand with the Kings fame, and much leſs with his quietneſs; but yet the ſtout ſtomach of the man would not give over. After this came to him two Rulers of the Temple called Templars, one Richard de Hulſt, another Coſtans de Heverio with their Company lamenting and bewailing the great peril, which they declared unto him to hang over his head: yet neither with their tears, nor with their kneelings would he be removed. At length came the laſt Meſſage from the King, ſignifying unto him with expreſs words, and alſo with tears, what he ſhould truſt to, if he would not give over to the Kings Requeſt.

The ſtubbornneſs of Tho. Becket.

Thomas Becket relenteth to the King.

By reaſon of which Meſſage, he either terrified, or elſe perſwaded, was content to ſubmit himſelf. Whereupon the King incontinent affembling the States together, the Archbiſhop firſt before all others beginneth to promiſe the King Obedience, and ſubmiſſion unto his cuſtom, and that Cum bona fide, leaving out his former addition, Salvo ordine, mentioned before: in ſtead whereof he promiſed in verbo veritatis, to obſerve and keep the Kings Cuſtoms, and ſwear to the ſame. After him the other Biſhops likewiſe gave the like Oath; whereupon the King commanded incontinent certain Inſtruments obligatory to be drawn, of the which the King ſhould have the one, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury another, the Archbiſhop of York the third, requiring alſo the ſaid Archbiſhop to ſet to his Hand and Seal. To the which the Archbiſhop (though not denying but that he was ready ſo to do) yet deſired reſpit in the matter, while that he (being but newly come to his Biſhoprick) might better peruſe with himſelf the foreſaid Cuſtoms and Ordinances of the King. This requeſt as it ſeemed but reaſonable, ſo it was lightly granted; ſo the day being well ſpent, they departed for that ſeaſon and brake up.

Becket yieldeth to the King.

Alanus, one of the four Writers of the life of this Thomas Becket, recordeth, That the Archbiſhop in his Voyage towards Wincheſter, began greatly to repent that he had done before, partly through the inſtigation of certain about him, but chiefly of his Croſs-bearer, who, going before the Archbiſhop, ſharply and earneſtly expoſtulated with him for giving over to the Kings requeſt, againſt the Priviledge and Liberties of the Church, polluting not only his fame and conſcience, but alſo giving a pernicious example to them that ſhould come after, with many like words. To make the matter ſhort, the Archbiſhop was ſo touched upon the ſame with ſuch repentance, that keeping himſelf from all company, lamenting with tears, with faſting, and with much penance macerating and afflicting himſelf, he did ſuſpend himſelf from all Divine Service, and would not receive comfort, before that (word being ſent to his holy Grandfather the Pope) he ſhould be abſolved of him, who, teudring the tears of his dear chicken, directed to him Letters again by the ſame Meſſenger which Thomas had ſent up to him before. In which Letters not only he abſolved him from his Treſpaſs, but alſo with words of great conſolation did incourage him to be ſtout in the quarrel he took in hand. The Copy of which Letters conſolatory, ſent from the Pope to Biſhop Becket, here followeth under written.

Becket re-aſſumeth his good cauſe.

Becket tranſported of the King.

A Letter of Pope Alexander to Thomas Becket.

ALexander Biſhop, &c. Your brotherhood is not ignorant that it hath been advertiſed us, how that upon the occaſion of a certain tranſgreſſion or exceſs of yours, you have determined to ceaſe henceforth from ſaying of Maſs, Maſs, and to abſtain from the Conſecration of the Body and Blood of the Lord; which thing to do, how dangerous it is (eſpecially in ſuch a Perſonage) and alſo what inconvenience may riſe thereof, I will you adviſedly to conſider, and diſcreetly alſo to ponder. Your wiſdom ought not to forget what difference there is between them which adviſedly and willingly do offend, and thoſe which through ignorance and for neceſſity take do offend. For as you read, ſo much the greater is wilful ſin, as the ſame not being voluntary is a leſſer ſin. Therefore if you remember your ſelf to have done any thing that your own conſcience doth accuſe you of, whatſoever it be, we counſel you (as a prudent and wiſe Prelate) to acknowledge the ſame. Which thing done, the merciful and pitiful God, who hath more reſpect to the heart of the doer than to the thing done, will remit and forgive you the ſame according to his accuſtomed great mercy. And we truſting in the merits of the bleſſed Apoſtles S. Peter and Paul do abſolve you from the offence committed, and by the Authority Apoſtolical we releaſe you unto your fraternity, counſelling you and commanding you, that henceforth you abſtain not (for this cauſe) from the celebration of the Maſs.

This Letter, with others more after the like ſort, the Pope then wrote to him, animating and comforting him in this quarrel ſo nearly pertaining to the Popes profit. By the occaſion whereof, Becket took no ſmall heart and conſolation: inſomuch that thereof ſeemeth to me to proceed all the occaſion that made him ſo ſtout and malepert againſt his Prince, as hereafter followeth to be ſeen by his doings. What the other Letters were that the Pope wrote unto him, ſhortly after (when we come to the Appellations made to the Pope) ſhall appear God willing. In the mean ſeaſon (as he ſat thus mourning at home) the King hearing of him, and how he denied to ſet his Seal to thoſe Sanctions, which he condeſcended to before, took no ſmall diſpleaſure againſt him: inſomuch that he (threatning to him and his baniſhment and death) began to call him to reckonings, and to burthen him with payments, that all men might underſtand that the Kings mind was ſore ſet againſt him. The Archbiſhop hereupon (whether more for the love of the Pope, or dread of his Prince) thought to make an eſcape out of the Realm, and ſo went about in the night (with two or three with him ſtealing out of his houſe) to take the Sea privily. Now amongſt others the Kings Ordinances and Sanctions, this was one, That none of the Prelacy or Nobility without the Kings Licence (or of his Juſtices) ſhould depart out of the Realm. So Becket twice attempted the Sea to flee to the See of Rome; but the weather not ſerving, he was driven home again, and his device for that time fruſtrated. After his departure began to be known and noiſed abroad, the Kings Officers came to Canterbury to ſeize upon his goods in the Kings behalf. But as it chanced, the night before their coming, Becket being returned, and found at home, they did not proceed in their purpoſe.

Becket enterpleth againſt the Kings Laws to fly out of the Realm.

Upon this, the Archbiſhop (underſtanding the King fore bent againſt him, and the Seas not to ſerve him) made haſte to the Court, lying then at Woodſtock; where the King received him (after a certain manner) but nothing ſo familiarly as he was wont, taunting him jeſtingly and merrily, as though one Realm were not able to hold them both. Becket (although he was permitted to go and come at his pleaſure to the Court) yet could not obtain the favour that he would, perceiving both in himſelf, and confeſſing no leſs to others, how the matter would fall out, ſo that either he ſhould be conſtrained to give over with ſhame, or ſtoutly ſtand to that which he had ſo boldly taken in hand. The Archbiſhop of York in the mean time (going betwixt the King and the Archbiſhop) laboured to make a peace and love betwixt them; but the King in no caſe would be reconciled, unleſs the other would ſubſcribe to his Laws. So the while, neither the King would otherwiſe agree, nor yet the Archbiſhop in any wiſe would ſubſcribe, there was a foul diſcord; where the fault was, let the Reader here judge between them both. The King for his regal authority thought it much that any Subject of his ſhould ſtand againſt him. The Archbiſhop again (bearing himſelf bold upon the authority, and eſpecially upon the Letters of the Pope lately written to him) thought him ſtrong enough againſt the King and all his Realm. Again, ſuch was his quarrel for the maintenance of liberties and glory of the Church, that he could lack no fetters on and favourers in that behalf, in ſo ſweet a cauſe amongſt the Clergy. Wherefore the Archbiſhop (truſting to theſe things) would give no place, but by vertue of his Apoſtolical Authority gave cenſure upon theſe Laws and Conſtitutions of the King, condemning ſome, and otherſome approving for good and Catholick, as is before declared. Beſides this, there came alſo to the King Rotrodus Archbiſhop of Rothomage (ſent from the Pope) to make peace betwixt the King and Canterbury: whereunto the King was well content, ſo that the Pope would agree to ratifie his Ordinances. But when that could in no wiſe be obtained at the Popes hands, then the King being ſtopped and fruſtrate of his purpoſe by reaſon of Beckets Apoſtolick Legacy (being Legatus a latere) thought good to ſend up to the Pope, and ſo did, to obtain of him, that the ſame Authority of the Apoſtolick Legacy might be conferred to another after his appointment, which was the Archbiſhop of York: but the Pope denied. Notwithſtanding at the requeſt of the King Clergy, the Pope was content that the King ſhould be Legate himſelf; whereat the King took great indignation (as Hoveden writeth) ſo that he ſent the Pope his Letters again. Here the Pope was perplexed on both ſides.

Ex Rogero Hoved. pro. Hiſtoria continuat. poſt Bedam.

The King to be the Popes Legate.

If he ſhould have denied the King, that was too hot for him: for the Pope uſeth always to hold in with Kings howſoever the world ſpeedeth. Again, if he ſhould have forſaken ſuch a Churchly Chaplain (the cauſe being ſo ſweet and ſo gainful) that ſhould have been againſt himſelf. What did he then? Here now cometh in the old practiſe of Popiſh Prelacy, to play with both hands: privily he conſpireth with the one, and openly diſſembleth with the other. Firſt he granted to the Kings Ambaſſadors their requeſt, to have the Legate removed, and to place in that Office the Archbiſhop of York, to his own contentation; and yet notwithſtanding (to tender the cauſe of Thomas Becket) he addeth this promiſe withall, that the ſaid Becket ſhould receive no harm or damage thereby. Thus the Pope craftily conveying the matter between them both, gladly to further the Archbiſhop for his own advantage, and yet loath to deny the King for diſpleaſure, writeth to the King openly, and alſo ſecretly directeth another Letter to Becket: the contents whereof here follow.

The crafty diſſimulation of the Pope.

Alexander the Pope, to Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

ALthough we, condeſcending to the Kings Requeſt, have granted the gift of our Legacy after his mind from you: yet let not your mind thereby be diſcomforted, nor brought into fights of deſpair. For before that we had granted that, or gave our conſent thereunto, the Kings Ambaſſadors firmly promiſed in the word of truth (ready alſo to be ſworn upon the ſame, if I would ſo have required) that their Letters alſo which he had obtained, ſhould not be delivered to the Archbiſhop of York without our knowledge and conſent therein. This is certain, and ſo perſwade your ſelf boldly without any ſcruple, doubt or miſtruſt, that it was never my mind or purpoſe, nor ever ſhall be (God willing) to ſubdue you or your Church under the obedience of any perſon, to be ſubject to any, ſave only to the Biſhop of Rome. And therefore we warn you and charge you, that if you ſhall perceive the King to deliver theſe foreſaid Letters, which we truſt he will not attempt without our knowledge to do, forthwith by ſome truſty Meſſengers or by your Letters you will give us knowledge thereof: whereby we may provide upon the ſame both for your perſon, your Church, and alſo your City committed to you, to be clearly exempt by our Authority Apoſtolical, from all power and juriſdiction of any Legacy.

The Popes ſecret Letter to Becket, &c.

Upon theſe Letters and ſuch others (as is ſaid before) Becket ſeemed to take all his boldneſs to be ſo ſtout and ſturdy againſt his Prince, as he was. The Pope (beſide theſe) ſent ſecretly a Chaplain of his, and directed another Letter alſo unto the King, granting and permitting at his requeſt, to make the Archbiſhop of York Legate Apoſtolical.

The

The King (after he had received his Letters sent from the Pope) began to put more strength to his purposed proceedings against the Archbishop, first beginning with the Inferiors of the Clergy, such as were Offendors against his Laws: as Felons, Robbers, Quarrellers, Breakers of peace, and especially such as had committed Homicide and Murthers, whereof more than an hundred at that time were proved upon the Clergy (as witnesseth Guliel. Neubrigensis, in his Book De gestis Anglorum, lib. 2. cap. 16.) urging and constraining them to be arraigned after the order of the Law Temporal, and justice to be ministred to them according to their deserts: as first to be deprived, and so to be committed to the secular hands. This seemed to Becket to derogate from the liberties of holy Church, that the secular Power should pass in Causes Criminal, or sit in Judgment against any Ecclesiastical person. This Law, the Rosters (then of the Clergy) had picked and forged out of Anacletus and Euaristus, by whose falsly alledged and pretensed Authority, they have deduced this their Constitution from the Apostles, which giveth immunity to all Ecclesiastical persons to be free from Secular Jurisdiction. Becket therefore, like a valiant Champion (fighting for his Liberties, and having the Pope on his side) would not permit his Clerks infamed otherwise, to be convented, than before Ecclesiastical Judges, there to be examined and deprived for their excess, and no secular Judge to proceed against them: so that after their deprivation, if they should incur the like offence again, then the Temporal Judge to take hold upon them, otherwise not. This obstinate and stubborn rebellion of the Archbishop stirred up much anger and vexation in the King, and not only in him, but also in the Nobles and all the Bishops (for the greater part) that almost he was alone a wonderment to all the Realm.

More than an hundred murthers done by the Clergy.

Guliel. Neubrig. lib. 2. cap. 16.

Becket cited to Northampton.

The Kings wrath daily increased more and more against him (as no marvel it was) and caused him to be cited up to appear by a certain day at the Town of Northampton, there to make answer to such things as should be laid to his charge. So when the day was come (all the Peers and Nobles, with the Prelates of the Realm upon the Kings Proclamation being assembled in the Castle of Northampton) great fault was found with the Archbishop for that he (personally cited to appear) came not himself, but sent another for him. The cause why he came not, Hoveden assigneth to be this: for that the King had placed his Horse and Horse-men in the Archbishops lodging (which was a house there of Canons) wherewith he being offended, sent word again that he would not appear, unless his lodging were voided of the Kings Horse-men, &c. Whereupon (by the publick sentence as well of all the Nobles, as of the Bishops) all his moveables were adjudged to be confiscate for the King, unless the Kings Clemency would remit the penalty. The stubborn Archbishop again (for his part) quarrelling against the order and form of the Judgment, complaineth, alledging for himself (seeing he is the Primate, and spiritual Father, not only of all other in the Realm, but also of the King himself) that it was not convenient that the Father should be so judged of his Children, nor the Pastor of his Flock so condemned, saying moreover, That the Ages to come should know what Judgment was done, &c. But especially he complaineth of his fellow-Bishops (when they should rather have taken his part) who did sit in Judgment against their Metropolitan. And this was the first days action.

The Archbishop condemned in the Council of Northampton in the loss of all moveables.

The next day following, the King laid an action against him in the behalf of one that was his Marshal (called John) for certain injuries done to him, and required of the said Archbishop the repaying again of certain money, which he (as is said) had lent unto him being Chancellor, the sum whereof came to 500 Marks. This money the Archbishop denied not but he had received of the King, howbeit, by the way and title of Gift as he took it, though he could bring no probation thereof. Whereupon, the King required him to put in affurance for the payment thereof: whereat the Archbishop making delays (not well contented at the matter) was so called upon, that either he should be countable to the King for the money, or else he should incur present danger, the King being so bent against him. The Archbishop being brought to such a strait, and destitute of his own Suffragans, could here by no means have escaped, had not five persons of their own accord stepped in, being bound for him, every man for 100 marks a piece. And this was upon the second day concluded.

Becket required to give an account.

The morrow after, which was the third day of the Council, as the Archbishop was sitting below in a certain Conclave with his fellow-Bishops about him, consulting together, the doors fast locked to them, as the King had willed and commanded, it was propounded unto him in the behalf of the King, that he had divers Bishopricks, and Abbaricks in his hand which were vacant, with the Fruits and Revenues thereof due unto the King for certain years, whereof he had rendred as yet no account to the King: wherfore it was demanded of him to bring in a full and clear reckoning of the same. This, with other such like, declared to all the Council, great displeasure to be in the King, and no less danger toward the Archbishop.

The advice of the Bishops for Thomas Becket.

THus, while the Bishops and Prelates were in Council, advising and deliberating what was to be done, at length it came to Voices, every man to say his mind, and to give sentence what were the best way for their Archbishop to take. First began Henry Bishop of Winchester, who then took part with Becket so much as he durst for fear of the King, who said, He remembred that the said Archbishop, first being Archdeacon, and then Lord Chancellor, at what time as he was promoted to the Church of Canterbury, was discharged from all bonds and reckonings of the Temporal Court, as all the other Bishops could not but bear record to the same.

The verdict of the Bishop of Winchester.

Next spake Gilbert, Bishop of London, exhorting and motioning the Archbishop, that he should call with him himself to mind from whence the King took him, and for him up: what, and how great things he had done for him: also that he should consider with himself the dangers and perils of the time, and what ruine he might bring upon the whole Church (and upon them all there present) if he resisted the Kings mind in the things he required. And if it were to render up his Archbishoprick (although it were ten times better than it is) yet he should not stick with the King in the matter. In so doing it might happen, the King seeing that submission and humility in him, would release him peradventure of all the rest. To this the Archbishop answering, Well, well (saith he) I perceive well enough, my Lord, whither you tend, and whither about you go. Then spake Winchester, inferring upon the same, This form of Counsel (saith he) seemeth to me very pernicious to the Catholick Church, tending to our subversion, and to the confusion of us all. For if our Archbishop and Primate of all England do lean to this example, that every Bishop should give over his Authority and the Charge of the Flock committed to him, at commandment and threatning of the Prince, to what State shall the Church be brought then, but that all should be confounded at his pleasure and arbitrement, and nothing shall stand certain by any order of Law, and so as the Priest is, so shall the people be?

The counsel of the Bishop of London.

Canterbury.

Winchester.

Hilary the Bishop of Chichester replieth again to this, saying, If it were not that the instance and the great perturbation of time did otherwise require and force us, I would think this counsel here given were good to be followed. But now seeing the Authority of our Canon faileth, and cannot serve us, I judge it not best to go so frivilly to work, but so to moderate our proceedings, that dispensation with sufferance may win that which severe correction may destroy. Wherefore my counsel and reason is, to give place to the Kings purpose for a time, lest by over hasty proceeding, we exceed so far, that both it may redound to our shame, and also we cannot rid our selves out again when we would.

Chichester.

Much to the same end spake Robert the Bishop of Lincoln after this manner, Seeing (saith he) it is manifest that the life and blood of this man is sought, one of these two must needs be chosen: that either he must part with his Archbishoprick, or else with his life. Now what profit he shall take in this matter of his Bishoprick, his life being lost, I do not greatly see.

Lincoln.

Next followed Bartholomew Bishop of Exceter with his Exceter.

his advice, who inclining his Council to the state of the time, confirmed their sayings before, affirming how the days were evil and perilous; and if they might so escape the violence of that raging tempest under the cover of bearing and relenting, it were not to be refused. But that, he said, could not be, except strict severity should give place to tractability; and so the instance and condition of time then present required no less, especially seeing that Perfection was not general, but personal and particular; and thought it more holy and convenient, one head to run into some part of danger, than the whole Church of England to be subject and exposed to inconvenience inevitable.

Worcester.

The Answer of Roger Bishop of Worcester was devised in a double suspence, neither affirming the one, nor denying the other, whose saying was this, That he would give answer on neither part; for if I (saith he) should say that the Pastoral Function and Cure of Souls ought to be relinquished at the Kings will or threatning, then my mouth shall speak against my conscience to the condemnation of mine own head. And if I shall give again contrary counsel to resist the Kings Sentence, here he they that will bear it, and report it to his Grace, and so I shall be in danger to be thrust out of the Synagogue, and for my part to be accounted among st the publick Rebels, with them to be condemned: wherefore neither do I say this, nor counsel that.

Becket the Archbishop replieth against the Bishops.

And this was the Consultation of the Bishops in that place, assembled together by the Kings Commandment. Against these Voices and Censures of the Bishops, Becket the Archbishop replieth again, expostulating and checking them with rebukeful words, I perceive (saith he) and understand ye go about to maintain and cherish but your own cowardliness under the colourable shadow of sufferance: and under pretence of dissembling softness to cloak the Liberty of Christs Church. Who hath thus bewitched you, O unstable Bishops? What mean ye? Why do ye so, under the impudent Title of forbearing, bear a double beart, and cloak your manifest Iniquity? What call ye this bearing with time, to the detriment of the Church of Christ? Let terms serve the matter. Why pervert you the matter that is good with vocables and terms untrue? For that ye say we must bear with the malice of time, I grant with you: but yet we must not heap sin to sin. Is not God able to help the State and condition of his Church, but with the sinful dissimulation of the Teachers of the Church? Certes God is disposed to tempt you. And tell me (I pray you) whether should the Governors of the Church put themselves to dangers for the Church in time of Tranquility, or in time of Distress; Ye will be ashamed to deny the contrary, but in Distress. And now when the Church lying in so great distress and vexation) why should not the good Pastor put himself into peril therefore? For neither do I think it a greater Act or merit for the ancient Bishops of the old time, to lay the Foundation of the Church then with their blood, than now for to shed our blood for the Liberties of the same. And to tell you plain, I think it not safe for you to separate from an Example which you have received of your holy Elders.

A great difference grows in the Church, because that Bishops may certain space, being locked in together. At length (to find a shift to cause the door to be opened) I will (saith the Archbishop) speak with two Earls which are about the King, and named them who they were. Who (being called) opened the door and came in with haft, thinking to hear some thing which should appease the Kings mind. To whom the Archbishop spake in this manner; As touching and concerning the matters between the King and us, we have here conferred together. And forsomuch as we have them not present with us now, which knew more in the matter than we do (whole advice we would be glad to follow) therefore we crave so much respite as till the next day following, and then to give our Answer unto the King. With this Message two Bishops were sent to the King, which was the Bishop of London, and the Bishop of Rochester.

Moderate counsel.

London (to help the matter, and to set quietness, as I take it, adding something more to the Message) said to the King, That the Archbishop craved a little delay of time to prepare such writings and instruments, wherein he should set forth and declare his mind in accomplishing the Kings desire, &c. Wherefore two Barons were sent to him from the King to grant him that respit or stay; so that he would ratifie that which the Messengers had signified to the King. To which the Archbishop answereth, That he sent no Message as was intimate in his name: but only that the next day he would come and give answer to the King, in that which he had to say. And so the Convocation of the Bishops was dissolved and dismissed home: so that the most part of them that came with the Archbishop and accompanied him before (for fear of the Kings displeasure) severed themselves from him. The Archbishop thus forsaken and destitute (as his story saith) sent about for the Poor, the Lame, and the Halt, to come in and furnish his house, saying, That by them he might sooner obtain his Victory, than by the others which had so slipt from him.

London appealeth from the Archbishop.

Becket taken with sickness when he should appear.

On the next day following, because it was Sunday, nothing was done. So the day after, which was the second Fery, the Archbishop was cited to appear. But the night before (being taken with a Disease called Passio iliaca, the Collique) as that day he kept his bed, and was not able, as he said, to rise. Every man supposing this to be but a fained sickness, as it seemed no less, certain of the chief Nobles were sent to try the matter, and to cite him to the Court: namely, Robert Earl of Leicester, and Reginald, Earl of Devonshire. To whom the Archbishop answered, That as that day he was so diseased, that he could not come, yea, though he were brought in an Horslitter. So that day passed over. The morrow after, certain that were about him, fearing no less but that some danger would happen to him, gave him counsel in the morning to have a Mass in the honour of the holy Martyr S. Stephen, to keep him from the hands of his Enemies that day. When the morrow was come (being Tuesday) there came to him the Bishops, and Prelates, counselling and persuading him covertly by intimation (for apertly they durst not) that he would submit himself with all his goods (as also his Archbishoprick) to the will of the King, if peradventure his indignation by that means might asswage. Adding moreover, that unless he would so do, perjury would be laid against him: for that he being under the oath of fidelity to keep the Kings Laws and Ordinances, now would not observe them. To this Becket the Archbishop answereth again, Brethren, ye see and perceive well how the world is set against me, and how the Enemy riseth and seeketh my confusion. And although these things be dolorous and lamentable, yet the thing that grieveth me most of all, is this. The Sons of mine own Mother be pricks and thorns against me. And albeit I do hold my peace, yet the Posterity to come will know and report how cowardly you have turned your backs, and have left your Archbishop and Metropolitan alone in his Conflict, and how you have sitten in Judgment against me (although unjustly of Crime) now two days together, and not only in the Civil and Spiritual Court, but also in the Temporal Court ready to do the same. But in general, this I charge and command (as the virtue of pure Obedience, and in peril of your Order) that ye be present personally in Judgment against me. And that ye shall not fail so to do, I here appeal to our Mother (the refuge of all such as be oppressed) the Church of Rome: and if any secular men shall lay hands upon me (as it is rumored they will) I straitly enjoyn and charge you in the same virtue of Obedience, that you exercise your Censure Ecclesiastical upon them, as it becometh you to do for a Father and an Archbishop. And this I do you to understand, that though the World rage, and the Enemy be fierce, and the Body trembleth (for the flesh is weak) yet God so favouring me, I will neither cowardly shrink, nor yet wilely forsake my Flock committed to my Charge, &c.

Becket appealeth to Rome.

A Mass of S. Stephen to save him from his Enemies.

But the Bishop of London, contrary to this commandment of the Archbishop, did incontinent appeal from him. And thus the Bishops departed from him to the Court, save only two, Henry of Winchester, and Joceline of Salisbury, who returned with him secretly to his Chamber, and comforted him. This done, the Archbishop (which yesterday was so sore sick that he could not stir out of his bed) now addresseth him to his Mass of S. Stephen with all solemnity, as though it had been an high Festival-day, with his Metropolitan Pall, which was not used but upon the holy day to be worn, &c. The Office of the Mass began, Sederunt Principes & adversum me me loquebantur; that is, Princes fate and ſpake againſt me, &c. (the Kings ſervants being alſo there and beholding the matter.) For this Maſs Gilbert Biſhop of London accuſed Becket afterward, both for that it was done, Per artem magicam, & in contemptum regis (as the words of Hoveden purport) that is, both by art of magick, and in contempt of the King, &c.

Becket curſieth with him the Sacrament going to the King.

The Maſs being ended, the Archbiſhop (putting off his Pall, his Mitre and other robes) proceedeth to the Kings Court: But yet not truſſings, peradventure, ſo greatly the ſtrength of his Maſs (to make the matter more ſure) he taketh alſo the Sacrament privily about him, thinking himſelf thereby ſufficiently defended againſt all bugs. In going to the Kings chamber (there to attend the Kings coming) as he entred the door, he taketh from Alexander his Crotier, the Croſs with the Croſs Staffe, in the ſight of all that ſtood by, and carrieth it in himſelf, the other Biſhops following him, and ſaying, he did otherwiſe than became him. Amongſt others, Robert Biſhop of Hereford, offered himſelf to bear his Croſs, rather than he ſhould ſo do, for that it was not comely; but the Archbiſhop would not ſuffer him. Then ſaid the Biſhop of London unto him; If the King ſhall ſee you come armed into his chamber, perchance he will draw out his Sword againſt you, which is ſtronger than yours, and then what ſhall this your account profit you? The Archbiſhop anſwereth again; If the Kings Sword do cut carnally, yet my Sword cutteth ſpiritually, and ſtriketh down to Hell. But you, my Lord, as you have plaid the fool in this matter, ſo you will not yet leave off your folly for any thing I can ſee; and ſo he came into the chamber. The King hearing of his coming, and of the manner thereof, tarried not long, but came where Becket was ſet in a place by himſelf with his other Biſhops about him. Firſt, the Cryer called the Prelates and all the Lords of the Temporalty together. That being done (and every one placed in his ſeat according to his degree) the King beginneth with a great complaint againſt the Archbiſhop for his manner of entring into the Court, not as (ſaith he) a ſubject into a Kings Court; but as a Traytor, ſhewing himſelf in ſuch fort as hath not been ſeen before in any Chriſtian Kings Court, profeſſing Chriſtian faith. To this all there preſent gave witneſs with the King, affirming him always to be a vain and proud Man, and that the ſhame of his fact did not only redound againſt the Prince himſelf, but alſo againſt his whole Realm. Moreover, they ſaid that this had ſo happened to the King, for that he had done ſo much for ſuch a Beaſt, advancing him ſo highly to ſuch a place and room next under himſelf. And ſo all together with one cry, called him Traytor on every ſide, as one that refuſed to give terrene honour to the King, in keeping (as he had Sworn) his Laws and Ordinances, at whoſe hands alſo he had received ſuch honour and great preferments: And therefore he was well worthy (ſaid they) ſo be handled like a perjured Traytor and Rebel. Whereupon great doubt and fear was what ſhould befall him. The Archbiſhop of York, coming down to his men, ſaid, he could not abide to ſee what the Archbiſhop of Canterbury was like to ſuffer. Likewiſe, the Topſtaves, and other Miniſters of the aſſembly, coming down with an outcry againſt him, croſſed them to ſee his Haughty ſtubbornneſs, and the buſineſs there was about him. Certain there were of his Diſciples ſitting at his feet, comforting him ſoftly, and bidding him to lay his curſe upon them. Others (contrary) bidding him not to Curſe, but to Pray and forgive them; and if he loſt his life in the quarrel of the Church and the liberty thereof, he ſhould be happy. Afterward, one of them, named Johannes Stephani, deſired to ſpeak ſomething in his ear; but could not be ſuffered by the Kings Marſhal, who forbad that any man ſhould have any talk with him. Then he (becauſe he could not otherwiſe ſpeak to him) wrought by ſigns, making a croſs, and looking up with his Eyes, and wagging his lips, meaning that he ſhould pray, and manfully ſtand to the cauſe. In the mean time cometh to him Bartholomew Biſhop of Exceſter, deſiring him to have regard and compaſſion of himſelf, and alſo of them, or elſe they were all like to periſh for the hatred of him: for there cometh out (ſaith he) a Precept from the King that he ſhall be taken, and ſuffer for an open Rebel, that hereafter taketh your part. It is ſaid moreover that Jocelinus Biſhop of Salisbury, and William Biſhop of Norwich are to be had to the place of Execution, for their reſiſting and making interceſſion for the Biſhop of Canterbury. When he had thus ſaid, the Archbiſhop (looking upon the ſaid Biſhop of Exceſter) Avoid hence from me, ſaith he, thou underſtandeſt not, neither doſt favour thoſe things that be of God.

A blind Zeal for the proud liberties of the Church.

Who ſo taketh Beckets part is counted a Rebel.

The Biſhops and Prelates then going aſide by themſelves from the other Nobles, the King ſo permitting them to do, took Council together what was to be done. Here the mateer ſtood in a doubtful perplexity, for either muſt they incur the dangerous Indignation of the King, or elſe with the Nobles they muſt proceed in condemnation againſt the Archbiſhop for reſiſting the Kings Sanctions; which thing they themſelves neither did favour. In this ſtrict neceſſity, they, deviſing what way to take, at length agreed upon this; that they with a common aſſent ſhould cite the Archbiſhop to the See of Rome upon perjury: and that they ſhould oblige and bind themſelves to the King with a ſure promiſe, to work their diligence in depoſing the Archbiſhop; upon this condition, that the King ſhould promiſe their ſafety, and diſcharge them from the peril of that judgment which was towards them. So all the Biſhops, obliging themſelves thus to the King, went forth to the Archbiſhop; of whom one ſpeaking for the reſt (which was Hilary Biſhop Chicheſter) had theſe words: Once you have been our Archbiſhop, and ſo long we were bound to your obedience; but now for as much as you, once ſwearing your fidelity to the King, do reſiſt him, neglecting his Injunctions and Ordinances, concerning and appertaining to his Terrene Honour and Dignity; we here pronounce you perjured, neither be we bound to give obedience to an Archbiſhop thus being perjured; but, putting our ſelves and all ours in the Popes Protection, we do cite you up to his preſence. And upon the ſame, they aſſigned him his day and time to appear. The Archbiſhop anſwering again, ſaid, he heard him well enough, and upon this ſendeth up to Rome in all haſte to the Pope, ſignifying to him by Letters, the whole matter, how, and wherefore, and by whom he was cited, To whom the Pope directed again his Letters of comfort (as he had done divers before) the Copy whereof here enſueth.

Becket cited to Rome upon perjury by the Biſhops.

Becket condemned of perjury. Becket cited to Rome.

Pope Alexander to Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

YOur Brotherly Letters, which you directed to us, and ſuch other matters which your meſſenger by word of mouth hath ſignified unto us, we have diligently heard the reading thereof: and thereby fully underſtand the grievous vexations and dolorous griefs wherewith your mind is dayly incumbred: By reaſon whereof, we, hearing and underſtanding, are not a little diſquieted in our Spirit for your ſake: In whoſe Proſperities we do both gladly rejoyce, and no leſs do ſorrow in your adverſities as for our moſt dear Brother. You therefore (as a conſtant and wiſe man) remember with your ſelf that which is written: The Apoſtles departed away (rejoycing) from the face of the Counſel, &c. With like patience do you alſo ſuſtain that mans moleſtations, and let not your Spirit be trobled therein more than needeth, but receive in your ſelf conſolation: That we alſo together with you may be comforted in the Lord, who hath preſerved you to the corroboration of his Catholique and Chriſtian verity, in this diſtreſs of neceſſity: and from whom alſo it hath pleaſed him to wipe away the blot of ſuch things which have been unorderly of you committed, and here to punish the ſame through ſundry afflictions: whereby (in the ſtrict judgment of God) they might not be called to account hereafter. But henceforth let not this much grieve you: neither let your heart be ſo dejected or timorous in the matter (for that you are cited up to the Apoſtolick See) which to us is both grateful and accepted. And this we will you, that if they which have cited you ſhall chance to come; draw not you back, but follow the appeal, if you pleaſe, and ſpare not, all doubt and delay ſet apart: for the Authority of the Church, tendring this your conſtancy, may not do that which may put you in fear, or doubt. But our diligence ſhall be, with all labour and ſtudy, to conſerve the Right and Prehemminence, God willing of that Church committed to you, ſo much as in us lyeth (ſaving our our juſtice and equity) as to one whom, in working for the Church, we find to be both a conſtant and a valiant Champion. Further, this I brotherly require you, to repair unto the Church of Canterbury: and retaining but a few Clerks about you (ſuch only as ſerve your neceſſity) make no excurſes out (as little as you can) in that Country. But in this eſpecially I thought to premoniſh you, that in no caſe, neither for fear, or any adverſity, whatſoever may happen you be brought to renounce and give up the right and dignity of your Church. Written at Sene, the ſeventh before the Kalends of November.

Becket called to a full accoint.

As the Archbiſhop was thus cited up to Rome, ſitting with his Croſs waiting in the Court, neither giving place to the Kings requeſt, nor abaſhed with the clamour of the whole Court againſt him, calling him Traytor on every ſide, neither following the advertiſement of his fellow-Biſhops, at length the King by certain Earls and Barons, ſent commandment to him (Robert Earl of Leiceſter doing the meſſage) that he ſhould without delay come and render a full account of all things that he had received, as the Profits and Revenues of the Realm, in the time he was Chancellor, and ſpecially for the 30000 marks, for the which he was accountable to the King. To whom the Archbiſhop anſwereth again, The King knew how oft he had made his reckoning of thoſe things which now were required of him. Further and beſides, Henry his Son and Heir of his Realm, with all his Barons, and alſo Richard Lucy, chief Juſtice of England told him, That he was free and quit to God, and to holy Church from all Receits and Computations, and from all ſecular Exactions on the Kings behalf. And ſo he, taking thus his Diſcharge at their hands, entred into his Office; and therefore other account befides this he would make none. When this word was brought to the King, he required his Barons to do the Law upon him; who, ſo doing, judged him to be apprehended and laid in priſon. This done, the King ſendeth to him Reginald, Earl of Cornwal and Devonſhire, and Robert, Earl of Leiceſter, to declare to him what was his judgment. To whom the Archbiſhop anſwereth, Hear, my Son, and good Earl, what I ſay unto you: how much more precious the Soul is than the Body, ſo much more ought you to obey me in the Lord, rather than your terrene King. Neither doth any Law or Reaſon permit the Children to judge and condemn their Father. Wherefore, to avoid both the judgment of the King, of you, and all others, I put my ſelf only to the arbitrement of the Pope, under God alone to be judged of him, and of no other; to whoſe preſence here before you all I do appeal, committing the ordering of the Church of Canterbury, my Dignity, with all other things appertaining to the ſame, under the Protection of God and him. And as for you, my Brethren and fellow-Biſhops, which rather obey Man than God, you alſo I call and cite to the Audience and Judgment of the Pope, and depart henceforth from you, as from the Enemies of the Catholick Church, and of the Authority of the Apoſtolick See.

Ex Regiſtro Hovedeni.

Becket ſolden to be laid in priſon.

Ex quadripartito hiſt. l. 1. c. 58.

Becket appealeth to the Pope.

Becket thinketh not the protection of God ſufficient without the Pope.

While the Barons returned with this Anſwer to the King, the Archbiſhop, paſſing through the throng, taketh unto him his Paſſyy, holding his Croſs in one hand, and his Bridle in the other, the Courtiers following after, and crying, Traytor, Traytor, tarry and hear thy Judgment. But he paſſed on till he came to the uttermoſt Gate of the Court, which being faſt locked, there he had been ſtaid, had not one of his Servants called Peter, ſurnamed Demunciſtorio, finding there a bunch of Keys hanging by, firſt proved one Key, then another, till at laſt, finding the true Key, he had opened the Gate, and let him out. The Archbiſhop went ſtraight to the Houſe of Canons, where he did lie, calling unto him the poor, where they could be found. When Supper was done, making as though he would go to bed, which he cauſed to be made between two Altars, privily while the King was at Supper, he prepareth his Journey ſecretly to eſcape away; and changing his Garment and his Name, being called Derman, firſt went to Lincoln, from thence to Sandwich, where he took Ship, and failed into Flanders, and from thence journyed into France, as Hovedenus ſaith. Albeit Alanus, differing ſomething in the order of his flight, ſaith, That he departed not that night; but at ſupper-time came to him the Biſhops of London and Chicheſter, declaring to him, that if he would ſurrender up to the King his two Manors of Otford and Wingcham, there were hope to recover the Kings favour, and to have all remitted. But when the Archbiſhop would not agree thereunto, forſomuch as thoſe Manors were belonging to the Church of Canterbury, the King hearing thereof, great diſpleaſure was taken, inſomuch that the next day Becket was fain to ſend to the King two Biſhops and his Chaplain for leave to depart the Realm. To the which Meſſage the King anſwered, That he would take pauſe thereof till the next day, and then he ſhould have an Anſwer. But Becket not tarrying his anſwer, the ſame day conveyed himſelf away ſecretly, as is aforeſaid, to Ludovicus the French King. But before he came to the King, Gilbert the Biſhop of London, and William the Earl of Arundel, ſent from the King of England to France, Prevented him: requiring the ſaid French King in the behalf of the King of England, that he would not receive, nor retain in his Dominion the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Moreover, that at his inſtance he would be a means to the Pope, not to ſhew any familiarity unto him. But the King of England in this point ſeemed to have more confidence in the French King, than knowledge of his diſpoſition. For thinking that the French King would have been a good Neighbour to him, in truſting him too much he was deceived. Neither conſidered he with himſelf enough the manner and nature of the Frenchmen at that time againſt the Realm of England; who then were glad to ſeek and take all manner of occaſions to do ſome Act againſt England.

Becket taketh his flight.

Becket changeth his name, and is called Derman. Hilar. ſaith he differ ſomething in the order of his flight.

The French King ſupporteth Becket againſt the King of England.

And therefore Ludovick the French King, underſtanding the matter, and thinking (per-cafe) thereby to have ſome vantage againſt the King and Realm of England, by the occaſion hereof, contrary to the Kings Letters and Requeſt, not only harboureth and cheriſheth this Dermon, but alſo (writing to the Pope by his Almoner and Brother) intreateth him (upon all loves, as ever he would have his favour) to tender the cauſe of the Archbiſhop Becket. Thus the Kings Ambaſſadors repulſed of the French King, returned; at what time he ſent another Ambaſſage (upon the like cauſe) to Alexander the Pope, then being at Sene in France. The Ambaſſadors ſent on this Meſſage were Roger Archbiſhop of York, Gilbert Biſhop of London, Henry Biſhop of Wincheſter, Hilary Biſhop of Chicheſter, Bartholomew Biſhop of Exceſter, with other Doctors and Clerks: alſo William Earl of Arundel, with certain more Lords and Barons, who coming to the Popes Court were friendly accepted of certain of the Cardinals; amongſt the which Cardinals roſe alſo diſſention about the ſame in the defence of the Liberties of the Church (as in a good cauſe) was to be maintained. Some thinking again, that he (being a Perturber of Peace and Unity) was rather to be bridled for his preſumption, than to be foſtered and incouraged therein. But the Pope partly bearing with his cauſe (which only tended to his Exaltation and Magnificence) partly again incenſed with the Letters of the French King, did wholly incline to Becket, as no marvel was. Wherefore the next day following, the Pope ſitting in conſiſtory with his Cardinals, the Ambaſſadors were called for to the hearing of Beckets matter; and firſt beginneth the Biſhop of London; next, the Archbiſhop of York; then Exceſter; and the other Biſhops every one in their order to ſpeak. Whoſe Orations being not well accepted of the Pope, and ſome of them alſo diſdained; the Earl of Arundel perceiving that (and ſomewhat to qualifie and temper the matter to the Popes ears) began after this manner:

Ambaſſadors ſent to the Pope.

The Oration of the Earl of Arundel to the Pope.

ALthough to me it is unknown (ſaith he) which am both unlettered and ignorant, what it is that theſe Biſhops here have ſaid, neither am I in that Tongue ſo able to expreſs my mind as they have done: yet being ſent and charged thereunto of my Prince, neither can nor ought I but to declare (as well as I may) what the cauſe is of our ſending hither: not (truly) to contend or ſtrive with any perſon, nor to offer any injury or harm unto any man (eſpecially in this place) and in the preſence here of ſuch an one unto whoſe Beck and Authority all the World doth ſtoop and yield. But for this time is our Legacy hither directed, to preſent here before you, and in the preſence of the whole Church of Rome, the devotion and love of our King and Maſter, which ever he hath had, and yet hath ſtill toward you. And that the ſame might the better appear to your Excellency, he hath aſſigned and appointed to the furniture of this Legacy, not the leaſt, but the greateſt, not the worſt, but the beſt and chiefeſt of all his Subjects; both Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, with other Potentates more, of ſuch worthineſs and Parentage, that if he could have found greater in all his Realm, he would have ſent them, both for the Reverence of your Perſon, and of the holy Church of Rome. Over and beſide this, I might add more (which your Sanctitude hath ſufficiently tried and proved already) the true and hearty Fidelity of this our King and Soveraign toward you (in his firſt entrance to his Kingdom) wholly ſubmitted himſelf, with all that is his beſides, to your will and pleaſure. And truly, to teſtifie of his Majeſty how he is diſpoſed to the unity of the Catholick Faith: we believe there is none more faithful in Chriſt than he, nor more devout to God, nor yet more moderate in keeping the unity of peace whereunto he is called. And as I may be bold this to proteſt for our King and Maſter, ſo neither do I affirm the Archbiſhop of Canterbury to be a man deſtitute or unfurniſhed with Gifts and Ornaments in his kind of calling, but to be a man both ſage and diſcreet in ſuch things as to him appertain, ſave only that he ſeemeth to ſome more quick and ſharp than needeth. This blot alone if it were not, and if the breach between our King and him had not ſo happened, both the Regiments together (of the Temporalty and Spiritualty) might quietly have flouriſhed one with the other in much peace and concord, both under a Prince ſo worthy, and a Paſtor ſo virtuous. Wherefore (the caſe ſo ſtanding as it doth) our Meſſage hither, and our ſupplication to your vigilant prudence is, that (through your favour and wiſdom) the neck of this diſſenſion may be broken, and that Reformation of unity and love (by ſome good means) may be ſought.

¶ This Oration of his, although it was liked of them for the ſoftneſs and moderation thereof, yet it could not ſo perſwade the Romiſh Biſhop to condeſcend to their ſuit and requeſt: which ſuit was, to have two Legates or Arbiters to be ſent from his Popiſh ſide into England, to examine and take up the Controverſie between the King and the Archbiſhop. But the Pope, incenſed as is ſaid before, would not grant to their petition: forſomuch as it ſhould be (ſaith he) prejudicial and tending to the oppreſſion of the Archbiſhop to grant unto it, he being not preſent. And therefore he willed them to tarry his coming up; otherwiſe he being abſent, he would not (he ſaid) in any caſe proceed againſt him. But they, alledging again their time to be expired, appointed unto them of the King, having beſides other lets and cauſes as they alledged, ſaid, That they could not there wait for the coming of Becket, but return back, their cauſe fruſtrated, without the Popes bleſſing to the King. Within four days after Becket cometh to the Popes Court, where he proſtrating himſelf at his feet, brought our of his boſome a Scroll containing the Cuſtoms and Ordinances of the King, before mentioned. The Pope receiving the foreſaid Scroll, and reading it in the open hearing of his Cardinals, condemned and accurſed the moſt part of the ſaid Decrees of the King, which he called Conſuetudines avitas; that is, his Grandfathers Ordinances. Beſides this, the Pope moreover blameth Becket, for that he ſo much yielded to them at the beginning, as he did: yet notwithſtanding (becauſe he was repentant for his unadviſed Fact) he was content to abſolve him for the ſame, and the rather, becauſe of his great Troubles, which he for the Liberties of holy Church did ſuſtain, and ſo with great favour for that day diſmiſſed him.

The Pope rendereth Beckets cauſe againſt the King.

Becket complaineth of the King to the Pope.

His entrance for his well-doing.

The next day (Alexander the Pope aſſembling his Cardinals together in his ſecret Chamber) appeareth before them Archbiſhop Becket, having this Oration to the Pope and his Popelings, which here I thought to ſet out in our vulgar Engliſh-Tongue (tranſlated out of Latine) to the intent that the Poſterity hereafter may underſtand either the vain Superſtition or vile ſlavery of the Church-men in thoſe days, who, being not contented with their own natural Prince and King, given them of God, muſt ſeek further to the Pope; thinking no Eccleſiaſtical Living to be given, which is not taken at his hands. The words of his Oration be ſtoried rightly thus.

The Oration of Becket reſigning his Biſhoprick to the Pope.

FAthers and Lords, I ought not to lie in any place, much leſs before God, and in your preſence here. Wherefore, with much ſighing and ſorrow of heart, I grant and confeſs, that theſe Perturbations of the Church of England be raiſed through my miſerable fault. For I entred into the Fold of Chriſt, but not by the door of Chriſt; for that not the Canonical Election did call me lawfully thereunto, but terror of publick power drove me in. And albeit I againſt my will took this burthen upon me; yet not the will of God, but mans pleaſure placed me in the room. And therefore no marvel though all things have gone contrary and backward with me. And as for the reſigning up again thereof; if I had ſo done, and given up to their hands the priviledge of my Biſhoply Authority, which I had granted to me at the Commandment of the King (ſo as my fellow-Biſhops did inſtantly call upon me to do) then had I left a pernicious and dangerous Example to the whole Catholick Church. By reaſon whereof I thought to defer that unto your preſence. And now there (recognizing with my ſelf my ingreſs not to be Canonical, and therefore fearing it to have the worſe end; and again pondering my ſtrength and ability not to be ſufficient for ſuch a Charge) leſt I ſhould be found to ſuſtain that room to the ruine of the Flock, to whom I was appointed a Paſtor unworthy: I render up to your fatherly hands the Archbiſhoprick here of Canterbury, &c. ¶ And ſo putting off his Ring from his finger, and offering it to the Pope, he deſired a Biſhop for the Church of Canterbury to be provided: ſeeing he thought not himſelf meet to fulfil the ſame, and ſo (with tears, as the ſtory ſaith) he ended his Oration.

Becket reſigneth: the Pope him not in that Eſtate brought him not in.

And why might ye not (Chriſtian Fathers) reſign it as well to the hands of whom ye took it?

This done, the Archbiſhop was bid to ſtand apart. The Pope conferring upon this with his Cardinals, about the reſignation of Becket, what was beſt to be done: Some thought it beſt to take the occaſion offered, thinking thereby the Kings wrath might eaſily be aſſwaged, if the Church of Canterbury were aſſigned to ſome other perſon; and yet the ſaid Becket otherwiſe to be provided for notwithſtanding. Contrary, others again thought otherwiſe, whoſe reaſon was; If he (which for the Liberties of the Church, had ventured not only his Goods, Dignity and Authority, but alſo his Life) ſhould now at the Kings pleaſure be deprived; like as it might be a Preſident hereafter to others in reſiſting their King in like ſort, if this cauſe were maintained; ſo contrariwiſe, if it quailed, it ſhould be an example to all others hereafter, none to reſiſt his Prince in the like caſe. And ſo might it redound not only to the weakning of the ſtate of the Catholick Church, but alſo to the derogation of the Popes Authority. Briefly, this ſentence at length prevailed: and ſo Becket receiveth his Paſtoral Office of the Popes hand again, with commendation and much favour. But for ſo much as he could not be well placed in England, in the mean while the Pope ſendeth him with a Monks habit into the Abbey of Pontiniack in France, where he remained two years; from thence he removed to Senon, where he abode five years. So the time of his exile continued ſeven years in all, &c.

A conſultation between the Pope and the Cardinals about Becket matter.

Becket in baniſhment ſeven years.

Upon this, the King being certified by his Ambaſſadors of the Popes Anſwer, how his favour inclined more to Becket than to him, was moved (and worthily) with wrathful diſpleaſure. Who, upon the ſame failing from England unto Normandy, directed over certain Injunctions againſt the Pope, and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, as were recited afore. The Contents whereof were declared to be theſe:

If any perſon ſhould be found to bring from the Pope, or from the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, &c.

Of theſe, and ſuch other Injunctions, Becket ſpecifieth partly in a certain Letter, writing to a Friend of his in this manner:

THomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to his well beloved Friend, &c. Be it known to your brotherly goodneſs, that we, with all ours here (by Gods Grace) are ſafe and in good health. Having a good hope and truſt to your faithful Amity, I charge you and require you, that either either by the bringer hereof, or by ſome other, (whom ye know faithful and truſty to our Church of Canterbury, and to us) you write with all ſpeed what is done. As touching the Kings decrees here ſet out, theſe they be: That all Havens and Ports ſhould be diligently kept, that no Letters of the Popes Interdict or Curſe be brought in. And if Religious Men bring them in, they ſhall have their feet cut off; if he be a Prieſt or Clerk, he ſhall loſe his Privy Members; if he be a Lay-man, let him be hanged; if he be a Leper, let him be burned. And if any Biſhop, for fear of the Popes Interdict, will depart; beſides his ſtaff only in his hand let him have nothing elſe. Alſo the King's will is, that all Scholars and Students beyond the Seas ſhall repair home; or elſe loſe their Benifices. And if they yet ſhall remain ſtill, they ſhall loſe the liberty of all returning. Further, if any ſuch Prieſts ſhall be found, that for the Popes ſuſpence or Interdict will refuſe to Sing, they ſhall loſe their Privy Members. In ſumme, all ſuch Prieſts as ſhew themſelves Rebels to the King, let them be deprived of their Benifices, &c.

Beſides theſe and ſuch like Injunctions, it was alſo ſet forth by the Kings Proclamation, An. 1166. That all manner of perſons, both Men and Women, whoſoever were found of the kindred of Thomas Becket, ſhould be exiled, without taking any part of their Goods with them, and ſent to him where he was: which was no little vexation to Becket to behold them. Moreover, for ſo much as he then was lying with Gwarine Abbat of Pontiniack, to whom the Pope, as is aforeſaid, had commended him; therefore the King writing to the ſame Abbat, required him not to retain the Archbiſhop of Canterbury in his Houſe: for if he did, he would drive out of his Realm all the Monks of his Order. Whereupon Becket was inforced to remove from thence, and went to Lewis the French King; by whom he was placed at Senon, and there found of him the ſpace of five years as is above mentioned.

Becket kindred baniſhed.

Three Monks were of the Cliſtertian order.

In the mean time, Meſſengers went daily with Letters between the King and the Pope, between the Pope again and him, and ſo between the Archbiſhop and others. Whereof if the Reader (peraventure) ſhall be deſirous to ſee the Copies; I thought here to expreſſe certain of them, to ſatisfie his deſire; firſt beginning with the Epiſtle of Becket, complaining of his Prince to the Pope, in manner and form as followeth.

Becket complaineth of his Prince to the Pope.

The Copy of an Epiſtle ſent of Thomas Becket to Pope Alexander.

"TO your preſence and audience I flie, moſt holy "Father, that you, who hath bought the liberty "of the Church with your ſo great danger, might the ra- "ther attend to the ſame (either being the only or chiefeſt "cauſe of my perſecution) uſing and following therein the "example of you. It grieveth me that the ſtate of the "Church ſhould fall to any decay, and that the liberties "thereof ſhould be infringed through the avarice of Princes. "For the which cauſe I thought to reſiſt betime that incon- "venience beginning ſo to grow. And the more I thought "my ſelf obliged to the ſame, my Prince (unto whom next "under God I am moſt chiefly bound) the more boldneſs I "took to me, to withſtand his unrighteful attempts; till "ſuch as were on the contrary part, my adverſaries, pre- "vailed, working my diſquietneſs, and incenſing him againſt "me. Whereupon, as the manner is amongſt Princes, they "raiſed up againſt me citations and ſlanders, to the occa- "ſion of my perſecution: but I had rather to be proſcribed, "than to ſubſcribe. Beſides this, I was alſo called to judg- "ment, and cited before the King to make anſwer there "as a Lay perſon, to ſecular accounts: whereas they whom "I moſt truſted did moſt forſake me. For I ſaw my fel- "low Brethren the Biſhops, through the inſtigation of ſome, "ready to my condemnation. Whereupon all being ſet "againſt me, and I thus oppreſſed on every ſide, I took "my refuge to appeal unto your goodneſs, which caſteth off "none in their extremities; being ready to make my de- "claration before you, that I ought neither to be judged "there in that place, nor yet of them. For what were "that (Father) but to uſurpe to themſelves your right, and "to bring the ſpirituality under the temporality? Which "thing (once begun) may breed an example to many. And "therefore ſo much the more ſtout I thought to be in with- "ſtanding this matter, how much more prone and pro- "clive I ſaw the way to hurt, if they might once ſee us to "be faint and weak in the ſame. But they will ſay to me "here again: Give to Cæſar that which belongs to Cæſar, "&c. But to anſwer again thereunto, albeit we are bound "to obey our King in moſt things, yet not in ſuch manner "of things, whereby he is made to be no King: neither "were they then things belonging to Cæſar, but to a Ty- "rant. Concerning the which points, theſe Biſhops ſhould "not for me only, but for themſelves, have reſiſted the "King. For if the extream judgment be referred to him "which is able to judge both body and ſoul: is it not then "extream pride for Men there to judge, which judge but "by themſelves? If the cauſe of the Biſhops and of the "Clergy, which I maintain, be right: why be they ſet "againſt me? why do they reprehend me? For if that I "appealed to him, before whom either it was not lawful, "or elſe not expedient for me to do: what ſeem they by "this, but either to blame me cauſeleſs, or elſe to diſtruſt "your equity? For me to be convicted before your Holi- "neſs, it had been a double confuſion. Or wherein have "I deſerved to be perſecuted of them, for whoſe cauſe I "have ſet my ſelf to ſtand in their behalf? And if they had "willed, I had prevailed; but it is ill with the head, when "he is left of his members and forſaken: as if the eyes "ſhould take the tongue to ſpeak againſt the head. If they "had had eyes to have ſcre-ſeen the matter, they might "underſtand themſelves to ſpeak their own deſtruction, "and that the Princes did uſe their help but to their own "ſervitude. And what ſo great cauſe of hatred had they "againſt me, to procure their own undoing in undoing "of me? So while they neglected Spiritual things inſtead "of Temporal, they have loſt them both. What ſhould "I ſpeak more of this, that I repugning them and appeal- "ing to your audience; yet notwithſtanding they durſt "preſume to ſtand in judgment and condemnation againſt "me, as Children againſt their Father? Yea, and not "againſt me only, but againſt the univerſal Church of "God, conſpiring together with the Prince being with me "offended. And this ſuſpection might alſo as well pertain "to you, holy Father. But to this they will ſay, That "they owe their duty and ſervice unto the King, as their "Lord, to whom they are bound upon their allegiance. "To whom I anſwer, That to him they ſtand bound bodi- "ly, to me ſpiritually. But to whom ought they rather "to ſtand bound, than to themſelves? And were it not "better to ſuſtain the loſs of corporal, than of ſpiritual "things? But here they will ſay again: At this time the "Prince was not to be provoked. How ſubtilly do theſe "Men diſpute for their own bondage? Yea, they them- "ſelves provoke him by their own exceſs, miniſtring wings "unto him to fight againſt them; for he would have reſi- "ed, if they had reſiſted. And when is conſtancy more "to be required, than in perſecution? Be not a Mans chief "Friends moſt tried in perſecution? If they give over ſtill, "how ſhall they obtain the victory? Sometimes they muſt "needs reſiſt. Condeſcend not therefore (holy Father) to "my exile and perſecution. And remember, that I alſo "once was a great Man, in the time when it was; and "now for your take thus injuriouſly I am intreated. Uſe "your rigour and reſtrain them, by whoſe inſtigation the "name of this perſecution began. And let none of theſe "things be imputed to the King, who rather is to be coun- "ted the repairer than the author of this buſineſs.

To keep under the pride of Prelats is no cauſe following to unking a Prince.

If ye mean by ſpiritual things ſuch as pertain to the ſpiritual part of mans grant, but your liberties be not ſuch as which pertain to the inward or ſpiritual man, but rather are things more corporal. Perſecution is ſeth a true friend, but every cauſe maketh not a true perſecution.

Beſides this Epiſtle ſent unto the Pope, he writeth alſo another Letter, ſent to the King in Latine; the tenor whereof he that is diſpoſed to read, may peruſe in our former Edition, with the Notes adjoyned withal.

Beſides which Epiſtle to the King in Latine, he ſent alſo one or two more to the ſaid King Henry the Second, much after the like rate and ſort: the one thus beginning: Loqui de Deo, liberæ mentis eſt & valde quietæ. Inde eſt quod loquar ad Dominum meum, & utinam ad omnes pacificum, &c. Which Epiſtle, for that I would not overcharge the Volume of theſe Hiſtories with too much matter ſuperfluous, I thought here to omit. The other he ſent afterwards, whereof the words be theſe.

Another Letter of Becket Archbishop of Canterbury sent to the King.

"TO his Lord and Friend Henry, by the grace of God, "King of England, Duke of Normandy and Aquitain, Earl of Anjou: Thomas by the same grace, humble Minister of the Church of Canterbury (sometime his) "temporarily, but now more his in the Lord) health and "true repentance with amendment. I have long looked, "that the Lord would look upon you, and that you would "convert and repent, departing from your perverse way; "and cut off from you your wicked and preverse Counsellors, "by whose instinction, as it is thought, you are fallen in- "to that deep, whereof the Psalm speaketh, A sinner when "he cometh to the depth of mischiefs, is without care or "fear. And albeit we have hitherto quietly suffered and "born, considering and earnestly looking if there would "any messenger come that would say; Your Soveraign "Lord the King which now a long time hath erred and "been deceived, and led even to the destruction of the "Church, through Gods mercy with abundant humility "doth now again make speed for the deliverance of the "Church, and to make satisfaction and amendment: Yet "notwithstanding, we cease not, day by day, continually "to call upon Almighty God with most humble devotion: "That, that which we have long desired for you, and by you, "we may speedily obtain with abundant effect. And this is "one point; that the care of the Church of Canterbury, "whereunto God hath presently appointed us (albeit unwor- "thy) you being King, doth specially constrain me (in that as "yet we are detained in exile) to write unto your Majesty "Letters Commonitory, Exhortatory, and of Correction. "But I would to God they were fully able to correct, lest "that I be too great a cloker of your outrages (if there be "any) as indeed there are: for the which we are not a lit- "tle sorry. I mean specially of them which are done by "you in every place, about the Church of God and the Ec- "clesiastical persons, without any reverence either of digni- "ty or person; and lest also that I appear negligent to the "great danger of my soul: for without doubt he beareth "the offence of him which doth commit any offence, who "neglecteth to correct that, which another ought to amend. "For it is written, Not only they which do commit evil, "but also they that consent thereunto are counted partakers "of the same. For they verily do consent, which, when "they both might and ought, do not resist, or at the least "reprove. For the error which is not resisted is allowed, "and the truth when it is not defended is oppressed: nei- "ther doth it lack a privy note of society in him, which "ceaseth to withstand a manifest mischief. (2) For like "as, most noble Prince, a small City doth not minish the "prerogative of so mighty a Kingdom as yours is: so your "Royal power ought not to oppress or change the measure "of the Religious dispensation. For it is provided always "by the Laws, that all judgments against Priests should "proceed by the determination of Priests. For whatso- "ever Bishops they are, albeit that they do err as other men "do (not exceeding in any point contrary to the Religion "of Faith) they (3) ought not, nor can in any case be "judged of the secular power. Truly, it is the part of a "good and religious Prince to repair the ruinous Churches, "to build new, to honour the Priests, and with great re- "verence to defend them, after the example of the godly "Prince of most happy memory (4) Constantinus, which "said, when a complaint of the Clergy was brought to "him, You (said he) can be judged by no secular Judge, "which are referred to the only judgment of God. And "for so much as we do read that the holy Apostles and their "successors, appointed by the testimony of God, command- "ed that no persecution nor troubles ought to be made, nor "to envy those which labour in the field of the Lord, and "that the stewards of the Eternal King should not be ex- "pelled and put out of their seats: who then doubteth, "but that the Priests of Christ ought to be called the Fa- "thers and Masters of all other faithful Princes? Is it not a "miserable madness then, if the Son should go about to "bring the (5) Father under obedience; or the Scholer "his Master? and by (6) wicked bonds to bring him in "subjection, by whom he ought to believe that he may be "bound and loosed, not only in Earth, but also in Hea- "ven? If you be a good and Catholick King, and will be "such a one as we hope, or rather desire you should be, (if "it be spoken under your licence) you are the Child of the "Church, and not the ruler of the Church. You ought "to learn of the Priests, and not to teach them; you "ought to (7) follow the Priests in Ecclesiastical matters, "and not to go before them; having the priviledge of "your power given you of God to make publick Laws, "that by his benefit you should not be unthankful against "the dispensation of the heavenly order, and that you "should usurpe nothing, but use them with a wholesome "disposition.

"Wherefore in those things, which, contrary unto that "you have, through your malicious counsel rather than by "your own mind, wickedly usurped; with all humility "and satisfaction speedily give place, that the hand of the "most High be not stretched out against you, as an arrow "against the mark. For the most High hath bended his "bow openly to shoot against him, that will not confess "his offences. Be not ashamed (whatsoever wicked Men "say unto you, or that Traytors do whisper in your ear) "to humble your self under the mighty hand of God. For "it is he which exalteth the humble, and throweth down "the proud; which also revengeth himself upon Princes: "he is terrible, and who shall resist him? You ought not "to have let slip out of your memory, in what state God "did find you; how he hath preferred, honoured, and "exalted you; blessed you with Children, inlarged your "Kingdom, and established the same in despight of your "enemies. In so much that hitherto, in a manner, all "men have said with great admiration, that this is he whom "God hath chosen. And how will you reward, or can "you reward him for all these things which he hath done "unto you? Will you, at the provocation and instance of "those which are about you, that (8) persecute the Church "and the Ecclesiastical Ministers, and always have accord- "ing to their power persecuted them, rendring evil for "good, bringing oppressions, tribulations, injuries, and "afflictions upon the Church and Church-men, do the like? "Are not these they of whom the Lord speaketh: he that "heareth you, heareth me; he that despiseth you, despiseth "me; and he that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of "mine eye? Verily forsaking all that thou hast, take up "thy cross, that thou mayest follow thy God our Lord Je- "sus Christ. Yet will it scarcely be, or not at all, that "thou shalt appear a thankful recompencer of the benefits "received at his hand. Search the Scriptures with such as "are learned, and you shall understand, that (9) Saul, "albeit he was the Elect of the Lord, perished with his "whole house, because he departed from the ways of the "Lord.

"Ozias also King of Judah, whose name is spoken of "and spread over all, through the manifold victories given "him of God, his heart was so puffed up to his destruction, "because the Lord did help and strengthen him in every "place, that he, contemning the fear and reverence of the "Lord, would usurp unto himself that which was not his "office, that is to say, the Priesthood, and to offer Incense "upon the Altar of the Lord; for the which he was strick- "en with a Leprosie, and cast out of the House of the "Lord. Many other Kings and holy Men of great sub- "stance, because they have walked above their estate in the "marvels of the world, presuming to rebel against God in "his Ministeries, have perished: and at the last, they have "found nothing of their substance in their power. Also "King Abaz, because he did usurp the office of Priest- "hood, was likewise stricken with a Leprosie by God.

"Oza also, albeit he was not King, yet for so much as he "touched the Ark and held it, when it would have fallen "by the unruliness of the Oxen, which thing pertained "not unto him, but unto the Ministers of the Church, he "was stricken by the wrath of God and fell down by the "Ark. O King, it is a famous Proverb: That a Man, "forwarned by another Mans misfortune, will take the "better heed unto himself. For every Man hath his own "business in hand, when his neighbours House is on fire.

"Dearly beloved King, God would have the disposing "of those things, which pertain unto the Church, to be- "long only unto Priests, and not unto the secular power.

Do

"Do not challenge unto thy self therefore another Mans "right, neither strive against him by whom all things are "ordained; left thou seem to strive against his benefits, "of whom thou hast received thy power. For by the com- (10) "mon (10) Laws, and not by the secular power, and by "the Bishops and Priests, Almighty God would have the "Clergy of the Christian Religion to be ordered and ruled. "And Christian Kings ought to submit all their doings un- "to Ecclesiastical Rulers, and not to prefer themselves: "for it is written, That none ought to judge the Bishops "but only the Church, neither doth it pertain unto Mans "Law to give sentence upon any such. Christian Princes are "accustomed to be obedient unto the Statutes and Ordi- "nances of the Church, and not to prefer their own pow- "er. A Prince ought to submit himself unto the Bishops, "and not to judge the Bishops: for there are two things "wherewith the world is chiefly governed, (that is to say) "the Sacred Authority of Bishops, and Royal Power. (11) "(11) in the which, the Bishops charge is so much the "more weighty, in that they shall at the later Judgment "render account even of the Kings themselves. Truly you "ought to understand, That you depend upon their judg- "ment, and cannot reduce them unto your own will: "for many Bishops have Excommunicated both Kings and "Emperors. And if you require an especial example there- "of, Innocentius the Pope did Excommunicate Arcadius "the Emperor, because he did consent that John Chrysostom "should be expulsed from his seat; And Saint Ambrose al- (12) "so did Excommunicate (12) Theodosius the great Em- "peror for a fault (which seemed not so weighty unto o- "ther Priests) and shut him out of the Church: who after- "wards by condign satisfaction was absolved.

"There are many other like Examples. For David, "when he had Committed Adultery and Murther, the Pro- "phet Nathan was sent unto him by God to reprove him, "and he was soon corrected: And the King (laying aside "his Scepter and Diadem, and setting apart all Princely "Majesty) was not ashamed to humble himself before the "face of the Prophet, to confess his fault, and to require "forgiveness for his offence. What will you more? He "being stricken with Repentance asked mercy, and obtain- "ed forgiveness. So likewise you (most beloved King and "Reverend Lord) after the example of this good King Da- "vid, of whom it is said, I have found a Man after mine "own heart; with a contrite and humble heart turn to "the Lord your God, and take hold of Repentance for your "transgressions. For you have fallen and erred in many "things, which yet I keep in store still, if (peradventure) "God shall inspire you to say with the Prophet; Have "mercy on me, O God, according to thy great mercy, for "I have sinned much against thee, and done ill in thy sight. "Thus much I have thought good to write to you my dear "Lord at this present, passing other things in silence, till I "may see whether my words take place in you, and bring "forth fruits worthy of Repentance; and that I may hear "and rejoyce with them that shall bring me word and say; "O King, thy Son was dead, and is alive again; was lost, "and is found again. But if you will not hear me, look "where I was wont * before the Majesty of the Body of "Christ to pray for you in abundance of tears and sighs; "there in the same place I will cry against you, and say, "Rise up Lord and judge my cause, forget not the rebukes "and injuries which the King of England doth to thee and "thine; forget not the ignominy of thy Church, which "thou hast builded in thy blood. Revenge the blood of "thy Saints which is spilt; revenge, O Lord, the afflictions "of thy servants of whom there is an infinite number. For "the pride of them which hate and persecute thee is gone "up so high, that we are not able to bear them any longer. "Whatsoever your servants shall do, all those things shall "be required at your hands: for he seemeth to have "done the harm, which hath given the cause thereof. "Doubtless, the Son of the Most High, except you amend "and cease from the oppressing of the Church and Clergy, "and keep your hand from troubling of them, will come "in the rod of his fury, at the voyces of such as cry to him, "and at the sighs of them that be in bands; when the time "shall come for him to judge the unrighteousnes of Men in "equity and severity of the Holy Ghost. For he knoweth "how to take away the breath of Princes, and is terrible a- "mong Kings of the Earth. Your dear and loving Grace I "wish well to fare. Thus fare ye well again and ever.

* Note the judgment of God against this Becket, who was slain at his Mass making the body of Christ.

Certain Notes or Elenchs upon this Epistle: which by the figures you may find out, and their places.

1. THE scope of this Epistle is this, To prove that Bishops and Priests ought not to come under the covert and controlement of Temporal power.

2. This similitude holdeth not. For, though the finalness of a City blemisheth not the Prerogative of a Kingdom, yet the evilness and rebellion of a City doth worthily blemish his own prerogative.

3. So saith the Popes Decree, Dist. 10. but the Scripture of God importeth otherwise. Abiathar the Priest was depoled of King Solomon, not for any Heresie, but for other causes, 3. Reg. 12. Jonathas took his Priesthood of King Alexander: and Simon of Demetrius, 1 Macch. 7. Christ offered Tribute to Cæsar for him and for Peter. Also Peter saith, Be ye subject to every humane creature; and it followeth, whether it be to the King as to the chief, &c. Item Pope Leo subscribed himself to Ludovicus the Emperor with these words: And if we do any thing incompetently, and do swerve from the path of Righteousness, we will stand to your Reformation, or of them whom you shall send, Quæst. 2. Hos. 7.

4. Notwithstanding, the said Constantinus, writing to the Bishops Congregated at Tyrus, first chideth them, then commandeth them to resort unto his presence, to have their cause judged and decided, Trip. hist. lib. 3. cap. 7.

5. The Father under obedience, &c. If Fatherhood go by age, I suppose that King Henry was elder than Becket. If Fatherhood consist in Authority, I judge the Authority of a King to be above the Authority of an Archbishop. If the See of Canterbury make the Fatherhood, yet had Becket no cause to claim Fatherhood over the King, seeing the Son ordained the Father (that is) seeing the King made him his Archbishop, and he made not him his King.

6. By wicked bonds. All is wicked with the Papists, that bringeth them in subjection to their Princes.

7. Ecclesiastical matters be such, as properly belong to doctrine and divine knowledge, for the institution of the Soul, and information of Conscience. In which both Princes and Subjects ought to follow the Pastor, so long as they go truly before them without error, or else not. But what maketh this for the Lands and Liberties of Church-men?

8. Punishment due to Malefactors and Rebels is not to be called Persecution, but due Correction.

9. Saul brake the commandment of God and was rejected. Ozias contrary to the commandment of God took the Office of a Priest, and was stricken. Oza against the express word of the Law put his hand to the Ark, and was punished. But what express word had King Henry, why he should not correct and punish rebellious Bishops, and wicked Priests within his own Realm? wherefore these similitudes accord not. As for Achas, he was not so much punished for taking the Priests Office, as for spoiling the Temple of the Lord, and offering to Idols.

10. Common Laws. S. Austin writing to Boniface, saith thus; Whosoever obeyeth not the Laws of the Emperor, being made for the verity of God, procureth to himself great punishment. For in the time of the Prophets, all the Kings which did not forbid and subvert all such things as were used of the people against the Law of God, are rebuked. And such as did withstand them, are commended above the rest. August.

11. Isidorus hath these words: Let Temporal Princes know that they must render account to God for the Church, which they have as the hands of God to govern, &c.

12. The case of Arcadius, Theodosius, David, and of this King, as touching this matter, hath no similitude. In them was murther: this King doth nothing but claim that which is his due. And though by the spiritual sword those Kings were resisted: yet it agreeth not therefore, that the persons of them which have the use of the spiritual sword are above the persons of them which have the temporal sword.

Besides these Letters of the Archbishop sent to the King, the Pope also in the same cause writeth to the King, beginning after this sort: Alexander Papa ad Henricum regem

Et naturali ratione, & forma juris dictante, providentiam tuam credimus edoctam fuisse, quod quanto quis ab aliquo majora fuscepisse dignoscitur, tanto ei obnoxior, & magis obligatus tenetur, &c. The whole tenor of the Letter as he wrote it to the King I would here expreſs, but for prevracting of the time and ſtraitneſs of room, having ſo many things elſe in this ſtory (by the Grace of Chriſt) to be comprehended. But the Letter tendeth to this effect: to exhort and charge the King to ſhew favour to Thomas Becket. Where, in the proceſs of the Epiſtle, it followeth in theſe words: Ea propter ſeveritatem tuam per Apoſtolica ſcripta rogamus, monemus, & exhortamur in Domino; necnon in remiſſionem peccatorum ex parte Dei omnipotentis, & beati Petri principis Apoſtolorum, auctoritate noſtra injungimus, ut memoratum Archiepiſcopum pro Deo & Eccleſia ſua, & honore tuo, necnon & totius regni tui, in gratiam & favorum tuum recipias, &c. That is, Therefore we do deſire, moniſh, and exhort your honour by theſe our Apoſtolical writings, and alſo injoyn you upon the remiſſion of your ſins, in the behalf of Almighty God, and of St. Peter, Prince of the Apoſtles, by our authority, that you will receive again the foreſaid Archbiſhop into your favour and grace, for the honour of God, his Church, and of your own Realm, &c. Thus have you heard the Popes intreating Letter. Now here is another Letter ſent unto the foreſaid King, wherein he doth menace him, as in the tenor thereof here followeth.

Biſhop Alexander, ſervant of the ſervants of God, to King Henry, King of England, health and bleſſing Apoſtolical.

HOW fatherly and gently we have oft-times intreated and exhorted both by Legats and Letters your princely honour, to be reconciled again with our reverend Brother Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury, ſo that he and his may be reſtored again to their Churches and other poſſeſſions to them appertaining, your wiſdom is not ignorant, ſeeing it is notified and ſpread almoſt throughout all Chriſtendom. Forſomuch therefore as hitherto we could not prevail with you, neither move nor ſtir your mind with fair and gentle words, it lamenteth us not a little, ſo to be fruſtrate and deceived of the hope and expectation which we had conceived of you. Eſpecially ſeeing we love you ſo dearly, as our own dearly beloved Son in the Lord, and underſtand ſo great jeopardy to hang over you.

But forſomuch as it is written; Cry out and ceaſe not, lift up thy voice like a Trumpet, and declare to my people their wickedneſs, and their ſins to the houſe of Jacob: Alſo forſomuch as it is in Solomon commanded, That the ſluggiſh perſon ſhould be ſtoned with the dung of Oxen: we have thought good therefore, not to forbear or ſupport your ſtubbornneſs any longer againſt juſtice and ſalvation. Neither that the mouth of the foreſaid Archbiſhop ſhould be ſtopped from henceforth any more; but that he may freely proſecute the charge of his office and duty, and revenge with the ſword of Eccleſiaſtical diſcipline, the injuries both of himſelf, and of his Church committed to his charge.

And here I have ſent unto you two Legates, Petrus de ponte Dei, and Bernardus de Corilio, to admoniſh you of the ſame. But if ye will neither by us be advertiſed, nor give ear unto them in obeying: it is to be feared (doubtleſs) leſt ſuch things as they ſhall declare to you from us in our behalf may happen and fall upon you. Dated at Benevent, the ninth day before the Kalends of June.

To anſwer theſe Letters again, there was another certain writing drawn out and directed to the Pope, made by ſome of the Clergy, as it ſeemeth: but not without conſent of the King, as by the title may appear, inveighing and diſproving the miſbehaviour of the Archbiſhop. The tenour whereof here followeth, and beginneth thus:

An Anſwer to the Pope.

Anſwer to the Popes Letter.

TIme now requireth more to ſeek help than to make complaints. For ſo it is now, that the holy mother Church (our ſins deſerving the ſame) lieth in a dangerous caſe of great decay, which is like to inſue, except the preſent mercy of the Lord ſupport her.

Such is the wickedneſs now of Schiſmaticks, that the Father of Fathers Pope Alexander (for the defence of his Faith and for the love of Righteouſneſs) is baniſhed out of his Country: not able to keep free reſidence in his own proper See, by reaſon of the indurate heart of Frederick the Pharaoh.

Further and beſides, the Church alſo of Canterbury is miſerably impaired and blemiſhed, as well in the Spiritual as in the Temporal eſtate: much like to the Ship in the Sea, being deſtitute of her guide toſſed in the floods, and wreſtling with the winds, while the Paſtor being abſent from his Province, dare not there remain through the power of his Province. Who being over wiſe (to the jeopardy of himſelf, his Church, and us alſo) hath brought and intangled us likewiſe with himſelf in the ſame partaking of his puniſhments and labours, not conſidering how we ought to forbear, and not to reſiſt ſuperiour powers. And alſo he threweth himſelf to us unkind, which with all our affections bear the burthen with him of his afflictions, not ceaſing yet to perſecute us which ſtand in the ſame condemnation with him. For, betwixt him and our Soveraign Prince, the King of England, aroſe a certain matter of contention, whereupon they were both agreed, that a day ſhould be appointed, to have the controverſie diſcuſſed by equity and juſtice.

The day being come, the King commanded all the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates of the Church to be called in a great ſolemn frequency: ſo that the greater and more general this Council was, the more manifeſt the detection of this fruitleſom malice ſhould appear and be eſpied.

At the day therefore above mentioned this troubler of the Realm and of the Church preſenteth himſelf in the ſight of our Catholick King: who, not truſting the quality and condition of his cauſe, armeth him with the armour of the croſs, as one which ſhould be brought to the preſence of a Tyrant. By reaſon whereof, the Kings Majeſty being ſomewhat agrieved (yet becauſe he would be delivered from all ſuſpition) committeth the matter to the hearing of the Biſhops. This done, it reſteth in the Biſhops to decide and ceaſe this contention, and to ſet agreement between them, removing all occaſion of diſſention. Which thing they going about, this foreſaid Archbiſhop cometh in, forbidding and commanding, that no Man proceed in any ſentence of him before the King.

This being ſignified to the Kings hearing, his mind was grievouſly provoked thereby to anger: whoſe anger yet notwithſtanding had been eaſily aſſwaged, if the other would have ſubmitted himſelf, and acknowledged his default. But he adding ſtubbornneſs to his treſpaſs, through the quantity and greatneſs of his exceſs was the author of his own puniſhment, which now by the Law Civil he ſuſtaineth, and yet ſtaineth to crave pardon for his deſert at the Kings hand; whoſe anger he feareth not to ſtir up, in ſuch a troubleſome time of the perſecution of the Church, greatly againſt the profit of the ſame: augmenting and increaſing thereby the perſecution which now the Church lyeth under. Much better it had been for him to have tempered himſelf with the bridle of moderation, in the higheſt eſtate of his dignity; leſt in exceeding too far in ſtraining the ſtrict points of things by overmuch preſumption, peradventure through his preſumption, being not in mean and tolerable things, he might fall from higher. And if the detriments of the Church would not move him: yet the great benefits and preferments of riches and honours ought to perſwade him not to be ſo ſtubborn againſt the King. But here peradventure his friend and our adverſary will object, That his bearing and ſubmitting to the King, in this behalf were prejudicial againſt the authority and See Apoſtolical. As though he did not or might not underſtand, that although the dignity of the Church ſhould ſuffer a little detriment in that judgment: yet he might and ought to have diſſembled (for the time) to obtain peace unto the Church. He will object again, alledging the name of Father, That it ſoundeth like a point of arrogancy, for Children to proceed in judgment of condemnation againſt the Father; which thing is not convenient. But he muſt underſtand again, That it was neceſſary that the obedience and humility of the Children ſhould temper the pride of the Father; leſt afterward, the hatred of the Father might redound upon the Children. Wherefore by theſe premiſes your Fatherhood may underſtand, that the action of this our adverſary ought to fall down, as void, and of none effect, who only upon the affection of malice hath proceeded thus againſt us, having no juſt cauſe nor reaſon to ground upon.

Frederick diſſipateth himſelf to Pharaoh, like unto the Pope with us.

And forſomuch as the care and charge of all Churches (as ye know) lyeth upon us, it ſtandeth us upon to provide concerning the ſtate of the Church of Canterbury, by our diligence and circumſpection: ſo that the ſaid Church of Canterbury, by the exceſs of his Paſtor, be not driven to ruine or decay.

¶ By this Epiſtle it may appear to the Reader thereof, that Becket (being abſent from England) went about to work ſome trouble againſt certain of the Clergy and the Laity (belike) in Excommunicating ſuch as he took to be his evil willers.

Now to underſtand further what his working was, or who they were whom he did Excommunicate, this Letter, ſent to William Biſhop of Norwich, ſhall better declare the matter.

A Letter of Becket to the Biſhop of Norwich.

A Letter of Becket to the Biſhop of Norwich.

HE bindeth himſelf to the penalty of the crime, whoſoever receiving power and authority of God, uſeth and exerciſeth not the ſame with due ſeverity, in puniſhing vice: but winking and diſſembling, doth miniſter boldneſs to wicked doers, maintaining them in their ſin. For the blood of the wicked is required at the hand of the Prieſt, which is negligent or diſſembleth. And as the Scripture ſaith, Thorns and Brambles grow in the hands of the idle Drunkard. Wherefore, leſt (through our too much ſufferance and diſſembling) the tranſgreſſions of manifeſt evildoers ſhould alſo be laid to our charge, and redound to the deſtruction of the Church through our guilty ſilence; we therefore following the authority of the Popes commandment, have laid our Sentence of Curſe and Excommunication upon the Earl Hugo: commanding you throughout all your Dioceſs publickly to denounce the ſaid Earl as accurſed, ſo that, according to the diſcipline of the Church, he be ſequeſtred from the fellowſhip of all faithful people. Alſo, it is not unknown to your brotherhood, how long we have born with the tranſgreſſions of the Biſhop of London; who, amongſt other his facts, I would to God were not a great deer, and fautour of this Schiſm, and ſubverter of the Rites and Liberties of Holy Church. Wherefore we, being ſupported with the authority of Apoſtolick See, have alſo Excommunicated him; beſides alſo the Biſhop of Salisbury, becauſe of his diſobedience and contempt: and others likewiſe, upon divers and ſundry cauſes, whoſe names here follow ſubſcribed: Hugo Bemards Son, Rodulph of Brock, Robert of Brock a Clerk, Hugo de S. Cleare, and Letardus a Clerk of Norfolk, Nigellus of Scacvil, and Richard Chaplin, William of Hafting, and the Frier which poſſeſſeth my Church of Monchot. We therefore charge and command you by the Authority Apoſtolical and ours, and in the vertue of obedience, and in the peril of Salvation, and of your Order; that ye cauſe theſe openly to be proclaimed Excommunicate, throughout all your Dioceſs, and to command all the faithful to avoid their company. Fare ye well in the Lord. Let not your heart be troubled, nor fear: for we ſtand ſure through the aſſiſtance of the Apoſtolick See; God being our borow againſt the pretended ſlights of the malignant ſort, and againſt all their appellations. Furthermore, all ſuch as have been ſolemnly cited of us ſhall ſuſtain the like ſentence of Excommunication, if God will, on the Aſcention-day: unleſs they ſhall otherwiſe agree with me. That is, to wit, Geoffrey Archdeacon of Canterbury, and Robert his Vicar, Rice of Wilceſter, Richard of Lucy, William Giffard, Adam of Cherings, with ſuch others more: which either at the commandment of the King, or upon their own proper temerity, have invaded the goods and poſſeſſions either appertaining to us, or to our Clerks about us. With theſe alſo we do Excommunicate all ſuch as be known, either with aid or council, to have incenſed or ſet forward the proceeding of our King againſt the liberties of the Church, and exiling of the innocents. And ſuch alſo as be known to impeach or let by any manner of way the meſſengers (ſent either from the Pope, or from us) for the neceſſities of the Church. Fare you well again, and ever.

The Biſhop of London Excommunicated.

This Biſhop was Excommunicated becauſe he ſet in the Dean of Salisbury without the Sentence of him, being then beyond the Seas.

Becket's ſubjects perſuaded, flye to Martyr.

Hitherto hath thou ſeen (gentile Reader) divers aiid ſundry Letters of Thomas Becket, whereby thou mayſt collect a ſufficient Hiſtory of his doings and demeanor, though nothing elſe were ſaid further of him, concerning his luſty and haughty ſtomach, about that which beſeemed either his degree or cauſe which he took in hand. And here peradventure I may ſeem in the ſtory of this one Man to tarry too long, having to write of ſo many others better than it: yet for the weaker ſort, which have counted him, and yet do count him for a Saint, having in themſelves little underſtanding to judge or diſcern in the cauſes of Men, I thought to add this Letter more, wherein he complaineth of his King to a Foreign power; doing what in him did lie, to ſtir for his own cauſe mortal War to the deſtruction of many. For ſuppoſe wrong had been offered him of his Prince, was it not enough for him to flie? What cauſe had he, for his own private revenge, ſo ſet Potentates in publick diſcord? Now having no juſt cauſe, but rather offering injury in a falſe quarel, ſo to complain of his Prince; what is to be ſaid of this, let every Man judge which ſeeth this Letter.

An Epiſtle of Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury to Pope Alexander.

A Mantiſſimo Patri & D. Alexandro, Dei gratia ſummo Pont. Thomas Cant. Eccleſiæ humilis miniſter, debitam & devotam obedientiam, &c.

In Engliſh thus:

A fictitious complaint of Becket to the Pope againſt his King.

" To our moſt loving Father and Lord, Alexander by
" the Grace of God Biſhop, Thomas the humble Miniſter
" and Servant of the Church of Canterbury due and reve" rend obedience. Long enough and too long moſt loving " Father have I forborn, ſtill looking after the amend" ment of the King of England, but no fruit have I reap-
" ed of this my long patience: nay rather, whileſt that un-
" wiſely I do thus forbear, I augment and procure the de" triment and diminiſhing of mine authority, as alſo of the " Church of God: For oftentimes have I by devout and " Religious Meſſengers invited him to make condign ſa" tisfaction; as alſo by my Letters (the copies whereof I " have ſent you) intimated and pronounced Gods feverity
" and vengeance againſt him, unleſs he repent and amend.
" But he (that notwithſtanding) groweth from evil to worſe;
" oppreſſing and conculcating the Church and Sanctuary
" of God; perſecuting both me and thoſe which take part
" with me: inſomuch that with fearful threatning words
" his purpoſe is to terrifie ſuch, as (for Gods cauſe and mine
" own) ſeek any way to relieve and help me. He wrote alſo
" Letters unto the Abbat of the Ciſtercian Order, That as he " favoured the Abbacy of that his Order (which was in his " power, ſaid he) he would not accept me into the Fellow-
" ſhip thereof, nor do any thing elſe for me. What ſhould
" I uſe many words? So much hath the rigor and ſeverity
" as well of the King as of his Officers, under our pati-
" ence and ſufferance, ſhewed it ſelf; that if a great num" ber of Men, yea, and that of the moſt Religious ſort,
" ſhould ſhew unto you the matter as it is indeed (and that " upon their oath taken) I partly doubt whether your holi-
" neſs would give credit unto them or not. With heavi-
" neſs of mind therefore I conſidering theſe things, and be" holding as well the peril of the King as of our ſelf, have
" publickly condemned not only thoſe pernicious cuſtoms,
" but all thoſe perverſities and wicked doings whereby the " Church of England is diſturbed and brought to confuſion;
" as alſo the writing whereby they were confirmed; Ex-
" communicating generally as well the obſervers and exacti-
" ers thereof, as alſo the inventers and patrons of the ſame,
" with their favourers, counſellours, and coadjutors what" ever, either of the Clergy or Laity, abſolving alſo our " Biſhops from their oath, whereby they were ſo ſtrictly in" joyned to the obſervation of the ſame. Theſe are the

" the Lord Pope and ours, hath uſurped the Deanry of the Becket reprehended for complaining of his King.

By this Epiſtle, he that liſteth to underſtand of the doings and quarrels of Becket, may partly judge what is to be thought thereof. Which his doings although in ſome part they may be imputed either to ignorance of mind, or blindneſs of zeal, or humane frailty; yet in this point, ſo vilely to complain of his natural Prince, for the zeal of the Pope, he can by no wiſe be defended. But ſuch was the blindneſs then of the Prelates in thoſe days, who meaſured and eſteemed the dignity and liberties of Chriſts Church by no other things, than only by goods and poſſeſſions flowing and abounding in the Clergy; and thought no greater point of Religion to be in the Church, than to maintain the ſame. For the which cauſe they did moſt abominably abuſe Chriſtian Diſcipline and Excommunication of the Church at that time; as by this aforeſaid Epiſtle may appear. And what marvel if the acts and doings of this Archbiſhop ſeem now to us in theſe days both fond and ſtrange: ſeeing the Suffragans of his own Church and Clergy, writing to him, could not but reprehend him, as in this their Epiſtle tranſlated out of Latine into Engliſh may be ſeen.

Excommunication abuſed in private revenge about lands and poſſeſſions.

An effectual and pithy Letter, full of reaſon and perſwaſion, ſent from all the Suffragans of the Church of Canterbury to Thomas Becket their Archbiſhop.

QUÆ veſtro (pater) in longinquo diſceſſu inopinata rei ipſius novitate turbata ſunt; veſtra ſperabamus humilitate, &c.

In Engliſh thus:

The Letters of the Biſhops to Becket.

" Such troubles and perturbations as happned through " the ſtrangeneſs of your departure out of the Realm, we " hoped by your humility and prudence ſhould have been " reduced again (Gods Grace working withal) into a peace-
" able tranquility. And it was no little joy to us, to hear
" ſo of you in thoſe parts where you are converſant, how
" humbly you there behaved your ſelf, nothing vaunting
" your ſelf againſt your Prince and King, and that you at" tempt no riſings or wreſtlings againſt his Kingdom, but " that you bear with much patience the burthen of poverty,
" and gave your ſelf to Reading and Prayer, and to redeem
" the loſs of your time ſpent, with faſtings, watchings,
" and tears; and ſo, being occupied with ſpiritual ſtudies,
" to tend and riſe up to the perfection of Vertue, &c. But " now, through the ſecret relation of certain, we hear (that " we are are ſorry of) that you have ſent unto him a
" threatning Letter, wherein there is no ſalvation premiſed.
" In the which alſo ye pretend no intreating nor prayers for " the obtaining of favour, neither do uſe any friendly man" ner in declaring what you write, but menacing with much
" auſterity, threaten to interdict him, and to cut him from " the ſociety of the Church. Which thing if you ſhall ac-
" compliſh with like ſeverity, as in words ye threaten to " do, you ſhall not only put us out of all hope of any peace,
" but alſo put us in fear of hatred and diſcord without mea-
" ſure, and without all redreſs amongſt us. But wiſdom will
" conſider before the end of things, labouring and indea-
" vouring to finiſh that which ſhe wiſely beginneth. There" fore your diſcretion ſhall do well diligently to forecaſt
" and conſider wherein ye tend; what end may enſue there-
" of, and whereabout ye go. Certes we (for our parts)
" bearing that we do hear, are diſcouraged from that we " hoped for, which, before having ſome good comfort of " tranquility to come, are caſt from hope to deſpair: ſo
" that while one is drawn thus againſt another, almoſt
" there is no hope nor place left to make intreaty or ſuppli-
" cation. Wherefore writing to your Fatherhood, we " exhort and counſel you by way of Charity, That you
" add not trouble to trouble, and heap injury upon injury:
" but that you ſo behave your ſelf, that all menaces ſet a-
" ſide, ye rather give your ſelf to Patience and Humility,
" and to yield your cauſe to the Clemency of God, and to
" the mercy of your Prince; and in ſo doing you ſhall heap
" coals of Charity upon the heads of many. Thus Charity
" ſhall be kindled, and that which menacings cannot do
" (by Gods help and good Mens counſel) pity peradven-
" ture and godlineſs ſhall obtain. Better it were to ſuſtain
" Poverty with praiſe, than in great promotions to be a " common note to all Men. It is right well known unto all " Men, how beneficial the King hath been unto you, from
" what baſeneſs to what dignity he hath advanced you,
" and alſo into his own familiarity hath ſo much preferred
" you, that from the North Ocean to the Mount Perineus
" he hath ſubdued all things to your authority: in ſo much
" that they were amongſt all other accounted for Men right
" fortunate, whoſoever could find any favour with you.

" And furthermore, leſt that your eſtimation ſhould be " over matched by any Nobility, he (againſt the mind of " his Mother, and of his Realm) hath placed and ratified
" you ſubſtantially in Eccleſiaſtical Dignity, and advanced
" you to this honour wherein ye ſtand: truſting through " your help and counſel to Reign more ſafely and proſpe-
" rouſly. Now, if he ſhall find diſquietneſs, wherein he " truſted to have quietneſs; what ſhall all Men ſay or think
" of you? What recompence or retribution ſhall this be " thought to be for ſo many and great benefits taken?
" Therefore (if it ſhall pleaſe you) ye ſhall do well to fa" vour and ſpare your fame and eſtimation, and to overcome
" your Lord and Soveraign with Humility and Charity.
" Whereunto if our advertiſement cannot move you; yet
" the love and fidelity you bear to the Biſhop and Holy " Church of Rome ought to incline you thereunto, and " not to attempt any ſuch thing, whereby the troubles of " the Church our Mother may increaſe, or whereby her
" dolor may be augmented in the loſs of them, whoſe diſ-
" obedience now the Pope, and the Holy Church of Rome,
" and to the no little confuſion of us all; therefore we lay
" here againſt you, for our ſelves, the remedy of appellati-
" on. And as before, openly in the publick face of the " Church with lively voyce we appealed to the Pope for
" certain perils that might have happened: ſo now again
" in writing we appeal to the ſame, aſſigning the term of
" our appellation the day of the Lords Aſcenſion. Moſt
" humbly and reverently beſeeching your goodneſs, that
" you taking a better way with you in this matter, will
" let your cauſe fall, ſparing herein both the labours and
" charges, as well of your ſelf, as ours alſo. And thus we
" wiſh you right well to fare, Reverend in the Lord.

" ſit down and ſing the Song of the Lamentation of Jere-
" my and weep your belly full.

" Conſider therefore, if it pleaſe you, and foreſee well
" with your ſelf, this purpoſe of yours, if it proceed, how " hurtful and perillous it will be; not only to the Pope,
" and to the Holy Church of Rome, but alſo to your ſelf
" moſt eſpecially. But ſome peradventure about you, of " haughty and high minded ſtoutneſs, more ſtout perca-
" than wiſe, will not ſuffer you to take this way, but will " give you contrary counſel, to prove rather and declare
" what ye are able to do againſt your Lord and Prince,
" and to practiſe againſt him and all his the utterm oft of " your power and authority, which power and authority
" of yours, to him that offendeth, is fearful; and to him
" that will not amend, terrible. Such counſel as this,
" ſome peradventure will whiſper in your ear. But to theſe
" again this we ſay and anſwer for our King, whom not-
" withſtanding to be without fault we do not affirm: but yet
" always, that he is ready to amend and make ſatisfaction,
" that we ſpeak confidently and proteſt in his behalf.

The contumelies of King Henry the ſecond, for which he is reproved and condemned.

" The King, appointed for the Lords annointed, provi" ded for the peace of his Subjects all that he is able: and " therefore to the intent he may conſerve this peace in his
" Churches and amongſt his Subjects committed to him;
" he willeth and requireth ſuch Ordinances due to Kings,
" and exhibited to them before time, alſo to be exhibited
" to him. Wherein if there hath any contradiction ſprung
" betwixt him and us, he being thereupon convented, and " admoniſhed from the Pope by the Reverend Biſhops of " London and Hereford, braſt not out into any defiance,
" but meekly and humbly anſwered, That wherein ſoever
" the Church or any Eccleſiaſtical perſon can ſhew himſelf
" grieved, he would therein ſtand to the judgment of the " Church of his Kingdom. Which alſo he is ready no leſs to " perform indeed, thinking nothing more ſweet unto him
" than to be admoniſhed of his fault, if he have offended
" the Lord, and to reform the ſame; and not only to re" form and amend his fault, but alſo to ſatisfie it to the " uttermoſt, if the Law ſhall ſo require him. Wherefore,
" ſeeing he is ſo willing to recompence and ſatisfie the judg" ment of the Church in all things appertaining to the " Church; refuſing no order that ſhall be taken, but in all " things ſubmitting his neck to the yoke of Chriſt: with " what right, by what Canon, or reaſon can you interdict
" him, or uſe Excommunication againſt him? It is a thing
" laudable and a vertue of great commendation in wiſe
" Men, wiſely to go with judgment and reaſon, and not " to be carried with puffs of haſty violence. Whereupon
" this is the only and common Petition of us all, that your " Fatherly care will diligently provide for your flock and
" ſheep committed to you, ſo that they miſcarry not, or " run to any ruine through any inconſiderate or too much
" heady counſel in you: but rather, through your ſoftneſs
" and ſufferance, they may obtain life, peace and ſecurity.
" It doth move us all, that we hear of late to be done by " you againſt the Biſhop of Salisbury, and the Dean of the " ſame Church, proſperouſly, as ſome Men ſuppoſe; a-
" gainſt whom you have given out the Sentence of Ex-
" communication and Condemnation, before any queſtion
" of their crime was; following therein, as ſeemeth more
" the heat of haſtineſs than the path of Righteouſnes. This " is a new order of judgment, unheard of yet to this day
" in our Laws and Canons, firſt to condemn a Man, and " after to inquire of the fact committed. Which order
" left you ſhould hereafter attempt to exerciſe in like man" ner againſt our Soveraign and King, or againſt us and " our Churches, and Parithes committed to us, to the " detriment of the Pope, and the Holy Church of Rome,
" and to the no little confuſion of us all; therefore we lay
" here againſt you, for our ſelves, the remedy of appellati-
" on. And as before, openly in the publick face of the " Church with lively voyce we appealed to the Pope for
" certain perils that might have happened: ſo now again
" in writing we appeal to the ſame, aſſigning the term of
" our appellation the day of the Lords Aſcenſion. Moſt
" humbly and reverently beſeeching your goodneſs, that
" you taking a better way with you in this matter, will
" let your cauſe fall, ſparing herein both the labours and
" charges, as well of your ſelf, as ours alſo. And thus we
" wiſh you right well to fare, Reverend in the Lord.

The Reſcript or Anſwer again of Thomas Becket to all his Suffragans, not obeying but confuting the counſel ſent.

Scriptures in words rightly alledged, but falſly applied.

I deny your minor, Mr. Becket.

FRaternitatis veſtræ Scriptum (quod tamen prudentiæ veſtræ communi Concilio non facile credimus emanaſſe) nuper ex inſperato ſuſcepimus, &c.

Your brotherly Letters ſent, albeit not by the whole aſſent of your wiſdoms written, as I ſuppoſe, of late I received upon a ſudden: the Contents whereof ſeem to contain more ſharpneſs than ſolace. And would to God they proceeded more of ſincere zeal of godlineſs, or affection of charity, than of diſobedience or froward wilfulneſs. For charity ſeeketh not the things that be her own, but which appertain to Jeſus Chriſt. It had been your duty (if there be truth in the Goſpel, as moſt undoubtedly there is) and if you would faithfully have accomplihed his buſineſs whoſe perſon you repreſent, rather to have feared him, which can caſt both body and ſoul to Hell; than him whoſe power extendeth no further than to the body; rather to have obeyed God than Man, rather your Father than your Maſter or Lord, after the example of him who was to his Father obedient unto the death; which died for us, leaving us example to follow his ſteps. Let us die therefore with him, and lay down our lives for the deliverance of his Church out of the yoke of bondage, and tribulation of the oppreſſor. Which Church he hath founded, and whoſe liberty he hath procured with his own proper blood: leſt if we ſhall do otherwiſe, it may happly fall upon us which is written in the Goſpel; Whoſo loveth his own life more than me, is not worthy of me. This ye ought to know, That if it be right which your Captain commandeth, your duty requireth to obey his will; if not, ye ought then rather to obey God than Men.

One thing I will ſay (if I may be ſo bold to tell it unto you) I have now ſuffered and abſtained a long ſpace, waiting if the Lord had given you to take a better heart unto you, which have turned cowardly your backs in the day of battel; or if any of you would have returned again to ſtand like a wall for the Houſe of Iſrael; at leaſt if he had but ſhewed himſelf in the field, making but the countenance of a Warrior againſt them, which ceaſe not daily to inſeſt the Lamb of God, I waited, and none came; I ſuffered, and none roſe up; I held my peace, and none would ſpeak; I diſſembled, and none would ſtand with me in like ſemblance: wherefore ſeeing I ſee no better towardneſs in you, this remaineth only, to enter action of complaint againſt you, and to cry againſt mine Enemies; Riſe up, O Lord, and judge my cauſe, revenge the blood of the Church which is waſted and oppreſſed. The pride of them which hate his liberty riſeth up ever, neither is there any that doth good, no not one. Would God, Brethren beloved, there were in you any mind or affection to defend the liberty of the Church; for ſhe is builded upon a ſure Rock, that although the be ſhaken, yet ſhe cannot be overthrown. And why then ſeek ye to to confound me? Nay rather your ſelves in me, than me in you? A Man which hath taken upon me all the peril, have ſuſtained all the rebukes, have ſuſtained all the injuries, have ſuffered alſo for you all, to very baniſhment.

The Church of Chriſt cannot be overthrowen; Becket ought not to be reſiſted.

Servitude and liberty of the Church wrongfully defined. The words of holy Scripture clearly applied.

And ſo it was expedient, one to ſuffer for that Church, that thereby it might be releaſed out of ſervitude. Theſe things diſcuſs you ſimply with your ſelves, and weigh the the matter. Attend I ſay diligently in your minds for your parts, that God for his part removing from your eyes all Majeſty of Rule and Impery, as he is no accepter of perſons, may take from your hearts the veil, that ye may underſtand and ſee what ye have done, what ye intend to do, and what ye ought to do. Tell me which of you all can ſay, I have taken from him, ſince the time of my promotion, either Ox or Aſs. If I have defrauded him of any peny, if I have miſ-judged the cauſe of any Man wrongfully, or if by the detriment of any perſon I have fought mine own gain, let him complain, and I will reſtore him fourfold: And if I have not offended you, what then is the cauſe that ye thus leave and forſake me in the cauſe of God? Why bend ye ſo your ſelves againſt me in ſuch a cauſe, that there is none more ſpecial belonging to the Church?

Brethren, ſeek not to confound your ſelves and the Church of God (ſo much as in you is) but turn to me, and you Turn to thee? Nay turn thou to the Lord and thou ſhalt be ſaved.

you ſhall be ſafe. For the Lord ſaith, I will not the death of a ſinner, but rather he ſhould convert and live. Stand with me manfully in the War, take your armor and your ſhield to defend me. Take the ſword of the word of the mighty God, that we altogether may withſtand more valiantly the malignant enemies, ſuch as go about to take away the ſoul of the Church, which is her liberty: without which liberty ſhe hath no power againſt them that ſeek to incroach to their inheritance, the poſſeſſion of Gods Sanctuary. If ye will hear and follow me, know ye that the Lord will be with you, and with us all in the defence of the liberty of his Church. Otherwiſe if ye will not, the Lord judge betwixt me and you, and require the conſition of his Church at your hands. Which Church, whether the world will or no, ſtandeth firmly in the word of the Lord, whereupon the is builded, and ever ſhall, till the hour come that the ſhall paſs from this world to the Father; for the Lord ever doth ſupport her with his hand.

The ſoul of the Church is the liberty of the Church, ſaith Becket.

Wherefore to return to the matter: Brethren, remember well with your ſelves (which thing ye ought not to forget) what danger I was brought unto, and the Church of God alſo while I was in England, at my departing out of England, and after my departure from thence alſo; in what danger it ſtandeth at this preſent day; but eſpecially at that time, when as at Northampton Chriſt was judged again in my perſon, before the Judgment-ſeat of the high Preſident. Whoever heard the Archbiſhop of Canterbury (being troubled for injuries done to him and to his Church, and appealing to the Pope of Rome) to be judged, condemned, appealed, and put to his Sureties, and that of his own Suffragans? Where is this Law ſeen, or the Authority (nay rather perverſity) of this Canon heard off? And why yet ſhame ye not at this your enormity? Why are ye not confounded? Or why doth not this conſulion work in you repentance, and repentance drive you to due ſatisfaction before God and Men? For theſe and ſuch other injuries done to God and to his Church, and to me for Gods cauſe (which with a good Conſcience I ought to ſuffer, becauſe that without danger of ſoul I ought not to diſſemble them) I chuſe rather to abſent my ſelf for a ſeaſon, and to dwell quietly in the Houſe of my Lord, than in the Tabernacle of ſinners, until the time that (their iniquity being compleat) the hearts of the wicked, and the cogitations of the ſame ſhall be opened. And theſe injuries were the cauſe both of my appeal from the King, and of my departure from thence, which ye do term to be ſudden. But if ye will ſpeak the truth which ye know, it ought no leſs than to be ſudden: leſt (being fore-known) it might have been prevented and ſtopped. And as God turned the matter, it happned for the beſt, both for the honour of the King, and better ſafety of them, which (ſeeking my harm) ſhould have brought ſlander to the King. If ſuch troubles followed upon my departing as ye ſay, let them be imputed to him which gave cauſe, the fault is in the worker, not in the departer; in him that purſueth, not in him that avoideth injuries. What would ye more? I preſented my ſelf to the Court, declaring both the cauſes of my coming and of my Appeal, declaring alſo the wrongs and injuries done to me and to my Church, and yet could have no anſwer: neither was there any that laid any thing againſt me, before we came to the King. Thus while we ſtood waiting in the Court, whether any would come againſt me or not, they ſent to my Officials, charging them not to obey me in my Temporalities, nor to owe any ſervice to me or to any of mine. After any appellation made in the Court, my Church was ſpoiled; we and they about us deprived of our goods, Outlawed both of the Clergy and of the Laity, Men, Women, and Infants; the goods of the Church, that is, the patrimony of the Crucifix, confiſcate, and part of the money turned to the Kings uſe, part to your own Coffers. Brother Biſhop of London, if this be be true that we hear of you, and that to the uſe of your own Church ye convert this money; we charge you and require you forthwith by vertue of obedience, that within forty days after the ſight of theſe Letters, all delay and excuſe ſet aſide, ye reſtore again within the time aforeſaid, all ſuch goods and parcels as you have taken away: for it is unmeet and contrary to all Law, one Church to be inriched with the ſpoil of another Church. If ye ſtand upon the authority that ſet you a work, you muſt underſtand, that in matters concerning the Church goods, he can give no lawful authority, which committeth violent injury, &c.

Unbeſeeming words of high preſumption. Chriſt is not judged in the perſon of any traytor.

Conſcience made where is none.

But he leaveth out here the manner of his coming to the court and theſubtilteeds of his behavior.

What authority and what Scripture giveth this Prerogative to Princes upon Church goods, which you would attribute to them? What? will they lay for them the remedy of Appeal? God forbid. It were evil with the Church of God, if when the Sacrilligious extortioner hath violently invaded other Mens goods (eſpecially the goods of the Church) he ſhould after defend him with the title of Appeal, &c.

Do not Brethren ſo confound altogether the right of the Church and of the Temporal Regiment: for theſe two are much different, one borrowing his authority of the other. Read the Scriptures, and you ſhall find what and how many Kings have periſhed for taking upon them the Prieſtly Office. Therefore let your diſcretion provide, leſt for this your doing Gods puniſhment light upon you: which if it come, it will be hard for you very eaſily to eſcape. Provide alſo and ſee to your King, whoſe favour ye prefer before the wealth and profit of the Church; leſt it happen (which God forbid) that he doth periſh with all his Houſe, after the example of them which for the like crime were plagued. And if you ceaſe not off from that ye begin, with what Conſcience can I diſſemble or forbear, but muſt needs puniſh you? Let him diſſemble with you who liſt (having authority ſo to do, truly I will not) there ſhall be no diſſimulation found in me. And where you write in your Letters concerning my promotion, that it was againſt the voyce of the whole Realm, and that the Church did reclaim againſt it; what ſhould I ſay to you, but that which ye know right well, The lie, which the mouth doth willingly ſpeak, killeth the ſoul? but eſpecially the words of a Prieſts mouth ought ever to go with verity. As touching this matter, I appeal to your own Conſciences whether the form of my Election ſtood not fully with the conſent of them all to whom the Election belonged, having alſo the aſſent of the Prince by his Son, and of them which were ſent thereto. And if there were ſome that repugned the ſame, he that was troubled and is guilty, let him ſpeak.

Ye ſay moreover, That I was exalted and promoted from a baſe and low degree to this dignity by him. I grant that I came of no Royal or Kingly blood: yet notwithſtanding I had rather be in the number of them, whom vertue of mind than of birth maketh noble. Peradventure I was born in a poor Cottage, of poor Parentage; and yet through Gods clemency, which knoweth how to work mercy with his ſervants, and which cheriſheth the humble and low things, to confound the high and mighty, in this my poor and low eſtate, before I came to the Kings ſervice, I had abundantly and wealthily to live withal (as ye know) amongſt my Neighbors and Friends. And David even from the Sheepfold was taken up and made a King; Peter of a Fiſher was made a Prince of the Church; who, for his blood being ſhed for the name of Chriſt, deſerved to have in Heaven a Crown, and in Earth name and renown: would to God we could do the like! We be the ſucceſſors of Peter, and not of Kings and Emperors.

They be the ſucceſſors and heirs of Saints, not that had the places of Saints, but that do the works of Saints. Illerius.

And where ye ſeem to charge me (by inſinuation) with the blot of ingratitude: Thus I anſwer, There is no offence capital or infamous, unleſs it proceed from the heart and intention. As if a Man commit a murther unwillingly, although he be called a Murtherer, yet he is not thereby puniſhable: and ſo, although I owe my duty and ſervice with reverence to my King, yet I have forborn him as my Lord, if I have warned him, and talked with him Fatherly and gently as with a Son, and in talking with him could not be heard: if therefore, I ſay, being inforced thereunto, and againſt my will, I do exerciſe upon him the cenſure of due ſeverity, in ſo doing I ſuppoſe I make rather with him than againſt him, and rather deſerve at his hand thanks for my correction, than note or ſuſpition of unkindneſs or puniſhment for the fact. Sometimes a Man againſt his will receiveth a benefit. As when neceſſity cauſeth a Man to be reſtrained from doing that which he ought not to do: he that doth ſo reſtrain him, though he ſtop him, doth not hurt him, but rather profiteth him for his ſouls health. Another thing, that defendeth us from ingratitude, is our Father and Patron Chriſt, which in that he is our Father, to whom we as Children owe obedience, then are we bound as Children by neceſſity to obey his commandment, in warning the evil-doer, in correcting the diſobedient, and in bridling the obſtinate: which if we do not, we run into danger to have his blood required at our hands. Ye fet forth likewiſe and ſhew, what lofs we thereby may ſuſtain of our temporalities. But ye ſpeak no word of the loſs of our ſouls.

Moreover,

If the King had been an Adulterer or Tyrant againſt the true doctrine or perſwading of Chriſt, then might this reaſon ſerve, and God notice to be obeyed than man.

Now where did Becket learn that the King in his Temporal right was not to be obeyed? Take heed ye mare all, if ye open that door. This John was called a Schiſmatick, becauſe he took part with Reginald Archbiſhop of Colloe and the Emperour Alexander the Foyr.

Becket ſeemeth here more offended with the Biſhop of London than with the Pope himſelf, or any of the Rota of whole power he might fear to be depoſed.

Becket ſeemeth to make no difference between the old Law and the new, in things to be obeyed, whom they bind and loſe.

Becket ſeemeth to make himſelf like unto the Prieſts of the old Law, who were forbidden to lay hands on the Kings anointed.

Becket would have the Kings to be obeyed in ſpiritual matters, and to have no power in them.

Becket ſeemeth to be ſomewhat like unto the Prieſts of the old Law, and to do as they would have done.

Moreover, as concerning the departure of the King from the homage of the Church of Rome which in your Letters ye ſeem to pretend, or rather threaten: God forbid, I ſay, that the Devotion or Faith of our King ſhould ever ſwarve away from the obedience and reverence of the Church of Rome, for any temporal commodity or incommodity: which thing to do is very damnable in any private Subject, much more in the Prince which draweth many other with him: therefore God forbid, that ever any faithful Man ſhould once think ſo hainous a deed. And you according to your direction take heed left the words of your mouth infect any perſon or perſons therein, excellioning them by your words to fuch dangers and damnable matter, like to the golden Cup which is called the Cup of Babylon, which for the outward gold no Man will refuſe to drink of, but after they have drunk thereof, they are poyſoned.

And where ye lay to my charge for the ſuſpending of the Reverend Father the Biſhop of Salisbury, and for Excommunicating of John Dean of the ſame Church for a Schiſmatick, (my knowledge and proceſs had of the matter) to this I anſwer: That both theſe are juſtly and condignly Excommunicate, and if ye underſtand perfectly the condition of the matter, and the right order of judgments, ye will ſay no leſs. For this ſtandeth with good authority (as ye know) that in manifeſt and notorious crimes, this knowledge and order of proceeding is not requiſite. Perpend with your ſelves diligently, what the Biſhop of Salisbury did concerning the Deanery, after that he was prohibited of the Pope and of us, under pain of Excommunication: and then ſhall you better underſtand, that upon ſo manifeſt diſobedience, ſuſpenſion did rightly follow, as ye read in the Decree of Clement, ſaying, If they do not obey their Prelates, all manner of perſons of what order ſo ever they be, whether they ſhall be Princes of high or low degree, and all other people, ſhall not only be infamed, but alſo banished from the Kingdom of God, and the fellowſhip of the faithful. As concerning John of Oxford, this we ſay, That Excommunication cometh divers ways. Some are Excommunicate by the Law denouncing them Excommunicate. Some by the ſentence of the Prelate. Some by communicating with them which are Excommunicated. Now be that hath fallen into this damnable Hereſie, in participating with Schiſmaticks, whom the Pope hath Excommunicate, he draweth to himſelf the ſpot and leproſie of like Excommunication. Wherefore, ſeeing he (contrary to the Pope expreſs commandment and ours, being charged under pain of Excommunication to the contrary) took upon him the Deanery of Salisbury, we have denounced him, and hold him Excommunicate, and all his doings we diſannul by the authority of the eighth Synod, ſaying, If any Man either privily or apartly ſhall ſpeak, or communicate with him that is Excommunicated, he draweth unto himſelf the puniſhment of like Excommunication. And now forſomuch as you, Brother, (Biſhop of London) which ought to know that ſaying of Gregory the Seventh: If any Biſhop ſhall conſent to the Fornication of Prieſts, Deacons, &c. within his Precinct, for reward, favour, or petition, or doth not by authority of his Office correct the vice, let him be ſuſpended from his Office. And again, that ſaying of Pope Leo, which is this; If any Biſhop ſhall inſtitute or conſecrate ſuch a Prieſt as ſhall be unmeet and unconvenient of his ſcape with the loſs of his own proper dignity, yet he ſhall loſe the power of inſtituting any more, &c.

Therefore, forſomuch, I ſay, as you, knowing this, have double wife offended againſt the Sentence of theſe Canons, we command you, and in the vertue of obedience injoyn you, that if it be ſo, within three months after the receipt hereof, you will ſubmit and offer your ſelf to due correction and ſatisfaction to the council of our fellow Biſhops, for theſe your ſo great exceſſes; left others through your example run into the like offenſe, and we be conſtrained to proceed againſt you with ſeverer ſentence.

Finally (in cloſing up your Letter) where ye bring in for your appellation againſt me, a ſafegard for you, which rather indeed is an hinderance to you, that we ſhould not proceed againſt the invaders of the Church goods, nor againſt the King in like cenſure, as we have done againſt the Biſhop of Salisbury (as ye ſay) and his Dean. To this I Anſwer, God forbid that we have, or elſe ſhould hereafter proceed or do any thing againſt the King or his Land, or againſt you or your Churches, incontinately or otherwiſe than is convenient. But what if you ſhall exceed in the ſame or like tranſgreſſion, as the Biſhop of Salisbury hath done? Think ye then your appellation ſhall help you from the diſcipline of our ſeverity, that ye ſhall not be ſuſpended? Mark ye diligently whether this be a lawful appeal, and what is the form thereof. We know that every one that appealeth, either doth it in his own name, or in the name of another: if in his own, either it is for ſome grievance inferred already, or elſe for that he feared after to be inferred againſt him. Now concerning the firſt, I am ſure there is no grievance that you can complain of as yet (God be thanked) that you have received at my hand, for the which you ſhould appeal from me: neither have you (I truſt) any cauſe ſpecial againſt me ſo to do. If ye do it for fear of any thing that is to come, left I ſhould trouble you and your Churches: conſider whether this be the fear that ought to fall in conſtant Men, or ſtay our power and authority that we have upon you and your Churches. It is thought therefore of wiſe Men (and we alſo judge no leſs) your Appeal to be of no force.

Diſcuſſing of a true appellation.

The form of a true appellation.

Firſt, for that it hath not the right form of a perfect appellation, and alſo becauſe it is not conſonant to reaſon, and lacketh order and help of the Law.

Furthermore, if your appellation be in another Mans name, either it is for the King (as moſt like it is) or for ſome other. If it be for the King, then you ought firſt to underſtand, that appellations are wont to be made to repel, and not to inferr injury: or to releaſe ſuch as be oppreſſed, that they ſhould not be oppreſſed any more.

One perſon cannot both be the appellant and the party appealed.

Wherefore if any Man ſhall enter any appellation (not truſting to the ſurety of his cauſe, but to delay the time, that ſentence be not given upon him) that appellation is not be received. For what ſtate will there be of the Church, if the liberty thereof being taken away, the goods of the Church ſpoiled, the Biſhops driven from their places, or at leaſt not received with full reſtitution of their goods, the invaders and ſpoilers thereof may defend themſelves by appealing, thereby to ſave themſelves from the penalty of their deſert?

What a ruine of the Church will this be? See what ye have done, and what ye ſay. Be you not the Vicars of Chriſt repreſenting him in Earth? Is it not your Office to correct and bridle ill-doers, whereby they may ceaſe to perſecute the Church? And is it not enough for them to be fierce and to rage againſt the Church, but that you ſhould take their part, ſetting your ſelves againſt us, to the deſtruction of the Church? Who ever heard of ſo monſtrous doings? Thus it ſhall be heard and ſaid of all Nations and Countries, That the ſuffragans of the Church of Canterbury (which ought to ſtand with their Metropolitan unto death in defence of the Church) now go about by the Kings commandement, ſo much as in them doth lie, to ſuſpend his authority, left he ſhould exerciſe his diſcipline of correction upon them that rebel againſt the Church. This one thing I know, that you cannot ſtabliſh two ſorts of perſons at once, both to be the Appeal makers, and to be appealed up your ſelves. You be they which have made the appellation, you be they againſt whom the appellation is made. Is there any more Churches then one, and the body of the ſame? And how meet were it than, that you, being the members of the Church, ſhould hold together with the head thereof? I am afraid, Brethren, left it may be ſaid of us; Theſe be the Prieſts which have ſaid, Where is the Lord? And having the Law do not know the Law. Furthermore, this I ſuppoſe you (being diſcreet Men) are not ignorant of, that ſuch as enter any appellation there, are not wont to be heard, unleſs the matter of their appellation either belongeth to themſelves, or except ſpecial commandment force them thereunto, or elſe unleſs they take another Mans cauſe upon them. Firſt, That it belongeth nothing unto you, it is plain, forſomuch as the contrary rather pertaineth unto your duty; that is, to puniſh and to correct all ſuch as rebel againſt the Church. And if he which ſubverteth the liberty of the Church, and invadeth the goods thereof (converting them to his own uſe) be not heard appealing for his own defence, much leſs is another to be heard appealing for him. Wherefore, as in this caſe neither he can appeal for himſelf, nor yet command you ſo to do; ſo neither may you receive the commandment to appeal for him.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, as touching the taking of another Mans cauſe or buſineſs upon you: to this I ſay and affirm, That ye ought in no manner of wiſe ſo to do, ſpecially ſeeing the matter pertaineth to the oppreſſion of the Church, and whereupon inſueth great damage to the ſame.

Wherefore ſeeing it neither appertaineth to you, neither ought ye to receive any ſuch commandment, nor yet to take upon you any ſuch cauſe as that is, your appeal is neither to be heard, nor ſtandeth with any Law. Is this the devotion and conſolation of brotherly love which you exhibit to your Metropolitan, being for you in exile? God forgive you this clemency. And how now? Will ye look for your Letters and Meſſengers to be gently received here of us? Neither do I ſpeak this, as though there were any thing in hand betwixt your part and ours, or that we have done any thing inordinately againſt the perſon of the King, or againſt his Land, or againſt the perſons of the Church, or intend (by Gods mercy) ſo to do. And therefore we ſay briefly and affirm conſtantly, That our Lord the King cannot complain of any wrong or injury to be done unto him, if he (being often called upon by Letters and Meſſengers to acknowledge his fault, neither will confeſs his treſpaſs, nor yet come to any ſatisfaction for the ſame) have the cenſure of feverity by the Pope and us laid upon him: for no Man can ſay that he is unjuſtly intreated, whom the Law doth juſtly punith. And briefly to conclude, know you this for certain, That Extortioners, invaders, detainers of the Church Goods, and ſubverters of the liberties thereof, neither have any authority of the Law to maintain them, neither doth their appealing defend them, &c.

Though the Popes Law will not defend them, yet the Law of the Scripture will and doth.

A brief Cenſure upon the former Reſcript of Becket to his Suffragans, in the page before, with a general reſolution of the reaſons therein contained.

IF the King of England had been an Idolater, Covetous, and Adulterer, an Inceſtuous perſon, a murtherer, with ſuch like; then the zeal of this Archbiſhop (threatning the King and ſuch as took his part) had deſerved praiſe in this Epiſtle, and the Scripture would have born him out therein. For theſe and ſuch cauſes ſhould Biſhops proſecute the authority of the Goſpel againſt all perſons. But the matter ſtanding only upon Church Goods, liberty, (or rather licenciouſneſs of Prieſts) making of Deans, Titles of Churches, ſuperiority of Crowning the King, with ſuch other: to ſtand ſo ſtiff in theſe, is not to defend the Church, but to rebel againſt the King. Again, if the principles, which he here groundeth upon, were true; to wit, that the Pope were to be obeyed before Princes, that the liberty of the Church ſtandeth upon the immunity of Prieſts exempted from Princes Laws, or upon ample poſſeſſions of the Church: or that the Popes Law ought to prevail in all foreign Countries, and to bind all Princes in their own Dominions, or that the ſentence of the Pope and his Popelings (how or by what affection ſoever it is pronounced) may ſtand by the undoubted ſentence of God: then all the arguments of this Epiſtle do proceed and conclude well. But if they ſtand not ratified upon Gods Word, but tottering upon Mans traditions; then whatſoever he inferreth or includeth thereupon (his aſſumption being falſe) cannot be true, according to the School ſaying: One inconveniency being granted in the beginning, innumerable follow thereupon. So in this Epiſtle it happeneth, as is above noted, that the major of this Man is true, but the minor is clean falſe, and to be denied.

The Letter of Matild the Empereſs, and Mother of the King, to Thomas Becket.

The Letter of the Empereſs to Becket.

MY Lord the Pope commanded me, and upon the forgivneſs of my ſins inioyned me, That I ſhould be a mediator and means of peace and concord betweeu my Son and you, by reconciling of your ſelf to him, whereunto (as you know) you requeſted me. Wherefore the earneſter and with more affection (as well for the divine honour as for holy Church) I took the enterpriſe upon me. But this by the way, I aſſure you, that the King, his Barons, and Council, taketh it grievouſly, that you, whom he intirely loved, honoured and made chiefeſt in all this Realm, to the intent to have more comfort and better truſt in you, ſhould thus (as the report is) rebel, and ſtir his people againſt him. Yea and further, that as much as in you lyeth, you went about to diſinherit him, and deprive him of his Crown. Upon the occaſion whereof, I ſent unto you our truſty and familiar ſervant Lawience Arch-deacon, by whom I pray you that I may underſtand your mind herein, and good will toward my Son, and how you mean to behave your ſelf (if my Prayer and Petition may be heard of him in your behalf) toward his Grace. But this one thing I aſſure you of, that unleſs it be through your great humility and moderation, evidently in you appearing, you cannot obtain the favour of the King. Herein what you mean to do, I pray you ſend me word by your proper Letters and Meſſengers.

But to proceed further in the order of the Hiſtory. After theſe Letters ſent to and fro, the year of our Lord 1169. which was the fifteenth year of the Reign of King Henry the Second, the King miſdoubting and fearing with himſelf, that the Archbiſhop would proceed (or exceed rather) in his Excommunication againſt his own perſon (to prevent the miſchief) made his appeal to the preſence of the Pope, requiring to have certain Legates ſent down from Rome from the Popes ſide, to take up the matter betwen the Archbiſhop and him; requiring moreover that they might alſo be abſolved that were interdicted. Whereupon two Cardinals, being ſent from Alexander the Pope with Letters to the King, came to Normandy: where they appointed the Archbiſhop to meet them before the King upon Saint Martyns day. But the Archbiſhop, neither agreeing with the day nor the place, delayed his coming till the eighth day after, neither would go any further than to Griſortium, where the two Cardinals and the Archbiſhop, with other Biſhops conventing together, had a certain intreaty of peace and reconciliation: but it came to no concluſion. The contents of which Intreaty or Action, becauſe it is ſufficiently contained in the Cardinals Letters, who were called Gulielmus and Otho, written to the Pope, it ſhall require no further labour, but to ſhew out the words of the Letter, where the ſumm of the whole may appear: The words of the Letter be theſe.

The Copy of the Epiſtle written and ſent by two Cardinals to the Pope, concerning the matter of the Archbiſhop Becket.

William and Otho, Cardinals of the Church of Rome, to Alexander the Pope, &c. Coming to the Land of the King of England, we found the Controverſie betwixt him and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury more ſharp and vehement than we would. For the King, and the greater part of them about him, ſaid, That the Archbiſhop had ſtirred up the French King, grievouſly againſt him; and alſo the Earl of Flanders his Kinſman (who bare no diſpleaſure to him before) he made his open adverſary, ready to war againſt him, as is by diverſe evidences moſt certain. Thus when we came to Cadomus firſt to the Kings ſpeech, we gave the Letters of your Fatherhood to his hands: which after that he had received and conſidered (bringing forth withal other Letters received from you before, ſomething divers and altering from theſe which he received of us) he was moved and ſtirred with no little indignation; ſaying, That the Archbiſhop, after our departure from you, had received of you other contrary Letters, by the vertue whereof he was exempted from our judgment, ſo that he ſhould not be compelled to anſwer us. Moreover, the ſaid King to us added and affirmed, and ſo did the Biſhops there preſent, teſtifying the ſame, That concerning the old and antient cuſtoms of his Progenitors (whereof complaint was made to you) all that for the moſt part was falſe and untrue which was intimate to you; offering further to us, That if there were any ſuch cuſtoms or Laws in his time, that ſeemed prejudicial or diſagreeable to the Statutes of the Church he would willingly be content to revoke and diſannul the ſame. Whereupon we with other Archbiſhops, Biſhops and Abbots of the Land hearing the King ſo reaſonable, laboured, labour'd by all the means we might, that the King ſhould not utterly break from us, but rather ſhould incline to us to have the matter brought before us betwixt him and the forenamed Archbiſhop. By reaſon whereof, we directed out our own Chaplains with Letters unto him, appointing him both time and place where ſafely he might meet with us in the Feaſt of Saint Martin. Nevertheleſs he, pretending certain excuſes, made his Dilatories, driving off the time from the day of Saint Martin to the Octaves following, which thing ſtirred the Kings heart more than is to be thought.

A communication between Becket and the Cardinals.

Thus although we offered to the Archbiſhop ſafe coming, yet when he refuſed to meet us in the borders of the King, we, to ſatisfie his mind, condeſcended to meet him within the Land of the French King, in the place where he himſelf appointed, becauſe there ſhould be no let in us, whereby to ſtop his profit. After we had entred communication, we began to exhort him, all that we could, to ſubmit and humble himſelf to his Soveraign and King, who had heaped him with ſuch benefits and dignities; whereby matter might be given us to further occaſion of reconciling them together. He, being thus moved and exhorted by us, departed aſide to conſult with his council upon the matter. At length after counſel taken, he cometh again, anſwering in this manner: that he would ſubmit and humble himſelf to the King, Salvo honore Dei, & Eccleſiæ libertate, ſalvos etiam honeſtate perſonæ ſuæ & poſſeſſionibus Eccleſiarum: & amplius, ſua & ſuorum in omnibus ſalva juſtitia, &c. That is, Saving the honour of God, and liberty of the Church, ſaving alſo the honeſty of his perſon, and poſſeſſions of Churches: and moreover, ſaving the juſtice of him and of all his in all things, &c. After which communication had amongſt us, we moved and required him more inſtantly, that he would come to the ſpecialities, when as yet he had brought nothing in, either which was certain or particular. Likewiſe we demanded of him, if he would, in all ſuch things contained and comprehended in our Letters, ſtand and ſubmit himſelf to our Letters, ſo as the King and the Biſhops before were contented to do. To the which he anſwering again, ſaid, That he had received from you a commandment, not to anſwer before he and all his were reſtored full to all their poſſeſſions; and then he would ſo proceed in the matter, according as he ſhould receive commandment from the Sea Apoſtolical.

Becket addition.

Thus we breaking off communication, ſeeing that he neither would ſtand to judgment, nor come to conformity, thought to make relation thereof to the King, and ſo did: declaring that which he had expreſſed to us; yet not uttering all, but keeping back a great part of that which we had heard and ſeen. Which when the King and his Nobles had underſtanding of, he affirmed to us again; that he therein was cleared ſo much the more, for that the Archbiſhop would not ſtand to their judgment, nor abide their trial. After much heavineſs and lamentation of the King, the Archbiſhop, Biſhops and Abbats of the Realm requiring of us, whether we had any ſuch power, by vertue of our commiſſion, to withſtand him and proceed againſt him; and perceiving that our authority would not ſerve thereunto, and fearing leſt the forefaid Archbiſhop, refuſing all order of judgment, would work again diſquietneſs to ſome Noble perſonages of the Realm: and ſeeing our authority could not extend ſo far to help them againſt him (taking a conſultation among themſelves) agreed together with one aſſent, to make their appellation to your audience, prefixing accordingly the term of their Appeal.

Becket refuſing to ſtand to the French King and the King of England.

Becket would not ſtand to judgment nor trial.

¶ And this is the Epiſtle of theſe two Cardinals ſent to the Pope: wherein may ſufficiently appear all the diſcourſe and manner of that aſſembly (although particularly every thing be not expreſſed) concerning the talk betwixt the Cardinals and the Archbiſhop. As when that William (who of the two Cardinals was the more eloquent) amongſt other communication had reaſoned long with him as concerning the peace of the Church: which Becket ſaid he preferred above all things. Well then (ſaith the Cardinal) ſeeing all this contention between the King and you riſeth upon certain Laws and cuſtoms to be abrogate, and that you regard the peace of the Church ſo much: then what ſay you? Will you renounce your Biſhoprick, and the King ſhall renounce his cuſtoms? The peace of the Church now lyeth in your hands, either to retain or to let go; what ſay you? To whom he anſwereth again, That the proportion was not like. For I, ſaith he (ſaving the honour of my Church and my perſon) cannot renounce my Biſhoprick. Contrary, it ſtandeth the King upon, for his ſouls health and honour to renounce theſe his ordinances and cuſtoms. Which thing he thus proved; becauſe the Pope had condemned thoſe cuſtoms, and he likewiſe with the Church of Rome had done the ſame, &c.

Becket to the Biſhoprick than the peace of the Church, for all his lay talk.

The talk between the French King, the King of England, and Becket.

AFter the Cardinals were returned, the French King ſeeing the King of England diſquieted and ſollicitous to have peace (or at leaſt wiſe pretending to ſet an agreement between them) brought the matter to a communication among them. In which communication the French King made himſelf as umpire between them. The King of England, hearing that the Archbiſhop would commit himſelf to his arbitrement, was the more willing to admit his preſence. Whereupon, many being there preſent, the Archbiſhop, proſtrating himſelf at the Kings feet, declared unto him kneeling upon his knees, that he would commit the whole cauſe, whereof the diſſention roſe between them, unto his own arbitrement; adding thereto (as he did before) Salvo honore Dei: That is, Saving the honour of God. The King (as is ſaid before) being greatly offended at this word, hearing and ſeeing the ſtiffneſs of the Man ſticking ſo much to this word, Salvo honore, &c. was highly therewith diſpleaſed, rebuking him with many grievous words, as a Man proud and ſtubborn, and alſo charging him with ſundry and great benefits beſtowed upon him, as a perſon unkind, and forgetting what he had ſo gently done and beſtowed upon him.

Becket charged with unkindneſs.

And ſpeaking to the French King there preſent: See, Sir, (if it pleaſe you, ſaith the King of England) whatſoever diſpleaſeth this Man, that he ſaith to be contrary to the honour of God. And ſo by this means he will vindicate and challenge to himſelf both that is his and mine alſo. And yet notwithſtanding, for that I will not ſeem to do any thing contrary or prejudicial to Gods honour, this I offer him: There have been Kings in England before, both of greater and leſs puiſſance than I am; Likewiſe there have been Biſhops of Canterbury many both great and holy Men: What the greateſt and moſt holy of all his predeceſſors before him hath done to the leaſt of my progenitors and predeceſſors before me, let him do the ſame to me and I am content. They that ſtood by, hearing theſe words of the King, cried all with one voice, The King hath debaſed himſelf enough to the Biſhop. The Archbiſhop ſtaying a little at this with ſilence, What, ſaith the French King to him, my Lord Archbiſhop, will you be better than thoſe holy Men? will ye be greater than Peter? What ſtand you doubting? Here now have you peace and quietneſs put in your own hands, if ye will take it. To this the Archbiſhop anſwered again: Truth it is (ſaith he) my predeceſſors before me were much both better and greater than I, and of them every one for his time (although he did not extirpe and cut off all) yet ſomething they did pluck up and correct, which ſeemed adverſe and repugnant againſt Gods honour. For if they had taken all together away, no ſuch occaſion then had been left for any Man to raiſe up this fire of temptation now againſt us, as is here raiſed to prove us withal; that we, being ſo proved with them, might alſo be crowned with them, being likewiſe partakers of praiſe and reward, as we are of their labour and travel. And though ſome of them have been ſlack, or exceeded in their duty doing, in that we are not bound to follow their example.

The Kings offer to Becket both charitable and reaſonable.

The words of the French King.

Peter, when he denyed Chriſt, we therefore rebuke him; but when he reſiſted the rage of Nero, therein we commend him. And therefore becauſe he could not conſent in his conſcience to conſent unto that he ought in no wiſe to diſſemble, neither did he; by reaſon thereof he loſt his life. By ſuch like oppreſſions the Church hath always grown. Our fore-fathers and predeceſſors, becauſe they would not diſſemble the name and honour of Chriſt, therefore they ſuffered. And ſhall I, to have the favour of one Man, ſuffer the honour of Chriſt to be ſuppreſt? The

This malice if it had been joyned with a good mind, had made a good argument.

Nobles

Nobles standing by (hearing him thus speak) were greatly grieved with him, noting in him both arrogancy and wilfulnes, in perturbing and refusing such an honest offer of agreement. But specially one among the rest was most grieved, who there openly protested; that seeing the Archbishop so refused the counsel and requeſt of both the Kingdoms, he was not worthy to have the help of either of them; but as the Kingdom of England had rejected him, ſo the Realm of France ſhould not receive him. Ex Guidrisio.

Alanus Herbertus, and certain other of his Chaplains that committed to ſtory the doings of Becket, do record (whether truly or no I cannot ſay) That the French King ſending for him, as one much ſorrowing and lamenting the words that he had ſpoken, at the coming of Becket did proſtrate himſelf at his feet, confeſſing his fault, in giving counſel to him in ſuch a cauſe (pertaining to the honour of God) to relent therein and to yield to the pleaſure of Man: wherefore, declaring his repentance, he deſired to be abſolved thereof. So that after this, the French King and Becket were great friends together; inſomuch that King Henry ſending to the King to intreat him, and deſire him that he would not ſupport nor maintain his enemy within his Realm, the French King utterly denied the Kings requeſt, taking part rather with the Archbiſhop than with him.

Beſides theſe quarrels and grudges betwixt the King and the Archbiſhop above mentioned, there followed yet moreover another, which was this: Shortly after this communication recited between the King and Becket, the King of England returning again from Normandy into England (which was the year of our Lord 1170. and the ſixteenth year of his Reign) about Midſummer, kept his Court of Parliament at Weſtminſter; in the which Parliament he (through the aſſent both of the Clergy and the Lords Temporal) cauſed his Son Henry to be crowned King. Which Coronation was done by the hands of Robert Archbiſhop of York, with the aſſiſtance of other Biſhops miniſtring to the ſame, as Gilbert of London, Joſelin of Salisbury, Hugo of Dureſme, and Walter of Rocheſter. By reaſon whereof Becket of Canterbury, being there neither mentioned nor called for, took no little diſpleaſure; and ſo did Lodowick the French King, hearing that Margarer his Daughter was not alſo Crowned with her Huſband: whereupon he, gathering a great Army, forthwith marched into Normandy. But the matter was ſoon compoſed by the King of England, who ſending his Son unto him in Normandy, intereſted there and concluded peace with him, promiſing that his Son ſhould be Crowned again, and then his Daughter ſhould be Crowned alſo. But the Archbiſhop not ceaſing his diſpleaſure and emulation, ſent unto the Pope, complaining of theſe four Biſhops, eſpecially of the Archbiſhop of York; who durſt be ſo bold in his abſence, and without knowledge of his licence, to intermeddle to Crown the King, being a matter proper and peculiar to his juriſdiction. At the inſtance of whom, the Pope ſent down the ſentence of Excommunication againſt the Biſhop of London. The other three Biſhops with the Archbiſhop of York he ſuſpended, whoſe Sentence and Letters thereof, for avoiding prolixity, I here omit. Anno 1170. The Biſhop of London Excommunicated, with four other Biſhops ſuſpended.

Beſides theſe foreſaid Biſhops Excommunicated, divers other Clerks alſo of the Court he cited to appear before him, by vertue of his large Commiſſion which he gat from the Pope, to whom they were bound to obey, by reaſon of their benefices. And ſome he commanded in vertue of obedience to appear, in pain of forfeiting their Orders and Benefices. Of which when neither ſort would appear, he curſed them openly. And alſo ſome Lay-men of the Court and the Kings familiars (as intruders and violent with-holders of Church goods) he accurſed; as Richard Lucy, and Joſelin Balliol, and Ralph Brock which took the Bells and goods that belonged to the Church of Canterbury; and Hugh Sentelear, and Thomas the Son of Bernard, and all that ſhould hereafter take any Church goods without his conſent; ſo that almoſt all the Court was accurſed either by name, or as partakers.

This being done, the Archbiſhop of York with the foreſaid Biſhops reſorted to the King with a grievous complaint, declaring how miſerably their caſe ſtood, and what they had ſuſtained for fulfilling his commandment. The King, hearing this, was highly moved, as no marvel was. But what remedy? The time of the ruine of the Pope was not yet come; and what Prince then might withſtand the injurious violence of that Romiſh Poteſtate? The cauſe of the Kings wrath againſt Becket.

In the mean ſeaſon the French King for his part, his Clergy and Courtiers likewiſe ſlack no occaſion to incite and ſollicit Alexander the Pope againſt the King of England to Excommunicate him alſo: ſeeing thereby and thinking to have ſome vantage againſt the Realm. Neither was the King ignorant of this, which made him more ready to apply ſome agreement of reconciliation. At length came down from the Pope two Legates (the Archbiſhop of Rothomage and the Biſhop of Navern) with direction and full commiſſion either to drive the King to be reconciled, or to be interdicted by the Popes cenſures out of the Church. The King underſtanding himſelf to be in greater ſtraits than he could avoid (at length through the mediation of the French King and of other Prelates and great Princes) was content to yield to peace and reconciliation with the Archbiſhop, whom he received both to his favour, and alſo permitted and granted him free return to his Church again. Concerning his poſſeſſions and Lands of the Church of Canterbury, although Becket made great labour therefore, yet the King (being then in Normandy) would not grant him them, before he ſhould repair to England, to ſee how he would there agree with his Subjects.

Thus peace after a fort concluded between the King and him, the Archbiſhop, after ſix years of his baniſhment, returned to England, where he was right joyfully received of the Church of Canterbury; albeit of Henry the young King, he was not ſo greatly welcomed. In ſo much that coming up to London to the King, he was returned back to Canterbury, and there bid to keep his Houſe. Roger Hoveden maketh mention in his Chronicle, That the Archbiſhop (upon Chriſtmas-day) did Excommunicate Robert de Brooke for cutting of the tail of a certain Horſe of his the day before. In the mean time the four Biſhops before mentioned, whom the Archbiſhop had Excommunicate, ſent to him, humbly deſiring to be releaſed of their cenſure. To whom when the Archbiſhop would not grant clearly and ſimply without cautels and exceptions, they went over to the King, declaring unto him and complaining of their miſerable ſtate and uncourteous handling of the Archbiſhop. Whereupon the King conceived great ſorrow in his mind, and diſpleaſure toward the party. Inſomuch that he lamented oft and ſundry times to them about him that (amongſt ſo many that he had done for) there was none that would revenge him of his enemy. By occaſion of which words, certain that were about the King (to the number of four) hearing him thus to complain and lament, addreſſed themſelves in great heat of haſte to ſatisfie the grieved mind and quarel of their Prince: who within four days after the ſaid Chriſtmas-day (failing over into England, and having a forward and proſperous wind in their journey, being in the deep of Winter) came to Canterbury, where Becket was commanded to keep. After certain adviſements and conſultations had among themſelves: they preſſed at length into the Palace where the Archbiſhop was ſitting with his company about him: firſt to aſſay him with words, to ſee whether he would relent to the Kings mind, and come to ſome conformity. They brought to him (ſaid they) commandment from the King, which whether he had rather openly there in preſence, or ſecretly to be declared to him, they bad him chuſe. Then the company being bid to avoid, as he ſat alone, they ſaid, You are commanded from the King beyond the Sea, to repair to the King his Son here, and to do your Baronage and other things, and to amend thoſe things wherein you have treſpaſſed againſt him. Whereupon the Archbiſhop denying to ſwear, and perceiving their intent, called in his company again, and in multiplying of words to and fro, at length they came to the Biſhops which were Excommunicate for the Coronation of the King, whom they commanded in the Kings name he ſhould abſolve and ſet free again. The Archbiſhop anſwered, That he neither Suſpended nor Excommunicated them, but the Pope; wherefore, if that were the matter that grieved them, they ſhould reſort to the Pope, he had nothing to do with the matter. Becket returneth out of baniſhment. Ex Rogero Hovedene. The words of the King which were the cauſe of Becket's death. If the Popes will needs run for the diſcords of Kings by reaſon of weather, then muſt they by that reaſon condemn the cauſe of Becket, his adherents having ſuch foreknowledge of weather in doing their feat. The ſtout heart of Becket. The talk between the four Souldiers and Thomas Becket.

Then ſaid Reginald one of the four; Although you in your own perſon did not Excommunicate them, yet through your inſtigation it was done. To whom the Archbiſhop ſaid ſaid again, And if the Pope (ſaid he) rendring the injuries done unto me and my Church, wrought this revenge for me, I confeſs it offendeth me nothing. Thus then (ſaid they) it appeareth well by your own words, that it pleaſeth you right well (in contempt and contumely of the King: Majeſty) to ſequeſter his Biſhops from their miniſtery, who at the commandment of the King did ſervice in the Coronation of his Son. And ſeeing you have ſo preſumed thus to ſtand againſt the exaltation of this our Sovereign, our new King, it ſeemeth likely that you aſpired to take his Crown from him, and to be exalted King your ſelf. I aſpire not (ſaid he) to the Crown and Name of the King, but rather if I had four Crowns (to give him more) I would ſet them all upon him; ſuch good will I do bear him, that only his Father the King excepted, there is none, whoſe honour I more tender and love. And as concerning the ſequeſtring of thoſe Biſhops, this I give you to underſtand, that nothing was done in that behalf without the knowledge and aſſent of the King himſelf: to whom when I had made my complaint at the Feaſt of Mary Magdalene, of the wrong and injury done to me and my Church therein; he gave me his good leave to obtain at the Popes hand ſuch remedy as I could, promiſing moreover his help to me in the ſame. What is this, quoth they, that thou ſayſt? Makeſt thou the King a Traitor, and a betrayer of the King his own Son? that when he had commanded the Biſhops to crown his Son, he would give thee leave afterward to ſuſpend them for ſo doing? Certes, it had been better for you not to have accuſed ſo the King of this prodition. The Archbiſhop ſaid to Reginald, that he was there preſent at that time, and heard it himſelf. But that he denied, and ſwore it was not ſo. And think you (ſaid they) that we the Kings Subjects will or ought to ſuffer this? And ſo approaching nearer him, they ſaid he had ſpoken enough againſt his own head; whereupon followed great exclamation and many threatning words. Then ſaid the Archbiſhop, I have ſince my coming over ſuſtained many injuries and rebukes, concerning both my ſelf, my Men, my Cattel, my Woods, and all other Goods; notwithſtanding the King, writing over to his Son, required him that I ſhould live in ſafety and peace, and now, beſide all others, you come hither to threaten me. To this Reginald anſwering again, ſaid, If there be any that worketh you any injury otherwiſe than right is, the Law is open, why do you not complain? To whom, ſaid Becket, ſhould I complain? To the young King, ſaid they. Then ſaid Becket, I have complained enough if that would help, and have ſought for remedy at the Kings hands, ſo long as I could be ſuffered to come to his ſpeech: but now ſeeing that I am ſtopt from that, neither can find redreſs of ſo great vexations and injuries as I have and do daily ſuſtain, nor can have the benefit of the law or reaſon's ſuch right and law, as an Archbiſhop may have, that will I exerciſe, and let for no man. At theſe words one of them, burſting out in exclamation, cried, He threatneth, he threatneth, What? will he interdict the whole Realm and us altogether? Nay, that he ſhall not, ſaith another, he hath interdicted too many already. And drawing more near to him, they proteſted and denounced him to have ſpoken words to the jeopardy of his own head. And ſo departing in great fury, and with many high words, they ruſhed out of the doors; who, by the way returning to the Monks, charged them in the Kings Name, to keep him forth-coming, that he ſhould not eſcape away. What, quoth the Archbiſhop, think ye, I will flee away? Nay, neither for the King, nor any man alive, will I flie one foot from you. No, ſay they, thou ſhalt not avoid though thou would. And ſo they departing with many words, the Archbiſhop followeth them out of the Chamber door, crying after them, Here, here, here ſhall you find me, laying his hand upon his Crown.

The Names of theſe four ſouldiers above mentioned were theſe, the firſt Reginald Bereſon, the ſecond Hugh Mortevil, the third William Tracy, and the fourth Richard Brito; who, going to harneſs themſelves, returned the ſame day again; but finding the Hall-door of the Palace of Canterbury ſhut againſt them, they went to an inward back Door leading into the Orchard; there brake they up a Window, and opened the Door, and ſo ſtood into the place. The Monks (being about Even-ſong time) had got the Archbiſhop into the Church; who being Anno 1163.

perſwaded by them, cauſed his Croſs to be born before him, and through the Cloiſter, by a Door which was broken up for him, he proceeded into the Quire. The Harneſs men following after, at length came to the Church-door, which door the Monks would have ſhut againſt them; but, as the ſtory ſaith, the Archbiſhop would not ſuffer them. So they approaching into the Church, and the Archbiſhop meeting them upon the Stairs, there he was ſlain; every one of the four Souldiers ſtriking him with his Sword into the Head; who afterward flying into the North, and at length, with much ado, obtained their Pardon of the Pope by the Kings procurement, as ſome ſtories record, went to Jeruſalem. The death of Thomas Becket.

¶ Thus you have heard the Life and Death of this Thomas Becket, of whom what is to be judged, let his own acts and facts declare. And albeit the Scripture ought to be the only rule to us to judge all things by, yet if any ſhall require further teſtimony, partly to ſatisfie their minds therein, ye ſhall hear the judgments of certain men, in years and times almoſt as ancient as himſelf, what they write and affirm of him. What is to be thought or judged of T. Becket.

And firſt to begin with the teſtimony of one of his own Religion, and alſo not far (as it appeareth) from his own time, who, writing of his Martyrdom and Miracles, thus teſtifieth of the judgment and ſentence of divers concerning his promotion and behaviour. The Chronicle being written in Latine, and having the name of the Author cut out, thus beginneth; Quoniam vero multi, &c. And in the firſt Book and eighth Chapter it followeth in this manner: Nonnullic tamen idcirco promotionem ejus viſum eſt fuiſſe minus canonicam, quod ad eam magis operata eſt regis inſtantia, quam cleri vel populi voto. Preſumptionis quoque vel indiſcretionis fuiſſe notatum eſt, quod qui rerum tenere vix idoneus videbatur, primum gubernaculi locum ſuſcepit, &c. Et mox, magis etiam ſecularia tum ſapiens, tum ſanctum tumæ dignitatis faſtigium non horrens tenuiſſe, ſed ultrorneus aſcendiſſe creditur. Aliter Dei amicus, Moſes, &c. With much more, as in Latin inſueth, which for the Engliſh Reader here followeth tranſlated. What is to be thought, whether Thomas Becket died a Saint or not.

‘ Divers notwithſtanding there be, which as touching his promotion, ſuppoſe the ſame not to be Canonical. ‘ For that it was wrought rather by the inſtance of the ‘ King (thinking him to be a man ready and inclinable to ‘ his utility) than by the aſſent either of the Clergy, or of the ‘ People. Further, it is noted in him for a point of preſumption, and lack of diſcretion, for that he, being ſcarce ‘ worthy to take the Oar in hand and play the Boatſwain, ‘ would take upon him to ſit at Helm and guide the Ship; ‘ namely, in that Church, where the Covent, being in groſſure and veſture religious, be wont to have their Prelate ‘ taken out of the ſame profeſſion. Whereas he, ſcant bearing the habit of a Clerk, and going in his changes and ſoft apparel, is more convenſant among the delicate ruffles ‘ in the Court, favouring rather of worldly things, not refuſing moreover, without any dread, to climb up to the ‘ high preferment of ſuch an holy dignity, but rather willingly of his own accord to aſpire to it. Moſes we read did otherwiſe, who being the friend of God, and ſent of him ‘ to conduct his people Iſrael out of Egypt, trembled at the Meſſage, and ſaid, Who am I Lord, that I ſhould go to Pharaoh, and bring thy people Iſrael out of Egypt? And again, I pray thee (ſaith he) O Lord, I am nothing eloquent, ſend him whom thou wilt ſend. Likewiſe Jeremias alſo, being ſent of the Lord to prophelie againſt Jeruſalem, was abaſhed to take the office upon him, anſwering again with much dread of heart, A, a, a, Lord, I cannot utter my mind, for I am a child. The promotion of Becket judged not Canonical. Becket charged with preſumption and lack of diſcretion. Ambition noted in Becket, in not refuſing but taking his promotion.

After like manner we read of the Saints of the New Teſtament, whereof many were preferred oftentimes to their Biſhoprics and Functions of the Church, by meet forcement and compulſion of others rather than by their own wills. So was bleſſed Gregory, after his flight and going away, brought back again, and placed in the See and Chair of Rome. Likewiſe Saint Ambroſe fore againſt his mind; who alſo, of purpoſe accuſing and confeſſing his own defects, becauſe he would be repealed: yet by the commandment of Valentinian the Emperor was inforced to take the burthen upon him, which he could by no wiſe ſhake off. S. Martin in like ſort, not knowing of any ſuch matter, was circumvented by a certain godly grain, and viſit of the Citizens, before he could be brought Biſhops againſt their wills thruſt into their Biſhoprickes.

to his Consecration; which he did not so much take, as he was thrust into it with much pensiveness and sorrow of heart. By these and such other examples this Chancellor likewise should have rather excused himself as unworthy and unmeet for that room, shewing himself more willing to refuse than to take it. To the which this Archbishop is judged to do clean contrary, &c. Hæc ex chronico, cui Titulus, De passione & miraculis beati Thomæ.

Ex Chronico Neuburgens.

And although scarcely any testimony is to be taken of that Age (being all blinded and corrupted with superstition) yet let us hear what Neubrugensis an ancient Historiographer saith, who, in the days of the Son of this King Henry the second, prosecuting his History unto King Richard the first, hath these words, writing of Thomas Becket: Sane cum plerique soleant in his quos amant & laudant affectu quodam propensiori, sed prudentia parciori, quicquid ab eo geritur approbare: plane ego in viro illo venerabili, ea quæ ita ab ipso acta sunt, quum nulla exinde proveniret utilitas, sed fervor tantum accenderetur regitus, ex quo tot mala postmodum pullulasse noscuntur, laudanda nequaquam censuerim, licet ex laudabili zelo processerint: sicut in beatissimo apostolorum principe, quod gentes suo exemplo judaizare coegit; in quo eum doctor gentium reprehensibilem declarat fuisse, licet eum constet laudabili hoc pietate feciss e, &c.

Alla Becketi laus.

That is in English:

Whereas many be wont, in them whom they love our praise (judging them more by affection than prudence) to allow and approve whatsoever they do, yet for me to judge upon the reverend man, verily I think not his doings and acts to be praise-worthy, or to be allowed, for so much as thereof came no utility, but only the anger and stirring up of the King: whereupon afterward sprung so great mischiefs (although the thing that he did might proceed of a certain laudable zeal:) like as in the blessed Prince of the Apostles, in that he taught the Gentiles by his example to play the Jews, Paul the Doctor of the Gentiles did declare him therein to be rebukeable, albeit it cannot be denied, but that he did it of a good affection, &c.

And in the same Author, in another place it followeth to the like effect, in these words: Literas has in Angliam ad suspensionem Episcoporum præmissas ipse sequebatur, zelo justitiæ fervidus; verum an plene secundum scientiam movit Deus. Nostræ enim parvitati nequaquam concreditur, de tanti viri actibus temere judicare. Puto enim quod in molli adhuc teneraque regis concordia minus provide egisset, & ea quæ sine fidei Christianæ periculo tolerari potuissent, ratione temporis & compensatione pacis dissimulanda dixisset, juxta illud propheticum: Prudens in tempore illo tacebit, quia tempus malum est. Itaque quod a venerabili Pontifice tunc actum est, nec laudandum esse judico, nec vituperare præsumo: sed dico, si vel modice in hujusmodi a sancto viro per zeli, immoderatiorem impetum esse excessum, hoc ipsum est sacræ, quæ conjecta noscitur, igne passionis excoctum. Ita quippe sancti viri vel amandi vel laudandi sunt a nobis, qui nos illi longe impares esse cognoscimus, ut ea, in quibus homines fuerunt, vel fuisse noscuntur, nequaquam vel amemus vel laudemus: sed ea tantum, in quibus eos sine scrupulo imitari debemus. Quis enim eos dicat in omnibus, quæ ab ipsis fiant, esse imitabiles? Non igitur in omnibus, quæ faciunt, sed sapienter & caute debent laudari, ut sua Deo prærogativa serveturr, in cujus utique laudibus nemo potest esse nimius, quantumcunque laudare conetur, &c.

That is in English:

The Letters which were sent before for the suspending of the Bishops, he pursued with burning zeal of justice; but whether according to knowledge God knoweth it. It is not for my rude and slender wit to judge of the doings of such a person. But yet this I suppose, that he did not behave himself so circumspectly as he ought, considering the time; and that the concord between him and the King as yet was but soft and tender. Who for the consideration of the time, and for the recompence of peace might have forborne or dissembled such things, which without any peril of Christian Religion might be tolerate well enough, according to the prophetical saying, A wise man in that time will keep silence, because the time will not serve him. Wherefore, as the doings of that reverend Prelate I judge in that behalf not to be commended, so neither do I presume to discommend them. But this I say, that if that holy Man, through immoderate violence of zeal, did exceed in a part therein, the same was excocted again, and purged by the fire of his suffering, which afterward insued. And so far holy Men are to be loved or praised of us, which know our selves much inferiour to their virtues; that in such things wherein they have been Men, and also known to be men, therein we neither hold with them, nor commend them; but only in such things wherein without all danger or scruple we ought to imitate them. For who is able to say, that they are to be imitated in all that they do? And therefore are not to be esteemed and praised in all things generally whatsoever they do, but considerately and with advisement, wherein they deserve praise, so that the only prerogative in this behalf be reserved to God, in whose praise no man can exceed, how fervent soever he be in his praising, &c.

And hear yet more what the said Author writeth in the same cause of the Kings wrath and Beckets faults: Plusquam centum homicidia a clericis commissa fuh Henrico secundo dicuntur. In quibus plectendis Rex aliquanto vehementior. Sed hujus immoderationis regiæ, nostri temporis Episcopos tantum respicit culpa, quantum ab eis processit & causa. Cum enim sacri præcipiunt canones, clericos non solum facinorosos & gravioribus irretitos criminibus, verumetiam leviorum criminum reos degradari, & tot millia talium, tanquam innumerasinter pauca grana paleæ Ecclesia Anglicana contineat, tamen quam paucos a multis retro annis clericos in Anglia contigit officio privari. Nempe Episcopi dum defendendis magis clericorum libertatibus vel dignitatibus, quam eorum vitiis corrigendis rescandisque invigilant, arbitrantur obsequium se præstare Deo & Ecclesiæ, si facinerosos clericos, quos pro officii debito canonicæ vigore censuræ coercere debeant, contra publicam tueantur disciplinam. Unde clerici, qui in fortem Domini vocati, tanquam stellæ in firmamento cœli positæ, vita & verbo lucere deberent super terram, habentes pro imputitate agendi quodcunque libuerit, licentiam & libertatem, neq; Deum, cujus judicium tardare videtur, neque homines potestatem habentes reverentur, cum & Episcopalis circa eos solicitudo sit languida, & seculari eos jurisdictione sacri eximat ordinis prærogativa.

Liber de miraculis B. Thomæ ex libro Monachi quodam Cantuar.

In English:

More than an hundred Murthers are said to be committed by the Clergy under King Henry the second: in punishing of whom the King was somewhat too vehement. But the fault, saith he, of this immoderate dealing of the King resteth most in the Bishops of our time, for so much as the cause thereof proceedeth of them. For where it is decreed and commanded by the Canon Law (concerning the spiritual Men of the Clergy) that not only such as be notorious, but such as be spotted with lighter crimes should be degraded, whereof we have so many thousands, and whole swarmes of such now in* England, as innumerable chaff among the little good Grain; yet how few do we see these many years in England, deprived of their office? For why? The Bishops while they labour more to maintain the liberties and dignities of Churchmen, than to correct their Vices, think they do God and the Church great service, if they rescue and defend the enormities of the Church-men against publick discipline, whom they ought rather to punish by the vertue of the censure Ecclesiastical. Whereupon the Churchmen, such as be sorted peculiarly to the Lord, and ought like Stars to shine in Earth by word and example, taking licence and liberty to do what they lust, neither reverence God (whose judgment seemeth to tarry) neither Men set in Authority; when as both the Bishops are slack in their charge doing, and also the prerogative of their order exempteth them from the secular jurisdiction, &c. And thus much out of of Neubrugensis.

Ex Cæsario monachi Heisterbacensis dialogo.

To this matter also pertain the words of Cesarius the Monk in his eighth Book of Dialogues and sixty ninth Chapter, about the eight and fortieth year after the death of Thomas Becket, which was the year of God 1220. whose words in summ come to this effect: Quæstio Parisiis inter magistros ventilata fuit, utrum damnatus an salvatus esset ille Tho. Dixerat Rogerius tunc Normannus, fuisse illum morte ac damnatione dignum, quod contumax esset in Dei ministrum regem. Protinus contra Petrus Cantor Parisiensis, quod signa salvationis & magnæ sanctitatis essent ejus miracula: & quod Martyrium probasset Ecclesiæ causa, pro qua mortem subierat, &c.

Whether The. Becket be damned or saved.

In English:

There was a question moved among the Masters of Paris, whether Thomas Becket was saved or damned? To this question answereth Roger a Norman, that he was worthy death and damnation, for that he was so obstinate against Gods Minister his King. Contrary, Peter Cantor a Parisian disputed, saying and affirming, that his Miracles were great signs and tokens of salvation, and also of great belief in that Man: affirming moreover, that the cause of the Church did allow and confirm his Martyrdome, for the which Church he died, &c.

In God in their lesser days giveth no Miracles to glorifie his own Saints much less will he give Miracles to glorifie Thomas Becket.

And thus have ye the judgment and censure of the School of Paris touching this question, for the sanctimg of Thomas Becket. In which judgment for so much as the greateft argument refteth in the Miracles wrought by him after his death; let us therefore pause a little upon the same, to try and examine these his Miracles. In the trial whereof we shall find one of these two to be true; that either if they were true, they were wrought not by God, by a contrary spirit, of whom Christ our Lord giveth us warning in his Gospel, saying, Whose coming shall be with lying signs and wonders, to deceive, if it were possible, the elect, Matth. 24. or else we shall find that no such were ever wrought at all, but feigned and forged of idle Monks, and religious bellies, for the exaltation of their Churches, and profit of their pouches; which thing indeed seemeth rather to be true, and no less may appear by the Miracles themselves, set forth by one of his own Monks, and of his own time; who in five solemn Books hath comprehended all the Revelations, Vertues and Miracles of the Archbishop; the which Books (as yet remaining in the hands of William Stephenson Citizen of London) I have seen and perused; wherein is contained the whole summ of all his Miracles, to the number of 270. being so far off from all truth and reason, some ridiculous, some monstrous, vain, absurd, some also blasphemous, and some so impudent, that not only they deserve no credit, (altogether savouring of meer forgery) but also for very shame will abash an honest Pen to write of them. Firft, if Miracles serve for necessity and for Infidels, what cause or necessity was there (in a Christian Realm having the Word of God) for God to work such Miracles after his death, who never wrought any in all his life? Then to confider the end of these Miracles, whither do they tend, but only to bring Men to Canterbury, with their Vows and Offerings to enrich the Covent?

Liber de miraculis B. Thomæ ex libro Monachi quodam Cantuar.

Miracles of Becket how confirmed.

Beside the number of these Miracles, which be said to be so many, that they lose their own credit; what disease is there belonging to Man or Woman, in the curing whereof some Miracle hath not bin wrought by this Σωματοφύλαξ, as Fevers, Fistula, the Gout, Toothach, Palsie, Consumption, Falling-sickness, Leprosie, Head-ach, broken Arms, maimed Legs, swelling Throats, the railing up of the dead which have been two days departed; with infinite others. And as all these have been healed (for the most part) by one kind of falve (as a certain Panacea) which was, with the water only of Canterbury, like as a cunning Smith, which would open with one Key all manner of Locks; so again, in reading of the story of these Miracles, ye shall find the matter so conveied, that the power of this dead Saint was never twice shewed on any one Disease, but every divers Disease had a divers Miracle.

Agua Cantuariensis.

To recite in order all these prodigious Revelations and fantastical Miracles, fally imagined and ascribed to this Archbishop, were nothing else but to write a Legend of lies, and to occupy the People with trifles. Which because it pertaineth rather to the idle profession of such dreaming Monks and Cloisterers, that have nothing else to maintain that Religion withal; I will not take their profession out of their hands. Wherefore to omit all such vain and lying Apparitions and Miracles, as how this angry Saint (three days after his death) appeared by Vision at the Altar in his Pontificalibus, commanding the Quire not to sing, but to say this office of his Mass, Exurge, quare obdormis Domine, &c. Which Vision the Author himself of the Book doth say he did see. To omit also the blasphemous lie, how in another Vision the said Archbishop should say, that his bloud did cry out of the earth to God, more than the bloud of just Abel. Item, in another Vision it was shewed to a Monk of Lewis, how Saint Thomas had his place in Heaven appointed with the Apostles, above Stephen, Laurence, Vincent, and all other Martyrs. Whereof this cause is rendred, for that St. Stephen, Laurence, and such others, suffered only for their own cause; but this Thomas suffered for the Universall Church. Item, how it was shewed to a certain young Man (Osmund by name) twelve yeres before the death of this Becket, that among the Apostles and Martyrs in Heaven there was a vacant place left for a certain Priest as he said, of England, which was credibly supposed to be this Thomas Becket. Item, How a certain Knights Son, being two days dead, was revived again so soon as he had the water of Canterbury put in his Mouth, and had by his Parents four pieces of Silver bended, to be offered in Canterbury in the Childs behalf. All these, I say, with such other like to omit (the number whereof cometh to an infinite variety) only this one story, or another that followeth, shall suffice to express the vanity and impudent forgery of all the rest.

Singing at the Mass: forbidden by T. becket after his death.

A blasphemous lie.

Becket above the Martyrs in Heaven.

A place prepared in Heaven for Becket 12. years before his death.

In the fourth Book of this fabulous Author, and in the third Chapter, a Miracle is there contained of a certain Countryman of Bedfordshire in Kings Weston, whose name was Eilwardus; which Eilwardus, in his drunkenness, shifting into another Mans House which was his Debtor, took out of his House a great Whetstone, and a pair of Hedging-gloves. The other party seeing this value not sufficient for his condemnation (by the counsel of the Town-Clerk) entred an Action of Felony against him for other things besides, as for stealing his Wimble, his Axe, his Net, and other Cloths. Wherefore Eilwardus being had to the Gaol of Bedford, and afterward condemned for the same, was judged to have both his eies put out, and also those Members cut off, which Nature with secret shame hath covered. Which punishment by the malice of his adverfary being executed upon him, he, lying in great danger of death by bleeding, was counselled to make his prayer to this Thomas of Canterbury. Which done (saith the Miracle) there appeared one to him by Night, in white Apparel, bidding him to watch and pray, and put his trust in God and our Lady, and holy St. Thomas. In conclusion, the Miracle thus fell out: The next day at Evening, the Man rubbing his Eye-lids, began to feel his Eies to be restored again; first in a little, after in a greater measure, so that one was of a gray colour, the other was of black; and here was one Miracle rung. After this followed another Miracle also upon the same person; for going but the space of four miles, when his eies were restored, he chanced (in like manner) to rub the place where his secret parts were cut off, and immediately on the same his Pendula (to use the words of my story) were to him restored, Principio parvus quidem valde, sed in majus proficientia, which he permitted every one to feel that would, and thanked not to deny. Insomuch that he, coming up to St. Thomas, first at London, was received with joy of the Bishop of Durham; who, then sending to the Burgers of Bedford for the truth of the matter, received from them again Letters Testimonial, wherein the Citizens there (saith this fabulous Festival) confirmed first to the Bishop, then to the Covent of Canterbury, the relation of this to be as hath been told. This one Miracle (gentle Reader) so shameless and impudent, I thought here to express, that by this one thou mightst judge of all the residue of his Miracles; and by the residue thereof mightest judge moreover of all the filthy wickedness of all these lying Monks and Cloisterers, which count it a light sport so impudently to deceive the simple souls of Christs Church with trifling lies and dreaming fables. Wherefore (as I said) if the holy fainting of Thomas Becket standeth upon no other thing but upon his Miracles, what credit is to be given thereto? and upon what a weak ground his Shrine so long hath stood, by this may easily be seen. Furthermore, another fable as notable as this, and no less worthy of the Whetstone, we read in the story of Gervasius: That Thomas Becket appearing to a certain

An impudent lie.

A false and impudent Miracle.

A blasphemous vision.

Priest, named Thomas, declared to him, that he had so brought to pass, that all the Names of the Monks of the Church of Canterbury, with the Names of the Priests and Clerks, and with the Families belonging to that City and Church of Canterbury, were written in the Book of Life. Ex Gervas. fol.6.

But whatsoever is to be thought of his Miracles, or howsoever the testimony of the School of Paris, or of these ancient times, went with him or against him; certain it is, that this Antheme or Collect, lately collected and primered in his praise, is blasphemous, and derogateth from the praise of him, to whom only all praise and honour is due, where it is said;

The blasphemous Anthem of Thomas Becket.

Tu per Thomæ sanguinem, quem pro te impendit,
Fac nos Christe scandere, quo Thomas ascendit.

That is:

For the bloud of Thomas,
Which he for thee did stend,
Grant us (Christ) to climb,
Where Thomas did ascend.

Wherein is a double lie contained; first, that he died for Christ; secondly, that if he had so done, yet that his bloud could purchase Heaven. Which thing neither Paul nor any of the Apostles durst ever challenge to themselves: for if any Mans bloud could bring us to Heaven, then the bloud of Christ was shed in vain.

And thus much touching the testimony or censure of certain ancient times concerning the cause of Thomas Becket. In the explication of whose History I have now stood the longer (exceeding peradventure in over-much prolixity) to the intent that his cause being fully opened to the world, and duely weighed on every part, mens minds (thereby long deceived by ignorance) might come unto the more perfect certainty of the truth thereof, and thereby judge more surely what is to be received, and what to be refused. Where by the way is to be noted out of the testimony of Rob. Crikeladensis, which in him I find; that the Peers and Nobles of this Land, near about the King, gave out in straight charge upon pain of death, and confiscating of all their Goods, that no Man should be so hardy as to name Thomas Becket to be a Martyr, or to preach of his Miracles, &c. Ex Crikeladensi.

After the death of Thomas Becket, the King fearing the Popes wrath and curse to be laid upon him (whereunto Ludovike the French King also helped what he could to set the matter forward) sent to Rome the Archbishop of Rothomage, with certain other Bishops and Archdeacons unto the Pope with his excuse, which the Pope could in no wise hear. And after other Messengers being sent (whom some of the Cardinals received) it was shewed to them that on Goodfriday (being then near at hand) the Pope of custom was used to assoil or to curse, and that it was noised, how the King of England with his Bishops should be cursed, and his Land interdicted, and that they should be put in Prison. After this, certain of the Cardinals shewed the Pope, that the Messengers had power to swear to the Pope, that the King should obey his punishment and Penance; which was taken both for the King and the Archbishop of York. So that in the same day the Pope cursed the deed doers, with such as were of their consent, that either aided or harboured them. Concerning these deed doers, it is touched briefly before, how they lying in Gonasborough fled into Yorkshire; who, after having in Penance to go in their linnen Clothes barefoot (in fasting and prayer) to Jerusalem, by reason of this hard Penance are said to die in few years after.

The penance of the four Knights.

The Kings Embassadors lying, as is said, in Rome, could find no grace nor favour a long time at the Popes hands. At length with much ado it was agreed, that two Cardinals should be sent down to inquire out the matter concerning them that were consenting to Becket's death. The King perceiving what was preparing at Rome, neither being yet certain whereto the intent of the Pope and coming down of the Cardinals would tend; in the mean time addrefred himself with a great power to enter into Ireland, giving in charge and commandment, as Hoveden writeth, that no bringer of any Brief or Letter should come over into England, or pass out of the Realm (of what degree or condition soever he were) without special licence, and assurance that he would bring nothing that should be prejudicial to the Realm.

Ex Hoveden.

This order being set and ordained, the King with 400 great Ships taketh his journey to Ireland, where he subdued in short time the whole Land unto him, which at that time was governed under divers Kings to the number of five; of whom four submitted themselves unto the said King Henry, only the fifth, who was the King of Tonaëa, denied to be subdued, keeping him in Woods and Marshes.

Ireland fet subdued to England.

In the mean season, while the King was thus occupied in Ireland, the two Cardinals that were sent from the Pope (Theodinus and Albertus) were come to Normandy. Unto whom the King the next year following resorted about the Month of October, in the year 1172. But before (during the time of the Kings being in Ireland) the Bishop of London, and Joselinе Bishop of Salisbury had sent to Rome, and procured their absolution from the Pope. The King returning out of Ireland, by Wales, into England, and from thence to Normandy, there made his purgation before the Popes Legates, as touching the death of the foresaid Becket; to the which he sware he was neither aiding nor consenting, but only that he spake rigorous words against him, for that his Knights would not avenge him against the said Thomas; for the which cause this Penance was injoyned him under his Oath.

Anno 1174.

The King Penance for the death of Becket.

First, that he should send 60 much into the holy Land, as would find two hundred Knights or Souldiers for the defence of that Land.

Also, That from Christmass day next following, he should set forth in his own person to fight for the Holy Land, the space of three years together, unless he should be otherwise dispensed withal by the Pope.

Item, That if he would make his journey into Spain (as his present necessity did require) there he should fight against the Saracens, and as long time as he should there abide, so long space might he take in prolonging his journeys toward Jerusalem.

Item, That he should not hinder, nor cause to be hindred by him, any appellations made to the Pope of Rome.

Item, That neither he nor his Son should depart or disfever from Pope Alexander, or from his Catholick Successors, so long as they should recount him or his Son for Kings Catholick.

Item, That the Goods and possessions taken from the Church of Canterbury should be restored again (fully and amply) as they stood the year before Thomas Becket departed the Realm; and that free liberty should be granted to all such as were outlawed for Becket's cause to return again.

Item, That the foresaid Customs and Decrees, by him established against the Church, should be extinct and repealed; such only except that concerned his own person, &c.) besides other secret sastings and almes enjoyned him.

All these former conditions the King with his Son did both agree unto, debasing himself in such sort of submission before the two Cardinals, by the occasion whereof, the Cardinal took no little glory, using this Verse of the Psalm, Qui respicit terram, & facit eam tremere; qui tangit montes & fumigant: That is, Which looketh upon the earth, and maketh it to tremble, which toucheth the hills, and they smoke, &c. Moreover, it is mentioned in Histories of the said King, that a little after, William King of Scots with his Army had made a Rode into the Realm, he, returning out of Normandy into England, came first to Canterbury; who by the way (so soon as he came to the sight of Becket's Church) lighting off his Horse, and putting off his Shoes, went barefoot to his Tomb, whole steps were found bloudy through the roughness of the stones. And not only that, but also he received further Penance, by every Monk of the Cloister, certain discipline of a rod. By which so great dejection of the King (if it were true) thou mayst see the blind and lamentable superstition and ignorance of those days. If it were pretended (as might so be in time of war, to get the hearts of the people) yet mayst thou, learned Reader, see what slavery Kings and Princes were brought into at that time under the Popes Clergy. The same year (as Hoveden writeth) which was 1174. the whole City of Canterbury was almost all consumed with fire, and the said Minster Church clean burnt.

The next year ensuing, which was 1175. a Convocation of Bishops was holden at Westminster by Richard Archbishop of Canterbury. In which Conventicle all the Bishops and Abbots of the Province of Canterbury and of York being present, determined (as it had done a little before in the days of King Henry the first, Anno 1113.) about the obedience that York should do to Canterbury; that is, whether the Archbishop of York might bear his Cross in the Diocess of Canterbury or not, whereof something was touched before in the former proceis of this History. Also about the Bishoprick of Lincoln, of Chichester, of Worcester, and of Hereford, whether these Churches were under the jurisdiction of the See of York or not, &c. Upon these and other like matters rose such controversie between these two Sees, that the one appealed the other to the presence of the Bishop of Rome.

Anno 1175. Controversie between the See of Canterbury and the See of York. Archbishop of York appealeth the Archbishop of Canterbury to the Bishop of Rome.

In these and such like causes, how much better had it been if the Supremacy had remained more near in the Kings hands at home. Whereby not only much labour and travel had been saved, but also the great and wastful expences bestowed at Rome might with much more fruit and thank have been converted to their Cures and Flocks committed unto them, and also percase their cause no less indifferently heard, at least more speedily might have been decided. But to the purpose again. In this Controverse divers of the Bishops of York's Clergy, such as were of Glocester, belonging to the Church of Saint Oswald, were excommunicate by the Archbishop of Canterbury, because they, being summoned, refused to appear before him, &c. At length the same year, which was 1175. there was a Cardinal sent down from Rome by the Kings procurement, who studied to set a peace between the two Archbishops. Whereupon this way of agreement was taken (by the means of the King) at Winchester, that as touching the Church of Saint Oswald at Glocester, the Archbishop of Canterbury should cease his claim thereof, molesting the See of York no more therein; also should absolve again the Clerks thereof whom he had excommunicated before. And as concerning the bearing of the Cross and all other matters, it was referred to the Archbishop of Rothomage, and of other Bishops in France, so that for five years a league or truce was taken betwixt them, till they should have a full determination of their cause.

The next year following, the foresaid King Henry the second (dividing the Realm of England into six parts) ordained upon every part three Justices of Assise. The Circuit or Limitation of which Justices was thus disposed. The first upon Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeshire, Huntingtonshire, Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Essex, Hertfordshire. Two upon Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire, Staffordshire, Warwickshire, Northamptonshire, Leicestershire. Three upon Kent, Surry, Southamptonshire, Southsex, Barkshire, Oxfordshire. Four upon Herefordshire, Glocestershire, Worcestershire, Salopshire. In the which Year also Richard Archbishop of Canterbury made three Archdeacons in his Diocess, where as before there was but one. About which time also it was granted by the King to the Popes Legate, that a Clerk should not be called before a Temporal Judge, except for offence in the Foresi, or for his Lay fee that he holdeth.

A frivolous contention between the Archbishop and the Abbot of Canterbury. Where note here the pompe of the Gospel. He that will be great amongst you, let him be as a minister to others.

Item, That no Archbishoprick, Bishoprick, or Abby should remain in the Kings hands over one year without great cause. It chanced the same year that this was done, there was at Canterbury one elected to be Abbot in the House of St. Austine, named Albert, who made great labour and sute unto the Archbishop that he would come to his Church, and there consecrate him Abbot of St. Austins. To whom the Archbishop sent word again, that he was not bound to come to him, but rather the other should repair to the Metropolitan Church of Canterbury, there to receive his Consecration. Whereupon (controversie rising between them) the foresaid new elect appealed up to the audience of the Pope, and so laboured up himself to Rome. Where he so handled the matter (by what means I cannot tell, unless with his Golden Bottel, wherewith he quenched the Popes thirsty soul, for Abbots never travel lightly without fat Purses to Rome) that with short dispatch he procured Letters from Alexander the Pope, to Roger Bishop of Worcester; signifying to him, that he had given in charge and commandment to the Archbishop of Canterbury (in the behalf of his dear son Albert) that he should consecrate him within his own Monastery, which Monastery properly and solely without mediation belonged to the jurisdiction of Rome, and so likewise should do to his successors after him, without any exaction of obedience of them. Which thing, further he said, if the Archbishop would refuse to do within the term appointed, that then he the foresaid Bishop of Worcester should (by the authority committed unto him) execute the same, all manner of appellation or other decree, whatsoever should come, notwithstanding. This Letter being obtained, the Abbot that would be, returneth home, supposing with himself all things to be sure. The Archbishop understanding the cause, and seeing himself to be so straitly charged, and yet loth to yield and stoop to the Abbot, took to him policy where authority would not serve; and both to save himself, and yet to disappoint the Abbot, he watched a time when the Abbot was about businesse of his house. And coming the same time to the Monastery, as he was commanded to do, with all things appointed, that to such a businesse appertained, he called for the Abbot, pretending no less than to give him his Consecration. The Abbot, being called for, was not at home; the Archbishop, feigning himself not a little grieved at his labour and good will so lost, departed: as one in whom no ready diligence was lacking, if in case that the Abbot had been at home. Whereupon the Abbot being thus disappointed, was feign to fill his Silver Flagons afreth, and make a new course to Rome to his Father the Pope, of whom he received his Consecration, and so came home again, with as much wit as he went forth, but not with so much emony peradventure as he went withal.

The tenor of the Popes Letter to theBishop of Worcester.

We have declared a little afore touching the acts and doings of this Pope Alexander the third, how he had brought the Emperors head under his foot in Saint Mark's Church at Venice, at which time and place peace was concluded, and a composition made between the Pope and the said Frederick the Emperor. Which pacification Rogerus Hovedenus, and Gualterus Giburgensis, refer to this time, being the year of our Lord 1177. bringing in two several Letters sent from the said Pope Richard Archbishop of Canterbury, and to Roger Archbishop of York, and Hugh Bishop of Duresme. Out of the which Letters, so much as serveth to our purpose, I have taken and here inserted.

Hovedenus Giburgensis Anno 1177.

The Letter of Pope Alexander, sent to Roger Archbishop of York, and to the Bishop of Duresme.

A Lexander servant of the servants of God, to his reverend brethren Roger Archbishop of York, and Hugh Bishop of Duresme, greeting and Apostolical blessing. The obsequy and service of your kind devotion, which hitherto you are known to have given both devoutly and laudably to us and to the Church, requireth that we should describe to you, as to our special friends, the prosperous success of the Church, and to let you know, as spiritual children of the Church, what hath happened to the same: For meet it is, convenient, and also honest, that you, whom we have had so firm and sure in our devotion, should now be cherished and made joyous in the prosperity of us and of the Church. And about the end of the Epistle it followeth thus:

A mock Emperor, and a proud Pope.

The next day following, which was the Feast of Saint James (the said Emperor so requesting) we came to the foresaid Church of St. Mark, there to celebrate our solemn Mass; where (as we were coming in the way) the said Emperor met us without the Church, and placing us again on his right hand, he brought us so into the Church. After the Mass was done, placing us again on his right hand, he brought us to the Church Door. And moreover, when we should take our Palfrie, he held our Stirrup, exhibiting to us such honour and reverence, as his Progenitors were wont to exhibite to our Predecessors. Wherefore shee shall shall be to incite your diligence and study towards us, that you rejoyce with us and the Church in these our prosperous successes, and also that you shall open the same effect of peace to other devout children of the Church: that such as be touched with the zeal of the house of the Lord, may congratulate and rejoyce also in the Lord for the great working of peace which he hath given. Given at Venice in the deep River, the 26 of July.

This Year the contention revived again, spoken of a little before, between the two Archbishops of York and Canterbury, the occasion whereof was this; The manner and practice of the Pope is, when he beginneth to lack Money, he sendeth some limiting Cardinal abroad to fetch his Harvest in. So there came this year into England (as lightly few years were without them) a certain Cardinal from Rome, called Hugo, or as Hovedenus nameth him, Hugezim, who would needs keep a Council at Westminster. To this Council resorted a great confluence (about middle of Lent) of Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Doctors, and such others of the Clergy. As every one was there placed in his order, and after his degree, first cometh the Archbishop of York named Roger, who (thinking to prevent the other Archbishop) came something sooner, and straightway placed himself on the right hand of the Cardinal. Richard the Archbishop of Canterbury, following shortly after, and seeing the first place taken up, refuseth to take the second, complaining of the Archbishop of York, as one prejudicial to his See. So while the one would not rise, and the other part not sit down, thereof se no small contention between them two. The Archbishop of Canterbury claimed the upper seat by the preheminence of his Church. Contrary, the Archbishop of York alledged for him the old Decree of Gregory, whereof mention is made before. By which this order was taken between the two Metropolitans of Canterbury and York, that which of them two should be first in election, he should have the preheminence in dignity to go before the other. Thus they contending to and fro, waxed so warm in words, that at last they turned to hot blows. How strong the Archbishop of York was in reason and argument, I cannot tell; but the Archbishop of Canterbury was stronger at the arms end; whose servants being more in number (like valiant Men) not suffering their Master to take such a foile, so prevailed against York (sitting on the right hand of the Cardinal) that they pluckt him down from the hand to the foot of the Cardinal upon the ground, treading and trampling upon him with their feet, that marvel it was he escaped with life. His Casule, Chimer and Rochet were all to be rent and torn from his Back. Here no reason would take place, no debating would serve, no praying could be heard, such clamour and tumult was there in the House among them, much like to the tumult which Virgil describeth:

Contention between two Archbishops who should sit on the right hand of the Cardinal.

Ac veluti in magno populo, cum sæpe coorta est
Seditio, sæviuntque animis ignobile vulgus,
Jamque faces & saxa volant, furor arma ministrat.

Now as the first part of this description doth well agree, so some peradventure will look again, that according to the latter part also of the same, my Lord Cardinal with sageness and gravity (after the manner of the old Romans standing up) should have ceased and allayed the disturbance, according to that which followeth in the Poet,

Tum pietate gravem meritis si forte virum quem
Conspexere, silent, arrectisque auribus astant:
Ille regit mentes dictis, & pectora mulcet; &c.

But what did the noble Roman Cardinal? Like a prety man of his hands (but a pretier man of his feet) standing up in the midst, and seeing the house in such a broile, committed himself to flight, and (as Hovedenus writeth) Abscondit se a facie illorum. The next day the Archbishop of York bringeth to the Cardinal his Rochet, to bear witness what injury and violence he had sustained; appealing and citing up the Archbishop of Canterbury with certain of his men to the Bishop of Rome. And thus the holy Council (the same day it was begun) brake up and was dissolved.

Under the Reign of this King Henry the second, the Dominion and Crown of England extended so far as hath not been seen in this Realm before him; whom Histories record to possess under his rule and jurisdiction, first, Scotland, to whom William King of Scots, with all the Lords Temporal and Spiritual, did Homage both for them and for their successors (the Seal whereof remaineth in the Kings Treasury) as also Ireland, England, Normandy, Aquitan, Gant, &c. To the Mountains of Pirenay, which be in the uttermost part of the great Ocean in the British Sea, being also Protector of France; to whom Philip the French King yielded both himself and his Realm wholly to his governance, in the year of our Lord 1181. Moreover, he was offered also to be the King of Jerusalem, by the Patriarch and Master of the Hospital there; who, then being distressed by the Soldan, brought him the Keies of their City, desiring his aid against the Infidels; which offer he then refused, alledging the great charge which he had at home, and the rebellion of his Sons, which might happen in his absence.

¶ And here the old Histories find a great fault with the King for his refusal; declaring that to be the cause of Gods Plagues, which after infued upon him by his Children, as the Patriach in his Oration (being offended with the King) prophesied should so happen to him for the same cause. Which story, if it be true, it may be a lesson to good Princes, not to deny their necessary help to their distressed neighbours, especially the cause appertaining unto God.

Add not to the desolate our neighbours, the Gabeonites being guilty. Ex Polydor. Ex Gentib. Cambrens.

The wisdom, discretion, manhood and riches of this Prince was so spread and renowned from all Quarters, that Messages came from Emmanuel Emperor of Constantinople, Frederick Emperor of Rome, and William Archbishop of Treuers in Almain, the Duke of Saxon, and from the Earl of Flanders, and also from the French King, (upon determination of great questions and strifes) to ask counsel and determination thereof of this King Henry, as of one most wise, and Schoolmaster of all wisdom and justice, to have solution of their questions and doubts. Moreover, Alphonsus King of Castile, and Sancius King of Navarre, being in strife for certain Castles and other possessions, submitted them (of their free accord, and by their Oath) to abide the award of this King Henry; who made award and pleased them both; whereby it is to be presupposed, that this King, to whom other Princes did so resort, as to their arbitrer and decifer, did not attend either to any sloth or vicious living. Wherefore it may seem that the acts of this Prince were not so vicious as some Monkish Writers do describe.

K. Henry chosen arbiter by two Kings

Among many other things in this King memorable, this one is to be noted (follow it who can) that he reigned five and thirty years, and having fixh Wars with his enemies, yet never upon his Subjects put any Tribute or Tax, nor yet upon the Spiritualty, first fruits and appropriations of Benefices. Belike they were not known, or else not used. And yet his Treasure after his death (weighed by King Richard his Son) amounted to above nine hundred thousand pounds, besides Jewels, precious Stones, and houshold furniture. Of the which substance eleven thousand pounds came to him by the death of Roger Archbishop of York, who had procured a Bull of the Pope, that if any Priest died within his Province without Testament, then he should have all his Goods. And shortly after the Archbishop died, and the King had all his Goods, which extended (as is said) to eleven thousand pounds besides Plate, in the year of our Lord God 1181.

A contrary Archbishop.

But as there is no felicity or wealth in this mortal World so perfect, which is not darkened with some cloud of incumbrance and adverfity; so it happened to this King, that among his other Princely successors, this incommodity followed him withal, that his Sons rebelled and stood in armour against him, taking the part of the French King against their Father. First, at the Coronation of Henry his Son, whom the Father joyned with him as King, he being both Father and King, took upon him (that notwithstanding) but as a Steward, and set down the first Dish as Sewer unto his Son, renouncing the name of a King. At what time the foresaid Archbishop of York, sitting on the right hand of the young King, said, Sir, ye have great cause this day to joy, for there is no Prince in the World that hath such an Officer this day, &c. And the young King disdaining his words, said, My Father is not dishonoured in this doing, for I am a King and a Queens Son, and so is not he. And not only this, but after he also persecuted his Father; and so in his youth when he had reigned but a few years died; teaching us what is the price and reward of breaking the just Commandment of God.

Pride deserveth all.

After him likewise Richard his Son (who was called Richard Cœur de Lion) rebelled against his Father, and also John his youngest Son did not much degenerate from the steps of his Brethren. Insomuch that this foresaid Richard (like an unkind child) persecuting and taking part against his Father, brought him to such distress of body and mind, that for thought of heart he fell into an Ague, and within four days departed, after he had reigned five and thirty years; whose Corpse as it was carried to be buried, Richard his Son coming by the way and meeting it, and beginning for compassion to weep, the blood brast incontinent out of the Nose of the King at the coming of his Son; giving thereby a certain demonstration how he was the only Author of his death.

After the death and reign of which King, his Children after him (worthily rewarded for their unnaturalness against their Father) lacking the success which their Father had, lost all beyond the Sea that their Father had got before.

And thus much concerning the Reign of Henry the Second, and the death of Thomas Becket; whose death (as aforesaid) happened in the days of Pope Alexander the Third; which Pope usurping the Keys of Ecclesiastical Regiment one and twenty years (or as Gisburnensis writeth, three and twenty years) governed the Church with much tumult; striving and contending with Frederick the Emperor, not shaming like a moft proud Lucifer, to tread with his foot upon the neck of the said Emperor, as is above described.

This Pope among many other his acts had certain Councils (as is partly before touched) some in France, some at Rome in Lateran; by whom it was decreed, that no Archbishop should receive the Pall, unless he should first swear. Concerning the solemnity of which Pall, for the order and manner of giving and taking the same with obedience to the Pope, as it is contained in their own words; I thought it good to set it forth unto thee, that thou mayest well consider and understand their doings therein.

The form and manner how and by what words the Pope is wont to give the Pall unto the Archbishop.

Giving of the Pall.

To the honour of Almighty God, and of Blessed Mary the Virgin, and of Blessed Saint Peter and Paul, and of our Lord Pope N. and of the holy Church of Rome, and also of the Church of N. committed to your charge, we give to you the Pall taken from the body of St. Peter, as a fulness of the office Pontifical, which you may wear within your own Church upon certain days, which be expressed in the privileges of the said Church, granted by the See Apostolick.

Notes upon the same.

§ 'To the honour, &c. With what confidence doth the Pope couple the honour of Almighty God, and the honour of Mary, of Saint Peter, and of the Pope, and of the Romish Church all together, if he had not been a presumptuous Lucifer, equalling himself not only with such Saints, but also even with him which is God alone, to be blessed for ever?

'Taken from the body, &c. If St. Peter's body be not all consumed, let him shew it if he can. If he cannot shew it, how then is this Pall taken from the body of St. 'Peter? Or if he mean it to be of St. Peter's own wearing, then belike St. Peter had a goodly Wardrobe of 'Palls, when every Archbishop in all Christendom receiveth from the Pope a divers Pall.

'As a fulness of the office, &c. Rather he might say the 'fulness of his own Purse, when as Archbishops paid so 'sweetly for it. Insomuch that Jacobus the Archbishop of 'Mentz, as is above touched a little before in the Council 'of Basil, where the price was wont to be but a thousand 'Florens, could not obtain it without six and twenty thousand Florens.

'Upon certain days, &c. This difference there was between the Pope and other Archbishops: for the Pope 'might wear the Pall at all times, and in all places at his 'pleasure. Archbishops might not wear it but upon certain 'days, and in their Church only within their Province. 'Moreover this Pall should not be asked but with great in'stance, and within three months, without which Pall he 'is not to be named Archbishop, but may be depofed; having it not after three months: and the same Pall must 'also be buried with him when he dieth; and when it is 'given, some priviledg must be given withal, or the old renewed.

Salvo meo ordine. This was the clause that made Becket to be banished &c to be slain.

That is in English:

I, N. Bishop of N. from this hour henceforth, will be faithful and obedient to blessed St. Peter, and to the holy Apostolick Church of Rome, and to my Lord N. the Pope. I shall be in no Council, nor help either with my consent or deed, whereby either of them, or any member of them may be impaired, or whereby they may be taken with any evil taking. The Council which they shall commit to me either by themselves, or by messenger, or by their Letters wittingly or willingly I shall utter to none to their hinderance and damage. To the retaining and maintaining the Papacy of Rome, and the Regalities of St. Peter, I shall be an aider (so mine order be saved) against all persons. The Legate of the Apostolick See both in going and coming I shall honourably intreat and help in all necessities. Being called to a Synod I shall be ready to come, unless I be let by some lawful and Canonical impeachment. The Palace of the Apostles every third year I shall visit either by my self or my messenger, except otherwise being licensed by the See Apostolick. All such possessions as belong to the Table and Diet of my Bishopricke, I shall neither sell, nor give, nor lay to mortgage, nor lease out, nor remove away by any manner of means without the consent and knowledg of the Bishop of Rome: so God help me and the holy Gospels of God.

And how he not those Bishoprikes perjured, which at the death of Q. Mary, set and let out a great part of their possessions from their successors.

A Note upon the ſame.

§ 'Hereby thou haſt by the way (gentle Reader) to 'note and conſider, among other things which here may 'be underſtood, that ſince the time the Oath began to be 'laid and thruſt upon Biſhops, all General Councils began
'to loſe their liberty. For how could any freedom remain
'for men to ſpeak their knowledg in redreſs of things, be'ing by their Oath ſo bound to the Pope to ſpeak nothing
'but on his ſide, to maintain the Papacy, and the Church
'of Rome in all times and places? Conjecture by thy ſelf
'(Chriſtian Reader) what is more hereby to be conſi-
'dered.

BEſides this it was alſo decreed in the ſaid Council at Rome of 310 Biſhops, by Pope Alexander, that no man ſhould have any Spiritual Promotion, except he were of lawful age, and born in Wedlock. That no Pariſh Church ſhould be void above ſix Months. That none within Orders ſhould meddle with Temporal buſineſs. That Prieſts ſhould have but one Benefice, and that the Biſhop ſhould be charged to find the Prieſt a Living till he be promoted.

That open Uſurers ſhould not communicate at Eaſter, nor be buried within the Church-yard.

That nothing ſhould be taken for miniſtring Sacraments or Burying.

Item. That every Cathedral Church ſhould have a Maſter to teach Children freely, without taking any thing for the ſame.

The Vow of Chaſtity laid upon Prieſts.

In this Council the Vow of Chaſtity was obtruded and laid upon Prieſts. Thomas Becket alſo and Bernard were Canonized for Saints.

During the reign and time of this King Henry the Second, the City of Norwich was deſtroyed and burnt by the men of Flanders. Alſo the Town of Leiceſter. Nottingham waſted, and the Burgeſſes ſlain by the Earl of Ferrers. The Town of Barwick deſtroyed by the Scots. The King of Scots was taken in war by Engliſhmen in the year of our Lord 1174. The Town of Huntington taken and burned. The Town of Canterbury by caſualty of fire burnt with all the Churches, ſpecially with the Trinity Church where Becket was worſhipped, An. eod. The year of our Lord 1170. William King of Scots, with David his Brother, and all the Barons of the Realm, did homage to the King of England. Ireland made ſubject to England. Decreed in a Council in Normandy, that no Boys or Children ſhould poſſeſs any Benefice. A Council of Lateran was holden at Rome, where were three and thirty Articles concluded; Anno 1179. The French King came in Pilgrimage to Thomas Becket, the King of England meeting him by the way, An. 1184. After the death of Richard Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who followed after Thomas Becket, ſucceeded Baldwinus; who of a Ciſtercian Monk being made a Biſhop, is ſaid never to eat fleſh in his life. Whom a certain poor woman bare and lean, meeting him in the ſtreet, deſired to know of him whether it were true that was ſaid of him, that he never did eat fleſh. Which thing when he had affirmed to be true: Nay (ſaith ſhe) that is falſe, for you have eaten my fleſh unto the bone, for I had but one Cow wherewith I was ſuſtained, and that have your Deans taken from me. True, true, ſaid the Biſhop, and thou ſhalt have another Cow as good as that, &c. Fornalenſ.

Baldwinus Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Moreover in the reign of the ſaid King Henry, about the year of our Lord 1178, I find in the Story of Roger Hoveden and others, that in the City of Tholouſe was a great multitude of men and women whom the Popes Commiſſioners, to wit, Peter Cardinal of St. Chryſogon, and the Popes Legate, with the Archbiſhops of Narbon and Biturienſis, Reginald Biſhop of Bath, John Biſhop of Pictavia, Henry Abbot Clarevallenſis, &c. did perſecute and condemn for Hereticks; of whom ſome were ſcourged naked, ſome chaſed away, ſome compelled to abjure. Concerning whoſe articles and opinions I have no firm ground to make any certain relation, forſomuch as I ſee the Papiſts many times ſo falſe in their quarreling accuſations, untruly collected mens ſayings, not as they meant, and meaning not as they ſaid, but wreſting and depraving ſimple mens aſſertions after ſuch a ſubtil ſort as they liſt themſelves to take them. But this I find, how one of the ſaid Commiſſioners or Inquiſitors (Henry the Abbot) in a certain Letter of his wrote thus of them: Nam & panem ſanctum vitæ æternæ, ſacerdotis miniſterio in verbo Domini conſecratum, non eſſe corpus Domini, novo dogmate contendebat aſſerere. That is, after a new opinion he affirmed that the holy bread of eternal life, conſecrated by the Miniſtry of the Prieſt, was not the body of the Lord, &c.

In the time of this Alexander ſprang up the Doctrine and name of them which were then called Pauperes de Lugduno, which of one Waldus a chief Senator in Lions, were named Waldenſes; Item Leoniſtæ & Inſabbatati; about the year of our Lord 1109, or (as Laziardus writeth) Anno 1170.

Waldenſes ſo named of Leyons, Lugdun, Sabbati.

Not long before this time (as is expreſſed above) roſe up Gratianus Maſter of the Decrees, and Petrus Lombardus Maſter of the Sentences, both Archpillars of all Papiſtry; after whom followed alſo two as evil, or worſe than they, Franciſcus and Dominicus, maintaining blind hypocriſie no leſs than the other maintained proud Prelacy. As theſe laboured one way by ſuperſtition and worldly advancement to corrupt the ſincerity of Chriſtian Religion, ſo it pleaſed Chriſt the contrary way, labouring againſt theſe, to raiſe up therefore the ſaid Waldenſes againſt the pride and hypocriſie of the others.

Four Archpillars of proud Papiſtry.

Thus we never ſee any great corruption in the Church, but that ſome ſparkle of the true and clear light of the Goſpel yet by Gods Providence doth remain; whatſoever Doctor Auguſtinus, Reinerius, Sylvius, Cranzius, with others in their Popiſh Hiſtories do write of them (deſaming them through miſreport) and accuſing them to Magiſtrates, as diſobedient to Orders, rebels to the Catholick Church, and contemners of the Virgin Mary; yet they that carry judgment indifferent, rather truſting truth than wavering with times, in weighing their articles, ſhall find it otherwiſe; and that they maintained nothing elſe but the ſame Doctrine which is now defended in the Church. And yet I ſuppoſe not contrary, but as the Papiſts did with the Articles of Wickliff and Huſs, ſo they did in like manner with their Articles alſo, in gathering and wreſting them otherwiſe than they were meant.

The Hiſtory of Waldo, or de Leugduno.

THE firſt original of theſe Waldenſes came of one Waldus, a man both of great ſubſtance, and no leſs calling in the City of Lions; the occaſion whereof is declared of divers Writers thus to come: About the year of our Lord 1160, it chanced that divers of the beſt and chiefeſt heads of the City of Lions talking and walking in a certain place after their old accuſtomed manner, eſpecially in the Summer-time, conferred and conſulted together upon matters, either to paſs over time, or to debate things to be done. Amongſt whom it chanced one (the reſt looking upon) to fall down by ſudden death. In the number of whom this foreſaid Waldus, there being amongſt them was one; who beholding the matter more earneſtly than the other, and terrified with ſo heavy an example, being (as is ſaid) a rich man, and Gods holy Spirit working withal, was ſtricken with a deep and inward repentance, whereupon followed a new alteration with a careful ſtudy to reform his former life. Inſomuch that firſt he began to miniſter large alms of his goods to ſuch as needed. Secondly, to inſtruct himſelf and his family with the true knowledg of Gods word. Thirdly, to admoniſh all that reſorted to him by any occaſion, to repentance and vertuous amendment of life. Whereby partly through his large giving to the poor, partly through his diligent teaching and wholeſome admonitions, more reſort of people daily frequented about him; whom when he did ſee ready and diligent to learn, he began to give out to them certain rudiments of the Scripture, which he had tranſlated himſelf into the French Tongue: for as he was a man wealthy in riches, ſo he was alſo not unlearned.

Although Laziardus, Volateranus, with others, note him utterly unlearned, and charge him with ignorance, as who ſhould procure others to write and tranſlate for him: by others, that have ſeen his doings yet remaining in old old Parchment Monuments, it appeareth he was both able to declare and tranſlate the Books of Scripture, and alſo did collect the Doctors mind upon the ſame.

But whatſoever he was (learned or unlearned) the Biſhops and Prelates ſeeing him ſo to intermeddle with Scriptures, and to have ſuch reſort about him, albeit it was but in his own houſe under private conference, could not abide, either that the Scriptures ſhould be declared of any other, neither would they take the pains to declare it themſelves. So being moved with great malice againſt the Man, they threatned to excommunicate him if he did not leave ſo to do. Waldus ſeeing his doing to be but godly, and their malice ſtirred up upon no juſt nor godly cauſe, neglecting the threatnings and ſtrettings of the wicked, ſaid, that God muſt be obeyed more than Man. To be brief, the more diligent he was in ſetting forth the true Doctrine of Chriſt againſt the errors of Antichriſt, the more maliciouſly their fierceneſs increaſed. Inſomuch that when they did fee their Excommunication to be deſpiſed, and would not ſerve, they ceaſed not with Priſon, with Sword and Baniſhment to perſecute, till at length they had driven both Waldus and all the favourers of his true preaching out of the City.

The true nature of Antichriſt, neither hitherto fail to fulfil the Word, nor ſuffer other men to do it.

Whereupon came firſt their Name, that they were called Waldenſes, or Pauperes de Lugduno, not becauſe they would have all things common amongſt them, or that they, profeſſing any wilful poverty, would imitate to live as the Apoſtles did (as Sylvius did falſly bely them) but becauſe they, being thruſt out both of Country and Goods, were compelled to live poorly whether they would or no. And thus much touching the firſt occaſion and beginning of theſe Men, and of the reſtoring and maintaining of the true Doctrine of Chriſts Goſpel, againſt the proud proceedings of Papiſts errors. Now concerning their Articles, which I find in order and in number to be theſe:

The Articles of the Waldenſes.

SOlis ſacris literis credendum eſſe in iis quæ ad ſalutem, &c. That is, Only the holy Scripture is to be believed in matters pertaining to Salvation, and no mans writing, or man beſides.

2. All things to be contained in Holy Scripture neceſſary to Salvation, and nothing to be admitted in Religion, but what only is commanded in the Word of God.

3. To be one only Mediator; other Saints in no wiſe to be made Mediators, or to be invocated.

4. To be no Purgatory, but that all Men either by Chriſt are juſtified to life, or without Chriſt be condemned; and beſides theſe two neither any third or fourth place to be.

5. That all Maſſes, namely ſuch as be ſung for the dead, be wicked and to be abrogate.

6. All Mens Traditions to be rejected, at leaſt not to be reputed as neceſſary to ſalvation, and therefore this ſinging and ſuperfluous chanting in the Chancel to be left; conſtrained and prefixed faſts bound to days and times, difference of Meats, ſuch variety of degrees and orders of Prieſts, Friers, Monks and Nuns, ſuperfluous Holy-days, ſo many ſundry benedictions and hallowing of creatures, Vows, Peregrinations, with all the Rabblement of Rites and Ceremonies brought in by Man, to be aboliſhed.

7. The Supremacy of the Pope uſurping above all Churches, and eſpecially above all politick Realms and Governments, or for him to occupy or uſurp the juriſdiction of both the Swords, to be denied; neither that any degree is to be received in the Church, but only Prieſts, Deacons and Biſhops.

8. The Communion under both kinds to be neceſſary to all People, according to the inſtitution of Chriſt.

9. Item, The Church of Rome to be the very Babylon ſpoken of in the Apocalyps; and the Pope to be the fountain of all error, and the very Antichriſt.

10. * The Popes Pardons and Indulgences they reject.

* This Article ſeemeth not to be the form of Abſolution that is now uſed in the Church of England, but rather a Declaration of the Miniſters office in that behalf.

11. The Marriage of Prieſts, and of Eccleſiaſtical perſons, to be godly, and alſo neceſſary in the Church.

12. Such as hear the Word of God, and have a right Faith, to be the right Church of Chriſt. And to this Church the Keies of the Church are to be given, to drive away Wolves, and to inſtitute true Paſtors, and to preach the Word, and to miniſter the Sacraments.

These be the moſt principal Articles of the Waldenſes, albeit ſome there be that add more to them; ſome again divide the ſame into more parts, but theſe be the principal to which the reſt be reduced.

The ſame Waldenſes, at length exiled, were diſperſed in divers and ſundry places, of whom many remained long in Bohemia; which writing to their King Uladiſlaus, to purge themſelves againſt the ſlanderous accuſations of one Doctor Auſtin, gave up their confeſſion with an Apology of their Chriſtian Profeſſion; defending with ſtrong and learned arguments the ſame which now is received in moſt reformed Churches, both concerning Grace, Faith, Charity, Hope, Repentance and works of mercy.

As for Purgatory, they ſay that Thomas Aquinas is the Author thereof.

Tho. Aquinas firſt finder of Purgatory.

Concerning the Supper of the Lord, their Faith was, that it was ordained to be eaten, not to be ſhewed and worſhipped; for a Memorial, not for a Sacrifice; to ſerve for the preſent miniſtration, and not for reſervation; to be received at the Table, not to be carried out of the doors; according to the ancient uſe of the Primitive Church, when they uſed to communicate fitting. And this they prove both by an old Chronicle called Chronica geſtorum, alſo by ancient Origen upon the third Book of Moſes, bringing in his words, which be theſe, proving that this Sacramental Bread ought not to be reſerved: Quicunque panem cum Chriſti ſecunda vel tertia die ſumpſerit, non benedicitur anima ejus, ſed imputabitur. Propterea Gabaonitæ, quia antiquos panes, &c. That is, Whoſoever receiveth this Bread of the Supper of Chriſt upon the ſecond or third day after, his ſoul ſhall not be bleſſed, but polluted. Therefore the Gabaonites, becauſe they brought old bread to the children of Iſrael, it was injoyned them to carry wood and water, &c.

Chronica geſtorum, as Origen ſuped tertiam lectionem Moſis.

The Sacramental bread ought not to be reſerved or received.

Doctor Auſtin (of whom mention is made before) diſputing againſt them about this matter of the Holy Euchariſt, urgeth them with this interrogation; whether it be the ſame Chriſt (preſent in the Sacrament) which is preſent at the right hand of the Father? If it be not the ſame Chriſt, how is it true in the Scripture, Una Fides, unus Dominus noſter Jeſus Chriſtus, One Faith, one Lord Jeſus Chriſt? If it be the ſame Chriſt, then how is he not to be honoured and worſhipped here as well as there?

Part of the diſputation between Doctor Auſtin and the Waldenſes. Dilemma 2.

queſtion in conferring on both ſides an Inconvenience

To this the Waldenſes anſwer again, and grant that Chriſt is one and the ſame with his natural body, in the Sacrament which he is at the right hand of his Father, but not after the ſame exiſtence of his body. For the exiſtence of his body in Heaven is perfect and real, to be apprehended by the Faith and Spirit of Men. In the Sacrament the exiſtence of the body is not perſonal or local, to be apprehended or received of our bodies, after a perſonal or corporal manner, but after a Sacramental manner; that is, where our bodys receive the ſign, and our ſpirit the thing ſignified. Moreover, in Heaven the exiſtence of his body is dimenſive and compleat with the full proportion and quantity of the ſame body wherewith he aſcended. Here, the exiſtence of his compleat body with the full proportion, meaſure and ſtature thereof, doth not, neither can ſtand in the Sacrament. Briefly, the exiſtence of his body in Heaven is Natural, not Sacramental; that is, to be ſeen, and not remembred: Here it is Sacramental, not Natural; that is, to be remembred, not to be ſeen.

That is, a Body.

The anſwer of the Waldenſes.

Whether it be received after a Sacramental manner.

That Anſwer being made to the captious Propoſition of Doctor Auſtin, the Waldenſes (retorting the like interrogation to him again) demand of him to anſwer them in the like objection; Whether it be all one Chriſt ſubſtantially and naturally, which ſitteth in Heaven, and which is under the forms of Bread and Wine, and in the receivers of the Sacrament? If he grant it to be; then they bid him ſay, ſeeing Chriſt is as well in the Sacrament as in Heaven, and as well in the receiver as in the Sacrament, and all one Chriſt in ſubſtance and nature; why then is not the ſame Chriſt as well in the breaſt of the receiver to be worſhipped, as under the forms of Bread and Wine in the Sacrament; ſeeing he is there after a more perfect manner in Man, than in the Sacrament? for in the Sacrament he is but for a time, and not for the Sacraments ſake, but for the Mans cauſe: In Man he is not for the Sacraments cauſe, but for his own; and that not for a ſeaſon, but for ever;

Another Dilemma againſt Tranſubſtantiation.

ever, as it is written: Qui manducat hunc panem vivet in æternum. That is, He that eateth this bread shall live for ever, &c.

Moreover and besides, seeing Transubstantiation is the going of one substance into another; they question again with him, whether the forms of Bread and Wine remaining, the substance thereof be changed into the whole person of our Lord Christ Jesus: that is, both into his body, soul and Divinity, or not into the whole Christ? If he grant the whole; then say they, that is impossible (concerning the Divinity) both to nature and to our faith, that any creature can be changed into the Creator. If he say, the Bread is changed into the Body and Soul of Christ, not to his Divinity, then he separateth the Natures in Christ. If he say, into the Body alone, and not the Soul, then he separateth the Natures of the true Manhood, &c. and so it cannot be the same Christ that was betrayed for us; for that he had both Body and Soul. To conclude, to what part soever he would answer, this Doctrine of Transubstantiation cannot be defended without great inconvenience of all sides.

Over and besides, Eneas Sylvius writing of their Doctrine and Assertions (perchance as he found them, perchance making worse of them than they taught or meant) reporteth them after this manner, which I thought here to set out as it is in the Latine.

Eneas Sylvius Bohemica historia de Waldensium dogmatibus.

Romanum Præsulem reliquis Episcopis parem esse. Inter sacerdotes nullam discrimen. Presbyterum non dignitatem sed vitæ meritum efficere potiorem.

In English:

The Bishop of Rome to be equal with other Bishops. Amongst Priests to be no difference of degree. No Priest to be reputed for any dignity of his order, but for the worthiness of his life.

The souls of Men departed either to enter into pain everlasting, or everlasting joy. No fire of Purgatory to be found. To pray for the dead to be vain, and a thing only found out for the lucre of Priests.

The images of God (as of the Trinity) and of Saints to be abolished. The hallowing of water and palmes to be a meer ridicle. The Religion of Begging-Friers to be found out by the Devil. That Priests should not increach riches in this World, but rather follow poverty, being content with their Tithes, and Mens devotion. The preaching of the Word to be free to all Men called thereunto.

That no deadly sin is to be tolerated, for whatsoever respect of a greater commodity to ensue thereupon. The confirmation which Bishops exercise with Oyl, and extream Unction, are not to be counted among the Sacraments of the Church. Auricular Confession to be but a toy; to suffice for every Man to confess himself in his Chamber to God. Baptism ought to be ministred only with pure water, without any mixture of hallowed oyl. The Temple of the Lord to be the wide World. The Majesty of God not to be restrained more within the Walls of Temples, Monasteries and Chappels, fo that his grace is rather to be found in one place than in another.

The Temple of the Lord, that is, the proper habitation wherein God most properly dwelleth & worketh. That is, the very place maketh not the ministration of holy things either more or less holy.

Priests Apparel, Ornaments of the High Altar, Vestiments, Corporaces, Chalices, Patins, and other Church-plate, to serve in no stead. For the difference and respect of the very place, to make no matter, where the Priest doth consecrate, or doth minister to them which do require. To be sufficient to use only the Sacramental words without all other superfluous ceremonies.

The suffrages of Saints, reigning with Christ in Heaven, to be craved in vain; they being not able to help us. In saying or singing the Hours and Matins of the day, the time to be but loft. A man ought to cease from his labour no day, but only upon the Sunday.

The Feasts and Festivals of Saints ought to be rejected. Item, such Fasts as be coacted, and enjoyned by the Church have no merit in them.

The Assertions of the Waldenses being thus articuled out by Eneas Sylvius, I thought to give them abroad in English as they are in Latine: to the intent that as they are the less to be doubted, being set out of a Popes Pen; so we may the better know both them hereby what they were, and also understand how this Doctrine, now preached and taught in the Church, is no new Doctrine which here we see both taught and persecuted almost 400 years ago. And as I have spoken hitherto sufficiently concerning their Doctrine; so now we will briefly somewhat touch of the order of their life and conversation, as we find it registred in a certain old written Book of Inquisition.

Ex inquisitorio quodam libello.

Modus autem Waldensium talis est, &c. The whole process cometh to this effect in English. The manner of the Waldenses is this, They, kneeling upon their knees, leaning to some bank or stay, do continue in their prayers with silence so long as a man may say thirty or forty times Pater noster. And this they do every day with great reverence, being amongst themselves, and such as be of their own Religion, and no strangers with them, both before Dinner and after; likewise before Supper and after; also what time they go to Bed, and in the morning when they rise, and at certain other times also, as well in the day as in the night. Item, They use no other prayer but the prayer of the Lord, and that without any Ave Maria, and the Creed, which they affirm not to be put in for any prayer by Christ, but only by the Church of Rome. Albeit they have and use the seven Articles of Faith concerning the Divinity, and seven Articles concerning the Humanity, and the Ten Commandments, and seven works of Mercy, which they have compiled together in a compendious Book, glorying much in the same, and thereby offer themselves ready to answer any man for their faith.

Do works of supererogation.

The Creed commonly followeth the Word.

Before they go to meat they have their Grace, Benedicite, Kyrie eleyson, Christe eleyson, Kyrie eleyson, Pater noster. Which being said, then the elder amongst them beginneth thus in their own tongue: God which blessed the five Barley loaves, and two Fishes in the desert before his Disciples, bless this Table, and that is set upon it, for shall be set upon it: In the Name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, Amen. And likewise again, when they rise from Meat, the senior giveth thanks, saying the words of the Apocalypse, Blessing, and worship, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, honour, vertue, and strength to God alone for ever and ever, Amen. And addeth moreover, God reward them in their bosomes, and be beneficial to all them that be beneficial to us, and bless us. And the God which hath given us corporal feeding, grant us his spiritual life and God be with us, and we always with him. To which they answer again, Amen. And thus saying grace, they hold their hands upward, looking up to Heaven. After their Meat and grace said, they teach and exhort amongst themselves, confirming together upon their Doctrine, &c.

They use not to pray before meat.

Their Grace after meat.

In their Doctrine and teaching they were so diligent and painful, that Reinerius a Writer about their time (an extream enemy against them) in a long process, wherein he describeth their Doctrine and teaching, testifieth, that he heard of one which did know the party, that a certain Heretick (faith he) only to turn a certain person away from our faith, and to bring him to his (in the night, and in the Winter time) swam over the River called Ibis, to come to him, and to teach him. Moreover, so perfect they were then in the Scriptures, that the said Reinerius faith, he did hear and see a man of the Country unlettered, which could recite over the whole Book of Job word by word, without book, with divers others which had the whole New Testament perfectly by heart.

Reinerius an enemy against them, but yet a diligent observer of their Doctrine.

The value they set upon the Scriptures.

And although some of them rather merrily than unskilfully expounded the words of 1 John Sui non recepernt eum, Swine did not receive him; yet were they not so ignorant and void of learning, nor yet so few in number, but that they did mightily prevail, insomuch that Reinerius hath these words: Non erat qui eos impedire auderet propter potentiam & multitudinem fautorum suorum. Inquisitioni & examinationi sæpe interfui, & computatæ sunt 40 Ecclesiæ, quæ hæresi infectæ fuerunt, ac in una Parochia Cammach fuerunt decem eorum Scholæ, &c. That is, There was none durst stop them for the power and multitude of their favourers. I have often been at their inquisition aed examination, and there were numbred forty Churches infected with their Heresie, insomuch that in one Parish of Cammach, were ten open Schools of them, &c. Hæc ille.

The great power and multitude of Waldenses.

And

Waldenses in all points found, but only for holding against the Church of Rome. Ex Bullario Gratiani.

And the said Reinerius, when he hath said all he can in depraving and impugning them, yet is driven to confess this of them, where he doth distinct their Sect from other Sects, and hath these words: Hæc vero Leonistarum Secta magnam habet speciem pietatis, eo quod coram hominibus juste vivant, & bene omnia de Deo credant, & omnes articulos, qui in symbolo continentur; solam Romanam Ecclesiam blasphemant, & oderunt: That is, This Sect of Leonists hath a great shew of holiness, in that both they live justly before men, and believe all things well of God, and hold all the articles contained in the Creed; only they do blaspheme the Romish Church, and hate it, &c.

Now to touch somewhat their Persecutions: After they were driven out of Lions, they were scattered into divers and sundry places (the Providence of God so disposing) that the sound of their Doctrine might be heard abroad in the world. Some, as I said, went to Bohemia, many did flee into their Provinces of France, some into Lombardy, others into other places, &c. But as the Cross commonly followeth the verity and sincere preaching of Gods Word, so neither could these be suffered to live in rest. There are yet to be seen the consultations of Lawyers, Archbishops and Bishops of France, as Narbonenses, Arelatenses, Aquenses, and Albanenses, devised amongst themselves, which yet remain in writing, for the abolishing and extirping of these Waldenses, written above three hundred years ago; whereby it appeareth that there was a great number of them in France.

Waldenses persecuted more than 300 years ago by Antichrist.

Besides, there was a whole Council kept in Tholouse about three hundred fifty and five years before, and all against these Waldenses, the which also were condemned in another Council at Rome before that.

What great Persecutions were raised up against them in France by these four Archbishops before mentioned, it appeareth by their writing; wherein I will recite some of their words, which towards the end be these: Quis enim est solus ille peregrinus, qui condemnationem hæreticorum Waldensium ignoret a longe retro annis factam, tam famosam, tam publicam, tot & tantis laboribus, expensis & sudoribus fidelium insecutam, & tot mortibus ipsorum infidelium solemniter damnatorum, publiceque punitorum tam fortiter sigillatum? &c. That is, Who is such a stranger that knoweth not the condemnation of Waldenses the Hereticks done and past so many years ago, so famous, so publick, followed upon with so great labours, expences, and travel of the faithful, and sealed with so many deaths of these Infidels, so solemnly being condemned and openly punished? Whereby we may see Persecution to be no new thing in the Church of Christ, when Antichrist so long before (even 300 years) began to rage against these Waldenses. In Bohemia likewise after that, the same called by the name of Thaborits (as Sylvius recordeth) sufferred no little trouble. But never Persecution was stirred up against them, or any other people more terrible than was in these later years in France by the French King, in the year of our Lord 1545, which lamentable Story is described in Sleidan, and hereafter in the process of this Book, as we come to the order of years, shall be set forth by the Grace of Christ) more at large. In the which Persecution is declared in one Town Cabriera to be slain by the Captain of Sathan Simerius, 800 persons at once, without respect of Women or Children of any age; of whom forty Women, and most of them great with child, thrust into a Barn, and the Windows kept with Pikes, and so fire set to them, were all consumed. Besides, in a Cave not far from the Town Mussium, to the number of five and twenty persons, with smoke and fire were the same time destroyed. At Merindolum the same Tyrant (seeing all the rest were fled away) finding one young man, caused him to be tyed to an Olive-tree, and to be destroyed with torments most cruelly; with much other Persecution, as shall appear hereafter in the History translated out of Sleidan into English.

Concerning the first Origine of the Waldenses, springing in the days of this King, is sufficiently hitherto declared. Now remaineth in the like order of time to story also such other Incidences as chanced under the Reign of the said King, not unworthy to be observed, keeping the order of the time so near as we may, and as Authors do give unto us.

Great War happened in Palestina, wherein the City of Jerusalem, with the Cross and King of the City, and others of the Temple, was taken of the Saracens, and most part of the Christians there either slain or taken. Cruel murther and slaughter there was used by the Turk, who caused all the chief of the Christians to be brought forth and beheaded before his face. Insomuch that Pope Urbanus the Third for sorrow died, and Gregory the Eighth, next Pope after him, lived not two months. Then in the days of Pope Clement the Third, news and sorrow growing daily for the loss of Palestina, and destruction of the Christians; King Henry of England, and Philip the French King, the Duke of Burgundy, the Earl of Flanders, the Earl of Campania, with divers other Christian Princes with a general consent upon St. Georges day, took the mark of the Cross upon them, promising together to take their voyage into the Holy Land. At which time the Stories say, the King of England received first the Red Cross, the French King took the White Cross, the Earl of Flanders took the Green Cross; and so likewise other Princes diversly divers Colours, thereby to be discerned every one by his proper Cross. But King Henry (after the three years were expired, in which he promised to perform his voyage) sent to the Pope for further delay of his promise, offering for the same to erect three Monasteries. Which thing he thus performed: In the Church of Waltham he thrust out the Secular Priests, and set in Monks for them. Secondly, he repaired again and brought in the Nuns of Amesbury, which before were excluded for their incontinent life. And thus performed he his promise made before to the Pope, Anno 1173.

A worthy Story of Sibylla and Guido in Jeruſalem.

Mention was made a little above of Almarick King of Jeruſalem, which deſtroyed Babylon; ſo that it was never after to this day reſtored, but lyeth waſt and deſolate; wherein was fulfilled that which in the Prophets in ſo many places was threatned to Babylon before. This Almarick had a Son named Baldwin, and a Daughter called Sybilla. Baldwin from the beginning of his reign was a Leper, and had the Falling-ſickneſs, being not able for feebleneſs of body (although valiant in heart and ſtomack) to ſatisfie that function.

Sibylla his ſiſter was firſt married to one Willermus, Marqueſs of Mount Ferrat, by whom ſhe had a Son called alſo Baldwinus. After him ſhe was married to another Husband named Guido de Lizzinaco Earl of Joppe, and Husband named Guido de Lizzinaco Earl of Joppe, and of Aſcalon. Upon this it befell that the foreſaid Baldwin of Aſcalon. Upon this it befell that the foreſaid Baldwin the Leper, ſon of Almaricus, being thus feeble and infirm, as is ſaid, called his Nobles together, with his Mother and the Patriarck, declaring to them his inability, and by the conſents of them committed the Under-government of the City unto Guido the Husband of Sibylla his ſiſter. But he being found inſufficient, or elſe not lucky in the Government thereof, the Office was tranſlated to another named Raimundus Earl of Tripolis. In the mean time the Soldan with his Saracens mightily prevailed againſt the Chriſtians, and over-ran the Country of Paleſtina; in which mean time, Baldwin the King departed. Whereby the Kingdom fell next to Baldwinus, the Son of Sibylla by her firſt Husband Willermus; the which Baldwinus, being but five years old, was put to the cuſtody of Raimundus aforeſaid. Who alſo in his Minority, before he came to his Crown died, whereby the next Succeſſion by deſcent fell to Sibylla the wife of Guido above mentioned. The Peers and Nobles joyning together in Council, offered unto the ſaid Sibylla as to the lawful heir to the Crown, that ſhe ſhould be their Queen, with this condition, that ſhe ſhould ſequeſter from her by ſolemn divorcement the foreſaid Guido her Husband; but ſhe refuſed the Kingdom offered to her on that condition, till at laſt the Magiſtrates with the Nobles in general, granted unto her, and by their Oaths confirmed the ſame, that whomſoever ſhe would chuſe to be her Husband, all they would take and obey as their King. Alſo Guido her Husband with like petition among the reſt, humbly requeſted her that the Kingdom for his ſake, or for his private loſs, might not be deſtitute of Government. At length ſhe with tears conſenting to their intreaty, was contented, and ſolemnly was Crowned their Queen, who after the manner again received their fidelity by their Oath. Whereupon Guido without all hope both of Wife and Kingdom, departed home quietly to his own. This done, the Queen aſſembling her States and Prelates together, entred talk with them about the chuſing of the King, according to that which they had promiſed, and ſworn unto her, and to obey him as their King, whom ſhe would name to be her Husband. Thus whileſt they were all in great expectation, waiting every man whom ſhe would nominate; the Queen with a loud voice ſaid to Guido that ſtood amongſt them : Guido my Lord, I chuſe thee for my Husband, and yielding my ſelf and my Kingdom unto you, openly I proteſt you to be the King. At theſe words all the Aſſembly being amazed, wondred that one ſimple woman ſo wiſely had beguiled ſo many wiſe men. And worthy was ſhe no doubt, to be commended and extolled for her ſingular vertue, both of faithful chaſtity and high prudence: ſo tempering the matter, that both ſhe obtained to her Husband the Kingdom, and retained to her ſelf again her Husband, whom ſhe ſo faithfully loved. Anno 1186. Ex Hiſtoria manuſcripta, cui initium, Rex Peſterum ; ex Bibliotheca Cariensi mutuata.

A worthy Example of a true Wife to her Husband.

A worthy Example in Guido of a true ſubject to his Governour.

A Captain Example of Prudence in a Prince, and faithfulneſs in a Wife.

As I have hitherto deſcribed the publick Acts of King Henry, ſo now I mean to touch ſomething of his private conditions. He was of mean ſtature, eloquent and learned, manly and bold in Chivalry, fearful of the mutability and chance of War, more lamenting the death of his Souldiers dead, than loving them alive; none more courteous and liberal for the obtaining of his purpoſe; in peace and tranquillity none more rough; ſtubborn againſt the ſtubborn, ſometimes merciful to thoſe whom he had vanquiſhed, ſtrict to his houſhold-ſervants, but liberal to ſtrangers; publickly of publick things liberal, ſparing of his own; whom once he took a diſpleaſure againſt, hardly or never would he receive again to favour; ſomewhat laviſh of his tongue, a willing breaker of his promiſe, a lover of his eaſe, but an oppreſſor of his Nobility, a ſevere revenger and ſurtherer of juſtice, variable of word, and crafty in talk, an open adulterer, a nouriſher of diſcord amongſt his children; moreover over the Papiſts bearing him (for Thomas Beckets quarrel, and ſuch like, as may be gathered) no good will, term him to bean adverſary of the Faith, the Mall and Beetle of the Church.

Alſo in the Chronicle intituled Scala mundi, I find of him, that he followed the ſteps, manners and conditions of Henry the firſt his Grandfather, in every point. He preſerved firm peace, and executed ſtrict juſtice through all his Dominions. He loved marvelous well his Foreſts; and again, thoſe that were tranſgreſſors either to his Crown or Perſon, he moſt ſeverely puniſhed.

Moreover, in a certain Hiſtory intituled De Regibus Angliæ, I find that this King was ſundry times admoniſhed to reform and amend his life, and firſt by one that was an old man in the Caſtle of Cardif in Wales, at that time of the year called Dominica in albis, the 8th day after Eaſter; where alſo after that he heard Maſs, and was going to take his Horſe, there ſtood a certain man by him, ſomewhat yellowiſh (his hair being rounded, lean and ill favoured) having on a white Coat, and being bare-foot, who looked upon the King, and ſpake on this wiſe, Good old King, (that done, thus he proceedeth) the King ſalueth you and his bleſſed Mother, John Baptiſt and Peter ſtraitly charge you, that upon the Sundays throughout all your Dominions, there be no buying and ſelling, or other ſervile buſineſs (thoſe only except which appertain to the preparation of meat and drink) which thing if thou ſhalt obſerve, whatſoever thou takeſt in hand, thou ſhalt happily finiſh and bring to paſs. Then ſpake the King in French unto the Knight that held his Horſe by the Bridle; Ask of this Churl whether he dreamed thie or not. And in the mean while that the Knight ſhould have interpreted the Kings words and meſſage, he ſpake before and ſaid, Whether thou be a Dream or not, mark well what day thie is; for unleſs that thou do theſe things and amend thy life, ſuch news ſhalt thou hear within theſe twelve months, that will make thee lament and mourn till thy dying day. And when theſe words were ſpoken, the man vaniſhed out of his ſight; and within one year next after, Henry, Gaufrid, and Richard his Sons, forſook him their Father, and took part with the French King. The King of Scots, the Earl of Cheſter, and Earl of Leiceſter, made an Inſurrection againſt the King. Many other premonitions were given alſo to the King, but all theſe did he litle eſteem. The ſecond, which did admoniſh him, was a certain Iriſhman, giving him certain ſecret ſigns. And thirdly, a certain Knight of Findeſey, named Philip de Eaſterby, fayling with him over into France, declared unto the King in Normandy ſeven Articles which he ſhould amend. Which things if he would do, he ſhould Reign ſeven years moſt honourably, and ſhould take the holy Croſs from his enemies; or elſe he, in the fourth year, ſhould die in a great ignominy. The three firſt things were theſe, which he at his Coronation ſware to obſerve, that is, to defend the Church, to maintain good Laws, and to condemn no man to death without judgment. The fourth was, for the reſtoring of inheritance wrongfully taken; the fifth was in doing juſtice without reward; the ſixth, was of Miniſters and Officers Wages and Stipends; the ſeventh was of expelling the Jews, leaving them ſome mony to depart withal. But the King not amending his life, there roſe up againſt him three ſtrong enemies, that is to ſay, his three Sons with the French King. But, after that the King forſooth had gone on Pilgrimage to the Martyrs Tomb barefoot, William King of Scots, and the Earls of Cheſter and Leiceſter were taken at Alnewike.

The ſecond and third admoniſhion unto the K. to reform his life.

The Kings victory was falſly imputed to the merit of his Pilgrimage.

In the five and thirty year of his Regn, being in the Caſtle of Chiven in Normandy, he died; at whoſe death thoſe that were preſent, were ſo greedy of the ſpoil, that they left the body of the King naked, and not ſo much could be found as a Cloth to cover it, till that a Page coming in, and ſeeing the King ſo ignominiouſly to lie, threw his Cloak upon his nether parts; wherein, ſaith the Author, was verified the ſimname which from his youth he bare, being called Henry Curt Mantil.

The death of K. Henry the 2d.

King RICHARD.

{ Anno 1189. K. Richard crowned. } IN this year of our Lord above recited, which was 1189. King Richard the eldeſt Son of Henry the Second, ſucceeding his Father, entred his Crown; at which time Pope Clement ſate at Rome, ſucceeding after Gregory, which died a little before with ſorrow for the loſs of the Holy-Croſs.

The Kings reſtraint, that no Jew ſhould enter the Palace nor Church, during his Coronation.

During the time of whoſe Coronation it befell, that notwithſtanding the King, the day before his Coronation, by publick Edict commanded both the Jews and their Wives, not to preſume either to enter the Church, or elſe his Palace, during the ſolemnization of his Coronation, amongſt his Nobles and Barons, yet (whileſt the King was at Dinner) the Chieftain of the Jews, with divers other of his Jewiſh affinity and ſuperſtitious Sect, againſt the King his prohibition, together with other preſs, entred the Court Gates. Whereat a Chriſtian man being offended, ſtruck one of them with his hand or fiſt, and bade him ſtand further from the Court Gate, as the King had given in commandment; whoſe example others alſo following, being diſpleaſed againſt the Jews, offered them the like contumely. Others alſo, ſuppoſing that the King had ſo commanded indeed, as uſing the authority of the King, fell upon all the Jews that ſtood by without the Court Gate. And firſt they beat them with their fiſts, but afterwards they took up ſtones and ſuch other things as they could get, and threw at them from the Court Gates, ſome of them they wounded, ſome they flew, and ſome they left for dead.

A few Jews baptized.

There was amongſt this number of the Jews, one which was called the bleſſed Jew of York, which was ſo ſore wounded and beaten with the reſt, that, for fear of his life, he ſaid he would become a Chriſtian, and was indeed of William the Prior of the Church of St. Mary of York baptiſed; whereby he eſcaped the peril of death he was in, and the perſecutors hands. In the mean while, there was a great rumor ſpread throughout all the City of London, that the King had commanded to deſtroy all the Jews. Whereupon as well the Citizens, as innumerable people more, being aſſembled to ſee the Kings Coronation, armed themſelves and came together. The Jews thus being for the moſt part ſlain, the reſt fled into their houſes, where for a time, through the ſtrong and ſure building of them, they were defended. But at length their houſes were ſet on fire, and they deſtroyed therein.

The Jews in London ſlain, and their houſes ſet on fire.

The ſmall regard of Nobility had in tumults and inſurrections.

Theſe things being declared to the King, whilſt he with his Nobles and Barons were at Dinner, he ſendeth immediately Ranulfe de Glanvile, the Lord High Steward of England, with divers other Noblemen to accompany him, that they might ſtay and refrain theſe ſo bold enterpriſes of the Londoners, but all was in vain: for in this ſo great a tumult, none there was that either regarded what the Nobility ſaid, or elſe any whit reverenced their perſonages, but rather with ſtern looks and threatning words adviſed them (and that quickly) to depart. Whereupon they, with good deliberation, thinking it the beſt ſo to do, departed; the tumult and inſurrection continuing till the next day. At which time alſo the King, ſending certain of his Officers into the City, gave them in commandment to apprehend and preſent ſome ſuch as were the chiefeſt of the malefactors: of the which, three were condemned to be hanged, and ſo were; the one, for that he had robbed a Chriſtians houſe in this tumult, and the other two for that they fired the Houſes, to the great danger of the City. After this, the King ſent for him, that from a Jew was converted to Chriſtianity, and in the preſence of thoſe that ſaw where he was baptiſed, the King asked him whether he was become a Chriſtian or not? He anſwering the King, ſaid, No, but to the intent he might eſcape death, he promiſed to do whatſoever the Chriſtians would have him. Then the King asked the Archbiſhop of Canterbury (other Archbiſhops and Biſhops being preſent) what were beſt to be done with him? Who unadviſedly anſwering, ſaid; If he will not be a Man of God, let him be a Man of the Devil: and ſo revolted he again to Jewdaiſm.

A nervy Chriſtian revolteth to an old Jew.

An unadviſed anſwer of an Archbiſhop.

Then the King ſent his Writs to the Sheriffs of every County, to inquire for the authors and ſtirrers of this outrage. Of whom three were hanged, divers were impriſoned. So great was then the hatred of Engliſhmen againſt the Jews, that as ſoon as they began to be repulſed in the Court, the Londoners taking example thereof, fell upon them, ſet their Houſes on fire, and ſpoiled their goods. The Country again, following the example of the Londoners, semblably did the like. And thus the year, which the Jews took to be their Jubile, was to them a year of confusion; insomuch, as in the City of York, the Jews obtaining the occupying of a certain Caſtle for their preſervation, and afterward, not willing to reſtore it unto the Chriſtians again, when they ſaw no other remedy, but by force to be vanquiſhed, firſt they offered much Mony for their lives; when that would not be taken, by the counſel of an old Jew amongſt them, every one with a ſharp Razor, cut anothers Throat, whereby a thouſand and five hundred of them were at that preſent deſtroyed. Neither was this Plague of theirs undeſerved; for every year commonly their cuſtom was, to get ſome Chriſtian mans child from the Parents, and on Goodfridav to crucifie him in deſpite of our Religion. Ex Chron. Weſtm.

{ Anno 1189. }

King Richard, after the death of his Father, coming unto remembrance of himſelf, and of his Rebellion againſt his Father, fought for abſolution of his treſpaſs, and, in part of ſatisfaction for the ſame, agreed with Philip the French King, about Eaſter next enſuing, to take his Voyage with him for the recovery of Chriſts Patrimony, which they called the Holy Land. Whereupon the ſaid King Richard immediately after his Coronation, to prepare himſelf the better towards his journey, ſet to ſale divers of his Manors, whereof Godfrey Lucy then Biſhop of Winchester, bought a couple for two thouſand Marks; to wit, Wergrave and Melenge. The Abbot of Bury bought another for a thouſand Marks, called Middleſay. Hugh Puſaz Biſhop of Durham bought the Lordſhip of Seggesfield, or Sedberga with the Wapentake, and all the appurtenances thereto belonging; he bought alſo the Earldom of Northumberland, whom when the King ſhould ſolemnize after the manner of Secular Earls, merrily with a mocking jeſt Lo (ſaid he) of an old Biſhop I have made a young Earl. And beſides the ſaid Biſhop had profeſſed before by a ſolemn Vow, to viſit the Holy-Land, to be releaſed of his Vow, he compounded with the Pope for a great ſum of mony therefore; and moreover, gave to the King a thouſand Marks to remain at home, as the Chief Juſtice of England. Over and beſides, the King ſet out all that he had to ſale, Woods, Caſtles, Townſhips, Lordſhips, Earldoms, Baronages, ordaining alſo divers new Biſhops, and not without ſome advantage (as appeared) to his Purſe, feigning moreover, his old Seal to be loſt, that they which had Lands to hold, might be driven to renew their Writings again by the new Seal, whereby great ſubſtance of mony was gained.

The covetous greedineſs of Biſhops noted in buying great Lordſhips.

A tenth gathered through all England.

Above all this, by the commandment of Pope Clement the third, a Tenth alſo was exacted of the whole Realm, in ſuch ſort, as the Chriſtians ſhould make to the King 70000 Pounds, the Jews 60000. *Ex Gervaſ.fol.*1134. King Richard, after his Coronation, ſent certain Earls and Barons unto Philip the French King in the time of his Parliament at S. Denis, deſiring him to remember his promiſe made for the recovery of Chriſt his holy Patrimony out of the Saracens hands. Unto whom he ſent word again in the Month of December, certifying him how he had bound himſelf by ſolemn Oath, depoſing upon the Evangeliſts, that he, the next year following, about the time of Eaſter, had certainly prefixed to addreſs himſelf towards that journey; requiring him likewiſe not to fail but to be ready at the term above limited, appointing alſo the place where both the Kings ſhould meet together.

{ Anno 1190. } A Northern brawl in the Cathedral church of York, between the new Archbiſhop and the Dean.

The next year then enſued, which was one thouſand one hundred and ninety, in the beginning of which year upon Twelf-even, fell a foul northern brawle, which turned well near to a fray, between the Archbiſhop new elected of the Church of York and his company on the one ſide, and Henry Dean of the ſaid Church with his Catholick partakers on the other ſide, upon occaſion as followeth: Gaufridus or Geoffrey, Son to King Henry the ſecond, and Brother to King Richard, whom the King had elected a little before to the Archbiſhoprick of York, upon the Even of Epiphany, which we call Twelf-day, was diſpoſed to hear Evenſong with all ſolemnity in the Cathedral Church, having with him Hamon the Chanter, with divers Canons of the Church. Who tarrying ſomething long, belike in adorning and attiring himſelf, in the mean while Henry the Dean, and Bucardus the Treaſurer, diſdaining to tarry his coming, with a bold courage, luſtily began their holy Evenſong, with ſinging their Pſalms, ruffling of deſcant, and merry piping of Organs. Thus this Catholick Evenſong with as much devotion begun, as to Gods high ſervice proceeding, was now almoſt half compleat, when as at length (they being in the midſt of their mirth) cometh in the new elect with his Train and Gardevians, all full of wrath and indignation, for that they durſt be ſo bold, not waiting for him, to begin Gods ſervice, and ſo eſtſoons commanded the Quire to ſtay and hold their peace. The Chanter likewiſe, by vertue of his office, commandeth the ſame. But the Dean and Treaſurer on the other ſide, willed them to proceed; and ſo they ſung on, and would not ſtint. Thus the one half crying againſt the other, the whole Quire was in a rore, their ſinging was turned to ſcolding, their chanting to chiding; and, if inſtead of the Organs they had had a Drum, I doubt they would have fole-fued by the ears together.

Henry Dean of York, and Ricard. begin Service, not tarrying for their Archbiſhop.

The Dean and Treaſ. are wroth not with Evenſong but the Archbiſhops commandment.

At laſt, through the authority of the Archbiſhop, and of the Chanter, the Quire began to ſurceaſe and give ſilence. Then the new elect not contented with that had been ſung before, with certain of the Quire began the Evenſong new again. The Treaſurer, upon the ſame caused by vertue of his office, the Candles to be put out: whereby the Evenſong, having no power further to proceed, was ſtopped forthwith. For, like as without the light and beams of the Sun, there is nothing but darkneſs in all the world; even ſo you muſt underſtand the Popes Church can ſee to do nothing without Candle-light, albeit the Sun do ſhine never ſo clear and bright. This being ſo, the Archbiſhop, thus diſappointed on every ſide of his purpoſe, made a grievous plaint, declaring to the Clergy and to the People, what the Dean and Treaſurer had done; and ſo upon the ſame, ſuſpended both them and the Church from all Divine Services, till they ſhould make to him due ſatisfaction for their treſpaſs.

The Archbiſhop begins Evenſong being half done before.

The Treaſ. car pumed, and the candles put out at Evenſong.

Archbiſhops of Canterbury commonly were wont to work the Kings of England much fauour.

The Popes Church can do nothing without candle light

The next day, which was the day of Epiphany, when all the People of the City were aſſembled in the Cathedral Church, as their manner was, namely in ſuch Feaſts, devoutly to hear Divine Service (as they call it) of the Church, there was alſo preſent, the Archbiſhop and the Chanter, with the reſidue of the Clergy, looking when the Dean and Treaſurer would come and ſubmit themſelves, making ſatisfaction for their crime. But they, ſtill continuing in their ſtoutneſs, refuſed ſo to do, exclaiming and uttering contemptuous words againſt the Archbiſhop and his partakers. Which when the People heard, they in a great rage would have fallen upon them; but the Archbiſhop would not ſuffer that. The Dean then and his fellows, perceiving the ſtir of the People, for fear, like prety men, were fain to flee, ſome to the Tomb of S. William of York, ſome to ran unto the Deans houſe, and there ſhrowded themſelves, whom the Archbiſhop then accurſed. And ſo for that day the People returned home without any ſervice. Ex veteri chronico manuſcripto, cui initium, Anno gratiæ millesimo, &c.

After this, King Richard, peparing to ſet all things in an order before his going, committed the whole government of the Realm, principally to William, Biſhop of Ely, his Chancelor, and to Hugh Biſhop of Durham, whom he ordained to be the Chief Juſtice of all England in his abſence, the one to have the cuſtody of the Tower, with the overſight of all other parts of the Land, on this ſide of Humber, the other (which was the Biſhop of Durham) to have charge upon all other his Dominions beyond Humber, ſending moreover unto Pope Clement, in the behalf of the foreſaid William Biſhop of Ely, that he might be made the Popes Legat through all England and Scotland, which alſo was obtained. Thus the Biſhop being advanced in high authority, to furniſh the King towards his fetting forth, provideth out of every City in England two Palfries, and two Sumpters, and alſo out of every Abby one Palfrey and one Sumpter.

William Biſhop of Ely made Legat for England and Scotland.

Theſe things and other thus ſet in a ſtay, the King according to his former appointment, about the time of Eaſter, failed into France, where the French King and he conferring together, becauſe they could not make ready at that time of Eaſter, concluded to take a longer day, proroguing their Voyage till after Midſummer. In which mean time, the King occupying himſelf in redreſſing and ſtabliſhing ſtabliſhing ſuch things as further were to be ordered, there determined that Gatſfridus and John his Brethren, ſhould not enter into England in three years after his departure; nevertheleſs he releaſed that bond afterward to his Brother John. Then he appointed the Captains and Conſtables over his Navy, and ſet Laws to be obſerved in his Journey upon the Seas, but eſpecially his care was to make unity and concord between parties that were at variance, and to ſet them together at one. At which time the long contention began alſo to be appeaſed, which ſo many years had continued between Baldwinus Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and his Monks of Chriſts-Church: the diſcourſe whereof, although it be ſomewhat tedious to be ſet forth at large, being enough to make a whole Tragedy; yet to the intent the age now preſent may ſee what great conflicts and diſquietneſs, upon what little trifles, have been ſtirred up, what little peace and unity hath been not only in this Church, but commonly in all other Churches under the Popes Catholick regiment; I thought it not labour ill beſtowed, ſomewhat to intermeddle in opening to the eyes of the Reader, the conſideration of this matter.

Captains & Conſtables of the Kings Navy appointed.

The long contention betwixt Baldwin Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Monks of Chriſts-Church.

Wherein firſt is to be underſtood, that the Archbiſhops of Canterbury, commonly being ſet up by the Pope, eſpecially ſince the time of the Conqueſt, have put the Kings of this Land to much ſorrow and trouble, as appeared by William Rufus and Lanfrank, and alſo Anſelm; by Henry the firſt and Anſelm; King Stephen and Theobald; Henry the Second and Becket, &c. For which the Kings of this Land have uſed the more care and circumſpection, to have ſuch Archbiſhops placed in the See, as either ſhould ſtand with them, or at the leaſt, ſhould not be againſt them.

Now to the purpoſe of our matter intended: Firſt, after Lanfrancus, who was Archbiſhop twenty years, the See ſtanding vacant five years, ſucceeded Anſelmus, and ſat ſeventeen years; after whom the See ſtanding vacant four years, ſucceeded Rodulphus, and continued nine years, then followed William, who ſat twelve years, and died in the year 1137. after whom came Theobaldus in the time of King Stephen. This Theobaldus, being no great favourer of the Monkiſh Generation, fell out with Jeremias, Prior of the Houſe of Canterbury, for certain cauſes between them; for which the Archbiſhop, taking ſtomach againſt the Prior, would lay the ſentence of interdiction againſt him. The Prior, ſeeing that, to ſave himſelf, made his appeal to Pope Innocent. The Archbiſhop, provoked the more by that, depoſed him from his Priorſhip, and placed one Walter in his room. Jeremias notwithſtanding, making his complaint and appeal to Rome, obtained Letters from the Pope to Henry Biſhop of Winchester, being the Popes Legate; by the vertue whereof, he againſt the heart of the Archbiſhop was reſtored, and Walter diſplaced. Nevertheleſs, the ſaid Jeremy, not willing there to continue with diſpleaſure of the Archbiſhop, ſhortly after of his own accord, renounced his Priory, and Walter again was received in his ſtead. Not long after this followed the General Council at Rhemes, in the year 1140. To the which Council, Theobald, contrary to the commandment of the King, would needs reſort, to ſhew his obedience to the Pope. Wherefore at his returning home again, the King took ſuch diſpleaſure with him, that within a while after the Archbiſhop was driven to avoid the Realm, and fly into France, where he, by cenſure of interdiction, ſuſpended divers Churches and religious Houſes which refuſed to come to the Council; and alſo hearing how the King had ſeized upon all his Goods, he interdicted likewiſe all the Kings Land whatſoever, belonging to the Crown: ſo that the King, in concluſion, was fain to compound with him, and fall to agreement, which was about the year 1148. Ex Gervaſ.

Ex Chron. Anonim. cui initium: Anno gratiæ

A frivolous ſtrife between Theobald Archbiſhop, and Silveſter Abbot of S. Auſtins, about the place, in what Church the Abbot ſhould take his conſecration.

After this in the year of our Lord 1151. after the death of Hugh Abbot of S. Auſtins in Canterbury, Silveſter was elected by the Covent to be their Abbot in the Reign of King Stephen. Which Silveſter when he came unto Theobald the Archbiſhop to make his profeſſion of ſubjection unto him, and to receive of him Conſecration; the Archbiſhop was contented, ſo that the Abbot would come to Chriſts-Church in Canterbury, and there make his profeſſion. But to this Silveſter in no caſe would grant to take his Confecration there; but elſe in any other Church, wherefoever the Archbiſhop would, he was contented. Whereunto when the Archbiſhop in no wiſe would agree, Silveſter making a great Bag of Mony, went to Rome, where he obtained of the Pope for mony (for what cannot mony do at Rome?) Letters that the Archbiſhop ſhould conſecrate the Abbot in his own Church of S. Auſten, and alſo not exact of him any profeſſion of Canonical Subjection. Whereupon the Archbiſhop was compelled againſt his will to come to the Abbots Church, and there at the Popes Commandment to confecrate him ſimply, and without any further profeſſion to be required.

Silveſter goeth up to Rome.

Then Walter, Prior of Chriſts-Church in Canterbury, The Monks of Chriſts-Church thrive againſt the Monks of S. Auſtin in Canterbury, for the honour of their houſe.

ſeeing that, and perceiving how prejudicial and derogatory the example thereof would be to the honour and majeſty of their Church, through counſel of his Brother went thither: and notwithſtanding the Doors were ſtraitly watched and kept; yet by means, he at laſt got in. And as he ſaw the Archbiſhop attired in his Pontificalibus, ready to miniſter Confecration to the Abbot, he ſtepped ſtraight to the Archbiſhop, and eſtſoons appealeth him to Rome, for the great injury wrought againſt the Church of Canterbury, forbidding him in the name of him to whom he appealed, not to proceed any further. And ſo this holy Confecration was for the preſent time ſtaid. For the which Silveſter with a new Purſe of Mony was fain to travel and trot again to Rome, where he complaining of the Archbiſhop, and accuſing him of contempt of the Pope, in not executing the commandment ſent down, obtaineth again new Letters with more effectual charge to the foreſaid Archbiſhop, that he without any profeſſion, ſimply ſhould give to Silveſter his Confecration in his own Church, Omni occaſione & appellatione remota, All manner of ſtay, or let, or appellation to the contrary notwithſtanding. And ſo in concluſion, the Abbot, contrary to whatſoever the Archbiſhop and all the Monks of Canterbury could do, was in his own Church made Abbot, and had the victory for that time. Notwithſtanding, the Archbiſhop left not the matter ſo, but within five years after, obtained of Pope Adrian, that Silveſter ſhould make profeſſion of his obedience to the Archbiſhop, and ſo he did. Ex Gervaſ.

Silveſter goeth up to Rome.

Silveſter conſecrated Abbot in his own Church, whether the Archbiſhop would or not.

In few years after this, died King Stephen, Anno 1154. and after him Theobald the Archbiſhop, Anno 1159. after he had ſate three and twenty years; after whom through the inſtant procurement of King Henry the ſecond, was placed Thomas Becket, the Kings Chancellor, *An.*1162. of whoſe ſturdy rebellion againſt the King, becauſe ſufficient hath been ſaid before, it ſhall not need to make a double labour now about the ſame.

After the death of Becket, much adoe there was between King Henry and Odo Prior of Canterbury, about the Election of a new Archbiſhop. For the King ſeeing the Realm ſo oftentimes incumbred by thoſe Popiſh Archbiſhops, and fearing left the Monks of Canterbury ſhould elect ſuch another as would follow the ſteps of Thomas Becket, moſt humbly with Cap in hand, and courteſie of knee, deſired Odo the Prior, that at his requeſt, and for contentation of his mind, ſuch a one might be elected whom he would appoint (appointing and naming a certain Biſhop, which was a good ſimple man after the Kings liking) that the Prior diſſemblingly anſwering the King again, that he neither could nor would, without the conſent of his Covent, give promiſe to any man: in fine, contrary to the Kings ſo humble requeſt, agreed to the Election of another, which was the Prior of Dover, called Richard, Anno Domini 1173. who continued in that See eleven years.

Odo Prior of Canterbury.

Richard Prior of Dover, elected Archbiſhop of Canterbury. An. 1173.

And here was renewed again the like variance between this Archbiſhop, and Roger Abbot of the Auſten Monks in Canterbury, as was before mentioned between Theobaldus and Silveſter. For when the ſaid Roger, after his Election to be Abbot, muſt needs take his Confecration at the Archbiſhops hand, neither would the Archbiſhop grant it unto him, unleſs he made profeſſion of obedience, according to the ancient cuſtom of his Predeceſſors: then Roger conſulting with his Monks, firſt denied ſo to do, but at length was contented, ſo it might not be done in the Archbiſhops Church: but in any other Church where he would, under-writing this clauſe withal, Salvis utriuſque eccleſiæ privilegiis, that is, Saving the privileges of both Churches. To this the Archbiſhop ſaid again, firſt, that he ſhould make his due and Canonical Profession, and that he should not come to him with writing or underwriting, but should say in his heart, Salve sancta parens, or Salve festa dies, not Salvis privilegiis, or any such like thing. Whereunto when the Austen Monks in no case would consent, nor the Archbishop otherwise would grant his benediction: Roger the Abbot was fain to post to Rome, and there to bring the Archbishop in hatred in the Court of Rome, made his Abby Tributary to Pope Alexander.

Roger Abbot of Saint Austens, maketh his House Tributary to Pope Alexander. 1177.

The Pope well contented with this, not only granteth the Abbot his desire, but also in contumely of the Archbishop, dubbeth the Abbot with all such ornaments as to a Prelate appertain; and so in the year 1178. sent home the Abbot triumphantly with his Ring and Miter, and other Ensigns of Victory, with Letters also to the Archbishop, injoyning him immediately upon the sight thereof, to consecrate the Abbot in his own Church, and without making any profession. Although with these Letters the Archbishop was shrewdly prested, yet notwithstanding his stout heart would not stoop for this; but he laid his Appeal against the same, and so the Consecration for that time was suspended.

Roger the Abbot returneth home with triumph.

Appellation of the Archbishop.

Then Roger, for his more defence, getting the Kings Letters, travelled up the second time to Rome, where grievously he complained to Pope Alexander of the Archbishop. At the same time a General Council was summoned to be kept at Lateran, where Richard the foresaid Archbishop was also looked for amongst other Bishops to be present. Who then came as far as Paris; but, being there, durst approach no further, and so retired home again. Whereupon the Pope being offended with his contempt, without any more delay exalted the Abbot with his own Consecration, and invested him with all pomp and glory; howbeit, providing before that the said Consecration should redound to no prejudice against the Liberties of the Mother Church of Canterbury, and so upon the same, wrote to the Archbishop his Letters of Certificate, with this addition annexed, Salvo jure & dignitate Cant. Ecclesiæ: that is to say, Saving the liberties and dignities of the Church of Canterbury.

Roger Abbot of St. Austens, travelleth up again to Rome.

Roger Abbot consecrated at Rome by the Pope.

After the Council ended, Roger the Abbot returneth home, although with an empty Purse, yet full of Victory and Triumph. The Archbishop, again thinking to work some grievance to the Austen Monks, had procured in this mean time Letters from Pope Alexander unto the Bishop of Durham, and Abbot of S. Albans, that they should cause the said Roger Abbot of the Austen Monks, to shew unto the Archbishop all the old privileges of his House; which indeed, being shewed, seemed to be raced and new written, with Bulls of Lead, not after the manner nor stile of that age, nor pretending any such antiquity as should seem to reach from the time of Austen, but rather newly counterfeit.

The House of Austen Monks in Canterbury not able to shew for them any Deeds or Writings of antiquity.

All this notwithstanding, the Abbot, bearing him bold upon the Popes favour, ceased not still to disquiet and overthrow the Archbishop by all ways he could, in exempting all his Priests and Lay-men, belonging to his Jurisdiction, from the Archbishops obedience; forbidding also that any of his should come to his Chapters or Synods, or fear any Sentence of his Curse or Excommunication. Whereupon the Archbishop, about the month of November the same year, fayling over to Normandy where the King was, thought to take his journey to the Pope to complain of the Abbot; but being stayed by the King, he was not suffered to pass any further, the King labouring what he could, to bring them to agreement. Nevertheless the Pope and his Romans (saith my story) Aurum & argentum magis quam justitiam sitientes, seditiones inter eos & litigia commovebant: that is, Caring more for gold and silver, than for justice, still stirred coles of sedition and debate between them. Ex Historia Gervasii.

Ex Histor. Gervas. Richard the Archbishop going towards Rome to complain of the Abbot, vexed by the King.

A Catholick practice of the Romish Court, to set men together at variance, that they might get their mony.

The next year after this ensuing, which was the year of our Lord 1184, died Richard the Archbishop aforesaid, in the eight and thirtieth year of King Henry the Second. After whose decease much trouble happened about the election of a new Archbishop, between the King and Monks of Canterbury. And now to enter here into the story of Baldwin above mentioned: first the King sent to the Monks, that they should consider with themselves about the Election of their Archbishop, and to be ready against the time that he would send for them to the Court. Upon this the Covent, gladly assembling together, agreed in themselves upon one, whom they thought chiefly to prefer; yet naming four more, that if the King would refuse one, the other yet might stand. Now the practice in the Monks was, first to keep the Election only in their own hands, as much as they could. And secondly, Ever to give the Election either to some Prior or Monk of their own house or to some Abbot or Bishop, which sometimes had been of their company. Whereby as much inconvenience and blind Superstition was bred in the Church of England: to the same disliked both the King and the Bishops not a little.

Trouble in chusing the Archbishop of Canterbury, after the death of Richard.

Monks of Canterbury sent for by K. Henry the 2d. about chusing of their Archbishop.

As this past on, the King, when he saw his time, willed the Monks of Canterbury to be cited or sent for, to understand what they had concluded in their Election. Whereupon the Monks sent up their Prior called Alanus, with certain other Monks to Reading, where the King then lay, about the month of August. Who at first were courteously entertained; but after the King had intelligence whom they had nominated and elected, they were sent home again with cold cheer, the King willing them to pray better, and to advise more earnestly upon the matter amongst themselves. Alanus the Prior with his fellows, thus departed; who coming home, in conclusion, so concluded amongst themselves, that they would remit no jot of their liberties to the King, without the Popes consent and knowledge. The King understanding hereof, sent his Embassadors likewise of the Pope, for the fortifying of his cause, being in the mean time grievously offended with the Prior, saying, that he was proud, and would make Archbishop whom he lifted, and would be the second Pope in England, &c.

Monks of Canterbury send to the K. about their elect.

Alanus the Prior of the Monks of Canterbury, with his fellows, thus departed.

The King sendeth with the Prior and Monks of Canterbury, The Embassadors of the King.

Not long after this, as these Letters were sent up to Rome, the King sent for Alanus the Prior, and more of the Monks to come to him; whom he intreateth, desiring them in gentle speech, that they would shew so much gentleness and favour to him being their Lord and King, as becometh his friends and subjects to do, as to confer with the Bishops of the Realm about this matter, and to take some better counsel, so as might redound to Gods glory, his honour and wealth of the publick State; with other like words to the same effect.

The King entreateth the Monks gently, and moveth them to confer with the Bishops of the Realm.

The King's words to the Monks.

To whom when the Prior had answered again, with thanks and due reverence, according to the Kings request, the Bishops and Monks went to confer together about the matter. And first, the Bishops marvelled why the Monks should exclude them out of the Election, seeing they were professed and Suffragans to the said Church of Canterbury; Neither is there any Prince, quoth the Bishop of Bath, that will refuse our counsel. There be some counsels, said the Monks, whereat you may be called; but as touching the doing of this Election, it pertaineth not unto you, further than to publish only, and denounce the party whom we have chosen. The Bishop of London then asked, if they had already made an Election. No Election, said the Prior, as yet, but only we have denominated the persons. Then have ye proceeded further, quoth he, than ye ought, having commandment from the Pope, not to proceed without us. And with that was brought forth the Popes Letter, commanding that within forty days, the Bishops of England, and the Prior, and Covent of Canterbury should elect an able and fit person to their Archbishop. About the scanning of these Letters was much ado. The Bishops said, they were first named, and therefore ought to have most interest in this Election. The Monks said again, That they also were not excluded, and required to have a transcript of the Letter, whereof much doubt was made.

Bishops of England claim to have interest with their Election of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Pope's Letter, concerning the Bishops of the Realm, with the Prior's request, in stuff the Archbishop.

The Monks of Canterbury compell'd against their wills to join with the Bishops, touching the election of the Archbishop.

After long concertation, when they could not agree, the King, coming between them both, called away the Bishops from the Monks, supposing, by separating the one from the other to draw both parties to his sentence. But that would not be for the Monks, stiffly standing to their Liberties, would lose no preheminence of their Church, still alledging how by the ancient priviledges of the Church of Canterbury, the Covent should chuse their Pastor and Bishop, and the Prior was but to publish and denounce the person. The Bishops again replied, That it was their right to appoint their Archbishop and Metropolitan, which were Bishops and Suffragans; and namely, the Bishop of London, also being Dean of the said Church of Canterbury. The King then as Umpire between them, yet favouring rather the side of the Bishops, desired them to agree together in ih peace. When that would not prevail, he set the Lord Steward, and other Noblemen to intreat the Prior to draw to some agreement; at least to be contented with this form of election, which was, that the Bishop of London, or some other Bishops, should declare the Election in these words:

The form of election of the Archbishop, between the Bishops and the Monks of Canterbury.

We Bishops, and the Prior and Covent of Christ's Church in Canterbury, with the assent of our Lord the King, do chuse such a person to be Archbishop, &c. Or else thus, that the Prior should pronounce forth the Election in these words, saying: The Bishops of England, and I Prior, and the Covent of Canterbury, with the assent of our Lord and King, do chuse such a person, &c.

The Bishops and Monks could not agree about the form of Election.

Upon this, the Prior said he would convent with his Covent. Who with much ado were content to grant to the Kings desire; but afterward being required to put down the same in writing, that they refused to do; yet notwithstanding, relented at last to the King. But when the Bishops made excuses for the absence of their fellow Bishops, for the matter for that time said; and the King, finding home the Monks again to their house in peace, deferred that business to a further day, which was till the first day of December; commanding the Prior with his fellows the same day not to fail, but to be at London about the chusing of the Archbishop.

The King deferred the Election till the Month of December Anno 1184.

The Kings message to the Monks of Canterbury, to agree and joyn with the Bishops.

As the day prefixed came, the Prior with his company, were also present, who giving attendance all that day, and the next day also following, so were driven off till the third day after. At length the Lord Steward, with other Nobles of the Realm, were sent unto them from the King to declare, That whereas the King before had divided the Bishops from the Monks, that they both might have their Election by themselves, after the form of a Bill which was put down in writing: Now the mind of the King was, that the Monks, taking another way, should joyn with the Bishops, and so, having the matter in talk together, should proceed jointly in the Election.

Against this many things were alledged by the Prior and his Mates, complaining much upon the Bishops, which said, that the Bishops had ever holden with the Kings, against the liberties of their Church and Archbishops. As first, they stood against Anselm for King William; then against Theobald for King Stephen; after that, against Tho. Becket for King Henry; and after him, did supplant the election of Richard their Archbishop; and now again, went about to practise and work against this their election present, &c. At last the Prior with his fellows concluding, desired they might speak with the King himself. Who, efsoons coming unto them, willed them as good men to be contented, and go talk with the Bishops about the election; promising, that whom they agreed upon, he also would grant his assent unto the same. To whom when the Prior again had objected the writings that before were made: Truth it is (said the King) such writings were made, but I neither may nor will go against the council of my Realm; and therefore agree, said he, with my Bishops and Abbots, and remember that the voice of the People is the voice of God.

Upon this the Prior with his Monks, seeing no other remedy, went to the Bishops to confer, according to the King his request, about the election; who then were willed by the Bishops to nominate whom they would, and the Bishops would likewise name theirs. So that when the Prior with his complices, had named three, after their chusing the Bishops, said they would nominate but one; and so did, which was the Bishop of Worcester, willing the Prior to go home, and to confer with his Covent about the same. To whom shortly after the Bishops sent certain Priests, to signifie to the Covent, that they, according to the Popes Letters, should repair to the Bishops concerning the election of the Archbishop; also declared moreover to them, that the persons whom they had named were good men; but he whom they had to nominate was a more worthy man, whom they both had nominated, and also would elect. The Monks, marvelling hereat, sent two Monks with the Archdeacon of Canterbury to the King.

This done, immediately after the return of the Priests, the Bishops caused all the Bells of the City to be rung, and Te Deum to be sung for the Archbishop new elect. Whereof when the two Monks brought tidings to the Covent at Canterbury what was done at London, they were all in a marvellous dump. The King hearing this, and perceiving the stiffness of the Monks, in all haste sent messengers to Canterbury with gentle words, to will the Prior to come to the King, and certifie him of the purpose of his Monks. Unto whom the Prior, efsoons being come, declareth in the name of the whole Covent, that in no case he, nor the Monks would ever while the world stood, agree to the Election of the Bishops; unless the King in his own person would come to Canterbury, and there openly, before the whole Covent, protest by his own mouth the foresaid Election to be nought and void; and so, returning to London again, openly likewise, before the Clergy and People, would repudiate and reject the same: and furthermore, that the party also elected, should openly in the same place protest and say, that he neither would nor ought to take that function upon him, unless he entred by the consent of the Prior and Covent of Canterbury; and all this to be done in the same place where the Bishops had made their Election before; and so peraventure (said they) at the Kings so earnest suite and requeft, they would gratifie his will, and ratifie the said Election with the voices of their consent. To make the story short, after great hold between the Secular Clergy on the one side, and the regular order on the other side, and after the Kings indignation against the Prior, and the swooning of the Prior before the King, at length the King to take up the matter, and to save the Priors life, was fain to perform in his own person all those conditions above prescribed by the Monks. Ex Gervas. fol. 100.

And thus have ye heard the tragical election of the Bishop of Worcester, named Baldwin, made Archbishop of Canterbury. Now what a troublesome time the said Baldwin had with the Monks in governing the Church of Canterbury, here followeth likewise not unworthy to be considered.

The troubles between Baldwin Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Monks of the same Church.

The great trouble and contention between Baldwin Archbishop and the Monks of Canterbury.

IN the first year the Archbishop shewed himself friendly and loving to the Monks; the next year following he began to appear somewhat rough unto them. The manner then was of the house of Christs-Church, toward the time of the Nativity and of Easter, to receive certain Presents or Gifts of their Farmers or Tenants, which the Celarars should take and lay up. Those Presents the Archbishop began first to intercept from the Monks, and to bestow them upon his Secular Clerks. After this he took three Churches or Benefices (which the Monks claimed as proper to themselves) and placed in them three of his Chaplains. After this he incroacheth to his hands, certain Tenements, Revenues and Victuals, belonging before to the Monks (as they said) and committed the custody thereof to certain of his own Clerks and houshold servants.

The Monks which had born so much with the Archbishop before, seeing this, could forbear him no longer, but needs would make their appeal against him. The Archbishop, not much regarding that, waxed thereby the more fierce against them, insomuch that such Farms and Tenements as he before had let alone, now he received to his own occupying, with many other grievances where-with he greatly vexed the Monks, so that three Abbots were fain to come and reconcile the Archbishop and the Monks; which reconciliation was this, that the Monks should let fall their appeal, and the Archbishop should restore again to them their Farms and Tenements. But as touching the Benefices and the Presents, the Archbishop still kept them in his hands for a further trial of their obedience and patience. Nevertheless, some there were of the ancient Monks which in no case would give over the foresaid appeal before the Archbishop made a full restitution of all together.

The Monks of Canterbury appeal to the Pope against their Archbishop. Reconciliation between the Archbishop and the Monks, which did not hold long.

After this agreement, such as it was, between the Monks and him, the Archbishop soon after sent up to Rome one of his Chaplains (unto whom he had given one of the Benefices afore-mentioned) partly for confirmation of his Benefice, partly also to obtain licence for the Archbishop to build a Church, which he intended to erect of Secular Priests near unto the Town of Canterbury. Which being obtained of the Pope, the Archbishop, not a little glad thereof, began now more and more to war fierce against the Monks, not only in talking from them their Churches and Oblations, but also in aggravating the whole state of their House, which he intended either to subvert, or greatly to diminish, to pluck down the pride and stubbornness of the Monks. Wherefore taking with him certain other Bishops (whom he knew bare no good will to that Monkish generation) he went to the King, declaring how he had a good purpose in his mind to erect a new and a solemn Church, in the honour of S. Thomas of Canterbury, of secular Priests or Canons, and therefore desired of the King to have his favourable licence to the same. The King right well perceiving the purpose of the Archbishop whither it tended, as to the bridling of the stiff-necked Monks, was the more willing to give assent, if he were not also the chief worker of that matter himself.

Hakington Church.

The intent of the Archbishop in planting of that new Church, was to found there divers Prebends, and to make both the King, and every Bishop being his Suffragans, Prebendaries thereof, so that every one of them should conferr one Prebendship to the same foundation; minding there to consecrate Bishops, to make his Chrismatory, to celebrate his Synods, and to administer all other things belonging unto the function of his See, and the same to be called Hakington Church. The Monks, not ignorant how the Archbishop privily intended the defolation and subversion of their House and Liberties, complaining upon the matter, determined at length among themselves to appeal to the See of Rome, namely, for these three causes against the Archbishop: First, for spoiling them of their Gifts and Oblations: Secondly, for depriving them of their Churches and Benefices: and Thirdly, for erecting a new foundation of secular Canons, to the derogation and overthrow of their Religious Order; giving admonition to the Archbishop before by their Monks, sent to him of this their appellation. To whom the Archbishop answered, that the foundation, which he went about, was to no derogation, but rather to the fortification and honour of their House. Who answered again, that it was, and could not otherwise be, but to their subversion. And what should lets me then (said the Archbishop) but I may build in my own ground what I will? No (said they) no ground of yours, but your ground is our ground, as all other things that you have by right are ours, forsomuch as you have them not of your self, but of the Church, and for the Churches cause. All which things have been given neither to you, nor to the Archbishops, but unto the Church of Christ: and therefore (said they) all such as appertain unto us inwardly and outwardly, with the persons also and the whole state of our Church, we submit under the Popes protection, and now here make our appeal to the See Apostolick, assigning also the term when to prosecute the same.

Appellation against the Archbishop.

The Archbishop receiving this appellation, and saying, that he would answer to the same either by himself, or by his responsal, within three days after, which was the sixteenth of December, came to Canterbury: where the Monks understanding how he was in mind to place new secular Priests in the Church of St. Stephen, where the Monks had served before, came to the Church to stop the proceeding of the Archbishop by way of appeal. Whereof the Archbishop having warning before, deferred the matter till the next day after. On which day the Monks, again being sent by Honorius the Prior into the Church, charged the Archbishop in the name of Almighty God, and by vertue of their appeal made to the Apostolick See, to surcease those his doings; charging also the Parson of the Church in no wise to suffer those Secular Clerks to be admitted into the Church. All which yet notwithstanding, the Archbishop proceeded in his business. And first, placing in his Clerks, he suspended the Prior from his administration. Then he adjuseth the Porters of the Gate, upon their Oath, to let none of the Monks pass out of the house without his licence. The Monks likewise he commanded, by vertue of obedience, not to stray any where abroad without his leave. And furthermore, one of the foresaid Monks, which served the Appeal against him, he utterly banished from that Covent. Upon this, the day next following, Honorius the Prior trusting (saith the Story) on God, and S. Thomas, took his way to Rome, sent in commission by the Covent, to prosecute the appeal against the Archbishop.

Bishops between the Monks and the Archbishop for placing Popish Clerks in the Church of St. Stephen in Canterbury.

The Prior of Canterbury suspended.

In this mean season, a new jarr began between the said Archbishop and the Monks, about their Rents and Revenues, which the Archbishop would have committed to the receiving and keeping of three Monks, but the Sub-prior or Geffery, with the Covent, in no case would suffer that: whereabout there was a foul stir. The Archbishop craving the aid of the King, first had three Bishops sent down to him, of Coventry, Norwich and Worcester. Who, being instant with the Monks to submit their cause into the Kings hands, like as the Archbishop had done, they utterly refused it; especially seeing they had already referred the whole state of their cause to the determination of the Apostolical See. The King seeing no other remedy, came himself with the Archbishop into the Chapter-house; where he commanded first the doors to be kept fast, that none should enter but which by name were called for. A certain Monk whom were two Bishops, to wit, of Norwich and Durham, and one Petrus Blesensis a learned man (whose Epistles be yet extant in Libraries) a chief worker in this matter against the Monks. Then was called in Geffry the Sub-prior, with a few other Monks whom he brought with him. The King then fell talking with the Archbishop and his company, and afterwards with the Monks, laboured to intreat them that they would let fall their appeal, and so stand to the arbitrement of him and of the Bishops, concerning the cause which was between the Archbishop and them in traverse.

A Letter of Pope Urban against the Archbishop.

A grant from the Monks to the King.

The King comes into the chapter house of Canterbury.

The Archbishop meeteth and comes to the Pope's Court.

To this the Monks answered, that these were good words, but served not for that time, forsomuch as their cause was already translated to the Court of Rome, and now was presently in hearing before the Popes Holines: and therefore they could not, ne would do that injury to their Lord Pope, to refuse him, and to put the matter into the judgment of any other. Then was it required of the Monks, that they would put the matter in comprimise, in case the Prior would consent thereto: upon this intent, that if the Prior consented, and the Monks not, then should they run in contempt and disobedience; or if the Monks would consent, and the Prior not, then should the Prior be excluded the Realm. The wily Monks, being not unprovided of this subtilty, made their answer, that seeing they had sent their Prior forth in their commission, it stood not with their honesty to give any determinate consent without the knowledge, and before the return of the said Prior; unless the Archbishop first would promise to make full restitution of all that he had wrongfully wrested from them. When the King could get no other answer of the Monks, neither could move the Archbishop to release the sentence of their suspension, unless they would confess and knowledge their fault, he, so parting from them, passed over into France.

Not long after this came a Messenger from Rome, bringing Letters from Pope Urban to the Archbishop, wherein the Pope considering and tendering (as he said) the enorme grievances done against the Monks, straitly enjoyned and commanded him, within ten days after the receiving thereof, to release the sentence of his suspension against the Prior and others of the said Covent, and also to retract and restore again to the Monks whatsoever he plucked from them since the time of their appeal first made. Who, in case he should deny, or forestack the doing hereof, commission was given to three Abbots, of Battel, of Fevarsham, and of St. Austins, with ample authority to perform the same, &c. The Archbishop, receiving these Letters brought to him by a Monk of the foresaid House, first made his excuse that the Pope was misinformed. But the Monks not contented with that excuse, when they would needs know what answer he would make to the Popes Mandate, his answer was, that he had yet ten days given him of the Pope. In which mean time the Archbishop went to London, and there in the Church of St. Paul consecrated his holy Oyl and Cream (making one of the Popes seven Sacraments) which was grievously taken in the Church of Canterbury. At last the ten days being ended, when the Archbishop refused to accomplish that which was in the Popes Letter injoyned him, the three Abbots aforesaid, to execute the Popes commandement, came at their day assigned to Canterbury, and there assoiled all such as the Archbishop before had suspended, and in the end certified Pope Urban by Letters what they had done.

The Archbishop hearing this, within four days after, sent two of his Clerks, which appealed the three Abbots aforesaid up to Rome; and he himself in the mean time prepared busily for the building up of his Church, sending to all Churches in England upon releasement of their sins, to confer unto the same; and to make the more haste, for lack of Free-stone he made up his building with Timber, and such other stuff as he could get.

The Archbishop appeals up to Rome.

The Archbishops new Church made of wood.

The Prior Honorius all this while remained still at the Court of Rome, giving attendance upon the Pope; who having intelligence of the Archbishops doings, procured another Letter of Pope Urban to the whole Clergy of England, straitly injoyning them that none should confer to the new Fraternity of Baldwin Archbishop of Canterbury. To these Letters the Archbishop shewed such reverence, that where before he had planted his Chappel of wood and boards, now he provided the same to be builded of Lime and stone.

By this time Petrus Blesensis, with other messengers of the Archbishop, seeing Honorius the Prior to be gone from the Court of France, resorted to the Court of Rome, bringing with them Letters of Credit from the King, from the Archbishop, and also from other Bishops of the Realm; but the Pope reading only the Kings Letters, and the Archbishops, the residue he cast into a window by, saying he would read them at further leisure. Then the Pope giving audience in his Consistory to hear their cause, first came in Petrus Blesensis with the Agents of the Archbishop, exhibiting their Letters, and propounding their requests to the Pope, which were, that restitution should be made by the Monks to the Archbishop, wherein they had injured him. Item, That the things which had been granted before to the Prior in that Court, might be called in again. Thirdly, That the Archbishop might have license to proceed in building his Colledg of Canons, &c. After this was called in M. Pillett the Attorny for the Monks of Canterbury. Who alledging many great things against the Archbishop for his contempt and disobedience to the Popes precepts, required that he should make restitution to the Monks for his injuries done to them; and also that his new foundation of Secular Canons, tending to the overthrow of the Conventual Church of Canterbury, should be utterly raced and thrown down to the ground. Thus between these parties pleaing and repleaing one against the other, much hard hold there was, but in conclusion for all the Kings Letters, and for all that the Archbishop and Bishops could do, the matter went on the Monks side. So that there was no remedy, but the Pope would needs have the Archbishops new building come down, and the Monks to be restored again to their full possessions. The execution whereof was committed to the three Abbots aforesaid, to wit, of Battel, of Fevarsham, of St. Austins in Canterbury, and to Geffrey Subprior of Canterbury.

Which things being thus determined at Rome, then Radulph Glanvile, Lord Steward of England, writing to the said Abbot of Battel, and to the Subprior and Covent of Canterbury, commandeth them in the Kings name, and upon their Oath and fealty given unto him, that they nor any of them do proceed in this Controverse between the Monks and the Archbishop of Canterbury, before they come and talk with him, there to know further of the Kings pleasure: and furthermore charging the Covent of Canterbury not to enter further in any Examinations as concerning the Archbishops matters; and also citing the Subprior of the said House, to appear before him at London, at the Feast of St. James the same year, which was 1187. Notwithstanding he excusing himself by sickness, sent two Monks in his stead, and to kept himself at home. To whom commandment was given, that the Monks of Canterbury within fifteen days should fall over to Normandy to the King, and there shew the tenor and evidences of their priviledges; and also that such Stewards and Bailiffs whom they had placed in their Farms and Lordships, contrary to the will of the Archbishop, should be removed. And likewise the three Abbots in the Kings name were commanded in no wife to execute the Popes commandment against the Archbishop. Not long after this the Archbishop took Shipping at Dover, and went over to the King, where he ordained three principal Officers over the Monks of Christs Church; the Sacrist, the Cellarer, and the Chamberlain, contrary to the will of the Covent, with other Grievances more, whereby the Monks were not a little offended, so that upon the same they made a new Appellation to the Pope. Whereupon Pope Urban by the setting on of Honorius the Prior, who was now come again to the Court, wrote to him another Letter after a sharper and more vehement sort, to the effect as followeth.

The Copy of Pope Urbans Letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

In that we have born with your Brotherhood hitherto, and have not proceeded in such grievous manner against you, as we might, although being thereto greatly provoked; the chiefest cause was this, that we supposed your heart would have relented from the oppression of the Conventual Church of Canterbury, committed unto you; if not for our reverence, which you seem to have conversed more than became you, yet at least for fear of God's judgment. For well we hoped, our conscience perswading us to the same, that after you had obtained that high state and dignity in the Church of England, you would have been an example to others of obedience and reverence to be given to the See Apostolick of all Ecclesiastical persons. Wherefore as the first beginning both of our and also of your promotion, we did not spare to advance and honour you as we have done few others besides, thinking no less, but that we had found a faithful friend of the Church, for our honour. Wherein we perceive now (which maketh us not a little to marvel) our expectation greatly deceived. And whom we well trusted to be a sure stay for the maintenance of our estate, him now we find a persecutor against us in our members.

Note how the Popes stand all upon their honour.

The Popes expectation deceived in the Archbishop of Canterbury.

For whereas we sundry times have written to you in the behalf of our Brethren, and the Church committed to your charge, that you should desist from disquieting them, and not vex or disturb their liberties, or at least for reverence of us: you [as] only in this, but in other things more (as commonly is reported of you in all places) set at light our Letters and Appellations made unto the Apostolical See. What you have wrought against them after their so manifold Appellations laid unto us, and our Inhibitions again unto you, we are ashamed to utter. But revolve and consider in your mind, if ye have well done, and advise in your own conscience what you have done. We for our part because we neither may ne ought with deaf ears to pass over the clamors of the Brethren, and such contemps of the Apostolick See; although our biddings and warnings given to you seem to be all in vain, yet notwithstanding we send our Mandates again unto your Brotherhood, in these Apostolical Writings, districtly and in vertue of obedience commanding you, that whether you be present in your Church, or absent; all that notwithstanding, whatsoever you have done in building of your Chappel [which you to the destruction of the Monastery of Canterbury have erected] after the time of their appeal made to us, or our inhibition sent to you, you fail not of your proper costs and charges to demolish; undoing again, and making void, whatsoever ye have begun and innovated concerning the institution of the Canons, and other things belonging to the erection of the said Chappel; accounting moreover and reputing the place where the Chappel was, to be accursed and prophane, and also that all such, whosoever have celebrated in the same place, shall stand suspended till the time they appear before our presence. Commanding furthermore, that all those Monks whom you have presumed to remove from their office, or to excommunicate, since the time of their appeal made, you restore and assoile again, rendring also and restoring all such Farms, Manors, Tenements, and Oblations as you, after their appeal made, have unwrapped from them; and finally, that you innovate nothing touching the state of that Monastery, during the time of this Controversie depending before us. Giving you you to understand that in case you shall continue in your stubbornness and rebellion upon this present warning, or defer the execution of this precept thirty days after the receiving thereof, we shall appoint others to execute the same; injoyning also your Suffragans that as you shall shew your self disobedient and rebelling to us, so they all shall refuse likewise to give any obedience or reverence unto you, &c.

Given at FERRARIA, 5 Non. Octob.

Another Letter besides this the Pope also sent to the three Abbots aforesaid for the correction of these enormities. Likewise another Letter was sent to King Henry the Second, wherein the Pope injoyneth and requireth him, upon remission of his sins, not to dissemble and bear with the Archbishop in his oppression of his Monks, but to help that those things may be amended, where he hath trespassed against them.

The Pope writeth to the Abbots, and also to the King.

Third Pontifical Letters were written Anno 1187, the third day of October, and in the nineteenth day after, the same month, the said Pope Urban died. In the which year, and about the which month, Baldwin King of Jerusalem was taken, with many Noblemen of Soldan the Saracen; and Jerusalem lost, after that it had been in the possession of the Christians, and so continued the space of eighty eight years, and eighty days, from the time that Godfridus Bolonius did first win it from the Infidels.

Pope Urban dieth. Baldwine King of Jerusalem, with many Nobles taken of the Saracens, and the City won.

After the receiving of those Letters of Pope Urban above specified, both the King and Archbishop, with all the Bishops of the Realm were marvellously quailed, glad now to please, and speak fair to the Monks, promising all things to be done and restored to them after the best sort. Neither was the King now and Archbishop so submiss, but the Monks on the other side were as brag and jocant, being fully assured that all now was their own. In the Narration of which History (as it is set in Gervasius at large) this we have to note by the way, in what fear and thraldom Kings in those days were under the Pope, who could not be Masters over their own subjects, but that every pild Monk, or pelting Prior, upon vertue of their appeal to the Court of Rome, and making their house Tributary to the Pope, was able not only to match, but to give Checkmate unto the best King Christened, as not in this Story only may appear.

The King and Archbishop glad to agree with the Monks. The Monks got the upper hand over the Archbishop.

The miserable subjection of Kings under the Pope to be noted.

It followeth then in the Story of these Monks, that as they were thus in the midst of their joy and jollity, suddenly cometh news of the death of Pope Urban their great Calipha, and also how that Gregory the Eighth was placed in his room, who was a special friend and favourer of the Archbishop; which as it did greatly incourage the King and the Archbishop, so the Monks on the other side were as much discomforted, so that now all was turned upside down. For whereas the King and the Archbishop before thought they had lost all, and were glad to compound with the Monks, and to seek their favour, now were the Monks on the contrary side fain to crouch to the King, and glad to have a good countenance; who then reforting to him, and finding him altered both in word and gesture, delired he would confirm and grant that which of late before he had promised. To whom it was anfwered again by the King, that seeing the Archbishop had granted to them their Sacrist, their Chamberlain, and their Cellerar, they should have no more restored of him; neither would he suffer the Liberties and Priviledges of the Archbishop to be impaired, or take any wrong. And touching the new Chappel of St. Thomas (said he) whereabout ye strive so long, with the Canonthips and other buildings belonging thereto, the same I receive into my hands, so that none shall have any thing to do therein but my self, &c. In like manner of the Archbishop such another like answer they received, and of Bishops little better. So the Monks sent away with a flea in their ear, went home again out of Normandy to their Cell.

Calipha is the High Priest of the Saracens sitting in Damascus, unto whom all the Sultans were subject, as our Princes now are to the Pope.

The Kings answer to the Monks of Canterbury.

Now the Archbishop having the Monks where he would, wrought them much grievance; but that continued not very long. For within two months after, and less, died Pope Gregory the Eighth, about the sixteenth day of December following. After whom succeeded Pope Clement the Third, who following the steps of Urban, bent all his power with the Monks against the Archbishop, sending divers Precepts and Mandates in the next year following, which was the year One thousand one hundred eighty eight, with an imperious Letter, willing and commanding him to desist from his oppression of the Monks, and to throw down his new Chappel. Whereupon the Archbishop made his appeal, and minded to go to Rome, but was called back of the King, being ready to sail over. In the which year Honorius the Prior died at Rome of the Plague, which was some help and comfort to the Archbishop, for whom the Archbishop made Roger Noris Prior against the wills of the Covent. After this, about the latter end of the same year, Pope Clement sent down his Legate called Radulphus a Cardinal, to Canterbury, with another Letter more sharply written to the same effect unto the Archbishop. Ex Hist. Gervas.

Pope Gregory 8. dieth.

Pope Clement Letters to the Archbishop.

Honorius the Prior of Canterbury died at Rome.

The Second Letter of Pope Clement to the Archbishop.

Furthermore, in the year next after, which was One thousand one hundred eighty nine, he wrote also the third Letter to him. In the which year also died King Henry the Second, after whom succeeded King Richard his Son, who joyning likewise with the Archbishop, took his part strongly against the said Monks. At last, after much ado on both parts, and after great disturbance, and imprisoning divers of the Monks, King Richard preparing his Voyage towards Jerusalem, and studying first to set peace between them, consulted and agreed with the Bishops and Abbots about a final concord in this matter, between the Archbishop and Monks of Canterbury; which at length on both parts was made, upon these Conventions which follow:

K. Henry the 2d. dieth. K. Rich. the first joyned with the Archbishop.

1. That Roger Noris should be deposed, whom the Archbishop had made Prior against their wills: whom the King then at the request of the Archbishop promoted to be Abbot of Eusham.

Agreement between the Archbishop and Monks of Canterbury upon what conditions.

2. Item, That the Archbishop should pluck down his Chappel, which he builded in the suburbs of Canterbury, against the minds of the Monks.

3. Item, That the foresaid Monks should make profession of their obedience and subjection to the Archbishop, as they had done to his other Predecessors before him.

4. Item, As touching all other complaints and injuries (except only the Chappel, and depolition of Roger Noris the Prior) the Monks should stand to the Arbitrement of the King, of the Archbishop, and the Prelates.

Ex Lib. Antonym. & Hist. Gervas. apud Henric. Christophersonum.

5. Item, That the Monks kneeling down before the King in the Chapter-house, should ask the Archbishop forgiveness. Which being done, they went all together to the Church, and sang Te Deum for this reformation of peace. Ex veteri Chronico Manuscripto, & ex Gervasio.

The next day after the Archbishop coming into the Chapter, restored to the Covent their Manors and Farms again; also he discharged the Prior which he had made before; desiring them likewise, that if he had offended them either in word or deed, they would from their heart remit him. This reconciliation being made between the Archbishop and the Covent, then the Archbishop going about to dissolve the building of his new Church, though he changed the place, yet thought not to change his intent, and therefore making exchange of Lands with the Bishop and Monks of Rochester, purchased of them their ground in Lambeth, Ann. 1191. Which done, he came to his Clerks whom he had placed to be Canons in his new College of Hakington, and also willed them to remove all their Goods and Furniture to Lambeth, over against Westminster, where he erected for them another Church, and there placed the said Canons. About which Colledg of Lambeth afterwards much trouble likewise enfued, by the stirring of the said Monks of Canterbury, in the time of Hubert the Archbishop in the reign of the said King Richard, and in the year of our Lord 1196. Furthermore, after the depoling of Roger Noris Prior of Canterbury aforesaid, Baldwin the Archbishop, inforced to grant them another Prior by the assent of the King and of the Covent, assigned Osbernus to be their Prior, who had taken part before with the Archbishop; but the Monks not pleased with him, after the death of Baldwin the Archbishop removed him again.

And

Three things to be observed in this story of Canterbury Monks above rehearsed.

And thus have you the tedious Discourse of this Catholick Tragedy between the Monks of Canterbury and their Archbishop, scarce worth the rehearsal; notwithstanding, this I thought to give the Reader to see of purpose. First to shew forth unto the world the stout sturdiness of this Monkish generation, who professing profound humility in their coat, what little humility they had in their heart, what pride and arrogancy in their conversation, and what hypocrisie in their Religion, this one example among a thousand others may give some experience. Secondly, That the posterity now may see how little Kings could then do in their own Realms for the Pope. And thirdly, to the intent it may more notoriously appear to all Readers, what strife and debate, what distention and division, what little unity and concord hath always followed the Popes Catholick Church, wheresoever the corrupt Religion and usurped ambition of the Pope prevailed. For not to speak only of this Monkish house of Canterbury, What Church Cathedral, Collegiate, or Conventual; what See, Church, Monastery or Chappel was under all the Popes Government, but ever there happened some variance, either between the King and the Archbishop, as between King William and Lanfranke, King Henry the First and Anselm, King Stephen and Richard, King Henry the Second and Becket, King John and Stephen Langton, King Henry the Third and Boniface, &c. Or else between Archbishop and Archbishop, for making profession, for carrying the Cross, for sitting on the right hand of the Popes Legate, &c. Or else between Archbishops and their Suffragans; or between Archbishops and their Covents; or between Bishops and Monks, between Dean and Chapter, between Monks and Secular Priests, Monks of one sort against another, Friers of one Order against another, Students against Friers, Townsmen against Scholars, &c. As for example: What discord was between the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Richard Archbishop of York; between Lanfrancus and Archbishop Thomas, between Theobald Archbishop of Canterbury, and Sylvester Abbot of St. Augins, between Walter of Christs Church, and Sylvester Abbot aforesaid, between William Archbishop of Canterbury, and Jeremias Prior of Canterbury, Anno 1144. between the Monks of Canterbury and Odo their Prior for translating the Relicks of Dunstan, between King Stephen and Roger Bishop of Salisbury, the Bishop of Lincoln and Roger Bishop of Ely his Son, Anno 1138, between Pope Innocent and Anacletus the space of seven years; the Cardinals for money (saith Gervasius) sometime holding with the one, sometime with the other; at last the Election was determined by a fore battel between Lotharius Emperor, and Rogerius Duke of Apulia, Ann. 1137; also between Pope Innocent the Fourth, and Frederick Emperor the Second, between King Henry the Third and William Rale Bishop of Winchester, when the King bad the Gates of Winchester Town to be shut against him, Anno 1250, between Boniface Archbishop of Canterbury, and Canons of St. Paul: Item, between the said Boniface and Monks of St. Bartholomew, who sat there in Harnels in his Visitation, Anno 1250; between the Abbot of Westminster and Monks of the same house, Anno 1251. Item, Between the foresaid William Rale Bishop of Winchester, and Boniface Archbishop of Canterbury, for a Priest of the Hospital in Southwark, Anno 1252; between the said Boniface and Canons of Lincoln after the death of Robert Grosthead, for giving of Prebends, Anno 1253; between the Monks of Coventry and Canons of Lichfield, for chusing their Bishop in the time of King Henry the Third?

Hypocrisie in Monkery.

Kings made slaves under the Pope.

No concord nor unity in Popish Churches.

Examples proving what discord, and how little unity is in the Popes Church.

Ex Matth. Paris.

No unity in the Popes Church.

And what should I speak of the discord which cost so much money between Edmund Archbishop of Canterbury and the Monks of Rochester, for chusing Richard Wendor to be their Bishop, Anno 1328; between Robert Grosthead Bishop of Lincoln and Canons of the same house, for which both he and they were driven to travel to Rome, Anno 1244; between Gilbert Bishop of Rochester, Delegate to Archbishop Baldwin, and Robert the Popes Legate for sitting on the right hand of the Legate in his Council at Westminster, Anno 1190; between the Abbot of Bardeny and the said Grosthead about the Visitation of their Abbey, Anno 1242. Item, between the Covent of Canterbury and the said Robert Bishop of Lincoln, Ann. 1243; between Hugo Bishop of Durham, and Hubert Bishop of Sarum, and Geffery Archbishop of York, Ann. 1189; between William Bishop of Ely, the Kings Chancellor and the Canons of York, for not receiving him with Procession, Anno 1190; between the Abbot of Westminster and his Covent of Black Monks, whom King Henry the Third had much ado to still and agree, Anno 1249. Item, Between the foresaid Bishop of Lincoln and the Abbot of Westminster; likewise between Nicolas Bishop of Durham and John Abbot of St. Albans, Ann. 1246; also between Hubert Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Monks there for the house of Lambeth, Ann. 1146. And what a stir was between the Preaching Friers and the Gray-Friers, mentioned in Matthew Paris for Superiority, Anno 1243. Also between the said Gray-Friers, and the Prelates and Doctors of Paris about nine Conclusions, condemned of the Prelates to be erroneous?

Conclusions of the Friers condemned for erroneous by the Prelates of Paris. Ex Mat. Paris. fol. 167.

1. Concerning the Divine Essence, that it cannot be seen of the Angels or men glorified.
2. Concerning the Essence of the Holy Ghost.
3. Touching the proceeding of the Holy Ghost, as he is love.
4. Whether men glorified shall be In Cælo Empyreo, or, In Cælo Crystallino.
5. That the evil Angel at his first creation was evil, and never good.
6. That there have been many Verities from the beginning which were not of God.
7. That an Angel in one instant may be in divers places.
8. That the evil Angel never had whereby he might stand, no more had Adam in his state of innocency.
9. That he which hath Meliora naturalia, that is to say, More perfect strength of nature working in him, shall have more full measure of necessity to obtain grace and glory. To the which Articles the Prelates answering, did excommunicate the same as erroneous, affirming, that grace and glory shall be given according to that God hath elected and predestinate, &c. Ex Mat. Paris. fol. 167.

Contention between the Friers about the Conception of our Lady.

In like manner between the said Dominick Friers, and the Gray Friers, what a brawl and tumult was about the conception of our Lady, whether she was without original sin conceived or not, in the Reign of King Henry the Seventh, and King Henry the Eighth, in the year of our Lord 1550. Add moreover to these, the four and twenty hainous Schisms, and not so few, which happened between Pope and Pope in the Church and See of Rome. But what do I stand to recite the divisions and dissentions of the Popes Church, which is as much almost as to reckon the sands of the Sea? For what Church, Chapter, or Covent, was in all that Religion, which either had not some variance with themselves, or with others? Upon which continual strife and variance among them, the Readers hereof may judge of them and their Religion as pleaseth them: in the mean time, my judgment is this; that where such dissention dwelleth, there dwelleth not the spirit of Christ.

Continual variance in the Popes Church.

Anno 1190.

These things thus discourled, touching the tragical dissention between Baldwin the Archbishop, and the Monks of Canterbury; now let us proceed by the Lords assistance, in continuing of our story. After King Richard had thus, as is declared, set the Monks and the Archbishop in some agreement, and had compoled such things as were to be redreffed within the Realm, he advanced forward his journey, and came unto Turon to meet with Philip the French King; and so after that went to Vizaliace; where the French King and he joyning together, for the more continuance of their journey, assured themselves by solemn Oath, (swearing fidelity one unto the other; the form of whose Oath was this: That either of them should defend and maintain the honour of the other, and bear true fidelity unto him of life, members, and worldly honour; and that neither of them should fail one the other in their affairs; but the French King should aid the King of England in defending his Land and Dominions, as he would himself defend his own City of Paris, if it were besieged.) and that Richard King of England likewise should aid the French King in defending his Land and Dominions, no otherwise than he would defend his own City of Rone, if it were besieged, &c.

K. Richard taketh his journey toward the land of Jerusalem.

The Oath and fidelity between Philip French King, and K. Richard the first, going to the Holy Lands.

But how slenderly this Oath did hold between these two Kings, and by whose chief occasion first it fell asunder, the sequel of the History (the Lord willing) shall declare hereafter.

Diſciplyne and Orders ſet up by K. Richard for malefactors.

Furthermore, touching the Laws and Ordinances appointed by this King Richard for his Navy, the form thereof was this:

1. That whoſoever killed any perſon on Shipboard, ſhould be tyed with him that was ſlain, and thrown into the Sea.

2. And if he killed him on the land, he ſhould in like manner be tyed with the party ſlain, and be buried with him in the earth.

3. He that ſhall be convicted by lawful witneſs to draw out his knife or weapon, to the intent to ſtrike any man, or that hath ſtricken any to the drawing of blood, ſhall loſe his hand.

4. Alſo, he that ſtriketh any perſon with his hand, without effuſion of blood, ſhall be plunged three times in the Sea.

Item, Whoſo ſpeaketh any opprobrious or contumelious words, in reviling or curſing one another, for ſo oftentimes as he hath ſo reviled, ſhall pay ſo many ounces of ſilver.

Item, A thief or felon that hath ſtoln, being lawfully convicted, ſhall have his head ſhorn, and boiling pitch poured upon his head, and feathers or downe ſtrowed upon the ſame, whereby he may be known; and ſo the firſt landing place they ſhall come to, there to be caſt up, &c.

The French K. and King Richard come to Lions.

These things thus ſet in a readineſs, King Richard ſending his Navy by the Spaniſh Seas, and by the ſtraits of Iubaltary, between Spain and Africa, to meet him at Marſilia, he himſelf went (as ſaid) to Vizeliace, to the French King. Which two Kings, from thence went to Lions, where the Bridge over the Flood Rhodanus, with preſs of people, brake, and many, both Men and Women, were drowned. By reaſon whereof the two Kings, for the cumbrances of their trains, were conſtrained to diſſever themſelves for the time of their journy, appointing both to meet together in Sicilia; and ſo Philip the French King took his way to Genua, and King Richard to Marſilia, where he remained eight days, appointing there his Navy to meet him. From thence croſſing over to Genua, where the French King was, he paſſed forward by the Coaſt of Italy, and entred into Tyber not far from Rome, where meeting with Ottomanus, the Cardinal and Biſhop of Hoſtia, he did complain greatly of the filthy Simony of the Pope and the Popes Court, for receiving ſeven hundred Marks for Conſecrating the Biſhop Cenomanenſis; alſo a thouſand and five hundred Marks of William the Biſhop of Ely for his office Legantine; and likewiſe an infinite ſumm of mony of the Biſhop of Burdeaux, for acquitting him when he ſhould be depoſed for a certain crime laid to his charge by his Clergy, &c.

K. Richard departeth from Marſilia.

The ſeventh day of Auguſt, in the year aforeſaid, King Richard departed out of Marſilia, after he had there waited ſeven days for his Navy, which came not, and ſo hiring twenty Gallies, and ten great Barks, to ſhip over his Men, ſailed by the Sea Coaſt of Italy, and came to Naples, and ſo partly by Horſe and Wagon, partly by the Sea paſſing to Faleruum, he came to Calabria; where after that he had heard his Ships were arrived at Meſſana in Sicilia, he made the more ſpeed; and ſo the three and twentieth of September ſent to Meſſana, with ſuch a noiſe of Trumpets and Shalmes, with ſuch a rout and ſhew, that it was to the great wonderment and terror both of the Frenchmen, and all others that did hear and behold the fight.

The Kings Ships arrive at Meſſana.

The coming of K. Rich. to Meſſana.

The French K. lodged in Meſſana.

To the ſaid Town of Meſſana the French King was come before the ſixteenth day of the ſame Month of September, and had taken up the Palace of Tancredus King of Sicilia for his lodging. To whom King Richard after his arrival, eſſoons reſorted; and when the two Kings had communed together, immediately the ſame day the French King took ſhipping, and entred the Seas, thinking to ſail toward the Land of Jeruſalem. But after he was out of the Haven, the Wind ariſing contrary againſt him, returned him back again to Meſſana. Then King Richard (whoſe lodging was prepard in the Suburbs without the City) after he had reſorted again, and talked with the French King, and alſo had ſent to Tancredus King of Sicilia, for deliverance of Joan his Siſter (who had been ſometimes Queen of Sicilia) and had obtained her to be ſent unto him, the laſt day of September paſſed over the ſtoud of Delfar, and there getting a ſtrong Hold called de la Bagmare, or le Bamre, and placing therein his Siſter, with a ſufficient Garriſon, he returneth home again to Meſſana. The ſecond of October King Richard wan another certain ſtrong Hold, called Monaſterium Griffonum, ſituated in the midſt of the River of Delfar, between Meſſana and Calabria; from whence the Monks being expulſed, he repoſed there all his Store and Proviſion of Victuals, which came from England, or other places.

The French K. and King Richard departed from Meſſana.

K. Richard gotten the Monaſtery of Griffons.

The Citizens of Meſſana, ſeeing that the King of England had won the Caſtle and Iſland in de la Bagmare, and alſo the Monaſtery of the Griffons, and doubting leſt the King would extend his power further to invade their City, and if he could, all the whole Iſle of Sicilia, began to ſtir againſt the Kings Army, and to ſhut the Engliſhmen out of the Gates, and keep their Walls againſt them. The Engliſhmen ſeeing that, made to the Gates, and by force would have broken them open; informed that the King riding among them with his ſtaff, and breaking divers of their heads, could not aſſwage their fierceneſs; ſuch was the rage of the Engliſhmen againſt the Citizens of Meſſana. The King, ſeeing the fury of the People to be ſuch as he could not ſtay them, took Boat, and went to the Palace of King Tancred, to talk of the matter with the French King. In which time the matter was ſo taken up by the wiſe handling of the ancient of the City, that both parties laying down their Armour went home in peace.

The King could not ſtay the rage of the People.

The fourth day of the ſaid Month of October, came to King Richard the Archbiſhop of Meſſana, with two other Archbiſhops, alſo with the French King, and ſundry other Earls, Barons and Biſhops, for intreatance of peace. Who, as they were together conſulting, and had almoſt concluded upon the peace, the Citizens of Meſſana iſſuing out of the Town, ſome went up upon the Mountains, ſome with open force invaded the Manſion or Lodging of Hugh Bran an Engliſh Captain. The noiſe whereof coming to the ears of the King, he, ſuddenly breaking off talk with the French King and the reſt, departed from them, and coming to his men, commanded them forthwith to arm themſelves; who then with certain of his Souldiers, making up to the top of a Mountain (which ſeemed to paſs their power to climb) there put the Citizens to flight, chaſing them down the Mountain, unto the very Gates of the City; whom alſo certain of the Kings ſervants purſued within the City, of whom five valiant Souldiers, and twenty of the Kings ſervants were ſlain, the French King looking on, and not once willing to reſcue them, contrary unto his Oath and League before made with the King of Engliand. For the ſaid French King with his Men, being there preſent, rode in the midſt of them ſafely and without harm to and fro, and might well have eaſed the Kings party more than he, if it had ſo liked him.

This being known to the Engliſh Hoſt, how their fellows were ſlain, and the Frenchmen permitted in the City, and that they were excluded, and the Gates barred againſt them, being alſo ſtopped from buying of Victuals and other things; they upon great indignation, gathered themſelves in Arms, braſt open the Gates, and ſcaled the Walls, and ſo, winning the City, ſet up their Flags, with the Engliſh Arms. Which when the French King did ſee, he was mightily offended; requiring the King of England, that the Arms of France might alſo be ſet up and joyned with his; but King Richard to that in no caſe would agree. Notwithſtanding, to ſatisfie his mind, he was well contented to take down his Arms, and commit the cuſtody of the City to the Hoſpetalares and Templars of Jeruſalem, till the time that Tancred King of Sicilia and he, ſhould agree together upon conditions.

Engliſhmen ſet up the Arms of Meſſana.

These things being done the fifth and ſixth day of October, it followed then upon the eighth day of the ſame Month of October, that peace among the Kings was concluded. In which peace firſt King Richard and Philip the French King renewed again their Oath and League before made, concerning their mutual aid and ſociety, during all the time of that Peregrination. Secondly, peace alſo was concluded between King Richard and Tancred King of Sicilia aforeſaid, with this condition, That the Daughter of Tancred (in caſe King Richard ſhould die without iſſue) ſhould marry to Arthur Duke of Britain, the Kings Nephew and next heir to this Crown, &c. Whereof a formal Chart was drawn, and Letters ſent thereof to Pope Clement, being dated the ninth day of November.

Peace concluded between King Richard and Tancred K. of Sicilia.

In this mean time as theſe two Kings of France and England were thus wintring at Meſſana, Frederick Emperor, firſt of that name (the ſame on whoſe neck Pope Alexander did tread in the Church of Venice, laying the verſe of the Pſalm, Super Aſpidem & Baſiliſcum ambulabis, &c. whereof read before) and his Son Conradus, with a mighty Army of Almans and others, were coming up likewiſe toward the land of Jeruſalem to the ſiege of Acheu; where by the way the good Emperor through a great miſchance, falling off his horſe into a river called Saleſ, was therein drowned. After whoſe deceaſe Conradus his Son taking the Government of his Army, came to the ſiege of Acheu; in which ſiege alſo he died. Upon whoſe coming ſuch a dearth followed in the Camp, which laſted two months, that a loaf of bread, which before their coming was ſold for one peny, was afterward ſold for three pounds, by reaſon whereof many Chriſtian Soldiers did there periſh through famine. The chiefeſt food which the Princes there had to feed upon was horſe-fleſh. This famine being ſo miſerable, ſome good Biſhops there were in the Camp, namely Hubert Biſhop of Salisbury, with certain other good Biſhops, who making a general Collection through the whole Camp for the poor, made ſuch a proviſion that in this penury of all things, yet no man was ſo deſtitute and needy, but ſomewhat he had for his relief; till within a few days after by the merciful Providence of God (who is the feeder of all Creatures) Ships came unto them with abundance of Corn, Wine, and Oyl.

The ſiege of Acheu endured a long ſeaſon, which as it was mightily oppugned by the Chriſtians, ſo it was ſtrongly defended by the Saracens, ſpecially by the help of wild-fire, which the Latins call Gracum ignem, ſo that great ſlaughter there was on both ſides. During the time of which ſiege, many Noble Perſonages, and alſo Biſhops died, among whom was Conradus the Emperors Son, Radulph Earl of Fougiers, the Earl of Pericio, Robert Earl of Leiceſter, Baldwin Archbiſhop of Canterbury, with four Archbiſhops, and divers other Biſhops, Abbots, Earls, and alſo Barons, to the number of four and thirty, and not ſo few. All this while King Richard, and King Philip of France ſtill kept at Meſſana in Sicilia, from the month of September till April, for lack (I ſuppoſe) of wind or weather, or elſe for neceſſity of repairing their Ships. In which mean time King Richard hearing of Joachim Abbot of Curacio, a learned man in Calabria (who was then thought to have the ſpirit of Propheſie, and told many things of a people that ſhould come) ſent for him, with whom he and his Biſhops had much conference about the coming and time of Antichriſt. This Joachim beſike in his Book and Revelations uttered ſome things againſt the See and pride of Rome, for the which he was leſs favoured of the Popes, and judged an enemy to their See, and ſo by Pope Innocent the Third was condemned with his Books for an Heretick, in his Idolatrous General Council of Lateran, Ann. 1215, as ye may read in Antoninus.

That done he ſent unto Clement and his Cardinals, promiſing in all things to confirm the Laws and Dignities of the Church of Rome, if they would grant him their aſſent to be Emperor. Whereupon Pope Clement by advice of the Romans, aſſigned him the term of Eaſter in the next year inſuing for his Coronation. But before the Eaſter came, Pope Clement died, after he had ſit three years, and about four months; after whom ſucceeded Celeſtinus the Third, of whom more hereafter, God willing.

Anno 1191.

The time thus paſſing over in the month of February, the next year following, which was of the Lord 1191, King Richard ſent over his Gallies to Naples, there to meet his Mother Elenor, and Berengaria the Daughter of Sanchius King of Navar, whom he was purpoſed to marry. Who by that time were come to Brundiſium, under the conduct of Philip Earl of Flanders, and ſo proceeding unto Naples, there found the Kings Ships, wherein they ſailed to Meſſana. In this mean ſpace King Richard ſhewed himſelf exceeding bounteous and liberal unto all men. To the French King firſt he gave divers Ships; upon others likewiſe he beſtowed rich rewards; and of his goods and treaſure he diſtributed largely unto his Souldiers and ſervants about him. Of whom it was reported that he diſtributed more in one month, than ever any of his Predeceſſors did in a whole year; by reaſon whereof he purchaſed great love and favour, which not only redounded to the advancement of his fame, but alſo to his ſingular uſe and profit, as the ſequel afterward proved.

The boountiful liberality of King Richard.

To proceed then in the progreſs of King Richard, it followeth: In the firſt day of the month of March, he leaving the City of Meſſana, where the French King was, went to Cathaniſenſium, a City where Tancredus King of Sicilia then lay, where he was honourably received, and there remained with King Tancredus three days and three nights. On the fourth day when he ſhould depart the forſaid Tancredus offered him many rich Preſents in Gold and Silver, and precious Silks; whereof King Richard would receive nothing, but one little Ring for a token of his good will. For the which King Richard again gave him a rich ſword. At length when King Richard ſhould take his leave, King Tancredus would not ſo let him part, but needs would give him four great Ships, and fifteen Gallies; and furthermore, he himſelf would needs accompany him the ſpace of two days journey to a place called Tavernium.

The honorable entertainment of K. Richard by Tancredus.

Then the next morning when they ſhould take their leave, Tancredus declared unto him the meſſage which the French King a little before had ſent unto him by the Duke of Burgundy, the Contents whereof was this: That the King of England was a falſe Traytor, and would never keep the peace that was between them. And if the ſaid Tancredus would war againſt him, or ſecretly by night invade him, he with all his power would aſſiſt him, and joyn with him to the deſtruction of him and all his Army, &c. To whom Richard the King proteſted again, that he was no Traytor, nor ever was; and as touching the peace begon between them, the ſame ſhould never be broken through him; neither could he believe that the French King, being his good Lord and his ſworn compartner in that Voyage, would utter any ſuch words by him. Which when Tancredus heard, he bringeth forth the Letters of the French King ſent to him by the Duke of Burgundy; affirming moreover, that if the Duke of Burgundy would deny the bringing of the ſaid Letters, he was ready to try with him by any of his Dukes. King Richard receiving the Letters, and muſing not a little upon the ſame, returneth again to Meſſana. The ſame day that King Richard departed, the French King cometh to Tavernium to ſpeak with Tancredus, and there abode with him that night, and on the morrow returned to Meſſana again.

A faithful part of Tancredus K. of Sicilia towards K. Richard.

From that ſame time King Richard moved in ſtomack againſt King Philip, never ſhewed any gentle countenance of peace and amity, as he before was wont. Whereat the French King greatly marvelling, and inquiring earneſtly what ſhould be the cauſe thereof, word was ſent him again by Philip Earl of Flanders, what words he had ſent to the King of Sicilia; and for the teſtimony thereof the Letters were hewed which he wrote by the Duke of Burgundy to the King of Sicilia. Which when the French King underſtood, firſt he held his peace, as guilty in his conſcience, not knowing well what to anſwer. At length turning his tale to another matter, he began to quarrel with King Richard, pretending as though he ſought cauſes to break with him, and to malign him, and therefore he forged theſe lyes (ſaid he) upon him, and all becauſe he by that means would void to marry with Alice his Siſter, according as he had promiſed: adding moreover, that if he would ſo do, and would not marry the faid Alice his Sister, according to his Oath, but would marry another, he would be an enemy to him and his while he lived.

To this King Richard said again, that he could by no means marry that Woman, forsomuch as his Father had carnal copulation with her, and also had by her a Son: for proof whereof he had there presently to bring forth divers and sundry witnesses to the Kings face, to testifie with him. In conclution, through counsel and perswasion of divers about the French King, agreement at last was made; so that King Philip did acquit King Richard from his bond of marrying his sister; and King Richard again should be bound to pay to him every year, for the space of five years, two thousand Marks, with certain other conditions besides, not greatly material in this place to be deciphered. Thus peace being between them concluded, the eight and twentieth day of the said month of March, the French King lanching out of the Haven of Messana, on the two and twentieth day after in Easter Week came with his Army to the Siege of Achon.

The French K. cometh to Achon.

Berengaria, or as some do call her Regera daughter to the K. of Navar brought to be married to K. Rich.

After the departure of the French King from Messana (King Richard with his Army yet remaining behind) arrived Queen Elenor the Kings Mother, bringing with her Berengera the King of Navar's Daughter, to be espoused to King Richard. Which done, Elenor, leaving Berengera behind her, departed, taking her journey toward Rome, to intreat the Pope for Gaufridus her other Son above mentioned, to be consecrated in the Archbishoprick of York, being before elected by the procurement of King Richard his Brother, as ye heard. In which time, as Queen Elenor was travelling toward Rome, Pope Clement above mentioned, died about the sixth day of April, in whose room succeeded Pope Celestinus the third. Who the next day after his Consecration came from Laterans to Saint Peter's Church, where in the way meeteth him Henricus the Emperor, and Constantia his Wife, with a great rout of armed Souldiers; but the Romans making fast their Gates would not suffer them to enter their City. Then Pope Celestine, standing upon the Stairs before the Church door of St. Peter, received an Oath of the said Henricus King of the Almains, (his Army waiting without) that he should defend the Church of God, and all the liberties thereof, and maintain justice; also that he should restore again the patrimony of S. Peter full and whole, whatsoever hath been diminished thereof; and finally, That he should surrender to the Church of Rome again the City of Tusculanum, &c. Upon these conditions and grants, then the Pope took him to the Church, and there anointed him for Emperor, and his Wife for Empress; who, there sitting in his Chair Pontifical, held the Crown of Gold between his feet, and so the Emperor, bowing down his head to the Popes feet, received the Crown, and in like manner the Empress also. The Crown thus being set upon the Emperors head, the Pope ctsoons with his foot struck it off again from his head unto the ground, declaring thereby that he had power to depose him again, in case he so deserved. Then the Cardinals taking up the Crown, set it upon his head again. *Ex veteri Chronico manuscripto anonymo, de gestis Richardi Regis, cui initium: Anno gratiæ, &c. Nor long after the departure of King Philip from Messana, which was in the Month of March, King Richard in April following, about the twentieth day of the said Month, sayling from the Haven of Messana with an hundred and fifty great Ships, and three and fifty great Gallies well manned and appointed, took journey towards Achon; who being upon the Seas on Good-friday, about the ninth hour rose a mighty South wind with a Tempest, which dispersed and scattered all his Navy, some to one place, and some to another. The King with a few Ships, was driven to the Isle of Creta, and there before the Haven of Rhodes cast Anchor. The Ship that carried the Kings Sister Queen of Sicilia, and Berengera the King of Navar's Daughter, with two other Ships, were driven to the Isle of Cyprus. The King making great moan for the Ship of his Sister, and Berengera his Wife that should be, not knowing where they were become, after the Tempest was overblown, sent forth his Gallies diligently to search the rest of his Navy dispersed, but especially for the Ship wherein his Sister was, and the Maiden whom he should marry; who at length were found safe and merry at the Port of Limsezem in the Isle of Cyprus. Notwithstanding the two other Ships, which were in their company before in the same Haven, were drowned, with divers of the Kings servants, and Men of Worship, amongst whom was M. Roger, called Malus Catulus, the Kings Vice-chancellor, who was found having the Kings Seal hanging about his Neck. The King of Cyprus was then Isakius (called also the Emperor of the Griffons) who took and imprisoned all Englishmen which by Shipwrack were cast upon his Land: also inveigling into his hands the goods and prizes of them which were found drowned about his Coasts, neither would suffer the Ship wherein the two Ladies were to enter within the Port.

K. Richard overtaken with a tempest on the Seas going to Achon.

Isakius K. peror of the cruel enemy to English.

The tidings of this being brought to King Richard, he in his great wrath, gathering his Gallies and Ships together, boarded the Land of Cyprus, where he first in gentle wise signifieth to King Isakius, how he with his Englishmen, coming as strangers to the supportation of the Holy Land, were by distress of Weather, driven upon his bounds; and therefore with all humble petition besought him in Gods behalf, and for reverence of the Holy-Cross, to let go such Prisoners of his which he had in Captivity, and to restore again the Goods of them which were drowned, which he detained in his hands, to be employed for the behoof of their souls, &c. And this the King, once, twice and thrice desired of the Emperor. But he, proudly answering again, sent the King word, that he would neither let the Captives go, nor render the Goods of them which were drowned, &c.

K. Richard maketh sute to the King of Cyprus for his Goods given him by tirany.

When King Richard heard this, how little the Emperor Isakius made of his so humble and honest petition, and how nothing there could be gotten without violent force; eftsoons he giveth commandment through all his Host, to put themselves in armour, and to follow him, to revenge such injuries received of that proud and cruel King of Cyprus; willing them to put their trust in God, and not to misdoubt but the Lord would stand with them, and give them the full Victory. The Emperor in the mean time, with his people, flood warding the Sea Coasts, where the Englishmen should arrive, with Swords, Bills and Launces, and such other Weapons as they had, setting Boards, Stakes and Chests before them instead of a Wall. Howbeit but few of them were harnessed, and for the most part all unexpert, and unskilful in the feats of War. Then King Richard with his Souldiers, issuing out of their Ships, first set his Bowmen before, who with their shot made a way for others to follow. The Englishmen, thus winning the land upon them, so fiercely prossed upon the Griffons, that after long fighting, and many blows, at last the Emperor was put to flight; whom King Richard valiantly pursued, and slew many, and divers he took alive, and had gone near also to have had the Emperor, had not the Night come on and parted the Battel. And thus King Richard with much spoil and great victory returning to the Port Town of Limsezem, which the Townsmen had left for fear, found there great abundance of Corn, Wine, Oyl and Victuals.

The Town of Limsezem taken by K. Richard.

The same day after the Victory got, Joan the Kings Sister, and Berengera the Maiden entred the Port and Town of Limsezem, with fifty great Ships, and fourteen Galliots; so that all the whole Navy, there meeting together, were two hundred fifty four tall Ships, and above threescore Galliots. Then Isakius the Emperor, seeing no way for him to escape by the Sea, the same Night pitched his Tents five Miles off from the English Army, swearing that the third day after he would sure give Battel to King Richard. But he preventing him before, suddenly, the same morning before the day of Battel should be, fetteth upon the Tents of the Griffons early, they being unawares and asleep, and made of them a great slaughter, insomuch that the Emperor was fain naked to run away, leaving his Tents and Pavilions to the Englishmen, full of Horses and rich Treasure, also with the Imperial Standard, the lower part whereof, with a coftly Streamer was covered and wrought all with Gold. King Richard then returning with Victory and Triumph to his Sister, and Berengera, shortly after in the Month of May next following, and the twelfth day of the same Month, married the said Berengera Daughter of Rancon King of Navar, in the Isle of Cyprus at Limsezem.

were drowned, also to restore all his Captives again to the King, and further more in his own person to attend upon the King to the Land of Jerusalem, in Gods service and his, with four hundred Horsmen, and five hundred Footmen: in pledge whereof he would give to his hands his Castles, and his only Daughter, and would hold his Kingdom of him. This done, and the Emperor swearing fidelity to King Richard, before Guido King of Jerusalem, and the Prince of Antioch (who were come thither to King Richard a little before) Peace was taken, and Isakius was committed to the Ward of certain Keepers. Notwithstanding shortly after he, breaking from his Keepers, was again at defiance with the King. Whereupon King Richard, besetting the Iland of Cyprus round about with Ships and Gallies, did in such fort prevail, that the Subjects of the Land were constrained to yield themselves to the King, and at length the Daughter also of the Emperor, and at last the Emperor himself, whom King Richard caused to be kept in Fetters of Silver and Gold, and to be sent to the City of Tripolis.

King of Cyprus again submitteth himself, and is kept in Golden Fetters.

These things thus done, and all set in order touching the possession of the Isle of Cyprus, the keeping whereof he committed unto Raduiph, Son of Godfrey, Lord Chamberlain, being then the first day of June; upon the fifth of the said month, King Richard departed from the Isle of Cyprus, with his Ships and Gallies towards the siege of Achon, and on the next morrow came unto Tyrus; where, by procurement of the French King, he was constrained by the Citizens to enter. The next day after, which was the sixth day of June, coasting the Seas, he met with a great Bark, fraught with Soldiers and Men of War, to the number of one thousand and five hundred; which pretending to be French men, and setting forth their Flag with the French Arms, were indeed Saracens, secretly sent with wild-fire and certain Barrels of unknown Serpents, to the defence of the Town of Achon. Which King Richard at length perceiving, eftsoons set upon them, and so vanquished them, of whom the most were drowned, and some taken alive. Which being once known in the City of Achon, as it was a great discomfort unto them, so it was a great help unto the Christians for winning the City. The next day after, which was the fourth of June, King Richard came to Achon, which at that time had been long besieged of the Christians; after whole coming it was not long, but the Pagans within the City seeing their Walls to be undermined, and Towers overthrown, were driven by compolition to escape with life and limb, to surrender the City unto the two Kings. Another great help to the Christians in winning the City was this: In the said City of Achon there was a secret Christian among the Saracens, who in time of the siege there, used at sundry times to cast over the Walls, into the Camp of the Christians, certain Bills written in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, wherein he disclosed unto the Christians, from time to time, the doings and counsels of the Enemies, Advertising them how and by what way they should work, and what to bewave: and always his Letters began thus: In nomine Patris, & Filii, & Spiritus Sancti, Amen. By reason whereof, the Christians were much advantaged in their proceedings. But this was a great heavines unto them, that neither he would utter his name, nor when the City was got, could they ever understand who he was. Ex Chronico manuscripto, de gestis Richardi.

To make of a long Siege a short Narration, upon the twelfth day of July in the year aforesaid, the Princes and Captains of the Pagans, upon agreement, reforted unto the Tent of the Templars, to commune with the two Kings; touching Peace and giving up of their City: the form of which Peace was thus: That the Kings should have the City of Achon freely and fully delivered unto them, with all which was within: and five hundred Captives of the Christians should be restored unto them, which were in Achon; also the holy Cross should be to them rendred, and a thousand Christian Captives, with two hundred Horsmen, whosoever they themselves would chuse out of all them which were in the power of Saladine; over and besides they should give to the Kings, two hundred thousand Bisants, so that they themselves would remain as pledges in the Kings hands for the performance hereof; that if in forty days these foresaid Covenants were not accomplished, they would abide the Kings mercy touching life and limb. These Covenants being agreed upon, the Kings sent their Soldiers and Servants unto the City, to take one hundred of the richest and best of the City, to close them up in Towers under strong keeping, and the residue they committed to be kept in Houses and Streets, minishing unto them according to their necessities: to whom notwithstanding this they permitted, that so many of them as would be Baptized, and receive the Faith of Christ, should be free to go whither they would. Whereupon many there were of the Pagans, which for fear of Death pretended to be Baptized; but afterward, so soon as they could, revolted again to the Saladine. For the which it was afterwards commanded by the Kings, that none of them should be Baptized against their wills.

The K. of Cyprus his gift to King Richard.

The twentieth day of July, King Richard, speaking with the French King, desired him that they two with their Armies would bind themselves by Oath to remain there still in the Land of Jerusalem the space of three years, for the winning and recovering again of those Countries. But he would swear (he said) no such Oath: and so the next day after, King Richard with his Wife and Sister entreth into the City of Achon, and placed there himself in the Kings Palace, the French King remaining in the Houses of the Templars, where he continued till the end of the Month. So about the beginning of the month of August, Philip the French King, after that he and King Richard had made agreement between Guido and Conradus the Marquess, about the Kingdom of Jerusalem, went from Achon to Tyrus; notwithstanding King Richard and all the Princes of the Christian Army with great intreaty desired him to tarry; shewing what a shame it were for him to come so far, and now to leave undone that for which he came; and on the third of August from Tyrus he departed, leaving his half part of the City of Achon in the hands of the foresaid Conradus, Marquess. After whose departure the Pagans refused to keep their Covenants made; who neither would restore the holy Cross, nor the Mony, nor their Captives; sending word to King Richard, that if he beheaded the pledges left with him at Achon, they would chop off the heads of such Captives of the Christians, which were in their hands. Shortly after this, the Saladine, sending great gifts to King Richard, requested the times limited for beheading of the Captives to be Prorogued; but the King refused to take his gifts, and to grant his requeil. Whereupon the Saladine caused all the Christian Captives within his possession forthwith to be beheaded, which was the eighteenth day of August. Which albeit King Richard understood, yet would not he prevent the time afore limited for the Execution of his Prisoners, being the twentieth of August. Upon which day he caused the Prisoners of the Saracens, openly in the sight of the Saladines Army, to lose their heads: the number of whom came to 2500, save only that certain of the principal of them he referred for purposes and considerations, especially to make exchange for the holy Cross, and certain others of the Christian Captives.

After this, King Richard purposed to besiege the City of Joppe; where, by the way between Achon and Joppe, near to a Town called Assur, Saladine with a great multitude of his Saracens came fiercely against the Kings rearward: but through Gods Merciful Grace, in the same Battel the Kings Warriors acquitted them so well, that the Saladine was put to flight (whom the Christians pursued the space of three Miles) and left the same day many of his Nobles and Captives, in such sort (as it was thought) that the Saladine was not put to such confusion forty years before: and but one Christian Captain, called James Avernus, in that conflict was overthrown. From thence King Richard, proceeding further, went to Joppe, and then to Ascalon, where he found first the City of Joppe forsaken of the Saracens, who durst not abide the Kings coming. Ascalon the Saladine threw down to the ground, and likewise forsook the whole Land of Syria; through all which Land the King had free passage without resistance, neither durst the Saracen Prince incounter after that with King Richard. Of all which his atchievances the said King Richard sent his Letters of Certificate as well into England, as also to the Abbot of Clara Valle in France; well hoping that he (God willing) should be able to make his repair again to them by Easter next.

A brief Story of William Bishop of Ely, the Kings Chancellor.

The story of William the proud Bishop of Ely.

AND now to leave King Richard a while in the field, let us make a step into England, and look a little what is done at home while the King was abroad, and so return to the King again. Ye heard before how King Richard, at his setting forth, committed the Government of the Realm to Hugo Bishop of Durham, and to William Bishop of Ely, so that to the Bishop of Durham was committed the keeping of the Castle of Windsor. The other, which was the Bishop of Ely, had the keeping of the Tower of London, about which he caused a great Ditch with a Rampire to be cast, which is yet remaining. Furthermore, to these two Bishops the King also affigned four other Chief Justices, which joyntly with them should have the hearing and oversight of all causes, as well to the Clergy as to the Laity appertaining: to wit, Hugh Bardolfe, William Marshal, Geofrey Peterson, and William Brewer. But the Bishop of Ely was the principal, or at least he that took most upon him: who both was the Kings Chancellor, and bought with his money to be the Popes Legate through England, Ireland, and Scotland, as is before specified. Touching the excessive pride and pomp of which Bishop his ruffings outragious, and fall most shameful, it would make a long Tragedy to discourse the whole circumstances at full: only to demonstrate certain specialities thereof for our present purpose, it may suffice.

Ut juste judicarent celestia, terrena & pessima, verba hist.

Four Chief Justices with two Bishops appointed overseers of the Realm in the Kings absence.

William Longchamp Bishop of Ely, Lord Chancellor and the Popes Legate.

First, This William called Longchamp, being thus advanced by the King to be his High Chancellor, and Chief Justice of the Realm, and also the Popes Legate, to shew abroad the authority of his Legateship, began to suspend the Canons, Clerks, and Vicars of the Church of S. Peter in York, because they received him not with procession: under which interdiction he held them, till they were fain at last both Canons, Clerks and Vicars to fall down at his feet, cauling all their Bells to be let down out of the Steeple.

The Church and Bells of York suspended, because the Lord Legate was not met in with procession.

After this cometh Hugo Bishop of Durham, whom the King sent home out of Normandy with his Letters; who, meeting with the aforesaid William Bishop of Ely in the Town of Ely, shewed him the Kings Letters, wherein was granted to him the keeping of Windsor Castle, and to be the Kings Justice from the River of Humber to the borders of Scotland. To the which Letters the Chancellor answered, That the Kings commandment should be done, and so brought him with him to Swavel; where he took him and kept him fast, till he was forced at last to surrender to him the Castle of Windsor, and other things which the King had committed to his custody; and moreover he was constrained to leave with the said Chancellor, Henry de Puteaco his own Son, and Gilbert Leie, for Pledges and Hostages of his fidelity, to be true to the King and Realm. And thus the bishop of Durham, being set at liberty, went to his Town of Hoveden; where after he had made his abode a few days, cometh thither Osbert Longchamp the Chancellors Brother, and William Stutivil, with a great Company of Armed Men sent by the Chancellor to apprehend him. But the said Bishop of Durham, putting in Sureties not to depart that Town without licence of the King and of the Chancellor, there still remained till he got Letters to be sent to the King, signifying how he was used. Whereupon the King writing his Letters from Marsilia to the Bishop of Ely, set the said Bishop of Durham free, and confirmed to him all the Possessions and Grants that he before had given him.

Bishop of Ely spreth the Castle of Windsor from the Bishop of Durham. Hugo Bishop of Durham served William Bishop of Ely.

It is almost incredible to think how intemperately this Bishop and Chancellor misused himself, after the Kings departure into Syria, in excess of pride, and in cruel exactions and oppressions of the Kings Subjects. First his fellow Justices, whom the King joined with him for Government of the Realm, he utterly rejected and refused to hear their counsel, repating none to be equal with him in all the Realm. Neither was he contented with the authority of a Prelate, but played both King and Priest in the Realm. All Castles, Lordships, Abbies, Churches, and all other Appropriations belonging to the right of the King, he claimed to himself. And by vertue of his Legateship, when he came to any Bishops House, Abby, Priory, or any other Religious House, he brought with him such a superfluity of Men, Horses, Dogs, and Hawks, that the House was the worse for it three years after. For commonly he rode never under 1500 Horses, of Chaplains, Priests, and other Serving-men waiting upon him. From the Clergy and Laity he took away their Churches, their Vowsons, their livings and lands, to bestow upon his Nephews and other waiting Chaplains to serve his vain glory; or else converted them to his own use, to maintain his pomp and vanity. In getting and gathering of Treasures he had no measure; in mis-pending the same he kept no order. And that no vice should be wanting where such avarice taketh root, the money, which he wrongfully got, he committed to the Bank to be increased by usury. What wantonness and lasciviousness was used in that so riotous life, the stories do shame to declare it. All ruffianly Runagates, idle bellies, and light persons, whereso ever he went, hanged upon his Court. To increase the vain jollity of this Royal Prelate, there was lacking no kind of musical instruments and melodious noise, to refresh belike his wearied senses, too much beaten and macerated with continual labor and study of Hunting, Hawking and Gaming; of Preaching and Reading I should have said.

The excessive pride and extortion of William Bishop of Ely.

Bishop of Ely never rode under 1500 Horse.

His Vanity.

His Usury.

His riotous and dissolute life.

Briefly, this foresaid Prelate, bearing the authority both of the King and of the Pope, kept such a stir in England, that the whole Realm was at his beck, with Cap and Knee crouching to him; neither durst any Man, rich or poor displease him, yea none in all the Realm so noble or worshipful, but was glad to please him, accounting themselves happy if they might stand in his favor. At his Table all Noble-mens Children did serve and wait upon him, with whom he coupled in Marriages his Niece and Kinswomen. And when any, that stood waiting before him, durst once cast up his eyes, or did not demurely look downward upon the ground, he had a staff in his hand with a prick, wherewith he used to prick them; learning, belike, by the Carter his Father, which used at the Plough or Cart to drive his Oxen. Furthermore, as Kings use to have their Guard about them, so he because he would not also be unguarded, refusing Men of the English Nation, had his Waiters and Warders most of Frenchmen and Flemmings.

William Bishop of Ely guarded with French men and Flemings.

Geofrey Archbishop of York delivered out of prison by command-ment of Earl John his Brother.

It hapned after this, in the year 1191. that a great difcord rose between John Earl of Morton the Kings Brother, with other States of the Realm, and the said William Bishop of Ely; so that universally they all wrote over to the King concerning the misgovernment and enormities of the said Bishop. Who, understanding of the case, sent from Messana into England, Walter Archbishop of Rome, and William Marshal Earl, unto the Bishop of Ely with Letters, commanding him that in all his doings he should affociate unto him the Archbishop of Rone, William Marshal, Geofrey Peterson, William Bruer, and Hugo Bardolf above mentioned. Who when they came into England, durst not deliver their Letters, dreading the displeasure of the Chancellor, for he despised all the commandments of the King, nor would suffer any fellow to joyn with him in his Kingdom.

Agreement compleat to the King of William Bishop of Ely.

A skirmish between the servants of the Bishop of Ely, and the servants of Earl John.

Hitherto have you heard of the glorious vanity of this Lordly Legate and Chancellor of the Realm: now ye shall hear of his shameful fall, after his shameless exaltation. For shortly after this followeth an other breach between the said Earl John the Kings Brother and him, about the besieging of the Castle of Lincoln. Concerning the which Castle the said John sent him word, that unless he raised his Siege the sooner from thence, he would send him away by force of sword. The Bishop, either not able to make his party good, or not daring to resist, thought best to fall to some composition with the Earl, and so did. In which composition, composition, he was contented against his will, by mediation of divers Bishops and others, to make surrender not only of the Castle of Lincoln, but also of Nottingham, of Tickhil, Wallingford, and many more, which were then committed to the custody of sundry Men of worship and honour. And thus was that Controversie agreed, wherein the Bishop of Ely began a little to be cut shorter.

If followed then not long after in the same years, that another like business began to kindle between Geofrey the Archbishop of York the Kings Brother, and the aforesaid glorious Bishop of Ely upon this occasion. Ye heard before how the King, at his setting out, left order that Earl John and Geofrey his Brethren should not enter into the Realm the space of three years after his departure (howbeit his Brother John was shortly after released of that bond) and also after that, how King Richard, being at Messana, sent his Mother Elenor to the Pope for his Brother Geofrey (elected before to the Sea of York) to be Consecrated Archbishop. Whereupon the said Geofrey being Consecrated through licence of Pope Celestine by the Archbishop of Tarons; the said Geofrey, effoons after his Consecration, deferred no time, but would needs come into England. Whereof the Bishop of Ely having intelligence, sent him word being at Wisland in Flanders, not to presume to adventure into the Realm, contrary to his oath made to King Richard before; commanding moreover, that if he came, he should be apprehended. All which notwithstanding, the Archbishop letted not for all that, but needs would repair to his See, and so arrived at Dover in the month of September, where the Chancellors Men stood on the Sea side to apprehend him; but he by changing his Apparel, and swittneſs of his Horſe, escaped their hands, and came to the Monks House of Dover: But the Chancellors Men, whom he sent to take him, befet the Church of the Monks round about, so that in no wise he cold avoid their hands.

Another broil between the Archbishop of York and the Kings Brother.

To make the story short: as the Archbishop on a day, when he had said Mass, was standing at the Altar, with his Garments yet about him, the rude Souldiers having little good manners, and less devotion, spared not boldly to rush into the Church, and there laid hands upon the Archbishop as he stood; took him, bound him, and dragged him through dirt and mire, and (as we use to say) through thick and thin, and so committed him to Matthew Clark their Constable to be kept: whereat the people greatly disdained, seeing him that was a Kings Son, and the Brother of a King, so to be intreated: The hearing whereof, when it came to the ears of Earl John his Brother, he being not a little offended therewith, sent to know of the Chancellor, whether this was his doing or not. To whom when the Chancellor sent answer again, and stoutly confessed the fact to be his; then the Earl sent commandment that his Brother should be delivered, and so he was. Who, then coming to London, made his complaint to the Earl his Brother, and to other Nobles of the Realm of the injuries done to him by the Chancellor. Whereupon the Earl sent for the foresaid Chancellor, and appointed a day peremptory for him to appear before the whole body of the Council, to make answer to such Injuries as he had done, both to the Archbishop of York, and also to the Bishop of Durham above mentioned. But the Chancellor, driving off the time with delays, would neither come nor send. Then the Earl, with the Bishops about him, made their journey towards London, to have the matter there handled in a great audience.

The Chancellor seeing that, withdrew himself from Windsor to the City of London, where by the way it happned that the servants of the Earl and of the Chancellor meeting, did skirmish together. In which fray one of the Earls Family was slain, but yet his Men had the better: and the Chancellor with his Men were put to flight, and so fled to the Tower, where they did hide themselves. The next day after (which was about the twelfth day of October) Earl John the Kings Brother, and the Archbishop of Rone, with all the Bishops, Earls and Barons, and Citizens of London Assembled together in Pauls Church; where many and great accusations were laid against the said Chancellor; so that in fine it was agreed in that Assembly, That the said Chancellor should be deposed; and in his place was substituted the Archbishop of Rone, according to the tenor of the Kings Letters sent from Messana; which was, That certain other persons should be associated with the Chancellor for the Government of the Realm; by wose Counsel if he would not be directed, the Archbishop of Rone should be set in his place, and he to be deposed. The third day after this, the Chancellor firmly promised not to depart out of the Realm before he had delivered out of his hands all such Castles, the keeping whereof he committed to certain Foreigners and strangers: and for assurance thereof he gave his two Brethren and Chamberlain for Pledges, and so went to Canterbury; where he said he would take the Cross of a Pilgrim, and leave the Cross of his Legateship.

The Bishop of Ely chancellor of the Realm and Legate, deposed.

The Bishop of Ely resigneth his Castles.

Now when he was come to the Castle of Dover, and there had remained a few days, contrary to his promise made, his purpose was to take Ship, and to pass over the Seas. And because he durst not do it openly, he devised a new kind of disguising, decking himself in the apparel of a Woman; and so, as gowty as he was, he went to the Sea side in his Womans weed, having in his hand a Meetyard, and on his arm a piece of linnen cloth. And thus as he was sitting upon a rock, waiting for his Ship to come and convey him over, a certain Fisher-man espying him, and supposing him to be an Harlot, came to him, and (as with shrugling with him, found him as he was indeed to be a Man, in likeness of a Woman: whereat he wondered and began to make an out-cry upon him. But the Bishops servants being not far off, came running and stilled him as well as they could.

The Bishop of Ely disguised himself in Womans Apparel.

A Fisherman taketh the Bishop of Ely to be a Woman.

The Fither-man then going to the next Village, and there belike declaring what he had seen, to try out the matter further, came out certain Women, who seeing the linnen cloth hanging on his arm, began to question with him of the price of his cloth, and what he would take for it: but to this he would answer never a word, but smiled upon them. Whereat they mufing with themselves, and whispering one with another, at last with their hands were so bold as to pluck down his muffler, and there by his beard new shaven found him indeed to be a Man; and so with a loud exclamation raised the Village upon him, and would have fallen upon him with stones. Then came running a great multitude both of Men and Women; who, wondering at him, as Birds are wont at an Owl, laid hands upon him, and pluckt him down to the ground, haling and drawing him by the sleeves and collar of his Gown through stones and rocks, whereby he was shrewdly hurt. His Servants once or twice made out to refcue their old Master, or new Mistris, but could not for the prese of the people; who, beating him with their fists, and spitting at him, drew him thorow the whole Town, and so with shame enough at length laid him in a dark Cellar instead of a prison, at whom all the Country about wondred and cryed out. In conclusion, Earl John, hearing thereof, within eight days after them set at liberty, and they should deliver him and let him go.

Set at liberty by Earl of Morton.

The Bishop, then set at liberty, failed over as he could to Flanders, where he had but cold welcoming: from thence he went to Paris, where he gave Mauricius their Bishop threescore Marks of silver to be received in with Procession, and so he was. Then returned he into Normandy. But the Archbishop of Rone there gave commandment that the Church doors should be locked, and no Service said so long as he there remained. The Bishop seeing that, directed his Letters and Messengers to Pope Celestine, and also to King Richard into Syria, signifying to them how John the Earl of Morton and his complices had handled him, and expulsed him out of the Realm: requiring that he might be restored again to that was taken from him, and also offering himself to be tryed by the Law for that he had done; so that if the King should dislike in any thing that he had done, he was ready to satisfie the Kings contentation in all things wherein justly he could be charged.

The Bishop refuseth to be received with Procession.

The Bishop complaineth to the King and Pope.

Upon this, Pope Celestine, inflamed with an Apostolical zeal in the behalf of the said Bishop of Ely his Legate, wrote a sharp and thundering Letter to the Archbishops, Bishops, and Prelates of England; commanding them by his Authority Apostolical, That forsomuch as the injuries done to his Legate, did redound to the contumely of the whole mother Church of Rome, they should not fail therefore, but with severe Censures of the Church, that is, with Book, Bell, and Candle, proceed as well against the said John Earl of Morton, as also all other whosoever had, or was royally received, and Truce concluded between him and the French King for a time. And thither came to him the Earl of Flanders, and all other Lords of France that were of King Richard's band and friendship, and were Sworn unto him.

Arthur of Britain.

Not long after this, Philip the French King made Arthur Knight, and took his Homage for Normandy, Britain, and all other his possessions beyond the Sea, and promised him help against King John. After this, King John and the French King talked together with their Lords about one hours space; and the French King asked so much Land for himself and Knight Arthur, that King John would grant him none, and so he departed in wrath.

A communication between the King of England and the French King.

The same Year a Legate came into France, and commanded the King, in pain of interdiction, to deliver one Peter out of Prison, that was elect to a Bishoprick; and thereupon he was delivered.

And after that the Legate came into England, and commanded King John, under pain of interdiction, to deliver the Archbishop whom he had kept as Prisoner two Years; which the King denied to do, till he had paid him six thousand Marks; because he took him in harness in a Field against him, and Sware him upon his deliverance, That he should never wear Harness against any Christian man.

This time Divorce was made between King John and his Wife, Daughter of the Earl of Glocester, because they were in the third degree of kindred. And after, by the counsel of the French King, King John wedded Isabel, Daughter of the Earl of Anguilla: and then Arthur of Britain did homage to King John for Britain and others.

Marriage in the third degree forbidden by the Pope.

{ Anno 1200 } At this time fell strife between King John and Geffery the Archbishop of York, for divers causes: first, because he would not suffer and permit the Sheriff of York, in such affairs as he had to do for the King within his Diocese. Secondly, because he did also excommunicate the said Sheriff. Thirdly, because he would not fail with him into Normandy, to make the Marriage between Lewis the French Kings Son, and his Neece, &c.

{ Anno 1202 } After this, in the Year of our Lord 1202, Philip the French King (in a communication between King John and him) required that the said King John should part with all his Lands in Normandy and Pictavia which he had beyond the Sea, unto Arthur his Nephew, and that incontinent, or else he would War against him; and so he did. For when King John denied that request, the next day following, the French King, with the said Arthur, set upon certain of his Towns and Castles in Normandy, and put him to much disquietnes. But he (the Lord so providing, which is the giver of all victory) had such repulse at the English mens hands, that they, pursuing the Frenchmen in their flight, did so follow them in their hold, and so inforced upon them, that not only they took the said Arthur Prisoner, with many other of the French men, but also gave such an overthrow to the rest, that none was there left to bear tidings home. This Arthur was Nephew to King John, and Son to Geffrey which was the elder Son to John. For King Henry the second (to make the matter more evident) had eight Children: one William, which died in his childhood; the second, Henry, which died also, his Father being yet alive; the third, Geffrey, Earl of Britain, which likewise deceased in his Fathers days, leaving behind him two Children, Arthur and Brecca; the fourth, Richard Coeur de lion, King; the fifth, John, now reigning; and three other Daughters besides. The same Arthur, being thus taken in War, was brought before the King, at the Castle of Falaise in Normandy; who, being exhorted with many gentle words to leave the French King, and to incline to his Uncle, answered again stoutly, and with great indignation; requiring the Kingdom of England, with all the other Dominions thereto belonging, to be restored to him, as to the Lawful Heir of the Crown. By reason whereof, he (provoking the Kings displeasure against him) was sent to the Tower of Rome, where at length (whether by leaping into the Ditch, thinking to make his escape, or whether by some other privy hand, or by what chance else it is not yet agreed upon in stories) he finished his life. By occasion whereof, the foresaid King John was had after in great suspition; whether justly or unjustly, the Lord knoweth.

Not Patents in vita Fœnis Regis.

Arthur.

The Year following, Historiographers write, That King John, for lack of refuse, lost all his Holds and Possessions in Normandy, through the force of the French King.

After these losses, came other troubles upon him, with others as great or more great enemies (that is, with the Pope and his popelings) by occasion of chusing of the Archbishop of Canterbury; as in this History following, by Christ his Grace is to be declared.

The Year of our Lord 1205, about the Month of July, Hubert the Archbishop of Canterbury deceased; whose decease after it was in Canterbury to the Monks known, and afore his Body was yet committed to the Earth; the younger fort of the Monks there gathered themselves together at midnight, and elected their superior Reginald, and without the Kings license, or any knowledge, privily placed him in the Metropolitical Seat, singing Te Deum at midnight. And because the King should not make their election void, they charged him by vertue of his Oath to keep all secret by the way, and to shew nothing what was done before he came to the Pope: but he contrary to his Oath, so soon as he came into Flanders, opened abroad all the matter, and uttered their counsel: whereupon the Monks, being not a little grieved with him, sent him privily unto the Court of Rome out of hand. The next day the elder Monks sent to the King, desiring him of his gracious license Canonically to chuse their Archbishop. The King most gently and favourably granted their Petition; requiring them instantly, and desiring that for his sake they would shew favour to John Gray, then Bishop of Norwich, as they did indeed, erecting him into that See of their high Primacie. Moreover, because the Authority of Kings and Princes was then but small in their own Dominion, without the Popes consent and confirmation to the same: he sent also to Rome of his own charges to have the foresaid election ratified by the Pope. The Suffragans of Canterbury then (being not a little offended at these two Elections) sent speedily to Rome to have them both stopped; for that they had not been of counsel with them. And hereupon at the last grew a most prodigious tumult.

{ Anno 1205 } Striving for the election of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

¶ In this Year the Clergy grew so unruly, that they neglected their Charge, and thereby incensed the Kings displeasure so fore against them, that he took order about the goods of such as in that case were faulty: as shall appear more manifestly by that which followeth.

A Letter of King John, touching the Lands and Goods of such Clerks as refuse to celebrate Divine Service.

Tertii Lod. Some think that Florilegium publicatis Feminensibus but false is rather thought to be meant thereby, for the Apostle.

R*Ex omnibus de Episcopatu Lincolniæ clericis & laicis, salutem. Sciatis quod a die lunæ proxime ante Floridum paschatis commisimus*, &c.

In English:

The King to all Clerks and Lay people within the Bishoprick of Lincoln, Greeting: Know ye that from Monday next before the Feast of Easter, we have committed to William of Cornhill, Archdeacon of Huntington, and to Joseline of Canvil, all the Lands and Goods of the Abbats and Priors, and of all the Religious Persons; and also of all Clerks within the Bishoprick of Lincoln, which will not from that time celebrate Divine Service. And we command you, that from thence you assist them as our Bailiffs; and believe them in those things which they shall tell you privately on our behalf. Witnes our self at Clarendon the Eighteenth day of March, in the Ninth Year of our Reign.

{ Anno 1206 } Prelates of the church had then Money enough before them, that they could keep play at Rome against their Priors, which thing caused the Princes after to seek such means to cut them short.

The like was written to all within the Bishoprick of Ely. So that hereby we see the dissolutenes and wilfulnes of those Popish Church-men, whom conscience of discharging their duty did so little move, as that they thought upon nothing less, sith the King was driven to use such austerity and sharpnes against them. But to proceed in this troublesome Election you shall understand, that the next Year after, the Suffragans of the Province of Canterbury on the one side, and the Monks of Canterbury on the other side, came afore the Pope with their brawling matter. First the Monks, presenting Reginald their superior, desired that their Election might be confirmed. The Suffragans likewise complained that the Monks would presume to chuse the Archbishop without their consent, and therefore delired by divers reasons the first Election to be of none effect. The Pope, deciding the matter between both, pronounced with the Monks: charging the Suffragans and Bishops to meddle no more with that Election, but to let the Monks alone. The Monks of Canterbury, now having the whole Election in their own hands, fell also at square among themselves, the younger fort with the elder. The younger fort, which had chosen Reginald their superior, would that Election to stand. The elder sort of the Monks replied again, saying, That the first Election was done by stealth, and by night, and by the younger part; also without the counsel of other Monks. Over and besides, it was done without the Kings license, and appointment, and without due solemnity thereunto belonging.

{ Anno 1207 } Division amongst the Monks of Canterbury about the election of the Archbishop.

And as concerning our Election (said they) it was done in the clear light of the day, by which it had authority in presence of our Liege Lord the King; and his Council being willing to the same.

This Allegation thus proponed, the Suffragans Proctor or man of Law stood forth, and proved the former Election to be good; and this later to be void and of no value, after this sort. Whether the first Election (saith he) were just or unjust, ye ought first by the Law to have condemned it afore ye should have presumed to the second; but thus ye did not: therefore is this your later doing no Election at all, and the first therefore is rather to be ratified than yours. When they had thus multiplied talk on both sides, with many frivolous allegations a long time, and could not agree upon one person; Pope Innocent condemned both their Elections, commanding them to chuse Stephen Langton, then Cardinal of St. Chrisogon, for their Archbishop. The Monks then anfwered, That they durst not so do without consent of their King, and for that it was prejudicial to their ancient Liberties. The Pope by and by (saith the text) as one in a fury, taking the words out of their mouths, said thus unto them: We will you to know, That we have full power and authority over the Church of Canterbury; neither are we wont to tarry the consent of Princes, therefore we command you, in pain of our great curse, that ye chuse him only whom we have appointed.

The pride and tyranny of the Pope.

The Monks at these words abashed and terrified, though they much murmured in their hearts, yet consented they all in one, and thereupon sang Te Deum. Only Doctor Helias Bramfield withdrew himself from that Election; whom the King had sent for the admission of the Bishop of Norwich.

Thus was Stephen Langton (in the high Church of Vterby, by the Popes hand) made Archbishop of Canterbury.

Stephen Langton made Archbishop of Canterbury.

¶ This Election thus past with the Popes grace and favour, the said Stephen had in England, among others that solicited his cause to the King, a brother named Master Simon Langton, who in tract of time also became Archbishop of York, as appeareth in the course of this Story, in the Reign of Henry the third, An. 1228. In this behalf the King seemed tractable; so he might have his Sovereignty entire. Against the which, because the said Stephen had vowed to oppose himself, and the King misliked such demeanor; he sent abroad his Letters certificatory about the Realm: therein giving intimation to all people of proud Stephen Langton's countenance. The form of the said Letters followeth:

Letters certificatory of King John, touching the contumacy of Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury, by the Popes Election.

Tertii Lod.

R*Ex omnibus hominibus*, &c. Sciatis quod magister Simon de Langton venit ad nos apud Winton die Mercurii proxime ante mediam quadragesimæ, &c.

In English.

The King to all men, &c. Know ye that Master Simon Langton came to us at Winchester, on the Wednesday next before Mid-lent, and in presence of our Bishops beseought us that we would receive his Brother, Master Stephen Langton, to be Archbishop of Canterbury. And when we spake unto him touching the reservation and saving of our Dignity unto us, he told us that he would do no such thing for us, unless we would wholly rely our selves upon his courtesie and gentleness. This therefore we command, that you know evil and wrong to be done unto us in this behalf: and we charge you, that you believe those things which Reginald of Cornhil shall tell you on our part, touching the aforesaid Deed between us and the Bishops abovenamed, &c. Witnes the King at Winchester, the fourteenth day of March, in the ninth year of his reign.

Now, albeit the King took indignation at this proceeding in the Election of Stephen, yet from thenceforth (saith Matthew Paris) the Pope could do no less but mightily defend him from all vexation and danger; considering that he was his own dear Darling, and a Child of his own creation.

Furthermore, upon this occasion King John conceived an exceeding displeasure against the Clergy and Monks of Canterbury (as he had good cause) they doing so many evils against his Princely Prerogative. Without his License they Elected their Archbishop, and put by the Bishop of Norwich, whom he had appointed. They wasted a great part of his Treasure for the Wars and, to bring all to the Divel, they made Stephen Langton their high Metropolitan, whom he took for a grievous Enemy to the whole Realm; being always so familiar with the French King. Wherefore in his anger he banished them out of the Land, to the number of threescore and four, for this their contumacy, and contempt of his Regal Power.

The Monks of Canterbury thus being expulsed, the King forthwith sendeth Messengers to the Pope with his Letters, wherein he doth sharply and expressly expostulate with the Pope for his Confederating Stephen Langton with the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The King doth expostulate with the Pope for Confederating Stephen Langton Archbishop of Canterbury.

Also (which is more) for that it redounded to the Subversion and Derogation of the Liberties appertaining to his Crown: for notwithstanding his consent past (being before of the Monks, not made privy, which should have so done) yet he rashly presumed to promote and prefer another. Wherefore he cannot marvel (he saith) enough, that neither the said Pope, nor the Court of Rome, doth consider and revolve with themselves, how necessary his love and favour hath been always hitherto to the See of Rome; and that they consider not what great profit and revenews have proceeded hitherto to them out of the Realm of England; the like whereof hath not been received out of any other Country besides on this side the Alpes. He addeth moreover, and saith, that for his Liberties he will stand (if need be) unto Death, neither can he be so removed and shaken off from the Election of the Bishop of Norwich, which he seeth to be so commodious to him and profitable. Finally, he thus concludeth, saying, That in case in this his requeit he be not heard, he will so provide by the Seas that there shall be no such gadding and courting any more over to Rome, suffering the Riches of the Land no more to be transported over, whereby he should be himself the less able to relift his Enemies. And seeing he hath of his own at home, Archbishops, Bishops, and other Prelates of the Church (both of *English*men and of others) sufficiently provided and instructed in all kind of knowledge: therefore he shall not need greatly to seek for judgment and justice further abroad.

When these came to the Popes intelligence, he directeth Letters again to the King in this form:

The Popes Letters to the suffering and Princes.

INnocentius, Pope, servant of the servants of God, to our well-beloved Son in Christ, the King of England, health, and Apostolical blessing. Whereas we have written to King John. you heretofore, exhorting and intreating you after an honnable, diligent, and gentle sort (concerning the Church of Canterbury) you have written to us again after a threatning sort and upbraiding manner; both spitefully and also frowardly. And whereas we more, and above that our right and duty required, have born and given to you: you again for your part have given to us not so much as by right and duty you are bound to do. And though your Devotion, as you say, hath been to us very necessary, yet

It is pity but this voice should be honoured of Kings and Princes.

yet consider again that ours also is not a little opportune and expedient for you. And whereas we in such like cases have not shewed at any time the like honour to any Prince as we have unto you; you again have so much derogated our honour, as no Prince else hath presumed to do besides you alone; pretending certain frivolous causes and occasions, I cannot tell what, why you would not condescend to the Election of Stephen Langton, Cardinal of St. Chrysogonus, chosen by the Monks of Canterbury; for that the said Stephen (as you say) hath been conversant and brought up amongst your Enemies, and his person is to you unknown. But you know what is the Proverb of Solomon: The Net is cast, but in vain in the sight of the flying Birds, &c.

A sinful cause that a King cannot constitute an Archbishop within his own Realm, whom he most liketh.

With much other matter in the same Epistle, wherein he falleth into the commendation of Stephen Langton his Cardinal, declaring how learned he was in the Liberal Arts, and in Divinity, in so much that he was Prebendated at Paris; also come of an honest stock, and an English man born, and not unknown to the King, seeing the King had written his Letters thrice to him before. Declaring moreover in the said Letter, how the Messengers of the King had specified to him another cause; which was, for that the Monks of Canterbury, which had to do in the Election, came not to him before for his consent. Declaring moreover in the said Letter, how the said Messengers of the King intreated in the Kings behalf, that forasmuch as the Popes Letters (wherein the King was commanded to send his Procters to Rome for the same matter) came not to the Kings hand, neither did the Monks direct any such Letters or Message to the King to have his consent; therefore the Pope, considering the same, would grant so much for the regard of the Kings honour, that the Monks of Canterbury should not proceed without the Kings assent therein. And forasmuch as that hath not been done as yet, therefore they desired some delay therein to be given, sufficient for the doing thereof. Whereunto he said, That he had granted and fulfilled their request, in sending his Letters and Messengers once or twice to the King for the same purpose, although he said it was not the manner of the See Apostolick (who had the fulness of power over the Church of Canterbury) to wait for Princes consents in such Elections, who then could not be suffered to do that which they came for. Wherefore in knitting up his Letter, he thus concludeth in these words:

And therefore seeing the matter so standeth, we see no cause why we should require or tarry for the Kings favour or consent any more therein, but intend so to proceed in this matter, neither inclining on the right hand, nor on the left, according as the Canonical Ordinances of the holy Fathers shall direct us; that is (all impediments and delaies set aside) so to provide that the Church of Canterbury be not any longer destitute of her Pastor. Wherefore be it known to your discretion or kingly prudence, that for so much as this Election of Stephen Langton hath orderly and concordly thus proceeded without fraud or deceit, upon a person meet for the same; therefore we will for no mans pleasure, neither may we without danger of same and of conscience defer or protract any longer the consummation of the said Election. Wherefore my well-beloved Son, seeing we have had respect to your honour, above that our right and duty required, study to honour us so much as your duty requireth again, so that you may the more plentifully deserve favour, both at Gods hand and ours; lest that by doing the contrary, you bring your self into such a peck of troubles, as afterwards you shall scarce rid your self of again. For this know for a certain: in the end it must needs fall out, that he shall have the better, unto whom every knee (of Heavenly, Earthly, and Infernal creatures) doth bow, whose turn I serve in Earth, though I be unworthy. Therefore settle not your self to obey their persuasions, which always desire your unquietness, whereby they may fish the better in the Water when it is troubled; but commit your self to our pleasure, which undoubtedly shall turn to your praise, glory, and honour. For it should not be much for your safety in this cause to resist God and the Church; in whose quarrel that blessed Martyr, and glorious Bishop, Thomas hath of late shed his blood; especially seeing your Father and your Brother of famous memory, then Kings of England, did give over those three wicked customs into the hands of the Legates of the See Apostolick. But if you yield your self humbly into our hands, we will look that you and yours shall be sufficiently provided for, that no prejudice may arise hereupon to you-ward. Given at Lateran the tenth year of our Popedome.

Note the proceedings of this ambitious Pope.

The Bishop he meaneth.

Thus hath thou (gentle Reader) the glorious Letter of the proud Pope; I beseech thee mark it well. Now to the Story.

After this Letter was sent out, not long after proceedeth a charge and commandment sent into England, unto certain Bishops there, requiring them by authority Apostolical, That if the said King would not receive the said Prior of Canterbury, and his Monks, then they should Interdict him throughout all his Realm. For the executing whereof four Bishops were appointed by the usurped Power of the Popes Bulls: namely, William, Bishop of London; Eustace, Bishop of Ely; Walter, Bishop of Winchester; and Giles, Bishop of Hereford. Which said four Bishops went unto the King, and shewed their Commission from the Pope, as is aforesaid, willing him to consent thereto, &c. But the said King refused the same, and would by no means grant to their request. Whereupon they, departing from his Grace, went the morrow after the Annunciation of our Lady, and pronounced the said general Interdiction through out all England, so that the Church-doors were shut up with Keys, and other fastenings, and with Walls, &c.

Four Bishops appointed to interdict the Realm.

England horribly vexed by the Pope.

Now when the King heard of this, he began to be moved against them, and took all the possessions of the four Bishops into his hands, appointing certain men to keep the Livings of the Clergy throughout the Realm, and that they should injoy no part thereof. Which being done, the Bishops (seeing the same) curfed all them that kept, or should meddle with Church Goods, against the will of them that ought them: and understanding, for all that, that the King nothing regarded their doings, they went over Sea to the Bishop of Canterbury, and informed him what had happened: who hearing the same, willed them again to return to Canterbury, and he would come thither to them, or else send certain persons thither in his stead, that should do as much as if he were there himself. Then when the Bishops heard this, they returned again to England, to Canterbury; which tidings came shortly to the King, that they were come again thither. And becaufe he might not himself travel to them, he sent thither Bishops, Earls, and Abbats to intreat them, that the Archbishop, whom he had chosen, might be admitted; promising the Prior and all the Monks of Canterbury in his behalf, that he should never take any thing of the Church Goods against the will of them that owe them; but would make amends to them of whom he had taken any such Goods, and that the Church should have all her Franchises in as ample manner as in St. Edward's time, the Confessor it had.

Discontinuance of the Church clouded for private revenge.

The incontinent fourneth of the Prince unto against the King.

When the form of agreement was thus concluded, it was ingrossed in a pair of Indentures; and the foresaid four Bishops, to the one part thereof, set their Seals: and the other part the said Bishops, Earls, and Abbats carried to shew the King. When the King saw the order thereof, he liked it well, saving he would not agree to make restitution of the Church Goods. So he sent to the four Bishops again that they should put out that point of Retiitution. But they answered flouthy that they would not put out one word. Then the King sent word to the Archbishop, by the four Bishops, that he should come to Canterbury to speak with him, and for his safe conduct to come and go again at his will, he sent his Justices as Pledges, Gilbert Pateresn, William de la Brevere, and John Lestre. Which thing thus done, the Archbishop Stephen came to Canterbury, and the King (hearing thereof) came to Chilham; from whence he sent his Treasurer the Bishop of Winchester to him, to have him put out of the Indentures the Clause of Restitution aforesaid: who, denying to alter any word of the same, moved the King in such fort, that immediatly it was proclaimed throughout England at the Kings Commandment, that all those that had any Church-Livings, and went over Sea, should come again into England by a certain day, or else lose their Livings for evermore. And further in that Proclamation, he charged all Sheriffs within the Realm, to inquire if any Bishops, Abbats, Priors,

Princes must be subject to the Pope.

Stephen Langton found English by the King.

The King incensed against the Archbishop Langton.

Priors, or any other Church man (from that day forward) received any commandment that came from the Pope, and that they should take his or their body and bring it before him; and also that they should take into their hands, for the Kings use, all the Church Lands that were given to any man through the Archbishop Stephen, or by the Priors of Canterbury, from the time of the Election of the Archbishop: and further charged that all the Woods, that were the Archbishops, should be cut down and sold.

Two Legats sent from the Pope.

When tidings came to the Pope that the King had thus done, being moved thereby with fiery wrath, he sent to the King two Legates (of the one called Pandulph, and the other Durant) to warn him in the Popes name that he should cease his doings to the holy Church, and amend the wrong he had done to the Archbishop of Canterbury, to the Priors and the Monks of Canterbury, and to all the Clergy of England. And further, that he should restore the Goods again that he had taken of them against their will, or else they should curse the King by name: and to do this, the Pope took them his Letters in Bulls Patent. These two Legates, coming into England, resorted to the King to Northampton, where he held his Parliament, and, saluting him, said they came from the Pope of Rome, to reform the Peace of holy Church. And first, said they, we admonish you in the Popes behalf, that ye make full restitution of the Goods, and of the Lands, that ye have ravished holy Church of; and that ye receive Stephen the Archbishop of Canterbury into his Dignity; and the Prior of Canterbury and his Monks; and that ye yield again unto the Archbishop all his Lands and Rents without any withholding. And, Sir, yet moreover, That ye shall make such restitution to them, as the Church shall think sufficient.

Restitution required of the King.

Then answered the King, As touching the Prior and his Monks of Canterbury, all that ye have said I would gladly do, and all things else that you would Ordain; but as touching the Archbishop, I shall tell you as it lieth in my heart: Let the Archbishop leave his Bishoprick; and if the Pope then shall intreat for him, peradventure I may like to give him some other Bishoprick in England; and upon this condition I will receive and admit him.

Then said Pandulph unto the King, holy Church was wont never to degrade Archbishop without cause reasonable: but ever the was wont to correct Princes that were disobedient to her.

What? How now (quoth the King) threaten ye me? Nay, said Pandulph, but ye have now openly told us as it standeth in your heart; and now we will tell you what is the Popes will; and thus it standeth: He hath wholly Interdicted and Curfed you, for the wrongs you have done unto the holy Church, and unto the Clergy. And for so much as ye will dwell still in your malice, and will come to no amendment; you shall understand, that from this time forward the Sentences upon you given have force and strength. And all those that with you have communed before this time, whether that they be Earls, Barons, or Knights, (or any other whatsoever they be) we assoil them safely from their sins unto this day: And from this time forward (of what condition soever they be) we accurse them openly, and specially by this our Sentence, that do commune with you. And we assoil moreover Earls, Barons, Knights, and all other manner of men of their Homages, Services, and Fealties that they should do unto you. And this thing to confirm, we give plain power unto the Bishop of Winchester, and to the Bishop of Norwich, and the same power we give against Scotland unto the Bishop of Rochester, and of Salisbury: and in Wales we give the same power to the Bishops of St. David, and of Landaff, and of St. Asse.

Sentence of the Popes Curse pronounced against the King.

The Pope Author of Rebellion, and disobedience of Subjects to their Prince.

Also Sir King (quoth Pandulph) all the Kings, Princes, and the great Dukes Christened, have laboured to the Pope to have License to Cross themselves, and to War against thee, as upon Gods great Enemy, and win thy Land, and to make King whom it pleaseth the Pope. And we here now assoil all those of their sins, that will rise against thee here in thine own Land.

Then the King, hearing this, answered: What shame may ye do more to me than this?

Pandulph again: We say to you in Verbo Dei, that neither you, nor any Heir that you have, after this day shall be Crowned. So the King said, By him that is Almighty God, if I had known of this thing before ye came into this Land, and that ye had brought me such news, I should have made you tarry out these twelve months.

Like master like man.

Then answered Pandulph, Full well we thought, at our first coming, that ye would have been obedient to God and to holy Church, and have fulfilled the Popes commandment, which we have shewed and pronounced to you, as we were charged therewith. And now ye say, that if ye had will the cause of our coming, ye would have made us tarry out a whole year; who might as well say, that ye would have taken a whole years respite without the Popes leave: but for to suffer what death ye can or will, that he gave us in charge.

Pandulph worse afraid than hurt.

In another Chronicle I find the words between the King and Pandulph something otherwife described, as though the King should first threaten him with hanging, if he had fore-known of his coming. To whom Pandulph again should answer, That he looked for nothing else at his hand, but to suffer for the Churches right. Whereupon the King, being mightily incensed, departed. The King the same time being at Northampton, willed the Sheriffs and Bailiffs to bring forth all the Prisoners there, that (as had deferved should be put to Death: to the intent (as some think) to make Pandulphus afraid. Among whom was a certain Clerk, who for counterfeiting the Kings Coin, was also condemned to be Hanged, Drawn, and Quartered; and moreover, by the King was commanded (thereby to anger Pandulphus the more, as may be thought) to be Hanged up highest above the rest. Pandulphus hearing thereof, notwithstanding, he somewhat began to fear least he should be Hanged himself; yet with such courage as he had, he went to the Church to fet out Book, Bell, and Candle, charging that no man, under pain of Accursing, should lay hands upon the Clerk. Upon this the King and the Cardinal departed in no little anger. And Pandulph went to Rome, and reported to the Pope and the Cardinals what had been done.

The Pope Summoned all the Bishops, Abbats, and Clerks of England, to come and repair unto Rome, to consult what was to be done therein. This Council began the first day of October. In the which Council it was Decreed by the Pope and his Affembly, That John King of England should be Accursed, with all such as held with him, every day so long as that Council endured. Albeit this was not yet Granted, that the People should be crossed to fight against him, because as yet he had shed no blood. But afterwards the said Pope Innocent, seeing that King John by no means would stoop under his subjection, nor under the rule of his Popish See, he sent unto the French King, upon remission of all his sins, and of all that went with him, That he should take writ with him all the power he might, and so to invade the Realm of England to destroy King John.

The Popes great Curse.

This occasion given, Pope Innocent yet once again commanded, in pain of his great Curse, That no man should obey King John, neither yet keep company with him: he forbad all persons to Eat and Drink with him, or Talk with him, to Commune or Counsel with him; yea, his own familiar Houthold to do him any kind of service, either at Bed or at Board, in Church, Hall, or Stable. And what followed thereof? The greater part of them, which after such fort fled from him (by the Ordinance of God) of divers and sundry Diseases the same year died. And between both Nations (English and French) fell that year great amity; but secret, subtil, and false, to the bitter betrayal of England. Neither was the Pope content only with this, but moreover the said Pope Innocent gave Sentence definitive (by Counsil of his Cardinals) that King John should be put from his Seat Regal and Depofed, and another put in his Room. And to the speedy execution thereof he appointed the French King Philip, promising to give him full remiffion of all his sins, and the clear poffession of all the Realm of England, to him and his Heirs, if he did either kill him or expel him.

The last punishment of God upon disobedient Subjects.

The Pope found a murtherer.

The next year the French King began his attempt, in hope of the Crown of England; being well-manned with Bishops, Monks, Prelates, Priests, and their Servants, to maintain the same: bragging of the Letters which they had received from the great men there. But behold the work of God; the English Navy took three hundred of the French Kings Ships, well loaden with Wheat, Wine, Meal, Fleth, Armor, and such other like meet for the War;

French Ships taken by English men.

and

and one hundred they burnt within the Haven, taking the spoils with them. In the mean time the Priests within England had provided them a certain false counterfeit Prophet, called Peter Wakefield of Pois; who was an idle gadder about, and a prattling merchant. This Peter they made to prophesie lyes, rumouring his prophesies abroad, to bring the King out of all credit with his people. They noised it daily among the Commons of the Realm, that Christ had twice appeared to this prophet of theirs in shape of a Child between the Priests hands, once at York, another time at Pomfret; and that he had breathed on him thrice, saying, Peace, peace, peace, and teaching many things which he anon after declared to the Bishops; and bid the people amend their naughty living. Being rapt also in spirit (they said) he beheld the Joys of Heaven, and Sorrows of Hell. For scant were there three (saith the Chronicle) among a thousand that lived Christianly. This counterfeit foothsayer prophesied of King John, that he should Reign no longer than Ascention-day, within the year of our Lord 1213. which was the fourteenth from his Coronation; and this (he said) he had by revelation. Then was it of him demanded, whether he should be slain, or expelled, or should of himself give over the Crown? He answered, That he could not tell. But of this he was sure (he said) that neither he, nor any of his stock or lineage should Reign, that day once finished. The King, hearing of this, laughed much at it, and made but a scoff thereof. Tush (saith he) it is but an Idiot Knave, and such a one as lacketh his right wits. But when this foolish prophet had so escaped the danger of the Kings displeasure, and that he made no more of it; he gat him abroad and prated thereof at large (as he was a very idle Vagabond) and used to tattle and talk more than enough: so that they which loved the King caused him anon after to be apprehended as a malefactor, and to be thrown into Prison, the King not knowing thereof.

Peter the false prophet.

The false prophet found a Lyer.

Anon after, the fame of this phantastical prophet went all the Realm over, and his name was known every where (as foolishness is much regarded of people, where wisdom is not in place) specially because he was then Imprisoned for the matter, the rumor was the larger, their wondrings were the wantoner, their practising the foolisher, their busie talks, and other idle occupyings the greater. Continually from thence (as the rude manner of people is) old Gossips Tales went abroad, new Tales were invented, Fables were added to Fables, and Lyes grew upon Lyes: so that every day new flanders were raised on the King, and not one of them true: rumors arose, blasphemies were spread, the Enemies rejoyced, and Treasons by the Priests were maintained, and what likewise was furnished, or other subtilty practised, all was then fathered upon this foolish prophet: As, thus saith Peter Wakefield, Thus hath he prophetied, and, This shall come to pass; yea, many times when he thought nothing less. When the Ascension-day was come, which was prophefied of before, King John commanded his Regal Tent to be spread abroad in the open field, passing that day with his Noble Council and men of Honour, in the greatest Solemnity that ever he did afore. Solacing himself with Musical Instruments and Songs, most in sight amongst his trusty Friends. When that day was past in all prosperity and mirth, his Enemies being confounded, turned all to an allegorical understanding, to make the prophetie good, and said, He is no longer King, for the Pope Reigneth, and not he; yet Reigned he still, and his Son after him, to prove that prophet a Lyer. Then was the King by his Council perswaded that this false prophet had troubled all the Realm, perverted the hearts of the people, and raised the Commons against him. For his words went over the Sea by the help of his Prelates, and came to the French Kings Ear, and gave unto him a great incouragement to Invade the Land; he had not else done it so suddenly. But he was most foully deceived, as all they are and shall be that put their truft in such dark drowsie dreams of Hypocrites. The King therefore commanded that he should be drawn and hanged like a Traytor.

The false prophet proved a Lyer by King John.

The false prophet hanged.

After that the Popish Prelates, Monks, Canons, Priests, &c. saw this their crafty jugling by their fained prophet would not speed, notwithstanding they had done no little harm thereby; to help the matter more forward, they began to travel and practice with Pope Innocent of the one side, and also with the French King on the other side, besides subtil Treasons which they wrought within the Realm, and by their confessions in the Ear, wherby they both blinded the Nobility and Commons. The King thus compassed about on every side with Enemies, and fearing the sequel thereof, knowing the Conspiracies that were in working against him, as well by the Pope (in all that ever he might) as also by Philip the French King by his procurement: and moreover his own People, especially his Lords and Barons being rebelliously incited against him; as by the Popes Curses and Interdictions against such as took his part, and by his Absolutions and Dispensations with all those that would rebel against him, commanding them to detain from him such Homage, Service, Duties, Debts, and all other Allegiance that godly Subjects owe and are bound to yield and give to their Liege Lord and Prince: All which things considered, the King, I say, in the thirteenth year of his Reign, for that the French King began to make sharp Invasion upon him within his own Realm, sent speedy Ambassadors to the Pope (as to the Fountain of all this his mischief, pretended to work and intreat his Peace and Reconciliation with him) promising to do whatsoever the Pope should will him, and command him in the reformation of himself, and restitution of all wrongs done to holy Church, and to make due satisfaction therefore unto all men that could complain.

King John fabulously himself to the Pope.

King John intreateth Peace with the Pope.

Then sent the Pope again into England his Legate Pandulph, with other Ambassadors: the King also at Canterbury (by Letters, as it should seem, certified from his own Ambassadors) waited their coming. Where the thirteenth day of May the King received them, making unto them an Oath, That of and for all things wherein he stood Accursed, he would make ample restitution and satisfaction. Unto whom also all the Lords and Barons of England (so many as there were with the King attending the Legates coming) sware in like manner, That if the King would not accomplish in every thing the Oath which he had taken, then they would cause him to hold and confirm the same whether he would or not (or by strength) to use the Authors words.

Then submitted the King himself unto the Court of Rome, and to the Pope, and resigning gave up his Dominions and Realms of England and Ireland from him and from his Heirs for evermore that should come of him. With this condition, that the King and his Heirs should take again these two Dominions of the Pope to Farm, paying yearly therefore to the Court of Rome 1000 Marks of Silver. Then took the King the Crown from his Head, kneeling upon his Knees, in the presence of all his Lords and Barons of England, to Pandulph the Popes chief Legate, saying in this wise, Here I relign up the Crown of the Realm of England to the Popes hands, Innocent the third, and put me wholly in his mercy and ordinance. Then took Pandulph the Crown of King John, and kept it five days as a possession and seizin-taking of these two Realms of England and Ireland, confirming also all things promised by his Charter Obligatory as followeth:

King John submitteth himself and resigneth his Crown.

The Copy of the Letter Obligatory that King John made to the Pope, concerning the yielding up of the Crown and Realm of England into the Popes hands, for a certain Sum of Mony yearly to be paid.

The Draught or Instrument of Obligation, wherein King John resigneth his Kingdom to the Popes hand, Christ witnessing it, and the Pope offering a Kingdom and crowning him; but the Pope doth not retain it.

TO all Christian People throughout the World dwelling, John by the Grace of God, King of England, greeting: To your University known be it, That for so much as we have grieved and offended God, and our Mother Church of Rome, and for so much as we have need of the Mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ: and we may nothing so worthy offer, and competent satisfaction make to God and to holy Church (but if it were our own body) as with our Realms of England and of Ireland; then by the grace of the Holy Ghost we desire to meek us for the Love of him, that meeked him to the Death upon the Cross. And through Counsel of the Nobles, Earls, and Barons, we offer and freely grant to God, and to the Apostles St. Peter and Paul, and to our mother Church of Rome, and to our holy father Pope Innocent the third, and to all the Popes that come after him, all the Realm, Patronages of Churches of England and of Ireland, with all the appurtenances, for remission of sins, and help and health of our Kings souls, and of

of all Christian souls. So that from this time afterward, we will receive and hold of our mother Church of Rome as in Farm, doing fealty to our holy father the Pope, Innocent the third, and to all the Popes that come after him, in the manner above-said. And in the presence of the wise man Pandulph the Popes sooth-deacon, we make Liege Homage, as if it were in the Popes presence and we before him were, and as if he himself should have done all manner of things above-said; and thereto we bind us, and all that come after us, and our Heirs for evermore, without any gain-saying to the Pope, and the aforesaid Church vacant. And in token of this thing ever for to last, we will, confirm, and ordain, That he be our special tenter of the fore-said Realms (saving St. Peter-pence) in all things. To the mother Church of Rome, paying by the year 1000 Marks of Silver at two times of the year for all manner customs that we should do for the said Realms; that is to say, at Michaelmas and at Easter; that is, for England 700 Marks, and 300 Marks for Ireland, saving to us and to our Heirs, our Justices and our other Franchises. And all these things that before been said, we will that they be firm and stable without end, and to that Obligation we and all our Successors and our Heirs in this manner been bound, That if we or any of our Heirs through any presumption fall in any point against of these things above-said (and he been warned and will not right amend him) he shall then lose the fore-said Realms for evermore: and this Charter of Obligation and our Warrant for evermore be firm and stable without gain-saying. We shall from this day afterward be true to God and to the mother Church of Rome, and to thee, Innocent the third, and to all that commen after thee, and the Realms of England and of Ireland we shall maintain true lich in all manner points, against all manner of men, by our power through Gods help.

Upon this Obligation the King was discharged, the second day of July, from that tyrannical Interdiction, under which he continued six years and three months. But before the releasement thereof, first he was miserably compelled (as hath been declared) to give over both his Crown and Scepter to that Antichrist of Rome for the space of five days, and as his Client, Vassal, Feudary, and Tenant, to receive it again of him at the hands of another Cardinal; being bound Obligatory, both for himself, and for his Successors to pay yearly (for acknowledgment thereof) 1000 Marks for England and Ireland: Then came they thither from all parts of the Realm, so many as had their Consciences wounded for obeying their Liege King, as blind Idiots, and there they were Absolved, every one of his own Bishop, except the Spiritual Fathers, and Ecclesiastical Soldiers, for they were compelled to seek to Rome, as Captives reserved to the Popes own fatherhood. In this new ruffling the King easily granted, that Abbats, Deans, and Curates should be Elected freely every where, so that the Laws of the Realm were truly observed. But against that were the Bishops, alledging their Canonical Decrees and Rules Synodal, determining the King therein to have nothing to do, but only to give his consent after they had once Elected. But among this shaven Rabble, some there were which consented not to this wicked error: a fort also there were of the Prelates in that time, which were not pleased that the Lands Interdiction should cease, till the King had paid all that which their Clergy in all quarters of the Realm had demanded, without reason: yea, what every fawcy Sir John for his part demanded, even to the very breaking of their Hedges, the stealing of their Apples, and their other occasional damages, which grew to an incredible sum, and impossible to be answered. Such was the outragious cruel noise of that mischievous progeny of Antichrist, against their natural King.

The interessedness of the Clergy against their natural Prince.

The Pope to have Jurisdiction of all Churches also.

Notwithstanding that which is uttered afore concerning the bitter malice of the Clergy against their Prince, yet did the Popes Legate and Cardinal Nicolaus Tusculanus much favour his doings, and allow of his proceedings. Wherefore they reported of him that he was exceeding partial, and regarded not their busiaess Ecclesiastical, as he should have done. For leaving the account of their Restitutions, he went with the Kings Officers, as the Kings pleasure was, to the Cathedral Minsters, Abbies, Priories, Deaneries, and great Churches vacant; and there for the next incumbent always he appointed two, one for the King, another for the Parties. But upon him only whom the King nominated, he compelled most commonly the Election to pass: which vexed them wonderfully. Upon this therefore they raised a new Conspiracy against the Kings Person by help of their Bishops, seditious Prelates, and such Noble men as they had drawn to their Parties. We behold (saith Hoveden) about the same time many noble Houses and Assemblies divided in many places. The Fathers and the Aged men flood upon the Kings part, but the younger fort contrary. And some there were that for the love of their kindred, and in other fundry respects forsook the King again. Yea, the fame went that time, saith he, That they were confederated with Alexander the Scottish King, and Lewlin the Prince of Wales, to work him an utter mischief. A Council at Oxford the Archbishop called; whereat some would not tarry, confidering the confusion thereof; the other fort, having very obstinate hearts, reviled the King most spitefully behind his back, and said, That from thenceforth he ought to be taken for no Governor of theirs. Their outragious and frantick clamors so much prevailed in those days, that it grew to a grievous tumult, and a most perillous commotion.

In the year of our Lord 1215, as witnesseth Paulus Æmilius and other Histories, Pope Innocent the third held a General Synod at Rome, called the Council Lateran. The chief causes of that Council were these: In the days of this Innocent, Heresie (as he calleth the Truth of God, or the Doctrine that rebuketh sin) began to rise up very high, and to spread forth his branches abroad; by reason whereof many Princes were Excommunicated, as Otho the Emperor, John the King of England, Peter King of Aragon, Raimond the Earl of Tholouse, Aquitania, Satalonia, and such other like, as is aforesaid. So that it could be no otherwise, saith Hoveden, but with the sharp Ax of the Gospel (so called he the Popes Excommunications) they ought of necessity to have been cut off from the Church. Therefore was this Council provided, proclaimed, and Prelates from all Nations thereunto called. And to colour those mischiefs which he then went about, he caused it by his Legates and Cardinals (very crafty merchants) to be noised abroad, that his intent therein was only to have the Church universally reformed, and the Holy Land from the Turks hands recovered. But all this was craft and fallhood; as the sequel thereof hath manifestly declared. For his purpose thereby was to subdue all Princes, and to make himself Rich and Wealthy. For there he made this Antichristian Act, and Established it by publick Decree, That the Pope should have from thenceforth the Correction of all Christian Princes, and that no Emperor should be admitted, except he were sworn before, and were also Crowned of him. He Ordained moreover, That whosoever he were that should speak evil of the Pope, he should be punished in Hell with Eternal Damnation: Conradus, Urspergensis, Hieronymus, Marius. He provided Confession to help these matters; he allowed their Bread a Pix to cover him; and a Bell when he goeth abroad; and made the Mass equal with Christs Gospel.

Anno 1215

The Council of Lateran holden by Pope Innocent.

In this Council was first invented and brought in Transubstantiation: of which Johannes Scotus, whom we call Duns, maketh mention in his fourth Book, writing in these words: The words of the Scripture might be expounded more easily and more plainly without Transubstantiation. But the Church did chuse this sense, which is more hard; being moved thereunto, as it seemeth, chiefly, because that of the Sacraments men ought to hold as the holy Church of Rome holdeth, &c. And in the same place he maketh mention of Innocentius the third.

Johannes Scotus.

Transubstantiation first brought in.

Moreover, in the said Council was Established and Ratified the wretched and impious Act, compelling Priests to abjure Lawful Matrimony. Whereupon these Meeters or Verses were made the same time against him, which here follow under-written.

Which being now a Bishop old, doth study to destroy
The thing, which he a young Man once did covet to injoy.
Priest Zachary both had a Wife, and had a Child also,
By means of whom there did to him great praise and honour grow.
For he did Baptize him which was the savor of mankind:
Ill him befal that holdeth this new error in his mind.
Into the higher Heavens good Paul was lifted from below,
And many secret hidden things he learned there to know:
Return'd at length from them to us, and teaching rules of life,
He said, Let each Man have his own and only wedded Wife.
For this and other documents of them that learned be,
Much better and more comly eke it seemeth unto me,
That each should have his own alone, and not his Neighbours Wife,
Left with his Neighbour he do fall in hate and wrathful strife.
Thy Neighbours Daughters or their Wives, or Neeces to defile,
Unlawful is, therefore beware do not thy self beguile.
Have thou thine own true wedded Wife, delight in her alway,
With safer mind that thou mayst look to see the later day.

Now let us return to King John again, and mark how the Priests and their adherents were plagued for their humble handlings of his Majesties will. In the foresaid Council of Lateran, and the same year, was Stephen Langton Archbishop of Canterbury Excommunicated of Pope Innocent, with all those Bishops, Prelates, Priests, Barons, and Commons, which had been of counsel with him in the former Rebellion. And when the said Archbishop had made instant suite of him to be Absolved, anon he made him this answer with great indignation: Brother mine, I swear by Saint Peter, thou shalt not so soon at my hand obtain the benefit of Absolution: for why? thou hast not only done harm to the King of England, but also thou hast in a great many of things injured the Church of Rome here, and therefore thou shalt tarry my leasure. The Archbishop was also at that time Stephen Langton suspended out of the Church.
suspended out of the Church, and commanded to say no Mass at all, neither yet to exercise any other Ecclesiastical Office; because he would not at time convenient execute the Popes Curse upon the Rebellious Barons. With them the said Pope had been so deeply offended and angred a little before, that the great Charter of the Liberties of England (with great indignation and countenance most terrible) he rent and destroyed, by sentence definitive condemning it for ever; and by and by thereupon Cursed all the other Rebels, with Book Bell, and Candle. The greater Captains of them (with the Citizens of London) for that affay were pronounced Excommunicate by name, and remained still Interdicted. They appealed then to the council general.

Appeal to the general council.
In the same year 1215. were those great men also summoned to appear at Rome in that general Synod, which would not consent to their Kings expulsion, nor yet tyrannical deposing. Though they were called (they said) thereunto by the Archbishop of Canterbury and others, and required by oath to subscribe unto the same; yet could they not of their conscience do it, because he had humbled himself, and also granted to keep peace with all Men. Thus was the whole Realm miserably then divided into two factions through malice of the Clergy: so strifes increased in the Land every where. Yet were there of the Lords and Gentlemen a great number at that time, that followed the King and allowed his doings. But they which were on the other side (not a little suspecting the state that they were in) fled speedily to the French King Philip: desiring him that he would grant to them his eldest Son Ludovick, and they would Elect him to be their King, and that without much tarriance. They besought him moreover, that he would send with him a strong and mighty power, such as were able to subdue him utterly, that they mighty (they say) be delivered of such a wicked Tyrant. Such was the report that those most wicked Papists gave their Christian Governour, appointed to them of God: whom they ought to have obeyed, though he had been evil, even for very conscience take, Rom. 13. And as certain of the Lords and Barons were busie to chuse the said Ludovick for their King, the Pope sent thither one Gualo the Cardinal of S. Martin to stay those rash and cruel attempts; charging the French King upon his Allagiance, That he with all power possible should favour, maintain, and defend King John of England, his Feudary or Tenant. The French King thereto made answer, as one not content with that arrogant precept; The Realm of England (said he) was never yet any part of Saint Peter's Patrimony, neither is it now, nor yet any time shall be hereafter. Thus spake he, for that he was in hope to obtain it for his Son by treason of the Barons.

Gualo Cardinal sent into England.

The French King calls his Son returning about England.
No Prince or Potentate (said Philip the French King) may pledge or give away his Kingdom, which is (beside the Realm) the Government of his whole Common-wealth, without the lawful consent of his Barons, which are bound to defend the same. If the Pope shall introduce of his authority such a president in Christianity, he shall at his pleasure bring all Christian Kings and their Kingdoms to nought. I like not this example in these days begun. I cannot therefore allow this fact of King John of England: though he be my utter adverfary, yet I much lament that he hath so indammaged his Realm, and hath brought that noble ground and Queen of Provinces under miserable tribute. The chief Lords and Men of his Nobility standing by, when he uttered these words, (being as it were in a fury) cryed with one voyce: By the blood of God, in whom we truft to be faved, we will ftick in this Article to the losing of our heads. Let the King of England do therein what him liketh: no King may put his Land under Tribute, and so make his Nobility Captive Servants. With that came in Ludovick with the Kings eldeft Son, and faid unto them all there present; I befeech you, let not my purpofed journey: the Barons of England have Elected me for their Lord and King, and I will not furely lofe my right, but I will fight for it even to the very death, yea so long as heart fhall ftir within my breft: and I doubt not but I fhall well obtain it, for I have friends among them. His Father the King ftood ftill as if he had been in a dump, and anfwered never a word, but fared as though he had diffembled the matter. Belike he mistrufted fomething therein, as he might well enough; for all was procured by the Priefts, that they might live licentiously in all wealth and freedom from the Kings yoke.

Priestmal Priests resisting a grant to King.
About the fame time were fuch Treasons and Conspiracies wrought by the Bishops, Priests, and Monks throughout all the Realm, that the King knew not where to become or find trufty friends; he was then compelled, by the uncertainty of his Subjects, to travel from place to place, but not without a great Army of Men, looking every day when his Barons and their Confederates would cruelly fet upon him. At laft he came to Dover, and there looked for aid from other quarters, which loved him better than did his own people. And thither reforted to him from Flanders, Brabant, and Holland, on one fide, and from Guian, Gascoin, and Poitiers, on the other fide, and from other Countries more, a wonderful number of Men. The report then went, That the Pope had written unto thofe Countries, mightily to affift him for divers confiderations: one was, for that he had fubmitted himfelf and his Dominions unto his protection; another was, Becaufe he had taken upon him, a little before, the livery of the Croſs, to win again Jeruſalem; the third was, For that he had gotten by him the Dominion of England and Ireland, and feared to lofe both, if he fhould chance to decay. For the fpace of three months he remained in the Iſle of Wight, abroad in the Air to quiet himſelf for a time from all manner of tumults, and led there a folitary life among Rivers and Water-men; whereas he rather coveted to dye than to live, being ſo traiterously handled of his Biſhops and Barons, and not knowing how to be juſtly avenged of them. Upon the Purification day of our Lady, therefore he took upon him the Croſs or Voyage againſt the Turks, for recovery of Hieruſalem, moved thereto rather for the doubts which he had of his people, than for any other Devotion elſe. And thus he ſaid to his familiar Servants: Since I ſubmitted my ſelf and my Lands (England and Ireland) to the Church of Rome (ſorrow come to it) never thing proſpered with me, but all hath gone againſt me.

Anno 1216.
In the next year after 1216. was Simon Langton choſen Archbiſhop of York; but that Election anon after was diſſolved; for information was given to the Pope, that the ſaid Simon was Brother to Stephen Langton the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, which had been the occaſion of all the Tumults which were at that time in England. And the Pope had the more hate unto him, for that he had brought him up of nought, and did find him at that time ſo ſtubborn: wherefore he placed in his Brothers place Walter Gray, the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

Walter Gray Archbiſhop of York. Grata the Popes legate.
In the ſame year Gualo the Popes Legate renewed his great curſe upon Lewis the French Kings Son, for uſurping upon King John: Likewiſe upon Simon Langton, and Gervaſis Hobruge, for provoking him to the ſame, and that with a wonderful Solemnity: For in that doing he made all the Bells to be Rung, the Candles to be light, the Doors to be opened, and the Book of Excommunications or Interdictions publickly to be read, committing them wholly to the Devil for their contumacy and contempt. He alſo commanded the Biſhops and Curates to publiſh it abroad over all the whole Realm, to the terror of all his ſubjects. The ſaid Simon and Gervaſis laughed him to ſcorn, and derided much his doings in that behalf, ſaying, that for the juſt title of Ludovike, they had appealed to the general Council at Rome.

Radul. Niger cap. 44.
The Popes curſe taught to ſcorn.
The Magiſtrates of London, and Citizens of the ſame, did likewiſe vilipend and diſdainfully mock all that the Pope had there commanded and done. And in ſpight both of him and his Legate, they kept company with them that were Excommunicated, both at Table and at Church, ſhewing themſelves thereby as open contemners both of him and his Laws. Ludovike at London, taking himſelf for King, conſtituted Simon Langton for his high Chancellor, and Gervaſis Hobruge for his chief Preacher; by whoſe dayly Preachings (as well the Barons as the Citizens themſelves being Excommunicated) he cauſed all the Church doors to be opened, and the ſervice to be ſung, and the ſaid Ludovike was in all points fit for their hands. About this time was Pandulphus (then Cardinal) collecting the Peter-pence, and old pillage of the Pope, taking great pains therein. And for his great labours in thoſe the affairs of holy Church, and for other great miracles befides, he was then made Biſhop of Norwich, to the augmenting of his dignitie and expences.

Pandulphus the Popes collector made Biſhop of Norwich.
Mat. Pariſ. Radul. Niger cap. 47.
It chanced about this time, that the Vicount of Melun (a very Noble Man of the Realm of France, which came thither with the Prince Ludovike) fell deadly ſick at London, and alſo moved in conſcience to call certain of the Engliſh Barons unto him, ſuch as were there appointed to the cuſtody of that City, ſaid unto them: I lament your ſorrowful caſe, and pity with my heart the deſtruction that is coming towards you and your Country. The dangerous ſnares which are prepared for your utter confuſion are hidden from you; you do not behold them, but take you heed of them in time. Prince Ludovike hath Sworn a great Oath, and ſixteen of his Earls and Noble Men are of Counſel with him, that if he obtain the Crown of England, he will baniſh all them from ſervice, and deprive them of Lands and Goods, as many as he finderh now to go againſt their Liege King, and are Traytors to his Noble Perſon. And becauſe you ſhall not take this Tale for a Fable, I aſſure you on my faith, lying now at the mercy of God, that I was one of them which was Sworn to the ſame. I have great conſcience thereof, and therefore I give you this warning. I pity poor England which hath been ſo Noble a Region, that now it is come to ſo extreme miſery. And when he with tears had lamented it a ſpace, he returned again unto them and ſaid: My friends I Counſel you Earneſtly to look to your ſelves, and to provide the remedy in time, leſt it come upon you unawars, Your King for a ſeaſon hath kept you under, but if Ludovike prevail, he will put you from all. Of two extreme evils chuſe the more eaſie, and keep that ſecret which I have told you of good will. With that he gave over and departed this life.

The great providence of God for the help of England.
When this was once noiſed among the Barons, they were in great heavineſs, for they ſaw themſelves intrapped every way, and to be in exceeding great danger. Hild this daily augmented that fear which then came upon the Barons. They were extremely hated of the Pope and his Legates, and every week came upon them new Excommunications. Daily detriments they had beſides in their poſſeſſions and goods, in their Lands and Houſes, Corn and Cattel, Wives and Children: So that ſome of them were driven to ſuch need, that they were enforced to ſeek preys and booties for ſuſtaining their miſerable lives. For look whatſoever Prince Ludovike obtained by his Wars, either Territories or Caſtles, he gave them all to his French-men in ſpight of their heads, and ſaid that they were but Traytors, like as they had warning afore, which grieved them worſt of all. At the laſt they perceiving that they in ſeeking to avoid one miſchief, were ready to fall into another much worſe: they began to lay their heads together, conſenting to ſubmit themſelves wholly with all Humility unto the mercy of their late Sovereign and natural Liege Lord King John. And for that they were ſomewhat in doubt of their lives for the Treaſon afore committed, many of the friends of them which were of moſt credit with him, made ſute for them. So were a great number of them pardoned, after inſtant and great ſute made for them. I here omit his recovery of Rocheſter Caſtle and City, with many other dangerous adventures againſt the foreſaid Ludovike, both at London, York, Lincoln, Wincheſter, Norwich, and other places elſe, as things not pertaining to my purpoſe. And now I return to my matter again.

King John poiſoned by a Monk.
Into Suffolk and Norfolk he conſequently journeyed, with a very ſtrong Army of Men, and there with great miſchief he afflicted them, becauſe they had given place and were Sworn to his Enemies. After that, he deſtroyed the Abbies of Peterborough and Crowland, for the great Treaſons which they alſo had wrought againſt him, and ſo he departed from thence into Lincolnſhire.

Pope Innocent the third dieth.
In this year, about the ſeventeenth day of July, died Pope Innocent the third, and was buried in a City called Perufium in Italy: whereas he had traveled to make a peace between the Genovaies and Piſes, for his own commodity and advantage. After him anon ſucceeded one Cintius, otherwiſe called Honorius tertius, a man of very great age: yet lived he in the Papacy ten years and an half, and more. When this was once known in England, greatly rejoyced all they which were King Johns enemies, ſpecially the Prieſts: yet had they ſmall cauſe, as will appear hereafter. They noiſed it all the Realm over, that this new Pope would ſet a new order, and not rule all things as the other Pope did; thinking thereby that he would have done all things to their commodity, but they found it otherwiſe. For he made all them, which were Excommunicated, to pay double and treble, ere they could be reſtored again to their former livings.

Ex Chronico cui titulus Rudogium.
And in the ſelf ſame year, as King John was come to Swinſtead Abbey, not far from Lincoln, he reſted there two days: where (as moſt writers teſtifie) he was moſt Traiterouſly poiſoned by a Monk of that Abbey, of the Sect of the Ciſtercians or S. Bernards Brethren, called Simon of Swinſtead. As concerning the Noble Perſonage of this Prince, this witneſs giveth Roger Hoveden therein, Princeps quidem magnus erat, ſed minus felix, atque, ut Marius, ſtrumque fortunam expertus. Doubtleſs (ſaith he) King John was a mighty Prince, but not ſo fortunate as many were: not altogether unlike to Marius the Noble Roman, he taſted of Fortune both ways, bountiful in mercy; in wars ſometime he wan, ſometime again he loſt. Munificus ac liberalis in exteros fuit, ſed proditionis cauſa ſuorum deprædator, plus advenis quam ſuis confidens. He was alſo very bounteous and liberal unto ſtrangers, but of his own people (for their daily Treaſons ſake) he was a great oppreſſor, ſo that he truſted more to forreiners than to them.

Ra. Monk. Pariſiens.
Among other divers and ſundry conditions belonging to this King, one there was which is not in him to be reprehended but commended rather: For that being far from the ſuperſtition which Kings at that time were commonly ſubject to, he regarded not the Popiſh Maſs, as in certain Chronicles writing of him may be collected: for ſo I find teſtified of him by Matth. Pariſien. that the King upon a time in his Hunting, coming where a very fat Stag was cut up and opened (for how the Hunters tearme it I cannot tell) the King beholding the fatneſs and the liking of the Stag: See, ſaith he, how eaſily and happily he hath lived, and yet for all that he never heard any Maſs.

Ex Cantuens lib.7.

It is recorded and found in the Chronicle of William Coxton called Fructus temporum, and in the ſeventh Book: The foreſaid Monk Simon being much offended with certain talk that the King had at his Table, concerning Ludovike the French Kings Son (which then had entred and uſurped upon him) did caſt in his wicked heart how he moſt ſpeedily might bring him to his end. And firſt of all he Counſelled with his Abbots, ſhewing him the whole matter, and what he was minded to do. He alledged for himſelf the propheſie of Caiaphas, Joh. 11. ſaying; It is better that one man die, than all the people ſhould periſh. I am well contented (ſaith he) to loſe my life, and ſo become a Martyr, that I may utterly deſtroy this Tyrant. With that the Abbot did weep for gladneſs, and much commended his Fervent Zeal, as he took it. The Monk then being abſolved of his Abbot for doing this Act (aforehand) went ſecretly into a Garden upon the backſide, and finding there a moſt venemous Toad, he ſo pricked him and preſſed him with his Pen-knife, that he made him vomit all the poiſon that was within him. This done, he conveyed it into a cup of Wine, and with a ſmiling and flattering countenance he ſaid thus to the King, If it ſhall like your Princely Majeſty, here is ſuch a Cup of Wine as ye never drank better before in all your life time; I truſt this Waſſail ſhall make all England glad: and with that he drank a great draught thereof, the King pledging him.

Wo be to you that call good evil, and evil good. Simon the Monk abſolved of his Abbot for poiſoning his King.

The Monk dieth of his own poiſon.

The Monk anon after went to the Farmary, and there died (his Guts guſhing out of his Belly) and had continually from thenceforth three Monks to ſing Maſs for his Soul, confirmed by their general Chapter. What became after that of King John, ye ſhall know right well in the proceſs following. I would ye did mark well the wholeſome proceedings of theſe holy votaries, how vertuouſly they obey their King, whom God hath appointed, and how religiouſly they beſtow their confeſſions, abſolutions, and Maſſes.

The death of King John.

A Prince to be loving to his ſubjects.

The King within a ſhort ſpace after (feeling great grief in his body) asked for Simon the Monk; and anſwer was made that he was departed this life. Then God have mercy upon me (ſaid he) I ſuſpected as much, after he had ſaid that all England ſhould thereof be glad; he meant now I perceive then of his own Generation. With that he commanded his Chariot to be prepared, for he was not able to ride. So went he from thence to Slaford Caſtle, and from thence to Newark on Trent, and there within leſs than three days he died. Upon his death bed he much repented his former life, and forgave all them with a pitiful heart that had done him injury; deſiring that his Elder Son Henry might be admoniſhed by his example, and learn by his miſfortunes to be natural, favourable, gently, and loving to his natural people. When his body was imbalmed and ſpiced (as the manner is of Kings) his bowels or intrals were buried at Croxton Abbey, which was of the ſect of Premonſtratenſes or Canons of S. Norbert. His hired ſouldiers both Engliſh-men and ſtrangers were ſtill about him, and followed his Corps Triumphantly in their Armor, till they came to the Cathedral Church of Worceſter, and there Honourably was he buried by Silveſter the Biſhop betwixt S. Oſwald and Saint Wolſtan, two Biſhops of that Church. He died in the year of our Lord 1216. the nineteenth day of October, after he had Reigned in ſuch calamity, by the ſubtil conveyance of his Clergy, eighteen years and ſix months and odd days. Now ſo ſoon as King John was dead and buried (as is ſaid before) the Princes, Lords and Barons, ſo many as were of his part (as well of ſtrangers as of them that were born here) by Counſel of the Legate Gualdo, gathered themſelves together, and all with one conſent proclaimed Henry his Son for their King. Of whom more ſhall follow (the Lord willing) hereafter.

King John buried at Wincheſter.

{Anno 1216.

The death of King John.

Many opinions are among the Chroniclers of the death of King John. Some of them do write that he died of ſorrow and heavineſs of Heart, as Polydorus: ſome of ſurfeiting in the night, as Radulphus Niger: ſome of a bloody flux, as Roger Hoveden: ſome of a burning ague, ſome of a could ſweat, ſome of eating Apples, ſome of eating Pears, ſome of Plums, &c.

Thus you ſee what variety is among the writers concerning the death of this King John. Of which writers, although the moſt agree in this, that he was poiſoned by the Monk above named, yet Matthew Paris (ſomething differing from the others) writeth thus concerning his death, That he going from Linn to Lincolnſhire, and there hearing of the loſs of his carriage and of his Treaſures upon the Waſhes, fell in great heavineſs of mind; inſomuch that he fell thereby into a fervent Fever, being at the Abbey of Swinſted. This Ague he alſo increaſed through evil ſurfeiting and naughty diet, by eating Peaches and drinking of new Ciſer, or as we call it Sider. Thus being ſick, he was carried from thence to the Caſtle of Slaford, and from thence to the Caſtle of Newark; where calling for Henry his Son, he gave to him the ſucceſſion of his Crown and Kingdom, writing to all his Lords and Nobles to receive him for their King; and ſhortly after, upon S. Lucies Even, departed this life, being buried at Worceſter, &c.

Matt. Paris in vita Joannis regis.

In Gisburne I find otherwiſe, who, diſſenting from others, ſaith; that he was poiſoned with a diſh of Pears, which the Monk had prepared for the King therewith to poiſon him. Who asking the King whether he would taſte of his Fruit, and being bid to bring them in; according to the Kings bidding, ſo he did. At the bringing in whereof (ſaith the ſtory) the precious ſtones about the King began to ſweat; inſomuch that the King misdoubting ſome poiſon, demanded of the Monk what he had brought. He ſaid, of his Fruit, and that very good, the beſt that ever he did taſte. Eat, ſaid the King. And he took one of the Pears which he did know, and did eat. Alſo being bid to take another, he did eat likewiſe favourly, and ſo likewiſe the third. Then the King, reſraining no longer, took one of the poiſoned Pears, and was therewith poiſoned, as is before, &c.

King Henry the Third.

King Henry the third.

AFter this King John had Reigned (as ſome ſay) ſeventeen years, or as ſome ſay, though falſely, nineteen years; he was (as is above ſaid) poiſoned and died, This King left behind him four Sons and three Daughters, firſt Henry, the ſecond Richard, and he was Earl of Cornwal, the third William of Valentia, the fourth Guido Diſenaie: he had alſo another Son, who afterward was made Biſhop. Of his Daughters, the firſt was Iſabel, married afterward to Fredrick the Emperor; the ſecond named Elenor, married to William Earl Marſhal; the third to Mountford the Earl of Leiceſter, &c. Another Story ſaith that he had but two Daughters, Iſabel and Elenor, or as another calleth her Joan, which was after Queen of Scotland. Ex chronico vetuſto Angliæ.

The iſſue of King John.

This King John being deceaſed, which had many Enemies both of Earls, Barons, and eſpecially of the Popiſh Clergy; Henry the Eldeſt Son was then of the age of nine years, at what time the moſt of the Lords of England did adhere to Ludovike or Lewis the French Kings Son, whom they had ſent for before, in diſpleaſure of King John, to be their King, and had ſwom to him their allegiance. Then William, Earl Marſhal, a Noble Man, and of great Authority, and a grave and ſound Counſellor, friendly and quietly called unto him divers Earls and Barons, and taking this Henry the young Prince, Son of King John, ſetteth him before them, uſing theſe Words, Behold (ſaith he) Right Honorable and well Beloved, although we have perſecuted the Father of this young Prince for his evil demeanor, and worthily; yet this young child whom here ye ſee before you, as he is in years tender, ſo is he pure and innocent from theſe his Fathers doings: wherefore in as much as every man is charged only with the burthen of his own works and tranſgreſſions, neither ſhall the child (as the Scripture teacheth us) bear the iniquity of his Father: we ought therefore of duty and conſcience to pardon this young and tender Prince, and take compaſſion of his age as ye ſee. And now for ſo much as he is the Kings natural and Eldeſt Son, and muſt be our Soveraign and King, and ſucceſſor of this Kingdom; come and let us appoint him

An example of a truly and faithful Counſellor. The creation of the Earl Marſhal for young King Henry. Truly (ſaid he) that you perſecuted him for your enemies, and your own ſake rather than the King. But well might Engliſhmen ſay out of your blind gilds and ſcriptures on.

him our King and Governour, and let us remove from us this Lewis the French Kings Son, and suppress his people, which is a confusion and a shame to our nation, and the yoke of our servitude let us cast off from our shoulders. To these words spake and answered the Earl of Gloucester: And by what reason or right (said he) can we so do, seeing we have called him hither, and have sworn to him our fealty?

Whereunto the Earl Marshal inferred again, and said, Good right and reason we have, and ought of duty to do no less; for that he contrary to our mind and calling hath abused our affiance and fealties. Truth it is we called him, and meant to prefer him to be our Chieftain and Governor; but he eftsoons, surprised in pride, hath contemned and despised us: And if we shall so suffer him, he will subvert and overthrow both us and our nation, and so shall we remain a spectacle of shame to all men, and be as out casts of all the world.

At these words all they, as inspired from above, cryed all together with one voice, Be it so, he shall be our King. And so the day was appointed for his Coronation, which was the day of Simon and Jude. This Coronation was kept, not at Weminster, forsomuch as Westminster the same time was holden of the French-men, but at Gloucester, the safest place (as was thought) at that time in the Realm, Anno 1216. by Swalo the Popes Legate, through Counsel of all the Lords and Barons that held with his Father King John, to wit, the Bishop of Winchester, Bishop of Bath, Bishop of Chester, and Bishop of Worcester, the Earl Randolph of Chester, William Earl Marshal, William Earl of Pembroke, William Tren Earl of Feres, William de Brues, Serle or Samarike de Mal Baron. These were at the Crowning of the King at Gloucester. Many other Lords and Barons there were, which as yet held with Lewis the French Kings Son, to whom they had done their Homage before. And immediatly after the Crowning of this King he held his Council at Bristow at S. Martins feast; where were assembled eleven Bishops of England and Wales, with divers Earls and Barons and Knights of England, all which did swear Fealty to the King. After which Homage thus done to the King, the Legate Swalo interdicted Wales, because they held with the foresaid Lewis; and also the Barons and all others, as many as gave help or Counsel to Lewis, or any other that moved or stirred any War against King Henry the new King, he accursed them. All which notwithstanding, the said Lewis did not cease, but first laid siege to the Castle of Dover fifteen days. When he could not prevail there, he took the Castle Berkhamsted, and also the Castle of Henford, doing much harm in the Countries, in spoiling and robbing the people where he went: by reason whereof the Lords and Commons, which held with the King, assembled themselves together to drive Lewis and his men out of the Land. But some of the Barons with the French-men in the mean season went to Lincoln and took the City, and held it to the use of Lewis. Which being known, eftsoons a great power of the Kings part made thither, as Earl Ranulph of Chester, William Earl Marshal, and William de la Brues Earl of Feres, with many other Lords, and gave battel unto Lewis and his party; so that in conclusion Lewis lost the field, and of his side were slain the Earl of Parchis, Saer de Quincie Earl of Winchester, Henry de la Bohun Earl of Hertford, and Sir Robert le Fitzwater, with divers other more. Whereupon Lewis for succor fled to London, causing the Gates there to be shut and kept, waiting there for more succor out of France. Which as soon as the King had knowledge of, immediatly he sent to the Maior and Burgesses of the City, willing them to render them and their City to him as their chief Lord and King, promising to grant to them again all their Franchises and liberties as in times past, and to confirm the same by his great Charter and Seal. In this mean time on Bartholomew Even, Eustace a French Lord, accompanied with many other Lords and Nobles of France, come with a grand power, to the number of a 100 Ships to aid and assist the said Lewis; who before they arrived, were encountred upon the Seas by Richard, King Johns Bastard Son; who, having no more but eighteen Ships to keep the Cinque ports, set eagerly upon them, and through Gods Grace overcame them, where presently he smote off the Head of Eustace: the rest of the French Lords, to the number of ten, he brought with him to the Land, where he imprisoned them in the Castle of Dover, and slew almost all their men that came with them, and sunk their Ships in the Sea, only fifteen Ships (saith some of my stories) escaped away. Ludovike or Lewis hearing this loss of his Ships and Men, and misdoubting his own life for the great mischief he had done to the Realm, sought means by Swalo and the Archbishop of Canterbury and by other Lords, to be at accord with the King. With whom at length it was so concluded and agreed, that for his costs and expenses, he should have a Thousand pound of Silver given. Parisiensis speaketh of fifteen thousand Marks (which he borrowed of the Londoners) that he should depart the Realm never to return into England again, neither he nor none of his.

This done, upon the same he, with all the other Barons that took his part, was assoiled of Swalo the Legate. And thus peace being confirmed at Merton, Lewis took his leave, and being brought Honourably to the Sea with the Bishop of Canterbury and other Bishops, Earls and Barons, he returned home into France.

And here, saith Gisburn, it was truly verified that was before spoken of the French King, Father of Lewis. At what time the said Lewis was in England, his Father the French King demanded of his Messengers coming into France, where his Son was? And they said at Stamford. And he asking again whether he had got the Castle of Dover? And they said no. Then the Father swearing by the Arm of Saint James: My Son (quoth he) hath not one foot in England, as afterward well proved true. Ex Gisburn.

But the chiefest help that repelled Lewis and the French men out of the Realm, and that most preserred King Johns Son to the Crown, was the singular working of Gods hand, whereof mention was made before: which was through the confession of a certain Gentleman of the French Host (as Florilegus doth testifie) who lying sore sick at the point of death, and seeing no hope to escape, was touched in conscience for danger of his souls health, openly to confess and utter to the Barons of England, what was the purpose of the French-men to do; who were conspired and sworn together among themselves, with a privy compaction, that so soon as they subdued the Land, they should thrust all the chief and Nobles thereof into perpetual exile out of the Realm, whereout they should never return again. This coming to the ears of the Barons, as is said, gave them to consider more with themselves, whereby many of them were the more willing to leave Lewis, and apply to their natural King and Prince. Which no less may also be an admonition to all times and ages for English-men to take heed, and not to admit or to place foreign Rulers into the Realm, lest perhaps it follow that they be displaced themselves.

After the happy departure of this Lewis and his French-men out of the Land, whereby the State of this Realm, long vexed before, was now somewhat more quieted: immediatly Swalo the Legate, looking to his Harvest, directeth fourth Inquisitors through every Shire, to search out all such Bishops, Abbots, Proirs, Canons, and secular Priests, of what order or degree soever they were, that with any succor or counsel did either help, or else consented to Lewis. For all these were exempted out of the Charter of pardon and absolution made before, between the King and Lewis. By reason whereof no small gain grew to the Pope and the Cardinal; for all such were either put out of their livings and sent up to the Pope; or else were fain to fine sweetly for them. Among whom (besides a great number of other Clerks, both Religious and Secular) was Hugo Bishop of Lincoln, who, for the recovery of his Bishoprick, disbursed 1000. Marks to the Pope, and 100. Marks to the foresaid Swalo the Legate, who now (as Paris recordeth) by this time had gathered in a fair crop of that which he did never sow. Ex Mat. Paris, &c.

About this season, or not much before, died Pope Innocentius the third, in the nineteenth year of his Popedom, to whose custody Fredricus the Nephew of Fredrick Barbarossa, being yet young, was committed by the Empress his Mother; of whom more shall follow (the Lord willing) hereafter. After this Innocent, next succeeded Pope Honorius the third, who writing to young King Henry in

And this seemeth the chiefest Article of that his writing to him.

A strange tale of Pope Honorius, If it be true.

Of this Pope Honorius, Abbas Ursbergensis (who lived in the same time) reporteth a strange wonder, more strange peradventure than credible; which is this, Honorius being Priest in Rome (whose name was then Centius) and Procurator to Jacintus a Cardinal: so it befel, that his Master sent him abroad about Rome, to borrow and procure money for him against his Journey into Spain: for Pope Clement then intended to send this Jacintus his Legate into Spain. As this Centius was walking by himself all sad and follicitous to speed his Masters Message, there cometh to him a certain aged and reverend Father, and asketh him, What cause he had to walk so heavy and carefull? To whom he answered again, and signified the occasion of his business that then he had to do. Then the old Father said to him, Go and return home again, for thy Master (saith he) shall not at this time go to Spain. How so (quoth the other) how is that true? As true (saith he) as it is certain that the Pope shall die, and thy said Master shall be Pope after him. Centius, thinking that to be unlikely, said, He could not believe that to be true. To whom the other inferreth again, So know this (said he) to be as certain, as it is true that the City of Hierusalem this day is taken of the Saracens, and shall not be recovered again from them, before the time of thy Papacy. And thus speaking (saith Ursperg.) he vaded suddenly away. Ex Abbate Ursperg. in Chronico.

Ex Abbate Ursperg. in Chronico.

After that it so pleased the merciful Providence of Almighty God, to work this great mercy upon the flock of King John (which notwithstanding the unkind Prelates with their false Prophets had declared before, That never any of them should succeed in the Throne after that King) and also unto the whole Common-wealth of the Realm, in delivering them from the dangerous Service of Ludwick and the foresaid Frenchmen. After their departure, the next year following, Anno 1218. which was the third of this Kings Reign, the Archbishop S. Langton, and the Bishops, Earls and Barons resorted to London unto the King at Michaelmas next following, and there held a great Parliament, wherein were confirmed and granted by the King all the Franchises which were made and given by King John his Father at Runemedow, and them he confirmed and ratified by his Charter; which long time after (saith mine Author) unto his days did continue, and were holden in England. For the which cause, by the Nobles and Commons was given and granted again unto the King two shillings for every plow-land through England. And Hubert Burgh was made Chief Justice of England, of whose Troubles more is to be said hereafter. And this was the third year of King Henry, and the fiftieth year after the death of Thomas Becket; wherefore the said Becket the same year next following was taken up and shrined for a new Saint made of an old Rebel. Thither came such resort of people of England and of France, that the Country of Kent was not sufficient to sustain them. Ex Historia D. Scales. About the same time Isabel the Kings Mother was married to the Earl of March. And William Marshall the good Earl died, which was the Governor of the King and the Realm, not without great lamentation of the people of England. Then was the King committed to the Government of Peter Bishop of Winchester. This noble Earl left behind him five Sons, and five Daughters.

{Anno 1218.}

King Henry confirmed the Liberties granted by King John.

Two shillings of every plow-land granted to King Henry.

Thomas Becket thrined.

Ex Historia D. Scales. William Marshall dieth and was buried at the Temple.

The year next ensuing, Anno 1219. it was ordained and proclaimed through all the Land, that all Aliens and Foreigners should depart the Realm, and not return to the same again, only such excepted as used Traffick or Trade of Merchandize under the Kings safe Conduct. This Proclamation was thought chiefly to be set forth for this cause, to avoid out of the Land Foukes de Brent, Philip de Marks, Egelardus de Cicomia, William Earl Albemarle, Robert de Veteri ponte, Britheuus de Insula, Hugo de Baillinell, Roger de Gaugi, with divers other strangers more, which kept Castles and Holds of the Kings against his will. Of whom the forenamed Foukes was the Principal, who fortified and held the Castle of Bedford, which he had by the Gift of King John, with might and strength against the King and his Power, near the space of three months. Moreover he went about to apprehend the Kings Justices at Dunstable; but they, being warned thereof, escaped all, except Henry Braibroke, whom he imprisoned in the said Castle. The King hearing hereof, and consulting with his Clergy and Nobles, made his Power against the same. Which after long Siege and some slaughter at length he obtained, and hanged almost all that were within, to the number of ninety and seven, which was (as Paris writeth) about the seventh or eighth year of his Reign. Foukes the same time was in Wales; who, hearing of the taking of the Castle, conveyed himself to the Church of Coventry. At length submitting himself to the Kings mercy, upon consideration of his Service done before to the Kings Father, he was committed to the Custody of Eustace Bishop of London, and afterwards being deprived of all his Goods, Possessions and Tenements within the Realm, was forced to perpetual banishment, never to return to England again.

{Anno 1219.} Aliens commanded out of England.

Foukes de Brent rebelled against King Henry.

Here (by the way) I find it noted in Paris, that after this aforesaid Foukes had spoiled and razed the Church of Saint Paul in Bedford, for the building up of his Castle; the Abbots of Helvestue, bearing thereof, caused the Sword to be taken from the Image of S. Paul standing in the Church, so long as he remained unpunished. Afterward the, bearing him to be committed to the custody of S. Paul in London, caused the Sword to be put into the hands of the Image again. Matth. Parisiens. in vita Hem. 3.

Ex Paris. ibi.

{Anno 1220.}

About this year the young King the second time was crowned again at Westminster, about which time began the new building of our Lady Church at Westminster. Shortly after Gualo the Legate was called home again to Rome. For the holy Father (as Matth. Paris reporteth) being sick of a Spiritual Dropsie, thought this Gualo (having so large occupying in England) to be able somewhat to cure his disease. And to that Legate returned with all his bags well stuffed, leaving Pandulph behind him to supply that Bayliwick of his great Grandfather the Pope.

King Henry crowned the second time at Westminster.

The life and acts of Pope Innocentius the Third are partly described before, how he intruded Stephen Langton against the Kings will into the Archbishoprick of Canterbury, stirring up also sixty and four Monks of the same Church of Canterbury privily to work against the King. Moreover how he did Excommunicate the said King as a publick Enemy of the Church, so long as the said King withstood his tyrannical doings, putting him and his whole Kingdom under interdiction, for the space of five years and three months, and at length deposed and deprived him from his Scepter, keeping it in his own hands for five days. How he absolved his Subjects from their due Obedience and Subjection unto him. How he gave away his Kingdoms and Possessions to Lewis the French Kings Son, commanding the said Lewis to spoil him both of lands and life. Whereupon the King (being forsaken of his Nobles, Prelates, and Commons) was inforced against his will to submit himself, and sware Obedience unto the Pope, paying unto him a yearly Tribute of 1000 Marks by year, for receiving his Kingdom again, whereby both he and his Successors after him were Vassals afterwards unto the Pope. And these were the Apostolical Acts of this holy Vicar Pope Innocentius.

Vicar in the Realm of England. Moreover, he condemned Almericus a worthy learned man and a Bishop, for an Heretick, for teaching and holding against Images. Also he condemned the Doctrine of Joachim Abbas (whom we spake of before) for Heretical. This Pope brought first into the Church the paying of private Tythes. He ordained the receiving once a year at Easter. Unto the Papal decretals he added the Decree, Omnes utriusque sexus, &c. Also the reservation of the Sacrament, and the going with the Bell and light before the Sacrament was by him appointed. In the said Council of Lateran he also ordained that the Canon of the Mass should be received with equal Authority, as though it had proceeded from the Apostles themselves. He brought in Transubstantiation. Look in the decretals, Titulo 1. De summa Trinit. & fide Catholica, cap. firmiter credimus.

Item, the said Innocentius the Third ordained that none should marry in the third degree, but only in the fourth degree, and so under.

Marriage in the third degree forbidden.

The said Pope stirred up Otho against Philip the Emperor, because the said Philip was elected Emperor against his will; upon the occasion whereof followed much war and slaughter in Germany. And afterward against the said Otho, whom he had made Emperor, he set up Frederick King of Cicile, and caused the Archbishop of Maience to pronounce him Excommunicate in all his Titles, and to be depofed of his Empire. For the which cause the Princes of Germany did invade his Bithoprick, spoiling and burning his Possessions. The cause why the Pope so did accurse and depose him, was, for that the said Otho did take and occupy Cities, Towns and Castles, which the Pope said appertained to him.

The Pope setteth Kings and Emperors together by the ears. Philip the Emperor deposed. Otho the Emperor deposed.

Item, the said Pope Ordained, That if any Princes offended one another, the correction should appertain unto the Pope. In this Council of Lateran were Archbishops and Primates 61, Bishops 400, Abbots 12, Priors and Conventuals 800, besides other Ambassadors, Legates, Doctors and Lawyers an innumerable sort, &c.

The Councell of Lateran.

In the History of Hermanus Mutius, we read how in the year of our Lord, 1212. in this Popes time divers Noblemen, and others in the Country of Alsatia, contrary to the tradition of the Romish Popes, did hold that every day was free for eating of flesh, so it be done soberly. After that they did wickedly, which restrained Priests and Ministers from their lawful Wives, for the which cause (as is in the foresaid Author) by this Pope Innocentius the Third and his Bishops, an hundred of them in one day were burned and martyred.

Ex Hermano Mutio.

Martyrs of Alsatia to the number of one hundred burned in one day.

Some other History (as Nauclerus) recordeth also, that at the same time many were in the City of Millain of the said Doctrine, which used to send Collects unto the foresaid Saints of Alsatia. Ex Nauclero.

Collects sent from the Brethren of Millain to them of Alsatia.

In the Chronicle of Gualter Hemingford, otherwise called Gisburnensis, it is recorded, that in the days of this King John and Pope Innocent, began the two Sects, or Orders of Fryers, one called The Preachers Order, and black Fryers of S. Dominick; the other called The Minorits of S. Francis. The Preachers of black Fryers Order began of one Dominick a Spaniard, about the parts of Tholouse, who after he had laboured ten years in preaching against the Albingenses, and such other as did hold against the Church of Rome, afterward coming up to the Council of Lateran with Fulco Bishop of Tholouse, defired of the foresaid Innocent the Third, to have his order of preaching Fryers confirmed, which the Pope a great while refused to grant: at length he had a dream, that the Church of Lateran was ready to fall. Which when he beheld, fearing and much sorrowing thereat, cometh in this Dominick, who with his shoulders underpoped the Church, and so preserved the building thereof from falling, &c. And right well this dream may seem verified, for the Fryers have been always the chief Pillars and Upholders of the Popes Church. Upon this the Pope (waking out of his dream) called Dominick to him, and granted his petition: and so came up this wolvish Order of the Dominicks. I call it wolvish, for that his Mother when she was great with this Dominick, dreamed that she had in her womb a Wolf, which had a burning Torch in his mouth. The which dream the Preachers of that Order do greatly advance, and expound to their Orders glory, as well as they can. Nevertheless, howsoever they expound it, they can make a Wolf but a Woolf, and this a wolvish Order. The rule which they follow seemeth to be taken out of S. Augustine, as who should say, That Christs Rule were not enough to make a Christian man. Their profession standeth upon three principal Points, as thus described, Charitatem habentes, humilitatem servantes, & paupertatem voluntariam possidentes; That is, Having Charity, holding Humility, and possessing wilful Poverty. Their habit and clothing is black.

Observant Fryers begin.

Fryers upholders of the Popes Church.

The Order of the Minors or Minorit-Fryers descended from one Francis an Italian of the City of Assisium. This Assisium-Asi, who I suppose was some simple and rude Idiot, hearing upon a time how Christ sent forth his Disciples to preach, thought to imitate the same in himself and his Disciples, and so left off his shooes: he had but one Coat, and that of course Cloth. In stead of a latchet to his shooe, and of a Girdle, he took about him an hempen Cord, and so he apparelled his Disciples, teaching them to fulfill (for so he speaketh) the perfection of the Gospel, to apprehend poverty, and to walk in the way of holy simplicity. He left in writing, to his Disciples and Followers, his Rule, which he called Regulam Evangelicam, The Rule of the Gospel. As though the Gospel of Christ were not a sufficient Rule to all Christian men, but it must take his perfection of frantick Francis. And yet for all that great presumption of this Francis, and notwithanding this his rule, founding to the derogation of Christs Gospel, he was confirmed by this Pope Innocent. Yea, and such Fools this Francis found abroad, that not only he had Followers of his doltish Religion (both of the Nobles and unnobles of Rome) but also some there were, which builded Mantions for him and his Fryers. This Francis, as he was superstitious in casting all things from him, as his Girdle, girding a Cord about him; so in outward chastising of himself, so strait he was to his flesh (leaving the ordinary remedy appointed by God) that in Winter season he covered his body with Ice and Snow. He called poverty his Lady, he kept nothing over night. So desirous he was of Martyrdom, that he went to Syria to the Soldan, which received him honourably. Whereby it may be thought, that (surely) he told not the truth, as S. John Baptist did in Herods house. For truth is seldom welcome in Courts, and in the world. But it is hard to make a Martyr of him which is no true Confessor. I will here pass over the Fable, how Christ and his Saints did mark him with five wounds. These Franciscan or begging Fryers, although they were all under one Rule and clothing of S. Francis, yet they be divided into many Sects and Orders, some go on treen shooes or pattins, some barefoored, some regular Franciscans or Observants, some Minors or Minorits, others be called Minimi, others of the Gospel, others De Capatio. They all differ in many things, but accord in Superstition and Hypocrisie. And for so much as we have here entred into the matter of these two Orders of Fryers, by the occasion hereof I thought a little by the way to digress from our story, in reciting the whole Catalogue or Rabblement of Monks, Fryers and Nuns of all Sects, Rules and Orders, set up and confirmed by the Pope. Thus hast thou, if thou pleasc (gentle Reader) to know what Orders and what Sects of Religion have been set up by the Pope, the Catalogue and number of them all, so far as we could search them out, not only in Books printed of late in Germany, namely by the reverend Father Martin Luther: but also conferred with another English Book which came to our hands, containing the same likes Notes of ancient Antiquity, the number of which Rabblement of religious persons came to 101. Now as I have reckoned up the names and varieties of these prodigious Sects, it cometh to mind consequently to infer the Prophesie of Hildegardis, as well against the whole rout of Romish Prelates, and the fall of that Church, as especially against the begging Fryers, and such other unprofitable bellies of the Church. This Hildegardis is holden of the Papists themselves to be a great Prophetess: whose Prophesie proceedeth in this manner, first against the Priests and Prelates of the Romish Church, as followeth.

The Prophesie of Hildegardis of the ruine of Rome, and against the begging Fryers.

Hildegardis a Nun, and (as many judged) a Prophetess, lived in the year 1146. In her prophesies she doth most grievously reprehend not only the wicked and abominable life of the spiritual Papists, but also the contempt of the Ecclesiastical Office, and also the horrible destruction of the Church of Rome. In a certain place she hath these words, And now is the Law neglected among the spiritual people, which neglect to teach and to do good things; the Master likewise and the Prelates do sleep, despising Justice and laying it aside. In a certain Vision the Church appeared to her in the shape of a woman, complaining that the Priests had berayed her face with dust, and rent her coat, &c. and that they did not shine over the people, neither in Doctrine, neither in example of life: but rather contrariwise, that they have driven the innocent Lamb from them. She said moreover, That all Ecclesiastical Order did every day become worse and worse, and that Priests did not teach but destroy the Law of God: and for these horrible Crimes and Impieties, she threatneth and prophesieth unto them Gods most heavy wrath and displeasure, and doleful punishments. There is no cause why the spiritual Papists should flatter themselves upon this, that the promised again to the Ministers of the Church those goods things to follow, like as Johannes de Rupe scissa doth, and other such like Prophets for they say, it will come to pass, that they must repent before the times be amended. By which thing (undoubtedly) they mean the godly Ministers in the reformed Churches, which for the most part were of the spiritual number, and yet did forsake the dishoneſt life and those wicked Idolatries. Now, whereas the Priests and Monks; that is, the whole Rabble and Spiritualty do account Hildegard for a true Prophetess; they ought to consider that by her they are more severely accursed, not as by a woman, but as by God himself. And I pray you, what Abomination, Impiety, and Idolatry hath been committed since that time by the spiritualty? I will note here a certain Prophesie of hers, taken out of the common places of Henry Token, because we see it manifestly fulfilled in our time. She prophesieth of the reformation of Religion, and saith that it shall be most godly.

A Prophesie for the decay of the Romish Church

Then shall the Crown of Apostolical Honour be divided, because there shall be found no Religion among the Apostolical Order, and for that cause shall they despise the dignity of that Name, and shall set over them other men and other other Archbishops. Insomuch that the Apostolick See of that time (by the diminution of his Honour) shall scarce have Rome, and a few other Countries thereabout under his Crown. And these things shall partly come to pass by insedition of Wars, and partly also by a Common Council and consent of the spiritual and secular persons. Then shall Justice flourish, so that in those days men shall honestly apply themselves to the ancient customs and discipline of ancient men, and shall observe them as ancient men did.

The gloss agreeth, &c.

These things thus premised, now will we come to the Prophesie of the foresaid Hildegard, concerning the foresaid Begging Fryers above mentioned, reciting her words, not only as they are printed in a Book printed of late in Germany; but also as my self have seen and read, agreeing to the same Book word for word, and yet have the same to shew, written in old parchment leaves, in such sort, as the thing it self most evidently declareth a great iniquity of time. The words of her Prophesie be these:

Hildegards prophesie of Fryers and Monks

In those days shall arise a senseless people, proud, greedy, without faith, and subtil, the which shall eat the sins of the people, holding a certain Order of foolish devotion under the feigned Cloke of beggery, preferring themselves above all others by their feigned devotion, arrogant in understanding, and pretending holiness, walking without themselfness or the fear of God, in inventing many new mischiefs strong and stout. But this Order shall be accursed of all wise men and faithful Christians. They shall cease from all labour, and give themselves over unto idleness, choosing rather to live through flattery and begging. Moreover they shall together study how they may perversly resist the Teachers of the Truth, and slay them together with the Noblemen: how to seduce and deceive the Nobility, for the necessity of their living, and pleasures of this world: for the Devil will graft in them four principal Vices, (that is to say) flattery, envy, hypocrisie, and slander. Flattery, that they may have large Gifts given them. Envy, when they see Gifts given to others, and not to them. Hypocrisie, that by false dissimulation they may please men. Detraction, that they may extol and commend themselves, and backbite others, for the praise of men, and seducing of the simple. Also they shall wittingly preach, but without devotion or example of the Martyrs, and shall detract the secular Princes, taking away the Sacraments of the Church from the true Pastors, receiving Alms of the poor, diseased, and miserable, and also associating themselves with the common people, having familiarity with women, instructing them how they shall deceive their Husbands and Friends by their flattery and deceitful words, and to rob their Husbands to give it unto them, for they will take all these stollen and evil gotten goods, and say, Give it unto us, and we will pray for you; so that they being curious to bide other mens faults, do utterly forget their own. And alas, they will receive all things of Rovers, Pickers, Spoilers, Thieves and Robbers, of Sacrilegious persons, Usurers and Adulterers, Heretick, Schismaticks, Apostates, Whores and Bawds, of Noble men, Perjurers, Merchants, false Judges, Souldiers, Tyrants, Princes, of such as live contrary to the Law, and of many perverse and wicked men, following the perswasion of the Devil, the sweetness of sin, a delicate and transitory life, and subtilty: even unto eternal damnation.

All these things shall manifestly appear in them unto all people, and they (day by day) shall wax more wicked and hard hearted: and when as their wickedness and deceits shall be found out, then shall their gifts cease, and then shall they go about their houses hungry, and as mad dogs looking down upon the Earth, and drawing in their necks as Doves, that they might be satisfied with bread. Then shall the people cry out upon them: Woe be unto you ye miserable children of sorrow, the world hath seduced you, and the Devil hath bridled your mouths, your flesh is frail, and your hearts without savour, your minds have been unstedfast, and your eyes delighted in much vanity and folly, your dainty bellies desire delicate meats, your feet are swift to run unto mischief. Remember when you were apparently Blessed, yet envious; poor in sight, but rich; simple to see to, but mighty flatterers, unfaithful betrayers, perverse detractors, holy hypocrites, subverters of the truth, evermuch upright, proud, unshamefast, unstedfast teachers, delicate martyrs, confessors for gain; meek, but slanderers; religious, but covetous; humble, but proud; pitiful, hard hearted liers; pleasant flatterers, persecutors, oppressors of the poor, bringing in new Sects newly invented of your selves; merciful thoughts, but sinned wicked; lovers of the world, sellers of pardons, spoilers of benefices, unprofitable orators, seditious conspirators, drunkards, defyers of honours, maintainers of mischief, robbers of the world, unstainable preachers, menpleasers, seducers of women, and sowers of discord, of whom Moses the glorious Prophet spake very well in his song, A people without counsel or understanding: would to God they did know and understand and forsee the end. You have builded up on high, and when you could ascend no higher, then did you fall even as Simon Magus, whom God overthrew, and did strike with a cruel plague; so you likewise through your false Doctrine, naughtiness, lies, detractions, and wickedness, are come to ruine. And the people shall say unto them, Go ye Teachers of wickedness, Subverters of the Truth, Brethren of the Sanamite, Fathers of Heresies, false Apostles, which have fained your selves to follow the life of the Apostles, and yet have not fulfilled it in part: ye Sons of Iniquity, we will not follow the knowledge of your ways, for Pride and Presumption hath deceived you, and insatiable Concupiscence hath subverted your erroneous hearts. And when as you would ascend higher than was meet or comely for you (by the just Judgment of God) you are fallen back into perpetual opprobry and shame.

This Hildegardis (whole Prophesie we have mentioned) lived about the year of our Lord 1146. as we read in Chronico Martini.

Cross-bearers or Fryers.

About the same time that these Franciscans and Dominick Fryers began (which are above mentioned) sprang up also the Cross-bearers, or Crouched-Fryers, taking their Original and occasion of Innocent the Third, which Innocent raised up an Army (signed with a cross on their Breast) to fight against the Albingenses, whom the Pope and his Sect accounted for Hereticks about the parts of Tholouse. What these Albingenses were, it cannot be well gathered by the old Popish Histories: for if there were any that did hold, teach or maintain against the Pope or his Papal pride, or withstand and gainsay the beggerly Traditions, Rites, and Religions, &c. the Historians of that time (for the most part in writing of them) do so deprave and misreport them (suppressing the truth of their Articles) that they make them and paint them forth to be worse than Turks and Infidels. And that, as I suppose, caused Marth. Parisiensis and others of that sort, to write so of them as they did: otherwise it is to be thought (and so I find in some Records) that the Opinions of the said Albingenses were found enough, holding and professing nothing else but only against the wanton Wealth, Pride and Tyranny of the Prelates, denying the Popes Authority to have ground of the Scriptures: neither could they away with their Ceremonies and Traditions, as Images, Pardons, Purgatory of the Romish Church, calling them (as some say) blasphemous Occupyings, &c. Of these Albingenses were slain (at times) and burned a great multitude by the means of the Pope, and Simon Ecclesiasticus, with others more. It seemeth that these Albingenses were chiefly abhorred of the Pope, because they set up a contrary Pope against him about the coasts of Burgarorum: for the which cause the Bishop called Portimensis, being the Popes Legate in those quarters, writeth to the Archbishop of Rome and other Bishops in this wise:

Albigenses.

A Letter of the Bishop Portimensis concerning the Albingenses.

Venerabilibus patribus, Dei gratia Rothomagensi Archiepiscopo & ejus suffraganeis Episcopis, salutem in Domino Jesu Christo. Dum pro sponsa veri Crucifixi vestrum cogimur auxilium implorare, potius compellimur lacerari singultibus & plorare. Ecce quod videmus loquimur, & quod scimus testificamur. Ille homo perditus, qui exaltatur super omne quod colitur aut dicitur Deus, jam habet perfidiæ suæ preambulum hæresiarchum, quem hæretici Albingenses Papam suum nominant, habitantem finibus Burgarorum & Croatiæ, & Dalmatiæ, juxta Hungarorum Nationem. Ad eum confluunt hæretici Albingenses, at ad eorum consulta respondeat. Et enim de Carcasona oriundus vices illius antipapæ gerens Bartholomæus, hæreticorum Episcopus, finestram ei exhibendo reverentiam, sedem & locum concessit in villa quæ Portos appellatur, & seipsum transfulit in in partes Tholosanas. Ipse Bartholomæus, in literarum suarum undique discurrentium tenore, se in primo salutationis alloquio intitulat in hunc modum: Bartholomæus servus servorum, M. sanctæ fidei salutem. Ipse etiam inter alias enormitates creat Episcopos, & Ecclesias perfide ordinare contendit. Rogamus igitur attentius, & per assertionem sanguinis Jesu Christi, & propentias obsecramus, authoritate domini Papæ qua fungimur, in hac parte districte præcipientes, quatenus veniatis Senonas in oct. Apostolorum Petri & Pauli proximè futuris, ubi & alii Prælati Franciæ, fervente Domino congregabuntur, parate consilium dare in negotio prædicto, & cum aliis qui ibidem aderunt providere super negotio Albingensi. Alioqui inobedientiam vestram domino Papæ curabimus significari. Datum apud Plawium 6. nonas Julii.

For so much as mention is here made of these superstitious Sects of these Friers, and such other beggerly Religions, it might seem not much impertinent, being moved by the occation hereof, as I have done in Hildegardis before, to now to annexe also to the same a certain other ancient Treatise compiled by Geoffery Chaucer, by the way of a Dialogue or Questions, moved in the person of a certain uplandish and simple Ploughman of the country. Which Treatise, for the same, the Author intituled Jack Upland, wherein is to be seen and noted to all the world, the blind ignorance and variable difcord of these irreligious Religions, how rude and unskilful they are in matters and principles of our Christian institution, as by the contents of this present Dialogue appeareth, the words whereof in the same old English wherein first it was set forth in this wise do proceed. Wherein also thou mayest see, that it is no new thing that their blasphemous doings have by divers good men in old time been detected, as there are many and divers other old Books to shew.

The blind ignorance of Friers detected.

A Treatise of Geoffery Chaucer, intituled, Jack Upland.

The Fruits of Antichrist.

I Jack Upland make my mone to very God and to all true in Christ, that Antichrist and his Disciples (by colour of holinefs) walking and deceiving Christs Church by many fake figures, where through (by Antichrist and his) many vertues been transfoyled to vices.

Antichrist his brood.

But the fellieft folk, that ever Antichrift found, been laft brought into the Church and in a wonder wife, for they been of divers Sects of Antichrift, fown of divers countries and kindreds. And all men known well, that they be not obedient to Bifhops, ne Leegemen to Kings: neither the tillen, ne fowen, weeden, ne repen, wodd, corn, ne gras, neither nothing that man fhould help: But only themfelves their lives to fuftain. And thefe men han all manner power of God as they feein in Heaven and in Yearth, to fell Heaven and Hell to whom that them liketh, and thefe wretches weet never were to been themfelfs.

Patience proveth matter trier.

And therefore (Freer) in thine orders and rules been grounded on Goddis Law, tell thou me Jack Upland, that I aske of thee, and if thou be or thinkeft to be on Chrifts fide keep thy paciens.

The Frier muft anfwer according to Gods word.

S Aint Paul teacheth, that all our deeds fhould be doo in charity, and elle it is nought worth, but difpleafing to God and harme to our own fouls. And for that Freers challenge to be greateft Clerks of the Church, and next following Chrift in living: Men fhould for charity ax them fome Queftions, and pray them to ground their anfwers in reafon and holy writ, for elfe their anfwer would nought be worth, be it ftonifhed never fo fair: and as mee think men might skilully ask thus of a Freer.

Friers may better break Gods Law when Mans Law.

1. ℭ Freer, how many orders be in Earth, and which is the perfecteft order? Of what order art thou? who made thine order? What is thy rule? Is there any perfecter rule then Chrift himfelf made? If Chrifts rule be moft perfect, why ruleft thou thee not thereafter? Without more, why fhall a Freer be more punifhed if he break the rule that his patron made, then if he break the hefts that God himfelf made?

2. Approoveth Chrift any more religions then one, that S. James fpeaketh of? If he approoveth no more, why haft thou left his rule and taken another? Why is a Freer Apoftata that leaveth his order and taketh another Seft, fith there is but one Religion of Chrift?

There is but one Religi-on.

3. Why be you wedded fafter to your habits then a man is to his wife? For a man may leave his wife for a year or two as many men done: and if you leave your habit a quarter of a year, ye fhould be holden Apoftatas.

The Frier more bound to his habit then the Man to his Wife.

4. Wherefore maketh you men of religion or no? If it do, then ever as it weareth, your Religion weareth, and after that your habit is better, your religion is better, and when you have liggen it betide, then lig ye your religion betide you, and bin Apoftatas: why bie you fo precious clothes? fith no man feeketh fuch but for vain glory, as S. Gregory faith.

If the habit make the Frier religi-ous, as his habit warmeth, fo doth his religion.

What betokeneth your great hood, your fcalpery, your knotted girdle, and your wide cope?

Hollineſs of all Hypocrites conſiſteth in clothing and outward apparance.

5. Why ufe ye all one colour, more then other Chriftian Men doo? What betokeneth that ye been clothed all in one manner of clothing?

If ye fay, it betokeneth love and charity, Certes then ye be oft Hypocrits, when any of you hateth another, and in that that ye wooll be faid holy by your clothing.

Why may not a Freer wear clothing of another Sect of Friers, fith holineſs ftondeth not in the cloths?

Theſe be they that will not either themſelves, nor ſuffer other men that would.

6. Why hold ye filence in one Houfe more then another, fith men ought over all to fpeak the good and leave the evil?

Why eat you fleſh in one Houſe more then in another, if your rule and your order be perfect, and the Patron that made it?

All Friers fond men.

7. Why get you your difpenfations to have it more eafie? Certes, either it feemeth that ye be unperfect, or he that made it fo hard, that ye may not hold it. And fiker, if ye hold not the rule of your Patrons, ye be not then her Freers, and fo ye lie upon your felves.

Friers be fond Men and quick beggers.

8. Why make you as dead Men when ye be profeſſed, and yet ye be not dead, but more quick beggers then ye were before? And it feemeth evil a dead Man to go about and beg.

Graves not dead men and not courtly Houſe.

9. Why will yee not fuffer your novifes hear your Councels in your Chapter Houſe ere that they have been profeſſed, if your Councels been true and after Gods Law?

10. Why make ye you fo coſtly Houſes to dwell in? fith Chrift did not ſo, and dead Men ſhould have but graves, as falleth it to dead Men, and yet ye have more Courts then many Lords of England: For ye now weniden through the Realm, and each night will lig in your own Courts, and ſo mow but few right Lords do.

Friers not the Kings Liegemen, Friers no mens prayers.

11. Why heire you to ferm your ſimitors, giving therefore eckh year a certain rent, and will not ſuffer one in anothers limitation, right as yee were your ſelves Lords of Countries?

Why be ye not under your Biſhops Viſitations, and leege men to our King?

Why axe ye no letters of bretherheds of other men prayers, as ye deſire that other men ſhould axe letters of you?

Friers gette-ter and bet-ter then God.

If your letters be good, why grant ye them not generally to all manner of men for the more charity?

12. Mow ye make any man more perfect brether for your prayers then God hath by our believe? By our baptiſm and his own grant? If ye mow, Certes then ye be above God.

Why make ye men believe that your golden trental ſong of you, to take therefore ten ſhillings, or at leaſt five ſhillings, wool bring Souls out of Hell, or out of Purgatory? If this be ſooth, Certes ye might bring all Souls out of pain, and that wool ye nought, and then ye be out of charity.

Uncertain-table Eſtate.

13. Why make ye men believe that he that is buried in your habit ſhall never come in Hell, and ye weet not of your ſelf whether ye ſhall to Hell or no? and if this were ſooth, ye ſhould ſell your high Houſes to make many habits for to ſave many mens Souls.

Friers ſtea-ven of mens children.

14. Why ſteal ye mens children for to make hem of your Sect, ſith that theft is againſt Gods hefts, and ſith your Sect is not perfect? ye know not whether the rule, that ye bind him to, be beſt for him or worſt.

15. Why

15. Why undermene ye not your brethren for their treſpaſs after the Law of the Goſpel, ſith that undemening is the beſt that may be? But ye put them in priſon oft when they do after Gods Law, and by S. Auguſtines rule, If any do amiſs and would not amend him, ye ſhould put him from you.

Shrift and burials were more eaſie till that the miniſtring of the Sacraments.

16. Why covet ye ſhrifts and burying of other mens pariſhens, and none other Sacrament that falleth to Chriſtian folk.

Why buſſy ye not to hear to ſhrift of poor folk as well as of rich Lords and Ladies, ſith they mow have more plenty of ſhrift Fathers than poor folk mow.

Why ſay ye not the Goſpel in houſes of bedred men, as ye do in rich mens that mow go to Church and hear the Goſpel?

Poor men have no ſhrift, ſaith my fellow frier.

Why covet you not to bury poor folk among you? ſith that they bin moſt holy (as ye ſaine that ye been for your poverty?)

17. Why will ye not be at hir diriges as ye have bin at rich mens? ſith God praiſeth him more then he doth other men.

Theſe be they that will not either themſelves, nor ſuffer other men that would.

What is thy Prayer worth? ſith thou wilt take therefore, for all Chapmen ye need be moſt wiſe for dread of Simony.

What cauſe haſt thou that thou wilt not Preach the Goſpel, as God ſaith that thou ſhouldeſt? ſith it is the beſt lore and alſo our believe.

Why be ye evil apaid that ſecular Prieſts ſhould Preach the Goſpel? ſith God himſelf hath bodden hem.

The Frier gaineth by a Principle, and yet hateth the Goſpel.

18. Why hate ye the Goſpel to be Preached, ſith ye be ſo much hold thereto? For ye win more by year with In Principio, then with all the rules that ever your patrons made, and in this miniſtrels bin better then ye, for they contrarien not to the miriths that they maken, but ye contrarien the Goſpel both in word and deed.

Judas for littey pence ſold the Prieſt and Frier for four pence-fith. Lieth Chriſt. A compariſon betweed Judas and the Frier.

19. Freer, when thou receiveſt a penny for to ſay a Maſs, whether ſelleſt thou Gods body for that penny, or thy prayer, or elſe thy travel? If thou ſaieſt thou wolt not travel for to ſay the Maſs, but for the penny, that certes if this be ſooth, then thou loveſt too litle meed for thy ſoul: and if thou ſelleſt Gods body, other thy prayer, then it is very Simony, and art become a Chapman worſe then Judas that ſold it for thirty pence.

The Frier wrieth be-cauſe God forgetteth.

20. Why writeſt thou her names in thy Tables that yeveth thee money? ſith God knoweth all things: For it ſeemeth by thy writing that God would not reward him, but thou writeſt in thy Tables, God would els forgotten it.

Why beareſt thou God in hand and ſlandereſt him that he begged for his meat? ſith he was Lord over all, for then had he bin unwiſe to have begged, and have no need thereto.

Freer, after what law ruleſt thou thee? where findeſt thou in Gods law that thou ſhouldeſt thus beg?

21. What manner men needeth for to beg?

For whom oweth ſuch men to beg?

Why beggeſt thou ſo for thy Brethren?

If thou ſaiſt, for they have need, then thou doſt it for the more perfection, or elſe for the leaſt, or els for the mean. If it be the moſt perfection of all, then ſhould all thy brethren do ſo, and then no man needed to beg but for himſelf, for ſo ſhould no man beg but him needed. And if it be the leaſt perfection, why loveſt thou then other men more then thy ſelf? For ſo thou art not well in charity, ſith thou ſhouldeſt ſeek the more perfection after thy power, living thy ſelf moſt after God. And thus leaving that imperfection, thou ſhouldeſt not ſo beg for them. And if it is a good mean thus to beg as thou doeſt, then ſhould no man do ſo, but they bin in this good mean, and yet ſuch a mean granted to you may never be grounded on Gods law; for then both leid and leaud that bin in mean degree of this world, ſhould go about and beg as ye do. And if all ſhould do ſo, certes well nigh all the world ſhould go about and beg as ye done, and ſo ſhould there be ten beggers againſt one yever.

Eſth better to labour and get, then to beg for other mens goods.

Why procureſt thou men to yeve thee their Alms, and faieſt it is ſo needful, and thou wilt not thy ſelf win thee that meed?

22. Why wilt not thou beg for poor bedred men that bin poorer then any of your ſect? That liggen and mow not go about to help himſelfes, ſith we be all brethren in God, and that brotherhed paſſeth any other that ye on any man could make, and where moſt need were, there were moſt perfection, either els ye hold them not your pure brethren, but worſe, but then ye be unperfect in your begging?

Why make ye ſo many maſters among you? ſith it is againſt the teaching of Chriſt and his Apoſtles?

Friers beg from all men to make the Pope rich.

23. Whoſe been all your rich Coutts that ye han, and all your rich Jewels? ſith ye ſaine that ye han nought ne in proper ne in common. If ye ſaine they been the Popes, why getteſt ye then of poor Men and Lords ſo much out of the Kings hand to make your Pope rich? And ſith ye ſaine that it is great perfection to have nought in proper ne in common, why be ye ſo faſt about to make the Pope that is your Father rich, and put on him imperfection? ſithen ye ſaine that your goods been all his, and he ſhould by reaſon be the moſt perfect man, it ſeemeth openlich that ye been curſed children ſo to ſlander your Father and make him imperfect. And if ye ſaine that the goods be yours, then do ye againſt your rule, and if it be not againſt your rule, then might ye have both Plough and Cart, and labor as other good men done, and not ſo to beg by loſengery, and idle as ye doone. If ye ſay that it is more perfection to beg, then to travel or to worch with your hand, why preach ye not openly and teach all men to do ſo? ſith it is the beſt and moſt perfect life to the help of their Souls, as ye make children to beg that might have been rich heirs.

If it be imperfection to be rich, why do the Pope unperfect.

Why make ye not your feaſts ſo poor men and yeveth him yefis, as ye done to the rich? ſith poor man han more need then the rich.

What betokeneth that ye go twain and twain together? If ye be out of charity, ye accord not in ſoul.

Why beg ye and take ſalaries thereto more then other Prieſts? ſith he that moſt taketh, moſt charge hath.

24. Why hold ye not S. Francis rule and his teſtament? ſith Francis faith, that God ſhewed him this living and this rule: and Certes if it were Gods will, the Pope might not fordo it; or elſe Francis was a lier that ſaid ſo on this wife. And but this teſtament that he made accord with Gods will, or elſe erred he as a lier that were out of charity: and as the Law ſaith, he is accuſed that leeveth the rightful laſt will of a dead man. And this teſtament is the laſt will of Francis, that is a dead man; it ſeemeth therefore that all his Freers been curſed.

If Francis order be contrary to Chriſt his teſtament then is Francis accurſed.

25. Why will you not touch no coined money with the croſs, ne with the Kings head, as ye done other Jewels both of Gold and Silver? Certes if ye deſpiſe the Croſs or the Kings Head, then ye be worthy to be deſpiſed of God and the King; and ſith you will receive money in your hearts, and not with your hands, and it ſeemeth that ye hold more holines in your hands then in your hearts, and then be falſe to God.

He that is more holy in hand than in heart, is falſe to God.

26. Why have ye exempt you from our Kings Laws and viſiting of our Biſhops more then other Chriſten men that liven in this Realm, if ye be not guilt of Traitory to our Realm, or treſpaſſers to our Biſhops? But ye will have the Kings Laws for the treſpaſs do to you, and ye will have power of other Biſhops more, then other Prieſts, and alſo have leave to priſon your brethren, as Lords in your Courts, more then other folks han that been the Kings leege men.

A fabliet to exempt himſelf from the Laws of his Prince treaſon.

27. Why ſhall ſome ſect of your Freers pay each a year a certain to her general Provincial or Miniſter, or elſe to her Sovereigns? but if he ſteal a certain number of children (as ſome men ſaine) and certain if this been ſooth, then ye be confrained upon a certain pain to doe theft againſt Gods commandment, Non furtum facies.

Friers are forced to be thieves.

28. Why be ye ſo hardy to grant by Letters of Fraternity to men and women, that they ſhall have part and merit of all your good deeds, and ye weeten never whether God be apaid with your deeds becauſe of your ſin? Alſo ye witten never whether that man or woman be in ſtate to be ſaved or damned, then ſhall he have no merit in Heaven for his own deeds ne for none other mans. And all were it ſo, that he ſhould have part of your good deeds: ſither ſhould he have no more then God would give him after that he were worthy, and ſo much ſhall each man have of Gods yeft without your limitation. But if ye will ſay that ye been Gods fellows, and that he may not do without your aſſent, then be ye blaſphemers to God.

Works of ſupererogation.

God is the limiter of meed and reward, and not the Frier.

29. What

Fryers will not pray, but for them that be of their Fraternity.

29. What betokeneth that ye have ordained, that when such one as ye have made your Brother or Sister, and hath a Letter of your Seal, that Letter mought be brought in your holy Chapter and there be read, or else ye will not pray for him. And but ye willen pray especially for all other that were not made your brethren or sistren, then were we not in right charity, for that ought to be common, and namely in ghostly things.

Fryers do make Apostates.

30. Freer, What Charity is this, to overcharge the people by mighty begging under colour of preaching or prayings, or Masses singing? sith holy Writ biddeth not this, but even the contrary: for all such ghostly deeds should be done freely, as God yeveth them freely?

The number of Fryers superfluous, and as necessary as ten fingers on one hand.

31. Freer, What Charity is this to beguile Children or the commen to discretion, and bind hem to your Orders that bin not grounded in Gods Law against her Friends will? sithen by this folly bin many Apostatas both in will and deed, and many bin Apostatas in her will during all her life, that would gladly be discharged if they will how, and so many bin Apostatas that shoulden in other States have bin true men.

32. Freer, What Charity is this, to make so many Freers in every Country to the charge of the people? sith Parsons and Vicars alone, yea secular Priests alone, yea Monks and Canons alone, with Bishops above them were inough to the Church to do the Priests Office. And to add more then inough is a foul error, and great charge to the people, and this openly against Gods will that ordained all things to be done in weight, number and measure. And Christ himself was apaid with twelve Apostles and a few Disciples, to preach and to do Priests Office to all the whole world, then was it better done then is now at this time by a thousand dele. And right so as four fingers with a thumb in a mans hand helpeth a man to worch, and double number of fingers in one hand should let him more, and so the more number that there were passing the measure of Gods Ordinance, the more were a man letted to worch: right so (as it seemeth) it is of these new Orders that bin added to the Church without ground of holy Writ and Gods Ordinance.

See, (a) saith the Fryer, followeth christ in his Poverty.

33. Freer, What Charity is this, to the people to lye, and say that ye follow Christ in poverty more than other men done? and yet in curious and costly housing, and fine and precious clothing, and delicious and liking feeding, and in Treasure and Jewels, and rich Ornaments, Freers often Lords and other rich wordly men, and sooneth they should bring her cause about (be it never so costly) though Gods Law be put back.

Fryers are the fetters of preachers, but the Gospels.

34. Freer, What Charity is this, to gather up the Books of holy write, and put hem in treasory, and to emprison them from secular Priests and Curates, and by this cautel let hem to preach the Gospel freely to the people without wordly meed, and also to defame good Priests of Heresie, and lien on hem openly for to let hem to shew Gods Law by the holy Gospel to the Christian people?

What hollowneſs is in a Fryers coat.

35. Freer, What Charity is this, to fain so much hollowneſs in your bodily clothing (that you clepe your habit) that many blind Fools desiren to die therein more than in another? and also that a Freer, that leaveth his habit late founden of men, may not be affoiled till he take again, but is Apostata as ye fain, and curſed of God and man both? The Freer believeth truth, and patience, chastity, meekneſs and sobriety, yet for the more part of his life he may soon be affoiled of his Prior, and if he bring home to his houſe much good by the year (be it never so falsely begged and pilled of the poor and needy people in Countries about) he shall be hold a noble Freer. O Lord whether this be Charity?

The flouter begge the nobler Fryer.

36. Freer, What Charity is this, to preaſe upon a rich man, and to intice him to be buried among you from his Parish-Church, and to such rich men give Letters of Fraternity confirmed by your general Seal, and thereby to bear him in hand that he shall have part of all your Masses, Mattens, Preachings, Fastings, Wakings, and all other good deeds done by your Brethren of your Order (both whilſt he liveth, and after that he is dead) and yet ye witten never whether your deeds be acceptable to God, ne whether that man that hath that Letter be able by good living to receive any part of your deeds, and yet a poor man (that ye wite well or supposen in certen to have no good of) ye ne given no such Letters, though he be a better man to God than such a rich man: nevertheleſs, this poor man doth not retch thereof. For as men supposen such Letters and many other that Freers behotten to men, be full falſe deceits of Freers, out of all reaſon, and Gods Law and Christian mens faith.

Why Fryers do desire to have rich men buried in their Fryeries.

Fryers betoths are falſe deceits

37. Freer, What Charity is this, to be Confeſſors of Lords and Ladies, and to other mighty men, and not amend hem in her living? but rather as it seemeth, to be the bolder to pill her poor Tenants, and to live in lechery, and there to dwell in your Office of Confeſſor for winning of worldly goods, and to be hold great by colour of such ghostly Offices? this seemeth rather pride of Freers, than charity of God.

Fryers desire to be Lords and Ladies Confeſſors.

38. Freer, What Charity is this, to fain that who so liveth after your Order, liveth more perfectly, and next followeth the state of Apoſtles in poverty and penmance, and yet the wiſeſt and greateſt Clerks of you wend or send, or procure to the Court of Rome to be made Cardinals or Bishops of the Popes Chaplains, and to be affoiled of the vow of Poverty and Obedience to your Miniſters, in the which (as ye fain) standeth more perfection and merit of your Orders, and thus ye farren as Phariſees that fain one and do another to the contrary.

Fryers and Phariſees say one thing and do another.

Why name ye more the Patron of your Order in your Confiteor when ye begin Maſs, then other Saints, Apoſtles, or Martyrs, that holy Church hold more glorious then hem, and clepe hem your Patrons and your Avowries?

Dilemma.

Freer, Whether was S. Francis in making of his rule that he set thine Order in, a Fool and a Lyar, or else wiſe and true? If ye fain that he was not a Fool, but wiſe; ne a Lyar but true: why shew you contrary by your doing, when by your suggeſtion to the Pope ye faid, That your Rule that Francis made was so hard that ye mow not live to hold it without Declaration and Diſpenſation of the Pope, and so by your deed? Ne let your Patron be a Fool that made a Rule so hard that no man may well keep, and eke your deed proveth him a Lyar, where he faith in his Rule, That he took and learned it of the Holy Ghoſt. For how might ye for shame pray the Pope undo that the Holy Ghoſt bit, as when ye prayed him to diſpence with the hardneſs of your Order?

Which is the beſt Order of Fryars.

Freer, Which of the four Orders of Freers is beſt to a man that knoweth not which is the beſt, but would fain enter into the beſt, and none other? If thou fayeſt that thine is the beſt, then faieſt thou that none of the other is as good as thine, and in this each Freer in the three other Orders woll say that thus lyeſt, for in the ſelf manner each other Freer woll say that his Order is beſt. And thus to each of the four Orders bin the other three contrary in this point: in the which if any say sooth, that is one alone, for there may but one be the beſt of four. So followeth it that if each of theſe Orders answered to this queſtion as thou doſt, three were falſe, and but one true, and yet no man should wite who that were. And thus it seemeth, that the moſt part of Freers bin or should be Lyers in this point, and they should answer thereto. If you say that another Order of the Freers is better than thine, or as good; why took ye not rather thereto as to the better, when thou mightſt have chose at the beginning? And eke why should'ſt thou be an Apoſtata to leave thine Order and take thee to that is better, and so why goeſt thou not from thine Order in that?

Fryers answer one with another, or contrary.

Freer, Is there any perfecter rule of Religion than Christ Gods Son gave in his Goſpel to his Brethren? Or then that Religion that S. James in his Epiſtle maketh mention of? If you say Yes, then putteſt thou on Christ (that is the Wiſdome of God the Father) unkunning, unpower, or evil will: for then he could not make his Rule so good as another did his. And so he had unkunning, that he might not so make his Rule so good as another man might, and so were he unmighty, and not God, as he would not make his Rule so perfect as another did his, and so he had bin evil willed, namely to himſelf.

The Fryer thinketh his Rule perfecter than Christs, because he leaveth the counſel followeth the other.

For if he might and could, and would have made a Rule perfect without default, and did not, he was not Gods Son Almighty. For if any other Rule be perfecter than Christs, then muſt Christs Rule lack of that perfection by as much as the other weren more perfecter, and so were default, and Christ had failed in making of his Rule: but to put any default or failing in God is blaſphemy. If thou say that Christs Rule, and that Religion which S. James maketh mention of, is perfect; why holdeſt thou not thilk Rule without more? And why clepeſt thou the rather of S. Francis or S. Dominicks Rule or Religion or Order, than of Christs Rule or Christs Order?

Dilemma.

Freer, Canſt thou assign any default in Christs Rule of the Goſpel (with the which he taught all men likerly to be saved) if they kept it to her ending? If thou say it was too hard, then sayſt thou Christ lyed; for he said of his Rule, My Yoke is ſoft, and my Burthen light. If thou say Christs Rule was too light, that may be assigned for no default, for the better it may be kept. If thou sayſt that there is no default in Christs Rule of the Goſpel, ſith Christ himſelf ſaith it is light and eaſie: what need was it to Patrons of Freers to add more thereto? and ſo to make an harder Religion to save Freers, than was the Religion of Christs Apoſtles and his Diſciples helden and were saved by. But if they wonlden that her Freers saten above the Apoſtles in Heaven for the harder Religion that they keepen here, ſo would they ſitten in Heaven above Christ himſelf, for their more and ſtrict Obſervations, then ſo should they be better than Christ himſelf with miſchance.

Fryers would ſit in Heaven above the Apoſtles.

Go now forth and frain your Clerks, and ground ye you in Gods Law, and git Jack an anſwer, and when ye han affoiled me that I have said ſadly in truth, I shall ſoil thee of thine Orders, and save thee to Heaven.

If Freers kun not or mow not excuſe hem of theſe queſtions asked of hem, it ſeemeth that they be horrible guilty against God, and her even Chriſtian; for ells wiſe guilts and defaults it were worthy that the Order that they call their Order were foredone. And it is wonder that men ſuſtain hem or ſuffer her live in ſuch manner. For holy write biddeth, That thou do well to the meek, and give not to the wicked, but forbed to give hem bread, leaſt they be made therely mightier through you.

Only the Emperor ſet up and depoſed again by the Pope.

After theſe Digreſſions, now to return to the courſe of our ſtory again. As Henry this King ſucceeded King John his Father, ſo after Innocent the Pope came Honorius the Third, then Gregory the Ninth, &c. And after Otho the Emperor (whom the Pope had once ſet up, and after deprived again) ſucceeded Frederick the Second, as it is partly before touched. In the days of theſe Kings, Popes, and Emperors, it were too long to recite all that happened in England, but eſpecially in Germany, betwixt Pope Honorius, Gregorius and Frederick the Emperor: the horrible Tragedy whereof were enough to fill a whole Book by it ſelf. But yet we mean (God willing) ſomewhat to touch concerning theſe Eccleſiaſtical matters, firſt beginning with this Realm of England.

After that the Kingdom of England had been ſubjected by King John (as hath been ſaid) and made Tributary to the Pope and the Romiſh Church, it is incredible how the unſatiable avarice and greedineſs of the Romans did oppreſs and wring the Commons and all Eſtates and Degrees of the Realm, eſpecially beneficed men, and ſuch as had any thing of the Church. Who, what for their domeſtical Charges within the Realm, what for the Pope, what for the Legates, what for contributing to the holy Land, what for Relaxations, and other ſubtil fleights to get away their money, were brought into ſuch ſlavery, captivity, and penury, that whereas the King neither durſt nor might remedy their Exclamations by himſelf: yet notwithſtanding by his advice, Simon Monifore and the Earl of Leiceſter, with other Noble men (not forgetting what great grievances and diſtreſſes the Realm was brought into by the Romans) thought to work ſome way how to bridle and reſtrain the inſatiable ravening of theſe greedy Wolves. Wherefore they deviſed their Letter, giving ſtrait commandment to the religious men, and to ſuch as had their Churches to farm, that henceforth they ſhould not anſwer the Romans of ſuch Farms and Rents any more, but ſhould pay the ſaid Farms or Rents unto their own Proctors appointed for the ſame purpoſe, as by their writings ſent abroad to Biſhops or Chapters, and other Eccleſiaſtical Houſes, may appear, in this form and effect as followeth.

A complaint of the Nobles of England againſt the intolerable Covetouſneſs of the Pope and Prelates of Rome.

A Complaint of the Nobles of England againſt the coretouſneſs of Rome.

TO ſuch and ſuch a Biſhop, and ſuch a Chapter; all the Univerſity and Company of them, that had rather die than to be confounded of the Romans, wiſheth of England health. How the Romans and their Legates have hitherto behaved themſelves toward you and other Eccleſiaſtical Perſons of this Realm of England, it is not unknown to your diſcretions, in diſpoſing and giving away the Benefices of the Realm after their own luſt, to the intolerable prejudice and grievance both of you and all other Engliſhmen. For whereas the collation of Benefices ſhould and doth properly belong to you and other your fellow-Biſhops (Eccleſiaſtical Perſons) they, thundering againſt you the Sentence of Excommunication, ordain that you ſhould not beſtow them upon any perſon of this Realm, until to every Diocеſs and Cathedral-Church within the Realm, five Romans (ſuch as the Pope ſhall name) be provided for, to the value of every man an hundred pounds by year. Beſides theſe, many other grievances the ſaid Romaniſts do inflict and infer, both to the Laity and Nobles of the Realm, for the Patronages and Alms beſtowed by them and their Anceſtors, for the ſuſtentation of the poor of the Realm, and alſo to the Clergy and Eccleſiaſtical Perſons of the Realm touching their Livings and Benefices. And yet the ſaid Romaniſts, not contented with the premiſſes, do alſo take from the Clergy of this Realm the Benefices which they have, to beſtow them on men of their own Country, &c.

Wherefore, we conſidering the rigorous auſterity of theſe foreſaid Romaniſts, which, once coming in but as ſtrangers hither, now take upon them not only to judge, but alſo to condemn us, laying upon us importable burthens, wherunto they will not put to one of their own fingers to move; and laying our heads together upon a general and full advice had among our ſelves concerning the ſame, have thought good (although very late) to withſtand them, rather than to be ſubject to their intolerable Oppreſſions, and greater ſlavery more hereafter to be looked for. For the which cauſe we ſtraitly charge and command you (as your friends going about to deliver you, the Church, the King, and the Kingdom from that miſerable yoke of Servitude) that you do not intermeddle or take any part concerning ſuch Exactions or Rents to be required or given to the ſaid Romans. Letting you to underſtand for truth, that in caſe you ſhall (which God forbid) be found culpable herein, not only your Goods and Poſſeſſions ſhall be in danger of forfeiting, but you alſo in your perſons ſhall incur the ſame peril and puniſhment as ſhall the ſaid Romiſh Oppreſſors themſelves.

Thus fare ye well.

Example teaching never to take part againſt their King with foreign Power.

¶ Thus much I thought here to inſert and notifie concerning this matter, for that not only the foul and avaricious greedineſs of the Romiſh Church might the more evidently unto all Engliſh-men appear: but that they may learn by this example how worthy they be ſo to be ſerved and plagued with their own Rod, which before would take no part with their natural King againſt foreign Power, of whom now they are ſcourged.

Cardinal Otho Legate.

To make the ſtory more plain: in the Reign of this Henry the third (who ſucceeding, as is ſaid, after King John his Father reigned ſix and fifty years) came divers Legates from Rome to England. Firſt Cardinal Otho ſent from the Pope with Letters to the King, like as other Letters alſo were ſent to other places for exactions of money.

The Pope requireth two Prebendships in every Cathedral-Church.

The King opening the Letters, and perceiving the contents, anſwered, That he alone could ſay nothing in the matter which concerned all the Clergy and Commons of the whole Realm. Not long after a Council was called at Weſtminſter, where the Letters being opened, the ſum was this, Petimus imprimis ab omnibus Eccleſiis Cathedralibus duas nobis præbendas exhiberi, unam de portione two Prebendſhips in every Cathedral-Church. Epiſcopi, & alteram de capitulo: & ſimiliter de canonicis ubi diverſæ ſunt portiones Abbatis & Conventus; a thirdconvenitius quantum pertinet ad unum Monachum, æquals faſta

facta distributione bonorum suorum, & ab Abbate tantumdem; That is, We require to be given unto us, firſt, of all Cathedral-Churches two Prebends, one for the Biſhops part, the other for the Chapter: and likewiſe of Monaſteries where be divers portions, one for the Abbot, another for the Covent: of the Covent ſo much as appertaineth to one Monk, the portion of the goods being proportionally divided: of the Abbot likewiſe as much. The cauſe why he required theſe Prebends was this, It hath been (faith he) an old ſlander, and a great complaint againſt the Church of Rome, and it hath been charged with inſatiable covetouſneſs, which as ye know is the root of all miſchief, and all by reaſon that Cauſes be wont commonly not to be handled, nor to proceed in the Church of Rome without great gifts and expence of money. Whereof ſeeing the poverty of the Church is the cauſe, and the only reaſon why it is ſo ſlandered and evil ſpoken of: it is therefore convenient that you (as natural Children) ſhould ſucceour your Mother. For unleſs we ſhould receive of you and of other good men as you are, we ſhould then lack neceſſaries for our life, which were a great diſhonour to our Dignity, &c.

Note the cauſe why the Pope is compelled to crave money of other Countries.

When thoſe Petitions and Cauſes of the Legate were propounded in the foreſaid Aſſembly at Weſtminſter on the Popes behalf (the Biſhops and Prelates of the Realm being preſent) anſwer was made by the mouth of Maſter John Bedford on this wiſe: that the matter there propponed by the Lord Legate in eſpecial concerned the King of England, but in general it touched all the Archbiſhops with their Suffragans, the Biſhops, and all the Prelates of the Realm. Wherefore, ſeeing both the King by reaſon of his abſence was abſent, and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury with divers other Biſhops alſo were not there, therefore in the abſence of them they had nothing to ſay in the matter, neither could they ſo do without prejudice of them which were lacking. And ſo the Aſſembly for that time brake up.

A Councel at London called.

Not long after, the ſaid Otho, Cardinal De carcere Tulliano, coming again from Rome, Cum autentico plenariæ poteſtatis, indicted another Councel at London, and cauſed all Prelates, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, and other of the Clergy to be warned unto the ſame Councel, to be had in the Church of S. Pauls at London about the Feaſt of S. Martin. The pretence of which Council was for redreſs of matters concerning Benefices and Religion; but the chief and principal was to hunt for money: for putting them in fear and in hope, ſome to loſe, ſome to obtain Spiritual Promotions at his hand, he thought gain would riſe thereby, and ſo it did. For in the mean time (as Pariſienſis in vita Henrici tertii writeth) divers precious Rewards were offered him in Palfries, in rich Plate and Jewels, in coſtly and imputuous Garments ſo richly furred, in Coin, in Victuals, and ſuch like things of value well worthy of acceptation. Wherein one indeavoured to go beyond another in Munificence (not conſidering, by means of the ſervility wherewith they were oppreſſed of thoſe Popiſh ſhavelings and ſhameleſs ſhifters, that all was meer Pillage and Extortion.) Inſomuch that only the Biſhop of Winchester (as the ſtory reporteth) hearing that he would winter at London, ſent him fifty fat Oxen, an hundred Coome of pure Wheat, eight Tun of choſen Wine toward his houſe keeping. Likewiſe other Biſhops alſo for their part offered unto the Cardinals Box after their ability.

Great Rewards given to the Cardinal.

The time of the Council drawing nigh, the Cardinal commanded at the Weſt end of Pauls Church an high and ſolemn Throne to be prepared, riſing up with a glorious Scaffold upon mighty and ſubſtantial Stages ſtrongly builded, and of great height. Thus againſt the day aſſigned, came the ſaid Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, and other of the Prelacy, both far and near throughout all England, wearied and vexed with the Winters Journey, bringing their Letters Procuratory. Who being together aſſembled, the Cardinal beginneth his Sermon. But before we come to the Sermon, there hapned a great diſcord between the two Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York, for ſitting at the right hand and left hand of the glorious Cardinal, for the which the one appealed againſt the other. The Cardinal to pacifie the ſtrife between them both, ſo that he would not derogate from either of them, brought forth a certain Bull of the Pope: in the midſt of which Bull was pictured the figure of the Croſs. On the right ſide of the Croſs ſtood the Image of S. Paul, and on the left ſide S. Peter: Lo, ſaith the Cardinal (holding open the Bull with the Croſs) here you ſee S. Peter on the left hand of the Croſs, and S. Paul on the right ſide, and yet is there between theſe two no contention, for both are of equal glory. And yet S. Peter for the prerogative of his Keys, and for the preheminence of his Apoſtleſhip and Cathedral dignity, ſeemeth moſt worthy to be placed on the right ſide. But becauſe S. Paul believed on Chriſt when he ſaw him not, therefore hath he the right hand of the Croſs: For bleſſed he they (ſaith Chriſt) which believe and ſee not, &c. And from that time forth the Archbiſhop of Canterbury injoyed the right hand, and the Archbiſhop of York, the left. Wherein yet this Cardinal is more to be commended than the other Cardinal Hugo mentioned a little before, which in the like contention between theſe Archbiſhops ran away.

Contention for ſitting on the right hand of the Cardinal.

Why Peter ſtandeth on the right hand of the Croſs. Why Archbiſhop of Canterbury hath the right hand, and the Archbiſhop of York, the left hand.

Thus the Controverſie ceaſed and compoſed between theſe two, Otho the Cardinal, ſitting aloft between theſe two Archbiſhops, beginneth his Sermon, taking for his Theme of the Prophet: In medio ſedis & in circuitu ejus quatuor animalia plena oculis ante & retro, &c. that is, In the midſt of the Seat, and in the circuit about the Seat, were four Beaſts full of eyes before and behind, &c. Upon this Theme the Cardinal proceeded in his Sermon, fitting like a god in the midſt. He compared them about him to the four Beaſts about the Seat, declaring how they ought to have eyes both before and behind (that is) that they muſt be provident in diſpoſing of ſecular things, and circumſpect, with all their eyes (both before and behind) to fill the Popes Pouch, as appeared not only by this, but all their other travels beſides. Inſomuch that the King, dreading the diſpleaſure of his Commons for the doings of the Legate, willed him to repair home to Rome again, but yet could not ſo be rid of him; for he, receiving new Commandments from the Pope, applied his Harveſt, ſtill gleaning and raking whatſoever he might ſcrape, writing and ſending to Biſhops and Archdeacons in this form and tenor,

A letter of the Cardinal to Biſhops and Archdeacons. Cauſes of the Church well applied.

And moreover, note again the wicked and curſed trains of theſe Romiſh Rakehels, who, to pick ſimple mens purſes, firſt ſend out their Fryers and Preachers to ſtir up in all Places and Countries, men to go fight againſt the Turks: whom when they have once bound with a Vow, and ſigned them with the Croſs, then ſend they their Bulls to releaſe them both of their labour, and their Vow for money, as by their own ſtile of writing is here to be ſeen, thus proceeding.

Note the craftyness and ſubtilty of Antichriſt preparing for money.

A Note the ſtile of Rome.

* Jow melle ſicion & ſanctyngton præmit.

The cauſe why the Pope was ſo greedy and needy of Money, was this; becauſe he had mortal hatred, and waged continual battel the ſame time againſt the good Emperor, Fredrick the ſecond, who had to Wife King Johns Daughter, and Siſter to King Henry the third, whoſe name was Iſabel. And therefore becauſe the Popes war could not be ſuſtained without charges, that made the Pope the more importunate to take money in all places, but eſpecially in England. Inſomuch that he ſtarved not to require the fifth part of every Eccleſiaſtical mans living, as Pariſienſis writeth. And not only that, but alſo the ſaid Pope Gregory (converting with the Citizens of Rome) ſo agreed with them, that if they would joyn with him in vanquiſhing the foreſaid Frederick, he would (and ſo did) grant unto them, that all the Benefices in England which were or ſhould be vacant (namely pertaining to religious Houſes) ſhould be beſtowed at their own will and commandment to their children and kinſfolks. Whereupon it followed in the forenamed Hiſtory, Unde infra paucos dies miſit D. Papa ſacra præcepta ſua domino Cant. Archiep. Elienſ. & Lincol. & Saliſb. Epiſcopis, ut trecentis Romanis, in primis beneficiis vacantibus, providerent, ſcientes ſe ſuſpenſos a beneficiorum collatione donec tot competenter providerentur, That is, the Pope ſent in commandment to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and four other Biſhops, that proviſion ſhould be made for three hundred Romans in the chiefeſt and beſt Benefices in all England at the next voidance: So that the foreſaid Archbiſhop and Biſhops ſhould be ſuſpended in the mean time from all collation or gift of Benefices, until the foreſaid three hundred were provided for. Whereupon the Archbiſhop the ſame time ſeeing the unreaſonable oppreſſion of the Church of England, left the Realm and went into France.

The fifth part of every ſpiritual mans living given to the Pope.

Three hundred Romans to be placed in the beſt Benefices of England.

Again, mark another as much or more eaſie ſleight of the Pope in procuring money. He ſent one Petrus Rubens the ſame time with a new device, which was this, Not to work any thing openly, but privily to go betwixt Biſhop and Biſhop, Abbot and Abbot, &c. Telling in their ears, ſuch a Biſhop, ſuch an Abbot hath given ſo much and ſo much unto the Popes Holineſs, truſting that you alſo will not be behind for your part, &c. By the means whereof it is incredible to think what a Maſs of Money was made out of the Realm unto the Pope.

Petrus Rubens the Popes Agent.

A Rawiſh Sleight of the Pope to get Engliſh money.

At length the foreſaid Biſhops, Abbots, and Archdeacons feeling their own ſmart, came to the King (whoſe Father before they did reſiſt) with their humble ſuite, lamentably complaining of the unmeaſurable exactions of the Pope, and eſpecially againſt Petrus Rubens and his fellow Otto the Legate; deſiring the King, that ſeeing the matter toucheth not themſelves alone, but the whole Church, and ſeeing the valuation of Churches was known better to their Archdeacons than to themſelves, therefore there might be a general calling and talk had in the matter. In the octaves of S. John the Baptiſt, the day and place was aſſigned where they ſhould talk; at which day and place the Prelates of England, convening together, durſt not give any direct denial of that contribution, but after a modeſt ſort did intimate certain exceptions againſt the ſame.

Four Rakehels to be paid to the Pope out of every Preſentation.

Exceptions alledged for not coming to the Pope.

1. Firſt they ſay, that for ſo much as the contribution is demanded to war againſt him, who was joyned in Matrimony with their Prince, they were not bound ſo to do.

2. Secondly, for that the ſaid contribution tended to the ſtedding of Chriſtian blood; for ſo the form of the bill pretended to fight againſt the Emperor.

3. Thirdly, becauſe it was againſt the liberty of the Church; for ſo it is in the bill, that they that would not ſhould be Excommunicate.

4. Fourthly, becauſe that when of late they gave the tenth part of their goods, it was with this proteſtation, that they ſhould contribut to the Pope no more hereafter.

5. Item, becauſe they had contributed before; if they ſhould now contribute again, it were to be feared left an Action twice done ſhould grow into a cuſtom, as is in the Law, Lege nem, &c.

6. Item, for ſo much as they ſhall have cauſes continually to ſeek to Rome through the Emperors Land; it were to be feared left the ſaid Emperor by the way would work their Annoyance.

7. Item, becauſe the King hath many Enemies abroad, and for his wars hath need of much money at home, it is not convenient that the goods of the Realm ſhould be alienated out of the Realm.

8. Item, becauſe that could not be done without prejudice to the Patrons of their Churches, not knowing whether their Patrons did or would agree unto the ſame.

9. Laſtly, becauſe they hear ſay, that the general State of the Church is in danger, for the which they underſtand there ſhall be ſhortly a general Council, wherein ſuch matters ſhall be determined: and therefore if they ſhould contribute now, it ſhould be to the hinderance and damage of the Church.

The Legate and his fellow hearing theſe Allegations, ſeeing their own confuſion, were the leſs importunate.

Not long after this followed a general Council at Lions, called by Pope Innocentius the fourth, in the which Council the Engliſh Nation did exhibit certain Articles of their grievances not unworthy to be known. Gravatur regnum Angliæ, eo quod D. Papa non eſt contentus ſubſidio illo, quod vocatur denarius beati Petri, &c.

Articles exhibited in the Councel of Lugdune for the grievances ſuſtained by the Pope. The firſt grievance. The ſecond.

In Engliſh thus.

1. The Kingdom of England is grieved that the Pope, being not contented with his Peter-pence, requireth and extorteth from the Clergy great exactions (and more is like) both without the conſent of the King, and againſt the Cuſtoms of the Realm.

2. Item, the Church and Kingdom of England is grieved, that the Patrons of the ſame cannot preſent as they were wont, unto their Churches, for the Popes Letters: But the Churches are given to Romans, which know neither the Realm nor the Tongue thereof, both to the great peril of ſouls and robbing away the money out of the Realm.

The third.

3. Item, it is grieved, for that the Pope premiſing by the Tenor of his Letters, that in requiring of penſions and proviſions in the Realm of England he would require but only twelve Benefices, now contrary to the Tenor thereof many more Benefices and proviſions are beſtowed away by him.

The fourth.

4. Item, the Realm is grieved and complaineth, that in the Benefices in England, one Italian ſucceedeth another, the Engliſh-men being not only excluded, but alſo compelled (for the dettermining of their matters) to ſeek to Rome, contrary both to the Cuſtoms of the Realm, and alſo to the priviledges granted by the Popes predeceſſors to the King and Kingdom of England.

The fifth.

5. The fifth grievance is for the oft recourſe of that infamous Legate, by whom both faith and fidelity, the ancient Cuſtoms of the Realm, the Authorities of old Grants, Statutes, Laws and Priviledges, are imbecilled and abrogate, whereby an infinite number in England be grievouſly afflicted and oppreſſed.

He meaneth generally Otho or matter Marmoun.

The ſixth.

6. The ſaid Realm is alſo grieved in general Tallages, Collections, and Aſſeſſes, made without the Kings conſent, the appellation and contradiction of the Kings Proctors to the contrary notwithſtanding.

The ſeventh.

7. Seventhly, the foreſaid Realm complaineth and is grieved, that in the Benefices given to Italians, neither the old Ordinances, nor relief of the poor, nor Hoſpitality, nor any Preaching of Gods Word, nor care of Mens Souls, nor ſervice in the Church, nor yet the walls of the Churches be kept up and maintained, as the manner and Cuſtom of the ſame Realm requireth. Over and above theſe foreſaid grievances, there came moreover from the Pope other freſh Letters, charging and commanding the Prelates of England to find of their proper coſts and charges for one whole year, ſome ten armed ſouldiers, ſome five, ſome fifteen, to be ready at the Popes commandment there where he ſhould appoint.

The Babyloniſh captivity and ſlavery of England under the Pope.

After these and other grievances and enormities of Rome, the States of England consulting together direct their Letters to the Pope, for reformation thereof. First the Abbots and Priors, then the Bishops and Suffragans, after the Nobles and Barons, last of all the King himself. But as the proverb is, Venter non habet aures; so the Popes purse had no ears to hear. And as our common saying goeth: As good never a whit as never the better: so went it with the Pope, who not long after the same fent for new Tallages and exactions to be collected. Which thing when it came to the Kings ear, he being moved and disturbed vehemently with al, writeth in this wise to the Bishops, severally to every one in his Diocels.

The Letter of King Henry the third to the Bishops.

HEnricus tertius Dei gratia, &c. Venerabili in Christo, N. Episcopo salutem. Licet alias vobis, &c.

In English thus.

Henry the Third by the Grace of God, to the Reverend in Christ Bishop of N. Whereas we have heretofore Written unto you, once, twice, thrice, as well by our privy seals, as by our Letters Patents, that you should not exact nor collect, for the Popes behalf, any Tallage or other help of our Subjects, either of the Clergy, or of the Laity, for that no such Tallage nor help either can or is used to be exacted in our Realm without the great prejudice of our Princely Dignity, which we neither will nor can suffer or sustain: yet you contemning and vilipending our commandment, and contrary to the provision made in our last Counceil at London (granted and agreed upon by our Prelates, Earls, and Barons) have that notwithstanding proceeded in collecting the said your Taxes and Tallages. Whereupon we do greatly marvel and are moved (especially seeing you are not assumed to do contrary unto your own Decrees) whereas you and other Prelates in the said Council in this did all agree and grant, that no such exactions should be hereafter, until the return of our and your Ambassadors from the Court of Rome, sent thither purposely for us, and in the name of the whole Realm for the same, to provide redress against those oppressions. Wherefore we straitly will and command you, that from henceforth you do not proceed any more in collecting and exacting such Tallages or helps, as you will enjoy our favour and such possessions of yours as within this our Kingdom you have and hold. And if you have already procured or gather any such thing, yet that you suffer not the same to be transported out of our Realm, but cause it to be kept in safe custody till the return of the said Ambassadors, under the pain of our displeasure in doing of the contrary, and also of provoking us to extend our hand upon your possessions, further than you will think or believe. Moreover, willing and charging you that you participate and make common this our inhibition, with your Archdeacons and Officials, which we here have set forth for the liberties of the Clergy and of the people, as knoweth God, &c.

King Henry the third commandeth no tax nor tallage to be sent to the Pope.

At length the Ambassadors which were at Rome came home about the later end of December, bringing word that the Pope, hearing what was done in the Council of Winchester, and of the King, was greatly displeased with him and the Realm, saying, Rex Anglorum, qui jam recalcitrat & frederisat, suum habet consilium, ego vero & meum habeo, quod & sequar, &c. Whereupon when the Ambassadors began to speak in the Kings behalf, from that time they were half counted for Schismaticks, and could no more be heard in the Court of Rome. The King hearing this was marvellously incensed therewith, commanding by general Proclamation through all his Realm, that no man should hereafter consent to any Tax or subsidy of money for the Court of Rome. When this came to the Popes ear, upon a cruel rage he directed his Letters to the Prelates of England, charging that under pain of suspence or interdiction, they should provide the same sum of money to be collected against the Feast of Assumption, the charge being given to the Bishop of Worcester to be executer of the said Curie. The King lately intended to stand to the liberties of the Church, now for fear of the Pope, and partly for perswations of the said Bishop of Worcester and other Prelates, durst not stand to it, but gave over. Moreover the greedy gulf of the Romish avarice waxed so un measurable, that at length the Pope shamed not, upon the censure of his Curse, to ask the third part of the Church goods, and the yearly Fruit of all vacant Benefices. The chief Doers and Legates in England, were Otho, Stephanus Cappellanus, Petrus Rubeus Nuncius, Mag. Martin, and Mag. Marinus, Johannes Anglicus Episcopus Sabinensis. Of whom to speak further (for that I have matter much more to write) for this present time I think best to surceale, left in opening all the detestable doings and pestilent workings of those men, I might perhaps, not only moleft good ears, but also infect the Air. Yet one thing concerning the said Otho I cannot well overpass.

The Pope asketh the third part of the Church goods.

This Otho, as he left no place unfought, where any vantage might be got: so amongst all others he came to Oxford, where lying in the House of Osney, he was received with great honour; the Scholars preferring him Honourably with such Dishes and rewards as they had, thinking to gratifie the Cardinal after the beft manner. This being done before dinner, and the dinner ended, they came reverently to fee and welcome him, supposing that they also should with like courtelie again of him be entertained. As they came to the Gate, the Porter (being an Italian) with a loud voice asketh what they would have? They faid they came to fee the Lord Legate. But Corbrun the Porter, holding the door half open, with proud and contumelious language shuts them out, and would not suffer them to enter. The Scholas seeing that, by force thruft open the Gate and came in; whom when the Romans which were within would have repelled with their Fists, and fuch Staves as they had in their Hands, they fell to Alarum and by the ears together, with much heaving and fhooving, and many blows on both sides. In the mean time, while some of the Scholars ran home for their Weapons, there chanced a poor Scholar (an Irish-man) to ftand at the Gate waiting for his Alms. Whom when the Master saw at the Gate, he, taking hot skalding water out of the pan where the meat was sodden, did cast it in his Face. One of the Scholars a Welsh-man, that came with his Bow and shafts, seeing that, letteth drive an arrow, and shooteth this Nabuzardan (that Master of Cooks) clean thorow the body, and flaieth him out of hand. The Cook falling dead, there was a mighty broil and a great clamour throughout all the House. The Cardinal, hearing the tumult and great noise about him, like a Valiant Roman runneth as faft as he could into the Steeple, and there locketh the doors fast unto him, where he remained till midnight. The Scholars in the mean while, not yet all pacified, fought all corners about for the Legate, exclaiming and crying out; Where is that Usurer, that Simoniack, that piller and poller of our livings, that proller and extortioner of our Money, which perverteth our King, and subverteth his Kingdom, inriching himself with our fpoils? &c. All this heard the Cardinal, and held his peace. When the night approaching had broken up the field, the Cardinal coming out of his Fort, and taking his Horse (in silence of the night) was privily conveied over the River toward the King, conveying himself away as faft as he could. After the King heard this, he sendeth to Oxford a garrison of armed Men, to deliver the Romans which were there hidden for fear of Scholars. Then was Master Otho a Lawyer, with thirty other Scholars apprehended, and carried to Walingford Castle, and from thence had in Carrs to London, where at length (through much intreaty of the Bishops) they, being brought barefoot to the Legates door, had their pardon, and the University releafed of interdiction. And thus much concerning the Popes Legate in England.

Thus partly you have heard, and do understand the miserable Thraldom and Captivity of this Realm of England, and the Clergy of the same, who before refused to take part with King John their natural Prince, against the foreign power of the Pope; and now how miserably they are oppressed and scourged of the same Pope; whose insatiable extortion and rapacity did so exceed in pilling and polling of this Realm long after this, that neither the King now could help them, neither could the Pope with any reasonable measure be content. Insomuch (as writers record) in the days of Sudbury Archbishop of Canterbury, An. 1360. the Pope by his Proctors gat from the Clergy, in less than one year, more than forty Thousand Florens, of meer contribution: besides his other avails and common revenues out of Benefices, Prebendaries, first Fruits, Tributes, Tributes, Peter-pence, Collations, Reservations, Relaxations, and such Merchandise, &c.

Mention was made a little before of Albingenses keeping about the City of Tholouse. These Albingenses because they began to smell the Pope, and to control the inordinate proceedings and discipline of the See of Rome, the Pope therefore accounting them as a people heretical, excited and thirred up about this prefent time and year, Anno 1220. Ludovike the young French King, through the instance of Philip his Father, to lay siege against the said City of Tholouse to expugne and extinguish these Albingenses his Enemies. Whereupon Ludovike (according to his Fathers commandment) reared a puissant and mighty Army to compass about and beset the forenamed City, and so did. Here were the men of Tholouse in great danger. But see how the mighty Protection of God righteth for his people against the might of Man: For after that Ludovike (as Matth. Paris testifieth) had long wearied himself and his men in waste, and could do no good with all their Engins and Artillery against the City, there fell moreover upon the French Host, by the hand of God, such famine and pestilence both of Men and Horses, besides the other daily flaughter of the Souldiers, that Ludovike was inforced to retire, and with such as were left to return again home to France from whence he came. In the flaughter of which Souldiers, besides many others, was Earl Simon de montz fort, General of the Army, to whom the lands of the Earl of Tholouse were given by the Pope; who was slain before the Gate of the City with a stone, and so was also the Brother of the said Simon the same time, in besieging a Castle near to Tholouse, slain with a stone in like manner. And so was the siege of the French-men against Tholouse broke up. Ex Mat. Parisiensi.

As the siege of these French-men could do no good against the City of Tholouse's so it happened the same time that the Christians, marching towards the Holy land, had better success in laying their siege to a certain Tower or Castle in Egypt near to the City Damieta, which seemed by nature for the situation and difficulty of the place inexpugnable: which being fituate in the midst of the great flood Nilus (hard by the City called Damieta) could neither be come to by land, nor be undermined for the water, nor by famine subdued, for the nearness of the City; yet notwithstanding through the help of God and Policy of Man, Erecting Scaffolds and Castles upon tops of Masts, the Christians at last conquered it, and after that also the City Damieta, albeit not without great loss of Christian people. In the expugnation of this City or fort, among others that there died, was the Lantgrave of Thuring, married Ludovike the Husband of Elizabeth, whom we use to call S. Elizabeth. This Elizabeth (as my Story recorded) was the Daughter of the King of Hungary, and married in Almain, where she lived with the forenamed Ludovike Lantgrave of Thuring, whom she through her perswasions provoked and incensed to take that voyage to fight for the Holy land, where he in the same voyage was slain. After whose death Elizabeth (remaining a widow) entred the profession of cloysterly religion, and made her self a Nun; so growing and increasing from vertue to vertue, that after her death all Almain did sound with the fame of her worthy doings. Matthew Paris addeth this more, that she was the Daughter of that Queen, who, being accused to be naught with a certain Archbishop, was therefore condemned with this sentence pronounced against her; Regis non interficere nolite timere homun os, & si omnes conspiserint non ego contradico. That is (although it be hard in English to be translated as it standeth in Latin) To kill the Queen will ye not to fear, that is good, and if all men consent thereunto, not I my self do stand against it, &c. The which sentence being brought to Pope Innocent, thus in pointing the sentence, which otherwise seemeth to have a double understanding, he so fayed the Queen, thus interpreting and pointing the same, Regis nam interficere nolite, timere homun os, & si omnes consentiunt, non ego, contradico. That is, To kill the Queen will ye not, to fear, that is good: And if all do consent thereto, yet not I, I my self do stand against it, and so escaped she the danger. This Queen was the Mother (as is said) of Elizabeth the Nun, who for her holy sanctimonie was Canonized of the Popes Church for a Saint in Almain, about the year of our Lord 1220. Ex Matth. Parisiensi.

And this by the way. Now to proceed further in the years and life of this King Henry. The next year following, which was Anno. 1221. the King went to Oxford, where he had something to do with William Earl de Albemarlia, who had taken the Castle of Bihant: but at last, for his good service he had done in the Realm before, he was releafed of the King with all his men, by the intercession of Walter Archbishop of York, and of Pandulph the Legate. About which prefent year entred first the Frier Minorits, or Gray-Friers into England, and had their first House at Canterbury, whose first Patron was *Francisc*us, which died Anno 1227. and his Order was confirmed by Pope Honorius the third, Anno 1224.

The order of Gray-Friers first confirmed.

About the first coming of these Dominick and Gray-Friers *Francisc*an into the Realm (as is in Nicol. Trivet testified) many Englishmen the same time entred into their orders. Among whom was Johannes de sancto Egidio, a man famously expert in the science of Physick and Astronomy, and Alexander de Hales, both Englishmen and great Divines. This Johannes making his Sermon Ad clerum, in the House of the Dominick Friers, exhorted his Auditory with great perswations unto wilful poverty. And to confirm his words the more by his own example, in the midst of his Sermon he came down from the Pulpit and put on his Friers habit: and so, returning into Pulpit again, made an end of his Sermon. Likewise Alexander Hales entred the order of the *Francisc*ans, of whom remaineth yet the Book intituled De summa theologiæ in old Libraries.

Moreover, not long after by William de longa spata, which was the bastard Son of King Henry the second, and Earl of Salisbury, was first founded the House of the Carthusian Monks at Heitrope, Anno 1222. After whose death his Wife Ela was translated to the House of Henton in Barkeshire, An. 1227. which Ela also founded the House of Nuns at Lacocke, and there continued her self Abbess of the place. In the Town of Oxford above mentioned, where this King kept his Court, Simon Langton Archbishop of Canterbury held a Council, where was condemned and buried a certain Deacon, as Nicol. Trivet saith, for Apostasie. Also another rude Country-man, who had crucified himself, and superstitiously bare about the wounds in his feet and hands, was condemned to be closed up perpetually within walls. Ex Nicol. Trivet. About which year also Alexander King of Scots married Joan Sister to King Henry.

Nor long after began the new building of the Minster of Salisbury, whereof Pandulphus the Popes Legate laid the five first stones; one for the Pope (such was the Fortune of that Church to have the Popes stone in his Foundation) the second for the young King Henry; the third, for the good Earl of Salisbury; the fourth, for the Countess; the fifth, for the Bishop of Salisbury, &c. Which was about the same year above mentioned, Anno. 1221. Ex Chron. de Sal.

In the same year about S. James tide fell a difference between the Citizens of London, and the men of Westminster; the occasion whereof was this. A certain gain between these two parties was appointed, to try whether part in wrestling could overcome the other. Thus in striving for mastery, each part contending against the other (as the manner is in such pastime) it happened that the Londoners got the Victory, and the other side was put to foile, but especially the Steward of the Abbot of Westminster; who, being not a little confounded therewith, began to foretlink in his mind how to be revenged against the Londoners. Whereupon another day was set, which was at Lammas, that the Londoners should come again to wrestle; and who so had the Victory should have the Belwether, which was the price of the game appointed. As the parties were thus occupied in their Play, the Steward suddenly bringeth upon the Londoners unawares, a company of harnessed men prepared for the same before, and herein drive at the Londoners; who, at length being wounded and grievously hurt, after much bloodshed were driven back again into the City. This contumely thus being received, the Citizens, eagerly fracken with ire and impatience, ran to the common Bell, and by ringing thereof assembled their Commons together, to consult with themselves what was to be done in that case so contumelious. Wherein when divers sentences were given diversly, Serle the same time Maior of London (a wise and discreet Man) gave this Counsel, that the Abbot of Westminster should be talked withal, who if he would rectifie the injury done, and satisfie for the harm received, it should be to them sufficient. But contrary, one Constantine a great Man then in the City of London, in much heat exciting the people, gave this sentence, that all the Houses of the Abbot of Westminster, but especially the House of the Steward should be cast down to the ground. In fine, that, which he so unadvisedly Counselled, was as madly performed: For the furious people according to his Counsel so did. This tumultuous outrage, as it could not be privy, coming to the knowledge of Hubert de Burgo, Lord chief Justice of England above mentioned, he coming with a sufficient strength of armed souldiers to the City of London, sent to the Maior and Aldermen of the City to will them to come unto him. Who so obeying his commandment, he required of them the principal beginners of the Riot. To whom Constantine there being present answered, that he would warrant that which was done; sorrowing moreover that they had not done more than they did in the matter. The Justice, upon the same his confession, commanded him with two others, without any further tumult, to be taken; and so with the same two he was hanged, he offering for his life 1500. Marks, &c.

And forsomuch as mention hath been made of the wrangling between the Commoners of London and of Westminster, both time and occasion bringeth me in remembrance something to speak likewise of the Ecclesiastical conflicts among Church-men, nothing inferior in my mind, nor less worthy to be noted than the other. For so I read in Matth. Paris, and in Flores Hist. that at what time this wrestling was among the Citizens for the sheep, the like contention kindled and enflamed between Eustace Bishop of London and the Chapter of Paul's on the one side, and the Abbot of Westminster with his Covent on the other side, about spiritual jurisdiction and subjection: to wit, whether the Monastery of Westminster were exempted from the subjection and jurisdiction of the Bishop of London or not. Which controversie at last coming into comprimise, was committed to the Arbitrement of Stephen Archbishop of Canterbury, Philip Bishop of Winchester, Thomas of Merton, and Richard Prior of Dunstable; and at length it was thus agreed, that the Monastery of Westminster should be utterly exempted from the jurisdiction of the Bishop of London, and that Stanes, with the appurtenances thereto belonging, should appertain to the Monastery of Westminster. Also, that the manner of Sunbury should be due and proper to the Church of S. Paul, and also that the Church of S. Margaret with all the Lands belonging to the same should be exempted from all other jurisdiction, but only of the Bishop of Rome: and so was this matter decided, An. 1222. *Ibidem Flor. The same year (as writeth *Mat. In Warwickshire a certain Wife with eight others in her House were slain. In Grantham the Church was set on fire by Lightning most terrible, with such a stink left there behind, that no Man could after a long time abide it. The Author addeth, that manifeft Marks of the Tempest did remain long after in that Monastery to be seen. Some also write that fiery Dragons and Spirits were seen then flying in the Air.

Whereupon Richard Earl of Cornwal, also William the Kings Uncle Earl of Salisbury, with divers other Nobles made over into France, where they recovered Poictiers, and kept Gascoin under the Kings obedience. *Ex Matth. In the same year, or as Fabian giveth, the next following, which was 1224. By the vertue of a certain Parliament, it was granted of the Lords and Barony of the Land, that the King and his Heirs, should have the ward and marriage of their Heirs, which then was called, and after so proved to be, Initium malorum, the beginning of harms.

{ Anno 1224 Wardship first granted to the King.

In the same year, by the account of Guiburn and other Writers, the said King holding another Parliament at Oxford, by the advice of his Council and of his Clergy, did grant and confirm, under his great Seal, two Charts of the old liberties and Customs of this Realm, for ever to be kept and observed, the one called Magna Charta, the other Charta de foresta. The Contents whereof fully in the forenamed Author be expressed. For the which cause was granted again by the whole Parliament a Quindecim, or a Fifteen of all his Subjects, as well of Lay-men as also of the Clergy.

¶ Where is to be noted, that these Liberties were afterward broken, and confirmed again by the said King, Anno 1236.

Anno 1226. died Pope Honorius a great Adversary against Fredrick the Emperor, after whom succeeded Gregory the ninth, more grievous than his Predecessor. In which year also died Ludovick the perjured French King at the siege of Avinion; whom the Pope now the second or third time had set up to fight against Reimund the good Earl of Tholouse, and the Hereticks Albingenses of that Country: For to the Pope calleth all them, which hold not in all points with his glorious pride, and usurped power and ungodly proceedings. The Origin whereof was this, as in Matth. Paris appeareth. In the days of Philip the French King, this Reimundus Earl of Tholouse was disdained of the Pope for holding with the Albingenses; and therefore, by the instigation of the Pope, the Lands of the Earl were taken from him and given to Simon Montfort; and instruments made upon the same: But when the said Earl Reimundus would not be removed from the right of his possessions by unrighteous dealing; then the Pope set forth Philip the French King to make open War against him. Whereupon Lewis the French King was sent with a great power (as is above declared) to besiege the City of Tholouse; but being repulsed from thence by the marvellous hand of God fighting for his people, he could not prevail, and so returned home, after he had loft the most part of his Army by pestilence and other calamity, as hath been before declared. And thus continued the good Earl still in quiet possession till this present time, Anno 1226. In the which year the Pope not forgetting his old Malice against the Earl, and no less enflamed with insatiable avarice, directeth down his Legate Master Romanus to the parts of France for two several purposes; one to extripe the Earl, the other to inlarge his Revenues. Thus the Legate, being entred into France, beginneth to summon a Council, willing the French King with the Archbishops, Bishops, and Clergy of France to appear before him at Bitures; to whom estsoons repaired six Archbishops with the Bishops and Suffragans of nine Provinces, to the number of an Hundred, besides the Abbots, Priors, and Proctors of all the Covents of France, to hear the Popes will and commandment. But because there was a discord feared to rise (saith Matthæus) about Preheminence of sitting, for that the Archbishop of Lions challenged the Superior place above the Archbishop of Sens, also the Archbishop of Rone above the Archbishop of Bitures, and above the Archbishop of Narbon, &c. Therefore the Session was holden there not in manner and form of a Council, but of a certain parly or consultation. Thus the meek and holy Council being set, and the Popes Majesties Letters read and declared, appeareth before them Reimund Earl of Tholouse of the one part, and Simon Montfort on the other part: which Simon required to be restored unto unto him the Lands and possessions of the said Reimund, which the Pope and Philip the French King had given to him and to his Father before, having good evidences to shew for the same, confirmed by the donation of the Pope and of the King. Adding moreover, that the Earl Reimund was deprived and disherited in the general Council at Rome for Heresie, which is called the Heresie of Albingenses. At least, if he might not have the whole yielded unto him, yet the most part of his Lordships he required to be granted him.

Reimundus wrongfully disherited by the Pope.

To this the Earl Reimund answered again, offering himself ready to all duty and office both toward the French King, and to the Church of Rome, whatsoever duty to him did appertain. And moreover, touching the Heresie wherewith he was there charged; he did not only there offer himself in that Council before the Legate, but most humbly did crave of him, that he would take the pains to come into every City within his Precinct to inquire of every person there the Articles of his Belief; and if he found any person or persons holding that which was not Catholick, he would see the same to be corrected and amended according to the censure of holy Church to the uttermost. Or if he should find any City rebelling against him, he, to the uttermost of his might with the inhabitants thereof, would compel them to do satisfaction therefore. And as touching himself, if he had committed or erred in any thing (which he remembreth not that he had done) he offered there full satisfaction to God and Church, as becomed any faithful Christian Man to do; requiring moreover there before the Legate to be examined of his faith, &c. But all this (saith Matthæus) the Legate despised; neither could the Catholick Earl (saith he) there find any grace, unless he would depart from his Heritage; both from himself and from his Heirs for ever. In fine, when it was required by the contrary part, that he should stand to the arbitrement of twelve Peers of France: To that Reimundus answered, that if the French King would receive his Homage which he was ready at all times to exhibit, he was contented therewith. For else they would not, said he, take him as one of their society and fellow Subjects.

Reimundus the good Earl of Tholouse answereth for himself.

Albingenses falsely suspected for Heretics.

After much altercation on both sides about the matter, the Legate willeth every Archbishop to call aside his Suffragans, to deliberate with them upon the cause, and to give up in writing what was concluded. Which being done accordingly, the Legate denounceth Excommunication to all such as did reveal any piece of that which was there concluded, before the Pope and the King had intelligence thereof.

The Pope calleth wit.

These things thus in hudder mutter among themselves concluded, the Legate gave leave to all Proctors of Covents and Chapters to return home, only retaining with him the Archbishops, Bishops, and Abbots, and certain simple Prelates, such as he might be more bold withal, to open, and of them to obtain the other part of his Commission, which was indeed to obtain of every Cathedral Church two Prebendships; one for the Bishop, the other for the Chapter. And in Monasteries also after the like fort, where the Abbot and Covent had divers and several portions, to require two Churches; one for the Abbot, the other for the Covent, keeping this proportion; that how much should suffice for the living of one Monk, so much the whole Covent should find for their part; and as much the Abbot likewise for his. And forsomuch as he would not seem to demand this without some colour of cause, his reason was this; that because the Court of Rome had long been blotted with the note of avarice, which is Mother of all evil, for that no man could come to Rome for any business, but he must pay for the expedition of the same; therefore for the removing away of the occasion of that slander, the publick help of the Church must necessarily be required, &c.

{ Anno 1226

The Clergy of France answering to the Legate.

The Proctors and Parties thus sent home by the Legates, marvelling with themselves why the Bishops and Abbots should be staid and they sent whom, and suspecting no less but as the matter was indeed, conferred their Counsels together, and devised with themselves to send certain unto him in the behalf of all the Cathedral and Conventual Churches in France; and sent to the said Legate his Message, to signifie to him, that they were credibly informed he came with special Letters from the Court of Rome for the obtaining of certain Prebendaries in every Cathedral and Conventual Church. Which being so, they much marvelled, that he would not in the publick Council make manifest to them those Letters which specially concerned them as much as the others. Wherefore their request was to him in the Lord, that no such offensive matter might rise by him in the French Church; knowing this, that the thing he enterpriseth could not be brought to effect without great offence taken, and inestimable damage to the Church of France. For grant (said they) that certain will assent unto you, yet their assent shall not in no wise concerning such matters as touch the whole: especially, seeing both the States of the Realm, with all the inferior Subjects, yea, and the King himself they are sure will withstand the same, to the venture not only of their honour, but of their life also, considering the case to be such, as upon the offence whereof it shall doth the subversion both of the Realm publick, and of the whole Church in general. Declaring moreover the cause of this fear to rise hereof, for that in other Realms such communication hath been with Bishops and Prelates for the procuring of such Prebendships, whereas neither the Prince nor the Subjects were made any thing privy thereto.

Inferiors ever more bold to speak in difficult causes of truth, than the rich.

The obligations of the Clergy of France against the Popes exaction.

In conclusion, when the matter came to debating with the Legate, the objections of the inferior parties against the cruel exaction were these in brief effect, as is in Parisiensis noted.

First, They alledged their great damages and expenses which they were like to sustain thereby, by reason of the continual Procurators of the Pope, which in every Diocese must live not of their own, but must be sustained upon the charges of the Cathedral Churches, and other Churches also; and many times they being but Procurators, will be found as Legates.

Item, By that means they said great perturbations might infue to the Covents and Chapters of Cathedral Churches in their elections: forsomuch as the Popes Agents and Factors being in every Cathedral Church and Chapter house, percase the Pope would command him in his person to be present at their Elections, and so might trouble the same, in delaying and deferring till it might fall to the Court of Rome to give; and so should be placed more of the Popes Clientel in the Churches of France, than of the proper inhabitants of the Land.

Item, By this means they affirmed, that all they in the Court of Rome should be richer, and should receive more for their proportion than the King of the Realm: by reason of which aboundance of riches it was like to come to pass, that as the Worm of rich Men is pride; so by the means of this their riches, the Court of Rome would delay and drive off great Suites, and scarce would take any pains with small causes. The experiment whereof is evident, for that now also they use to delay their matters, when they come, with their gifts, and being in assurance to receive. And thus should Justice stand aside, and poor Suitors die at the Gates of the Court of Rome, thus flowing and triumphing in full aboundance of all Treasure and Riches.

Item, Forsomuch as it is meet and convenient to have friends in the Court of Rome, for the better speeding of their causes; therefore they thought to keep them needy, whereby their gifts may be the sweeter, and their causes sooner dispatched.

Item, When as it is impossible the fountain of greedy desire to be stopped, it was to be feared that either they would do that by others which they were wont to do by themselves, or else they should be inforced to give greater rewards than before; for small gifts in the sight of great rich men are not looked upon.

Item, Where he alledged the removing away of the slander which goeth on the Court of Rome: by this means rather the contrary were to be feared, wherein they alledged the sentence of the verse, that great riches stop not the taking of much, but a mind contented with a little:

Quod virtus reddit, non copia sufficientem,
Et non paupertas sed mentis hiatus egentem.

¶ Further, they alledged that great riches would make the Romans mad, and so might kindle among them sides and parts taking; so that by great possessions sedition might follow to the ruine and destruction of the City, whereof some experiment they had already.

Rome, obliged, that although they would condescend and oblige themſelves to that Contribution, yet their Succeſſors would not ſo be bound, nor yet ratifie the Bond of theirs.

Laſtly, thus they conclude the matter, deſiring him that the Zeal of the Univerſal Church, and of the Church of Rome would move him alſo if this Oppreſſion of the Church ſhould be univerſal, it were to be doubted leſt an univerſal departing might follow from the Church of Rome, which God forbid (ſay they) ſhould happen.

God grant, ſay we.

The Legate hearing theſe words, being therewith ſomething moved (as ſeemed) excuſed himſelf, that he being in the Court, never agreed to this Exaction; and that the Cardinal repulſed and defeated of his purpoſe in France. Letters hereof came not to him before he was in France, whereat he ſaid he was greatly ſorry, adding this withall, that the words of his Precept included this ſecret meaning in them, thus to be underſtood and taken: ſo far forth as the Empire and other Realms would agree unto the ſame. And as for him,he would ſtir no more in the matter,before it were proved what other Countries would ſay and do therein.

The Pope raiſeth War againſt the Earl and the people of Tholoſe.

Now to return to the firſt part of his Commiſſion again, which was concerning Raimundus the godly Earl of Tholouſe, thus the ſtory proceedeth, that while the Legate was in hand with this matter of the Popes money, in the meane ſeaſon certain preaching Fryers were directed by the ſaid Romanus the Popes Legate into all Frances, to incite and ſtir up the French-men to take the Croſs upon them, and to war againſt the Earl of Thoulouſe and the people thereof, whom they accounted then for Hereticks. At the preaching whereof, a great number of Prelates and Lay-men ſigned themſelves with the Croſs, to fight againſt the Tholoſſians, being thereto induced, as the ſtory ſaith, more for fear of the French King or favour of the Legate, than for any true zeal of Juſtice. For ſo it followeth in the words of Paris, Videbatur enim multis abuſio, ut hominem fidelem Chriſtianum infeſtarent, præcipue cum conſtiterat cunctis, eum, in concilio nuper Bituricenſi, multis precibus perſuaſiſſe Legato, ut vepiret ad ſingulas terræ ſuæ civitates, inquirens a ſingulis articulos fidei: & ſi quempiam contra fidem inveniret, &c. For to many (ſaith he) it ſeemed an abuſe, to move War againſt a faithful Chriſtian man, eſpecially ſeeing in the Council of Bitures, (before all men) he intreated the Legate with great inſtance that he would come into every City within his Dominions, and there to inquire of every perſon the Articles of his Faith: where if he found any man to hold any thing contrary to the Catholick Faith, he promiſed a full ſatisfaction to be had thereof, according to the Cenſure of the Church, to the uttermoſt, &c.

Teſtimony of the Author for the clearing of Raimundus and of the Albingenſes.

The unreaſonable tyranny of the Pope againſt the Tholoſſians.

Yet all this notwithſtanding, the proud Legate, contemning this ſo honeſt and reaſonable purgation of the Earl Raimundus, ceaſed not by all manner of means to proſecute the Popes fury againſt him and his Subjects, ſtirring up the King and the Frenchmen, under pain of Excommunication, to war againſt them. Ludovick the French King, thus being inforced by the Legate, anſwered again, That he for his own ſafety would not atchieve that Expedition, or adventure againſt the Earl, unleſs it were firſt obtained of the Pope to write to the King of England: commanding him, that, during the time of that Expedition, he ſhould invade and moleſt no piece of his Lands and Poſſeſſions which he the ſame preſent time did hold, whether by right or by wrong, or howſoever they were holden, while the time of the ſaid War againſt the Hereticks (as they were then termed) did indure, but rather ſhould aid and aſſiſt him with counſel and money in that Enterpriſe. All this being done and accompliſhed, the French King and the Legate (croſſing themſelves to the field) appointed a day peremptory for the French Army to meet together at Lions, under pain of the Popes Excommunication, and with Horſe and Harneis to ſet upon the Tholoſſians, againſt the Aſcenſion-day next inſuing.

Excommunication abuſed.

When the Aſcenſion-day was come, which was the day peremptory appointed, the French King, having prepared at Lions all things neceſſary for his Army, marcheth forward with a great and mighty Hoſt; after whom alſo cometh the Legate, with his Biſhops, and Prelates. The number of fighting-men in his Army, beſides the Victuallers and Waggoners, were 50000 men. The Legate by the way openly Excommunicated the Earl of Tholouſe, and all that took his part, and furthermore interdicted his whole Land. Thus the King came marching forward, till he came into the Province of Tholouſe, and the firſt City which he came unto there of the Earls, was Avinion: which City they thought firſt to have beſieged, and ſo in order after, as they went, to have deſtroyed and waſted all the whole Province belonging to the Earl. And firſt the King demanded of them to have his paſſage through the City; ſaining himſelf in peaceable wiſe (for the expedition of his Journey) but to paſs through the ſame. The Citizens, conſulting with themſelves what was to be done,at length gave anſwer,That they miſtruſted their coming, and ſuppoſed that in deceit they required the entrance of their City,and for no neceſſity of their journey.

Romanus Earl of Tholouſe excommunicated.

The City of Avinion beſieged.

The Popes Legate wickedly peruerteth Juſtice.

The King, hereat being much offended, ſware an Oath, That he would not depart thence till he had taken the City; and immediately in thoſe places, where he thought moſt meet, he began to make ſharp aſſaults, with all manner of faultable means; the Citizens again within manfully defended themſelves, caſting ſtone for ſtone, and ſhooting ſhot for ſhot, and ſlew and wounded many of the Frenchmen. Thus when they had long beſieged the City, and could not win the ſame: at length Victuals in the French Camp began to fail, and many of them died for hunger. For the Earl of Tholouſe as a wiſe man of war, hearing before of their coming, took into the Town all the proviſion that was abroad, and left nothing without to ſerve for their defence and ſuccour, he plowed up the fields, that there ſhould no flower be found to ſerve their Horſes; he put out of the Town all the old people and young children, leſt they ſhould want victuals that kept the Town, and before their coming ſent them far away, ſo that within the Town, they had plenty, and without they died for Famine. And beſides in ſeeking far for their forage, many fell into the hands of them that kept the City, who ſecretly lay in wait for them abroad and ſlew many of them; beſides a great number of cattel and horſes died for want of forage: and poor Souldiers, that had no great ſtore of money, died for want of Victuals. By which mortality and ſtink both of men and cattel grew great Infection and Peſtilence among them; inſomuch that the King himſelf and alſo the Legate were greatly diſmayed,thinking it to be no little ſhame, as well to the Realm of France, as alſo to Rome, that they ſhould ſo depart and break up their Siege. Thus again thought the Souldiers, that much better it were for them to end their lives by battel, than ſo to die like dogs and ſtarve. Wherefore with one conſent they purpoſed to give a new aſſault at the Bridge that goeth over the flood Rhodanus into the Town; to which place they came in ſuch number, that either by the debility of the Bridge or fubtilty of the Souldiers that kept the Town, three thouſand of them, with Bridge and all, fell armed into the violent ſtream, and were drowned. What was there then but joy and gladneſs of the Citizens part, and much lamentation and heavineſs on the other part? Then ſhortly after, the Citizens of Avinion (when they ſaw a convenient time, whilſt their enemies were eating meat) came ſuddenly upon them out of the Town, and ſlew of them two thouſand, and took the Town again with ſafety. But the Legate with his company of Prelates (like good men of War) practiſed none other Martial feats, but all to be curſed the Earl of Tholouſe, his Cities, and his people. Ludovicus the King, to avoid the Peſtilence that was in the Camp, went into an Abbey not far off, where ſhortly after he died; of whoſe death are ſundry Opinions, ſome ſaying, That he was poiſoned; ſome,That he died of a Bloody-flux.

Whoſe death notwithſtanding the Legate thought to keep ſecret and conceal, till that the Town might be rendred and given up: for he thought himſelf ſhamed for ever, if he ſhould depart before the Town were won. Whereſore after he had incouraged the Souldiers afreſh,and yet after many ſharp aſſaults could not prevail; he bethought him how by falſehood he might betray them, and ſent unto them certain Heralds, to will them that they ſhould amongſt themſelves conſult upon Articles of Peace, and bring bring the ſame to their Camp, whoſe ſafe Conduct they faithfully promiſed and warranted both of coming and going. And when they had given their pledges for the ſame, the Meſſengers from the Citizens talked with the Legate: who promiſed them, if they would deliver up their City, they ſhould have their Lives, Goods, and Poſſeſſions in as ample manner as now they injoyed the ſame. But the Citizens and Souldiers refuſed to be under the Servitude of the French King, neither would ſo deliver up their City to thoſe, of whoſe inſolent pride they had ſo good experiment. After much talk on both ſides, and none like to take effect, the Legate requeſted them, and friendly laboured, that he, and his Prelates which were about him, might come into their City to examine what Faith and Belief they were of, and that he neither ſought nor meant any other thing thereby, but their own ſafeties as well of Body as Soul, which thing he faithfully ſware unto: For (ſaith he) the bruit of your great Infidelity hath come to the Lord Popes ear, and therefore deſired he to make true Certificate thereof. Whereupon the Citizens, not miſtruſting his faithful Oath and Promiſe made unto them, granted entrance to him and the reſidue of the Clergy, bringing with them no weapon into the Town. The Souldiers of the Camp, as it was agreed before, made them ready; ſo that at the entrance of the Prelates in at the gate, nothing regarding their Oath and Fidelity, the other ſuddenly were ready, and with violence ruſhed in, ſlew the Porter and Warders, and at length won the City and deſtroyed the ſame, and ſlew many of them that were within. Thus by falſehood and policy when they had gotten this noble City,they carried the Kings Corps unto Paris, where they buried the ſame. Of the whole number of the French Souldiers which in this Siege were deſtroyed by Famine,Peſtilence, and drowning, be recounted more than two and twenty thouſand: Whereby, ſaith the ſtory of Mat. Pariſienſis, it may evidently appear the War was unjuſtly taken in hand, &c. Ex Mat. Pariſienſi.

Policy of War.

After theſe things finiſhed, and after the Funeral of the King celebrated at Paris, it followeth more in the ſaid Hiſtory of Pariſienſis, that the ſaid Legate Romanus was vehemently ſuſpected,and grievouſly infamed to abuſe himſelf with Blanca the Kings Mother: Sed impium eſt (ſaith he) hoc credere, quia æmuli ejus hoc diſſeminaverunt, benigno autem animo dubia in melius interpretatur; that is, But it is ungodly to ſuſpect any ſuch thing of him, becauſe his enemies ſo rumoured the ſame abroad; but a gentle mind expoundeth things doubtful in the better part.

Moreover, beſide this general Subſidy of the fifteenth granted to the King through the whole Realm, and beſides all the Contribution of the Londoners, divers other parcels and payments he gathered through ſeveral places: as of the Burgeſſes of Northampton he required a thouſand and two hundred Marks, for his helping of them, and ſo of others likewiſe. All this preparation of money was made toward the furniſhing of his Voyage to recover Normandy. And yet becauſe he would gratifie the City of London again with ſome pleaſure; he granted the Citizens thereof thould paſs Toll-free (ſaith Fabian) throughout all England. And if of any City, Borough, or Town they were conſtrained at any time to pay their Toll, then the Sheriffs of London to attach every man coming to London of the ſaid City, Borough or Town, and him with his goods to withhold, till the Londoners were again reſtored of all ſuch money paid for the ſaid Toll, with all coſts and damages ſuſtained for the ſame. Ex Fabiano.

{Anno 1228.}

I declared before, how after the death of Honorius ſucceeded Pope Gregory the Tenth, between the which Gregory and the people of Rome, this year fell a great Sedition. Inſomuch that about the Feaſt of Eaſter, they thruſt the Pope out of the City, purſuing him unto his Caſtle at Viterbium. Where alſo they invaded him ſo valiantly, that they chaſed him to Perufium. Then having no other remedy wherewith to revenge his Perſecutors, fiercely he did Excommunicate them. Ex Mat. Pariſ. pag. 69.

Sedition between the Romans and the Pope.

Here, by the way, is to be obſerved and conſidered, Chriſtian Reader, not only by this Sedition, but by ſo many other Schiſms, Diviſions, Tumults, Fightings, Brawls and Contentions in the Church of Rome from the firſt beginning of the Popes uſurped Power, and that not only within the City of Rome, but univerſally almoſt in all Popiſh Monaſteries, Colledges, Churches, and Covents under the Popes ſubjected,continually reigning amongſt them, what is to be thought of their Religion and Holineſs,having ſo little peace, ſo great diſquietneſs, diſſentions, and wrangling amongſt them, as in ſtories both manifeſt it is to behold, and wondrous to conſider.

The Popes Church may be judged by their diſſentions and ſchiſms. no peace in the Popes Church.

And for ſo much as I have here entred into the mention of this Schiſmatical Commotion between the Pope and his Citizens; it followeth moreover in the Hiſtory of Pariſienſis, who maketh relation of a like brawling matter, which befel the ſame year, and time, An. 1228. between the Prior and Covent of Durham, and this King Henry the Third, upon this occaſion: after the death of Richard Biſhop of Durham, the Prior and Chapter of the ſaid Church came to the King, to obtain licence for the electing of their Biſhop. The King offered to them one Lucas a Chaplain of his, requiring them inſtantly to elect him for their Biſhop. To this the Monks anſwered,That they would receive no man,but by their Order of Canonical Election. Meaning belike, by their Canonical Election, thus much, when as they elect either ſome Monk out of their own company, or elſe ſome Monkiſh Prieſt after their own liking. Contrary, the King again ſendeth word unto them, and bound it with an Oath, That they ſhould tarry ſeven years without a Biſhop, unleſs they would admit the foreſaid Lucas to that place of that Dignity. All which notwithſtanding, the Monks, proceeding in their Election, refuſed the ſaid Lucas; and preferred another Clerk of theirs, named William Archdeacon of Worceſter, and him they preſented to the King: but the King, bringing in exceptions and cauſes againſt the party, would not admit him. Then the Monks in all haſty ſpeed ſend up to Rome certain of their Covent, to have their Election ratified by the Apoſtolical. On the other ſide the King, likewiſe hearing, ſendeth alſo to Rome againſt the Monks, the Biſhop of Cheſter, and the Prior of Lentony on his behalf, to withſtand the purpoſe of the Monks. And ſo the matter, being traverſed with great altercation on both ſides,did hang in ſuſpence (ſaith mine Author) till at length thus it was concluded between both, that neither Maſter William, nor yet Lucas ſhould be taken, but that Richard Biſhop of Sarum ſhould be tranſlated to Durham, and be Biſhop there, Anno 1228. Ex Matth. Pariſienſi.

Canonical Election.

The Monks of Durham ſend to Rome in behalf their King.

{Anno 1227.}

The like ſtir alſo happened both the ſame year, and for the like matter, between the Monks of Coventry and the Canons of Lichfield, about chooſing of their Biſhop, which of them ſhould have the ſuperior voice in the Election of their Prelate. After much ado, the cauſe, at length being being hoisted up to Rome, had this determination; that the Monks of Coventry and the Church of Lichfield should chuse their Bishop by course, each part keeping his turn the one after the other: provided notwithstanding, that the Prior of Coventry should always have the first voice in every Election, whereas the old custom was, saith mine Author, that the Covent with the Prior of Coventry was wont to have the whole Election of the Bishop without the Canons,

Ex Mat. Paris, pag. 68. Stephen Langton Archbishop of Canterbury, by whom (as is recorded by Nic. Trivet) the Chapters of the Bible, in that order and number as we now use them, were first distinguished. The said Langton also made Postils upon the whole Bible. The same moreover builded the New Hall in the Palace of Canterbury.

this was Anno 1228. Ex Parisiensi, pag. 68.

After the death of this Langton infused another variance about the Election of the Archbishop of Canterbury, between the Monks of Canterbury and the King. The perturbation whereof as it was no less seditious, so the determination of the same was much more costly. After the death of Stephen Langton, the Monks of Canterbury, obtaining licence of the King to proceed in the Election of a new Archbishop, did choose one of their own Society, named Master Walter Homesham. Whom when the Monks had presented unto the King, he, after long deliberation, began to object against that Election, saying, First, That the Monks had elected such a one as neither was profitable to him nor his Kingdom. Secondly, He objected against the party elect, that his Father was convict of Felony, and hanged for the same. Thirdly, That he stood in Causes against his Father King John in the time of the Interdict. Moreover, the Bishops his Suffragans charged the party elect, That he had lien with a certain Nun, and had Children by her; adding further, That the Election of the Archbishop was without their presence, which ought not to be, &c. But the Archbishop again, stoutly standing unto the Election, appealed up to Rome, and estsoons, taking with him certain Monks, presented himself to the Popes own proper person, there to sue his Appeal; instantly intreating, that his Election might stand confirmed by his Authority pontifical. But the Pope understanding that the said Election was resisted by the King and the Bishops, deferred the matter until he did hear further of the certainty thereof. The King and the Bishops, having intelligence that the Archbishop with his Monks were gone to Rome, thought good to articulate the foresaid Objections above alledged, in writing; and sealing the same with the Seals both of the King and of the Bishops, to exhibit them to the Bishop of Rome. The Messengers of these Letters were the Bishops of Rochester, of Chester, and the Archdeacon of Bedford, Master John, &c. Who coming to Rome, and exhibiting their Message with their Letters unto the Pope (consideration being had upon the same) were commanded to waite attendance against the next day after Ash-Wednesday: then to have a resolute answer concerning the Cause, which was the second day of March the next year following; that is, in the year of our Lord.

Appeal sued to Rome.

King Henry sendeth to the Pope.

Tythe of all moveable goods in England and Ireland promised to the Pope for granting the Kings Suit.

1229. In the mean season, the Kings Proctors ceased not with all instance to labour the Pope and his Cardinals to be favourable to the Kings side. But finding them somewhat hard and strict in the matter (as is the guise of that Court) they began to misdoubt their speeding. Wherefore consulting together with themselves upon the premisses, they came to the Pope, promising in the Kings behalf to be given and granted to him, out of the Realms both of England and Ireland, the tythe or tenth part of all the goods within the said Realms moveable, to sustain his Wars against the Emperor, so that he would incline favourably to the Kings Suit and Petition herein. At dominus Papa (saith Paris)

O auri facra fames.

qui rebellem Imperatorem super omnia æstuabat dejicere, tantis promissionibus exhilaratus, trahitur ad consensum:

That is, But the Pope (saith the Author) which boiled with defire above all measure, to have the Emperor his Enemy cast down, being cheared with so great promises, granted his consent to them, who, sitting then in his Consistory, had these words, which here follow.

There hath come of late to our Intelligence the Election of a certain Monk named Walter, to be Archbishop of Canterbury; whereupon after that we heard and advised as well those things which the said Monk hath said for himself and for his Election; as also on the contrary side, the Objections and Exceptions of the Bishops of England alledging against him and against his Election; namely, of the Bishop of Chester, the Bishop of Rochester, and John Archdeacon of Bedford: We upon the same committed the Examination, touching the person of the man, unto our reverend Brethren Lord Cardinal Albany, Lord Cardinal Thomas de Sabina, and Master Peter. And when the forsaid Elect, coming before them, was asked of them, first concerning the Lords descending into Hell, Whether descended in flesh, or without his flesh, he answered not well. Item, being asked touching the making of the body of Christ on the Altar, he answered likewise not soundly. Being asked moreover how Rachel wept for her Children, he being dead before, he answered not well. Item, being asked concerning the Sentence of Excommunication denounced against the Order of Law, he answered not well. Again, being required of Matrimony, if one of the married parties be an Infidel, and do depart, he answered thereto not well. Upon these Articles he was (as is said) diligently examined of the Cardinals: to the which we say he answered not only not well, but also very ill. For so much therefore, as the Church of Canterbury is a noble Church, and requireth a noble Prelate, a man discreet and modest, and such as ought to be taken out of the bosome of the Church of Rome; and for so much as this new Elect (whom not only here we pronounce to be unworthy, but also should say more of him, if we would proceed with him by the rigor of the Law) is so insufficient, that he ought not to be admitted to such a room: we do utterly infringe, annihilate, and evacuate his Election, always reserving to our selves the provision of the said Church. Hæc ex Mat. Parisiensi ad verbum.

Thus the Election of Walter being fruftrate and diffolved, the Kings Procurators bringing forth the Letters of the King, and of the Suffragans of the Church of Canterbury, presented the same unto the Pope for the Ratification of Richard Chancellor of Lincoln, to be appointed Archbishop of Canterbury, whom they with great commendation of words did set forth to be a man of profound Learning and Knowledge, of an honeft Converfation; and which was greatest of all, that he was a man much for the profit of the Church of Rome, as also for the Realm of England. And thus the said Richard being commended to the Pope by the Letters Procuratory of the King and of the Bishops, had the consent of the Pope and of the Cardinals, and so was made Bishop of Canterbury before he was elected. Whereupon the said Pope Gregory in his behalf directeth down his Letters to all and singular Suffragans of the Church of Canterbury, declaring thus, and beginning first with a lye, that for so much as by the fulness of Ecclesiastical Power the charge of Pastoral Office is committed to him in general upon all Churches, he therefore for the sollicitude he beareth, as well to all other Churches in general, as in special to the Metropolitan-Church of Canterbury, repudiating and disannulling the former Election of Walter the Monk upon just causes, hath provided for that See a man, as in all other good gifts perfect and excellent, by the report of them that know him, so for that Function very fit and commodious; and willeth and commandeth them, and all others, by his Authority Apostolical, with all devout reverence to receive him, and humbly to obey him, &c. which was Anno 1229. Ex Paris.

These things thus finished at Rome, the Pope not forgetting the sweet promises made of the English Silver which he so greedily gaped for, omitting neither time nor diligence, in all speedy wise sendeth unto the King of England M. Stephen his own Chaplain and trusty Legate, to require and collect the forefaid Tythes of all the moveable goods both of England, Ireland, and Wales, which were promised to him before, therewith to maintain his War against Frederick the Emperor. And to the intent he might inflame all Christian Realms with the like hatred which he bare against Frederick the Emperor, he sendeth also with the said Stephen special Letters full of manifold Complaints, and grievous Accusations against the said Emperor, whereof more (Christ granting) shall be shewed hereafter. Upon the coming of this Stephen the Legate, the King assembled all his Earls and Barons, with the Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, bots, Priors, Templars, Hospitalers, Parsons and Vicars, and other such as held of him In Capite, to appear before him at Westminster, to hear and to commune of the matter. In the Assembly of whom, the Popes Patent Letters were brought forth and read, wherein he required the Tenths of all the moveables in England, Wales and Ireland, as well of the Clergy as of the Laity, to maintain his Expedition against the forefaid Frederick the Emperor. The which Expedition as he pretended to atchieve and to take in hand for the cause of the Universal Church, and happily to the had begun the matter already; and for so much as the Riches of the Apoftolick See did not fuffice for the accomplishing of so great an enterprise: he therefore, inforced by meer necessity, did implore the aid and help of all the true obedient and natural Chickens of the Church of Rome, left the Members thereof together with the Head should be subverted. These Letters of the Pope to this effect being openly recited and explained by the Popes Chaplain, which he with much more allegation and perfwation of words did amplifie to his uttermost; the King (saith mine Author) in whom all men did hope for help to their defence, became then as a staffe of Reed. For so much as he had obliged himself to the same before, for the Election of his Archbishop, now could he say nothing against it, but held his peace. The Earls, Barons, and all the Laity utterly refused so to bind their Baronies to the Church of Rome: but the Bishops, Abbots, Priors, with other Prelates of the Church, first requiring space and respite to deliberate for three or four days; at length for fear of the Popes Curse (although they durst not utterly withstand) had brought to pass to have concluded for a sum of money much less, had not Stephen Segrave, one of the Kings Counsellors, craftily convented with the Legate, and by subtil means brought it to pass, that the whole Tenths were gathered and paid, to the inestimable damage (saith Paris) both of the Ecclesiastical and Temporal State. The means whereof (saith the Author) was this, The Legate shewing to the Prelates his Procuratory Letters, to collect and gather up all the forefaid Tenths in the name and authority of the Pope, declared moreover the full Authority to him granted by the vertue of his Commission, to Excommunicate all such, and to interdict their Churches, whosoever did gainstand or go contrary to the said Collection. Whereupon by the said vertue Legantine, he fended to every Shire his Proctors to gather the Popes money, or else to Excommunicate them which denied to pay. And for so much as the prefent need of the Pope required prefent help without delay, he fendeth moreover to the Bishops and Prelates of the Realm, in pain of interdiction, forthwith to procure and fend to him either of their own or by loan, or usance, or by what means soever, so much money in all poft speed for the present use of the Pope; and after to take up again the said money of the Tenths of every singular person, by the right taxing of their goods. Upon this, the Prelates to avoid the danger (having no other remedy) were driven to sell their Chalices, Cructs, Copes, Jewels, and other Church-Plate, and some to lay to mortgage such things as they had, some also to borrow upon usance to make the money which was required. Moreover, the said Stephen the Pope's Chaplain (as reporteth Paris) brought with him into England, for the same purpose, such Bankers and Usurers, who lending out their money upon great usury, did unreasonably pinch the English people, which Merchant-Usurers were then called Cauursini. Briefly, such strict Exaction was then upon the poor Englishmen, that not only their prefent goods were valued and taxed, but also the Corn, yet growing in the field, against the next Harvest was tythed. Only the Earl of Chester, named Ranulphus, flood stoutly against the Pope, suffering none within his Dominion either Lay-man or Clerk to yield any Tenths to the Popes Proctors. Ex Matth. Paris, pag. 74. And this was the end of the strife between the Monks of Canterbury and the King, for the Election of their Archbishop, which was about the year of our Lord, 1229. in the which year was finished the new Church of Coventry, by Alexander Bishop of the said City, and partly by the help of the King: which Church Richard his Predecessor Bishop before him of Coventry had begun.

The French-men about this time again prepared themselves towards Provence, to war against the forefaid Reimundus Earl of Tholouse, and to expulse him out of his Possessions. And hearing that he was in his Castle of Saracene, they made thither all their Power, thinking there to inclose and compass him about: but the Earl being privy of their confpired purpofe, fet for them by the way, appointing certain ambushments in woods, not so secretly as strongly, there to wait and receive the coming of the French-men, and to give them their welcome. Thus when the French were entred the wood, the Earl with his train of well armed and able Warriors, suddenly did fly upon them unawares, and gave them a bitter meeting, so that in that Conflict five hundred of the French Souldiers were taken and many slain. Of their Servitors to the number of Two thousand men with their armor were taken, of whom some lost their Eyes, some their Noses, some their Ears, some their Legs, and so were sent home: the reft were carried away Prisoners into the Caftle. And to be brief (saith the History) thrice the same Summer were the French-men difcomfited, put to flight, taken and imprisoned by the forefaid Reimundus the godly Earl. Ex Paris. pag. 69. Wherein is to be seen and to be prailed the gracious Protection of the Lord our God against the furious Papists, which is glorious always in his Saints.

The same year the King, being at Portsmouth, had assembled together all his Nobility, Earls, Barons, and Knights of England, with such an Army of Horsemen and Footmen, as hath not been lightly seen, thinking to recover again the Country of Normandy, of Gant, and other Possessions which King John his Father before had lost. But when the Captains and Marshals of the field should take shipping, there were not half Ships enough to receive the Host. Whereupon the King was vehemently inflamed with anger, laying all the fault in Hubert the Lord Chief Justice (who under the King had all the Government of the Realm) calling him old Traytor, charging him that he should be the let of his Voyage, as he was before when he took of the French Queen five thousand Marks to stay the Kings Journey into Normandy. Insomuch that the rage of the King was so kindled against him, that drawing his Sword, he made at him to run him through, had not the Earl of Chester, Ranulph stopt the King. Hubert withdrew himself away till the Kings rage was past. This was about the time of Michaelmas, at which time arrived Henry Earl of Normandy in the Haven of Portsmouth in the month of October; who should have conducted the King upon his Allegiance and Oath into Normandy. But he with other of the Kings Army counselled the King not to take that Voyage towards Winter, but rather to defer it to the Easter tide following: wherewith the King was stayed and well contented, and pacified again with Hubert the Justice, &c. Ex Parisiensi.

After that followed cracks of thunder and lightning, like to terrible, leaving such a feint in the Church, that the people, looking for Doomes-day, thought no less but that the Steeple and whole Church would have fallen upon their heads: insomuch that they running out of the Church, the people amazed, fell down together by thousands, as men amazed, not knowing for the time where they were: only the Bishop and his Deacon stood still at their Mass, holding the Altar fast. Ex Parisiensi.

Which Lands appertain to the right of his Seat, and to the Church of Canterbury; for the which the said said Earl with his Ancestors were bound to do Homage to him and to his Predecessors; and therefore he required the keeping of the foresaid Castle, with the demains thereof to be restored to him. To this the King answered again, That the said Earl did hold of him in Capite, and that the Castles being vacant of Earls and Barons, with their Heirs, did belong to his Crown, till the lawful age of the said Heirs. The Archbishop, when he could get no other answer of the King, did Excommunicate all such as invaded the foresaid Possessions, with all others that took their part, the King only excepted. Which done, ffifoons he speeded himself to Rome, there to prosecute his Suit before the Pope. The King hearing thereof, not long after sendeth up Master Roger Cantelu, with certain other Messengers, unto Rome against the Archbishop.

The Kings Answer to Richard the Archbishop.

Excommunication abolished.

Richard the Archbishop complaineth to the Pope of his King and other matters more.

This Richard the Archbishop, coming before the Popes presence, beginneth first to complain of his King, for that he committed all the Affairs of his Realm to the disposition and government of Hubert his Justice, using only his counsel, all his other Nobles despised.

Against the said Justice, moreover he complained, laying to his Charge; first, that he had married a wife, being the Kinswoman of her whom he had married before; also that the said Hubert the Justice did invade, hold, and wrongfully detain such Possessions as belonged to the See and Church of Canterbury.

As touching the Wife of this Hubert, here is to be noted, that he married the elder Sister of the King of Scots: which, as it seemeth, could be of no great kin to her whom he married before.

Further, he complaineth of certain Bishops his Suffragans, who, neglecting their Pastoral Function, did sit on Chequer-matter belonging to the King, and exercised Sessions and Judgments of blood.

Plurality of Benefices complained of by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Over and besides, he complaineth of beneficed Persons, and Clerks within Orders, for having many Benefices joyned with cure of Soul: and that they also, taking example of the Bishops, did intermeddle in Secular matters, and in Judgments of Lay-men.

Of these and such other defaults he required redress to be had. The Pope weighing and considering the cause of the Archbishop to stand upon right and reason (at leastwise seeming so to his purpose) commanded incontinent his Petitions and Requests to be dispatched according to Justice.

The Kings Attorneys could not speed with the Pope. Respect of persons doth much with the Pope. Richard the Archbishop in his journey from Rome dieth.

Against these Complaints of the Archbishop, the Kings Attorneys alledged and defended, in as much favour of the King as they might, but could do no good. Such favour found the Archbishop in the Popes sight, being (as the story reporteth) of a comely Personage, and of an eloquent Tongue, that he obtained whatsoever he asked. Thus the Archbishop, with all favourable speed being dispatched at Rome after his own will and desire, returned homeward; who in his Journey, within three days of his setting forth, departed in the house of Gray-Fryers at S. Gemmes, and so his cause departed with him: who, winning his Suit, lost his life; for whom it had been better, I suppose, to have tarried at home. And here of him an end, with all his Complaints also. Ex Parisiensi.

Ralph Nevil Bishop of Chichester elected Archbishop of Canterbury. The King withstandeth the Archbishop of Canterbury. Ex Mat. Paris.

After the death of this Richard, the Monks of Canterbury (according to the manner) addrest themselves to a new Election: at which was chosen Ralph Nevil, Bishop of Chichester, who was the Kings Chancellor, much commended in stories, to be a man faithful, upright, and constant: which from the way of Justice declined neither to the right hand nor to the left, but was upright and sincere both in word and deed. This Ralph (thus chosen of the Monks) was presented unto the King to be their Archbishop, wherewith the King was right well contented, and glad also of his Election: and forthwith invested him for Archbishop of the Church of Canterbury. But this investing of the King was not enough, unless he should also be confirmed by the Pope. Wherefore the Monks, ready to take their journey unto Rome, came to the new Archbishop, requiring his help for their expences by the way, and to know what Service he would command them to the Court of Rome. But he, fearing in his mind the fame not to be without some fcruple of simony and ambition, said, He would not give an half-penny, and, holding up his hands to heaven, thus prayed, saying, O Lord God, if I shall be thought worthy to be called (although indeed unworthy) to the Seat and Office of this Church; so be it as thou shalt dispose it. But if otherwise in this troublesome Office of Chancery, and this my inferior Ministry, wherunto I have been assigned, I shall seem more necessary for this thy Kingdom and People I refuse not my labour, thy will be done.

A rare example of a good Archbishop.

The prayer of the Archbishop elect.

The Monks beholding the constancy of the man, notwithstanding they had of him no money, yet refused not their travel and journey to Rome, to have their Election confirmed by the Popes Authority. The Pope inquiring of Simon Langton (Brother of Stephen Langton Archbishop of Canterbury before mentioned) of the person of this man, it was reported again to him by the said Simon (maliciously depraving the good man behind his back) declaring to the Pope, that he was a Courtier, unlearned, unchaste, and fervent in his doings, and such a one, who, if he should be promoted to that Dignity, would go about, with the help of the King and of the whole Realm, to remove and bring the Realm of England from under the Yoke of the Pope and of the Church of Rome: and so to bereave the See of Rome of the Tribute, under which King John had once subjected himself and his Realm, at what time he yielded his Crown to the hands of Pandulphus the Legate, &c. With these and such other words Simon Langton falsly and maliciously depraved the godly Bishop. The Pope hearing with one ear, and crediting what he heard, without further inquisition made of the other party accused, sendeth incontinent to the Monks of Canterbury to proceed in a new Election, and to choose them another Archbishop, such as were an wholesome Pastor of Souls, profitable unto the Church of England, and devote to the Church of Rome: and thus was the lawful Election of this good Archbishop made frustrate; too good peradventure to serve in that place wherunto he was elected.

The rash judgment of the Pope.

The Election of Radulph Archbishop elect, declared by the Pope.

After the repulse of this Radulph, the Canterbury Monks, entring a new Election, agreed upon John their Prior, to be their Metropolitan; who, going up to Rome to have his Election confirmed by the Pope, was three days together examined of the Cardinals. And when they could find no insufficiency in him, touching those things wherein they tried him: yet notwithstanding the Pope finding fault with his age (he peradventure being more aged himself) repelled him, for that he said he was too old and simple to sustain that Dignity. Ex Paris.

John Archbishop elect, refused and repulsed by the Pope.

What was the age of this person, I find it not in the Author expressed; yet it is to be supposed, that he, which was able to take that Journey to Rome and home again, was not so greatly to be complained of for his age, but that he was able sufficiently to take pains in keeping the Chair of Canterbury.

The Popes intolerable Exactions upon England.

In the former parts of this story preceding, partly before hath been declased, partly hereafter more shall appear (Christ willing) how the Church of England and Commons of the same was grieved and miserably afflicted by the intolerable Oppression of the Pope: who through his violent extortion had procured the best Benefices to be given unto his Romans, and the chief fruits of them to be reserved to his own Coffers. And what complaints thereof have been made, ye heard before; but yet no redress could be had. Such was the insatiable avarice of these Roman Rakehels, prolling, and polling, wheresoever they came, with their provisions and exactions out of measure, and never satisfied. Insomuch that here in England, whosoever lacked, their Barns were always full of Corn; and what penury soever pinched the people, they were sure to have enough. And these importunate Exactions and Contributions of these Italian Harpies, besides the Peter-pence, besides the common Tribute, daily more and more increased, to the great grievance of the Realm, insomuch that the wealth of this Land was almost clean sucked up, and transfated to the Court of Rome. Neither was the King ignorant hereof, but could not help the matter. Wherefore it was devised by some of the Nobles (as appeareth in the story of Parisiensis) this foresaid year, An. 1231. that certain Letters, under the pretensed colour of the Kings Authority, should be sent abroad, willing and commanding, that such Corn and Grain with other Revenues, as were taken up for the Pope, should be staid and forth coming by a certain day in the said Letters appointed; the which Letters are thought to proceed chiefly by the means of Hubert Lord Chief Justice of England, who then next under the King, ruled the most Affairs of the Realm. The words and contents of the Letters be these:

Ex Mat. Paris. An. 1231.

Bishops send Letters to make a restraint of Corn and Victuals to be sent to the Pope.

After

The Copy of the Letter written to the Kings Ambassadors to certify to Rome of the restraint of the Revenues within the Realm.

After divers and sundry Griefs and Oppressions which this Realm, as you know, hath sustained by the Romanists, and yet doth, as well to the prejudice of the King himself, as also of the Nobility of the same, concerning the Advowsions of their Churches, and about their Tithes: who also go about to take from the Clerks and spiritual men their Benefices, and to bestow them upon their own Nation and Country-men, to the spoil and confusion both of us and our Realm: we therefore by our common consents have thought good (although very late) now yet rather, than any longer to suffer their intollerable Oppressions and Extortions, to resist and withstand the same. And by the taking from them their Benefices through all England, in like manner to cut short and bridle them, as they had thought to have kept under and bridled others: whereby they may desist any longer to molest the Realm. Wherefore we straitly charge and command you, that as touching the farming of their Churches, or else the rents belonging to them, which either you have presently in your hands, or else do owe unto the said Romanists, that from henceforth you be no more accountable to them, or else pay to them from henceforth the same. But that you have the said your Rents and Revenues ready by such a day, to pay and deliver unto our Procurators thereunto by our Letters assigned; and that all Abbots and Priors have the same in a readiness at the time appointed, in their own Monasteries: and all other Priests, Clerks and Lay-men, at the Churches of the Romanists, there ready to pay. And further, know ye for certainty, that if ye refuse thus to do, all that you have besides shall be by us burnt and spoiled. And besides look what danger we purpose shall fall upon them, the same shall light upon your Necks if you refuse thus to do.

Farewell.

A general spoil of the Romane Patrons in England.

When this was done, they sent their Letters abroad by certain Souldiers thereunto appointed, to the which Letters they had devised a new Seal with two Swords ingraved, and between the Swords was written, Ecce gladii duo &c. Behold these two Swords, ready to take vengeance of all those that shall withstand the form and order in these Letters contained.

A famish Vicar of mild Christ.

Anno 1232. A Roman Priest, Canon of York, robbed by Souldiers.

At that time the sixteenth day before the Kalends of January, about the beginning of the year 1232. there was kept at S. Albans a great Consistory of Abbots, Priors, Archdeacons, with divers both of the Nobility and Clergy by the Popes Commandment, for the Celebration of a Divorce between the Countess of Essex and her Husband. At the breaking up of which Consistory, when every man was about to depart thence, there was a certain Clerk, whose name was Cincius a Roman, and also a Canon of Pauls in London, taken by some of the said University not far off from Saint Albans, and was carried away from his company by the Souldiers. But Master John, Archdeacon of Norwich, a Florentine, hardly escaping from that company, got to London, where he hid himself, and durst not be seen. Cincius after five weeks, when they had well emptied his bags, was safely sent again without any more hurt to London.

Hubert de Burgo.

The Barns of a Roman Parson broken up, and the corn distributed to the poor.

Not long after this, about the beginning of January, the Barns of a certain beneficed man a Roman, and Parson of Wingham, being full of Corn, were broke up by a like company of armed Souldiers, and the Corn brought out to be sold and given away to the poor people. The Farmer fearing this, and not able to refell, complaineth to the Sheriff of the Shire of this injury done to his Master, and of breaking the Kings peace: whereupon the Sheriff sent certain of his men to see what was done. Who coming to the empty Barns, and there finding the foresaid Souldiers to them unknown, who had sold away the most part of the Corn upon easie price, and some for charity had given to the poverty of the Country about, required of them what they were, that so durst presume to break the Kings peace. Whom the other then called secretly apart, and shewed them the Kings Letters Patents (pretending at least the Kings Name and Seal) wherein was forbidden that no man should presume to stop or let them in that purpose. Whereof the Sheriffs Servants being certified, quietly returned from whence they came.

Robert Twing spoil. ed of his Benefice by the Romane.

This coming to the knowledge of Roger Bishop of London, he (with the assistance of other Bishops) proceedeth in solemn Excommunication, first against them that robbed Cincius the Roman; then of them which spoiled the Barns of the Parson of Wingham another Roman; thirdly, he Excommunicated them that forged the Letters and Seal of the King above specified.

Neither yet, for all this, did that fo cease, but the same year about Easter next following, all the Barns in England, which were in the hands of any Romans or Italians, were likewise wasted, and the Corn sold to the best Commodity of the poor Commons. Of the which, great Alms were distributed, and many times Money also with Corn together was sparsed for the needy people to gather up. Neither was there any that would or durst stand against them. As for the Romans and Italians themselves, they were stricken in such fear, that they hid themselves in Monasteries and Cells, not daring to complain of their Injuries received; but held it better to lose rather their goods, than to lose their lives. The Authors and Workers of this feat were to the number of fourscore armed Souldiers; of whom the principal Captain was one naming himself William Withers, surnamed Twing.

This coming to the Popes knowledge, he was not a little stirred therewith, and sendeth his Letters immediately to the King upon the same, with sharp Threatnings, and imperious Commandments, charging him for suffering such Villany within his Realm, straitly injoyning him, under pain of Excommunication, to search out the doers hereof with all diligence, and so to punish them that all others by them may take Example. Likewise he sendeth the same Charge to Peter Bishop of Winchester, and to the Abbot of Saint Edmund, to inquire in the South parts. Also to the Archbishop of York, and to the Bishop of Durham, and to Master John, Canon of York, a Roman, to inquire in the North parts for the fald Malefactors, and after diligent Inquisition made, to send up the same to Rome, there needs to appear before him, &c.

Inquisition made for the spoiling of the Popes corn.

Thus after earnest Inquisition made of all Parties, and Witnesses sworn and examined, many were found culpable in the matter, some that were Factors, some that were Confenters, of whom some were Bishops and Chaplains unto the King, some Archdeacons and Deans, with other Souldiers and Lay-men. Amongst whom, certain Sheriffs and Under-Sheriffs, with their Servitors under them, were apprehended and caft into prison by the King. Many for fear fled and efcaped away, who being fought for, could not be found: but the principal of this number (as is aforesaid) was suppofed to be Hubertus Lord Chief Justice; who, both with the Kings Letters and his own, fortified the doers thereof, that no man durft interrupt them. Moreover, in the same Society of them which were noted in these doings, was the fame Robert Twing above mentioned, a comely young man and a tall Souldier: who of his own voluntary accord with five other Servitors, whom he took with him abroad to work that feat, came unto the King, openly protefting himfelf to be the Author of that deed doing, and faid he did it for hatred of the Pope and the Romans, because that by the Sentence of the Bishop of Rome, and fraudulent Circumvention of the Italians he was bereaved of the Patronage of his Benefice, having no more to give but that one: wherefore to be revenged of that injury, he enterprifed that which was done; preferring rather justly to be Excommunicated for a feafon, than to be fpoiled of his Benefice for ever. Then the King, and other Executers of the Popes commandment, gave him counsel, that feeing he had fo incurred the danger of the Popes Sentence, he fhould offer himfelf to the Pope to be abfolved of him again, and there to make his declaration unto him, that he justly and canonically was poffeffed of that Church. The King moreover with him fent his Letters Teftimonial unto the Pope, witneffing with the faid Souldier, and inftantly deliring the Pope in his behalf, that he might with favour be heard. At the requeft whereof, Pope Gregory afterwards both releafed him of the Sentence, and reftored unto him his Patronage, writing unto the Archbishop of York, that he might again injoy the right of his Benefice, in as ample manner as he did before it was taken from him.

The Romans and Italians Parsons in England robbed of their wares and corn.

Hubert de Burgo Lord Chief Justice, being one of them which held against the Romish Priests, as is afore fignified, was therefore not a little vexed of the Bishops; who to requite him with the like despite again (after their their accustomed manner of practice) went about by subtil working to shake him out of the Kings favour. And first cometh Peter Bishop of Winchester to the King, grievously complaining of certain about the King, but especially of the foresaid Hubert the Kings Justice: insomuch that he caused him to be removed from his Office, notwithstanding he had the Kings Seal and writing for the perpetuity of the same, and procured Stephen Segrave to be placed in his Function. And after a few days, the King more and more incensed against him, called him unto account of all the Treasure which he was accountable for by his Exchequer-Office: also of all such debts by him due from the time of his Father, till his time: also of all the Lordships which were in the possession of William Earl of Pembroke, Chief Justice before him. Item, of the liberties which he did hold at that time in Forests, Warrens, Shires, and other places, how they were kept, or how they were made away. Of prizes likewise, also of losses committed through his negligence, and of wastes made contrary to the Kings profit, of his liberties how he did use them. Item, of Injuries and Damages wrought against the Clerks of Rome and other Italians, and the Popes Legates; for the redress whereof he would never adjoyn his counsel, according as pertained to his Office, being then Chief Justice of England. Also of Scutages, Gifts, Presents, Escapes of Prisoners. Item, of Mortagues which King John committed to his keeping at the day of his death, and which were also in his time committed unto him. To these Hubert answered, That he had King John's own hand to shew for his discharge, whose approved his fidelity, that he never called him to any, but clearly discharged him from all such Counts. Whereunto answered again the Bishop of Winchester, saying, The Charter of King John hath no force after the death of him, but that ye may now be called to a reckoning of this King for the same.

The Bishops go about to bring Hubert out of the Kings favour.

Objections laid against Hubert by the King.

Note, that in Winchester the Kings Charter is no longer in force than whilst he liveth.

Over and besides these, other greater Objections were laid to his charge by the King, as for sending and writing unto the Duke of Austria, that he might marry his Daughter, to the prejudice of the King, and of the Realm, disswading that he might not be given him. Item, for counselling the King not to enter into Normandy with his Army, which he had prepared for the recovery of Lands there belonging to his right, whereby great Treasure was there consumed in vain. Item, for corrupting the Daughter of the King of Scots, whom King John his Father committed unto his custody for him to marry. Item, for stealing from him a precious stone, which had a vertue to make him victorious in War, and for sending the same unto Leolin, Prince of Wales: and that by his Letters sent to the said Leolin, William Brues a Nobleman was caused there traytorously to be hanged, &c. These with other Crimes (whether true or false) were suggested to the King against the said Hubert by his Adversaries: whereunto he was required to answer by order of Law. Hubert then, seeing himself in such a strait, refused to answer prefently, but required respite thereunto, for that the matters were weighty which the King objected to him, which was granted to him till the fourteenth day of September: but in the mean time, Hubert, being in fear of the King, fled from London to the Priory of Merton. And thus Hubert, who before for the love of the King, and defence of the Realm (saith mine Author) had got the hatred of all the Nobles of England, now being out of the Kings favour, was destitute of comfort on every side; save only that Lucas Archbishop of Dublin, with instant prayers and tears laboured to the King for him. By this example, and many like, is to be seen, how unstable and variable a thing the favour of mortal and mutable Princes is: to teach all such as have to do about Princes, how to repose and plant their trust, not in man, but in their Lord God, by him to find help in Christ the true Prince of all Princes, which never faileth. By like example was Clito Servant of King Alexander, Joab of King David, Belisarius of Justinian, Harpagus of Astiages, Cromwel of King Henry, with innumerable more, which in Histories are to be found.

Other Crimes objected to Hubert by the King.

Princes Favours not to be trusted unto.

When the day was come that this Hubert should answer, keeping amongst the Monks of Merton, he durst not appear. Then was it signified unto him from the King, that he should come up and appear in the Court, there to answer to his Charge. Whereunto he answered again, That he misdoubted the Kings anger, and therefore he did fly to the Church, as the uttermost Refuge to all such as suffer wrong; from whence he would not stir, till he heard the Kings wrath to be mitigated towards him. With this the King, moved and sore displeased, directed his Letters, in all hast to the Major of London, commanding him at the light thereof to muster and take up all the Citizens that could bear Harnesse in the City, and to bring to him by force of Arms the foresaid Hubert either quick or dead out of Merton. Whereupon, the Major immediately, causing the great Bell to be rung, assembled together the people of London, and opening before them the Kings Letters, commanded them to prepare and arm themselves in all readinesse to the executing of the Kings Will and Message.

The King's displeasure against Hubert.

The King belongs to the Major of London.

The Citizens hearing this were therewith right glad and ready, for they were all in great hatred with Hubert, because of the Execution of Constantine their Citizen afore-mentioned. Notwithstanding, certain of the Citizens; namely, Andrew Buckrell, John Travers, and others more, men of more grave and sage discretion (wisely pondering with themselves, what inconvenience might rise hereof) went in haste to the Bishop of Winchester, lying then in Southwark, and, waking him out of his sleep, delired of him his counsel in that so sudden and dangerous dilstreis, declaring unto him what great peril might thereby insue as well to the Church of Merton, as also to the City, by the fury of the unordinate and fierce multitude, which will hardly be bridled from robbing and spoiling, neither will spare thedding of blood, &c. Unto whom again the bloody Bishop gave this bloody counsel (saith Parisiensis) Dangerous it is (quoth he) both here and there; but yet see that you obey and execute the Precept of the King, I counsel you plainly. At the which counsel of the Bishop, they, being amazed, went with an ill will about the businesse injoyned. But the people, inflamed with hatred, gladly coveted to be revenged, and to shed the blood of the said Hubert.

Some wise than fond.

Good advisement of the discreet Citizens.

Cruel counsel given of the Bishop of Winchester.

¶ The cause, why Peter Bishop of Winchester was so cruelly set against the Justice, was partly for the damages he had done to the Roman Priests, as before is touched; partly also for the old grudge, because the King coming to his lawful age before (through the counsel of this Hubert) loosed himself from the government of the said Bishop, who had him then in custody. And thus rose up the grudge and displeasure of this Bishop towards him.

The cause of difference between the Bishop of Winchester and Hubert.

On the next morrow, the Londoners issuing out of the City, to the number of twenty thousand, set forth toward the Abbey of Merton, where Hubert was lying prostrate before the Altar, commending himself to God.

Hubert prostrate upon the ground commendeth himself to God.

In the mean season, while the Citizens were in their Journey, raging against the poor Earl of Kent, it was suggested to the King by Radulph Bishop of Chichester, and Lord Chancellor, that it was dangerous to excite up the vulgar and unruly multitude, for fear of Sedition; left peradventure the rude and heady people, being stirred up, will not so soon be brought down again, when the King would have them. Moreover, what shall be said (quoth he) among the Frenchmen and other Nations, which of great things love to make them greater, and of evil things to make them worse than they are? but thus jestingly and mockingly: See what a kind Bird is the young King of England, which seeketh to devour his old Nurse, under the whose wings he had been brought up and nourished in his youth. And thus the King, by the perswasion hereof, changing his counsel, sent in all haste wife after the Army again, willing them to retract their Journey, and to retire. And thus the Londoners (although much against their wills) returned home, misling of their purpose. Wherein is to be observed another notable example of Gods working Providence. For when the King (saith the History) had sent by two Messengers or Purlivants to revoke and call back again the Army of the Londoners, going with greedy minds to shed the blood of the innocent Justice: one of the Messengers posting with all speed possible, with the Kings Letters, overtook the Army; and coming to the fore-ward where the Captains were, by vertue of the Kings Letters staid their course and bloody purpose, whereby they could proceed no further. But the other Messenger crafty and malicious, bearing hatred to the said Hubert, and rather wishing him to be slain than to be delivered, lingred by the way of purpose purpose (although being commanded to make haste) and when he came, went only but to the middle fort; more like a Messenger meet to serve a dead mans arrant, than to serve the turn of them which be alive. And so in like manner, by the just hand of God it fell upon him. For the same Messenger stumbling with his Horse, riding but a soft or foot pase, and rather walking than riding, fell down backward from his Horse back, and there brake his neck and died. This merciful message of the King was (as is said) sent by the instigation of Radulph Bishop of Chichester, Lord Chancellor (a vertuous and a faithful man) and one that could skill to have compassion on the miseries of men. Of whom was declared before, that he, being elected Archbishop of Canterbury, would not give one half-penny to their expences by the way, to get his Election confirmed by the Pope: and afterward by the said Pope was defeated and frustrated of his Election, as relation was made afore. And thus through Gods Providence, by the means of the Kings Letters, the Army returned, and Hubert's life (contrary to his expectation) was preserved.

A notable example of Gods just punishment, deluding with death, him that defeated the death of another.

Commendation of Radulph Bishop of Chichester.

After this, the Archbishop of Dublin, with much labour and great suit, intreated and obtained of the King to grant unto the said Hubert, respite till the twelfth day of January, to provide himself of his answer to such things as were commensed against him. Then Hubert, trusting to enjoy some safety by the Kings permission to him granted, to breath himself a little, and to walk abroad, took his journey towards S. Edmundsbury, where his Wife was; and, passing through the Country of Essex, was inned there in a certain Town belonging to the Bishop of Norwich. Whereof when the King was certified, fearing left he would raise up some commotion in the Realm, fendeth in hasty anger after him Sir Godfride Crancombe Knight, with three hundred Men; commanding under pain of Hanging, that they should apprehend him, and bring him to the Tower of London: which commandment to accomplish, there lacked no haste. Hubert having intelligence of their coming (rising out of his Bed, naked as he was) ran unto the Chappel standing near unto the Inn, where he holden with the one hand the Cross, with the other hand the Sacrament of the Lords Body. Then Godfrid with his forefaid armed Souldiers, entring into the Chappel, willed him to come out. Which when he would not, with violent hands he drew him out of the Chappel, and taking the Cross and the Sacrament out of his hands, fait bound him with Fetters and Gives under the Horse belly, and brought him, as they were commanded, to the Tower. And so certifying the King what they had done (who then turned up walking for them) he rejoiced not a little thereat, and went merry to his Bed.

The Archbishop of Dublin begin suiteth his petition for Hubert.

Hubert flyeth to the Church for his refuge.

Hubert violently drawn out of the Church. Hubert cast into the Tower of London.

The next morrow following after, Roger Bishop of London, having knowledge how and in what order he was taken violently out of the Chappel, cometh unto the King, blaming him boldly, for violating the peace of holy Church, and protested, that unless the party were loosed again, and sent to the Chappel from whence he was drawn, he would enter Sentence of Excommunication against all the deed doers.

The King himself like breaking the state of holy Church.

The King as he did not deny his transgression herein, so he fendeth him (albeit against his will) out of the Tower unto the said Chappel again, and by the same Souldiers which brought him out before. Which done, he giveth in straight charge and commandment under pain of hanging, to the Sheriffs of Herford and Essex, that they in their own persons, with the strength of both Shires, should watch and compass about the Chappel, and see that the said Hubert no ways might escape. Which commandment of the King was accomplished with all diligence. But Hubert took all this patiently, and continued in the Chappel praying both night and day, and commending his cause unto the Lord, whom he desired so to deliver him from that instant danger, as he always fought the Kings Honour by his faithful and trusty service. And as he continued in his prayer, so the King continuing in his rage, commanded that no Man should intreat for him, or make any mention of him in his presence. Notwithstanding yet, Lucas Archbishop of Dublin, his true and almost only friend, ceased not to pray and weep to the King for him, desiring the King at least to intimate to him what he purposed should be done with Hubert. Whereunto the King answering, said, That of these three things one he should chuse, Whether he would abjure the Realm of England for ever, or be condemned unto perpetual Prison, or else confess himself openly to be a Traitor? But Hubert hereunto said, that he would chuse none of these Articles, as who knew himself neither guilty nor worthy of any such confusion: but, to satisfie somewhat the mind of the King, he would be contented to depart the Realm for a season, but to abjure the Realm he would not so do.

Three things put to Hubert to choose.

In this mean time it befel that Ranulphus Earl of Chester and of Lincoln, one of his foreft enemies died. Hubert all this while remained in the Chappel inclosed and guarded about with the power (as is said) of two Shires, and so continued, till at length, by the commandment of the King, his two Serviters, which ministred unto him within the Chappel, were taken from him. Then Hubert seeing no other remedy, but there to starve for famine, offered himself of his own accord to the Sheriffs, saying, That he would put himself rather in the Kings mercy, than there desperately to perish for hunger. And so was he taken, and being fast bound in Fetters, was brought again and clapped, by the Kings commandment, in the Tower of London.

Hubert yieldeth himself to the Sheriffs.

Hubert reduced again to the Tower.

Not long after this, word was brought unto the King by certain, that the said Hubert had much Treasure lying in the House of the new Templars in London. Whereupon the King, to try out the truth thereof, sendeth for the Prior or Master of the House; who, not daring to deny, confessed that there was indeed Treasure brought into the House, but the quantity and number thereof he could not tell. The King, desirous to seize upon the Treasure, required and charged the Master with his Brethren, with threatning words, to bring forth the Treasure to him, saying, that it was taken and stoln out of his Treasury. But they answered again, That the Treasure was committed unto trust and faith unto their hands, and therefore they neither would nor ought to let it go out of their hands, professing trusted withal, without the assent of him which committed the same unto them. When the King could get no other answer, at their hands, neither durst shew any further violence against them, he sendeth unto Hubert in the Tower, requiring of him the forefaid Treasures. To whom he, answering again, mildly yielded both himself, his Treasures, and all that ever he had, unto the Kings will and pleasure; and so, sending word unto the Master and Brethren of the Temple, willeth them to take all the Keies, and deliver the Goods, with all that there was, unto the King, who receiving the same, and taking an Inventory of that which was received, caused it to be brought unto his Treasury; whereof the number both of the Plate, of Coin, and of the Jewels, was of Price unknown. The enemies of Hubert, suppoling thereby to take advantage against him to bring him to his end, came with open complaint unto the King, crying out against Hubert, That he was a Thief, a Traitor, and a robber of the Kings treasure, and therefore by right was worthy to be hanged, and thus cried his accusers daily in the Kings ear. But the hearts of Kings (saith the wise Man) are in the hands of the Lord, to be ruled, not after Mans will, but as it pleaseth God to direct them. And so this King having now his will and full upon poor Hubert, and somewhat coming more unto himself, answered again in this wise, That there was no such need to deal so straitly with him, who from the time of his youth first served mine Uncle King Richard, then my Father King John, in whose services (as I heard say) beyond the Seas, he was driven to eat his Horse. Parisiensis, pag. 381. And in my time hath stood so constantly in defence of the Realm against foreign Nations, who kept the Castle of Dover against King Lewis, and vanquished the French*men upon the Seas, also at* Bedford and at Lincoln hath done such service. And though against me he hath dealt any thing unruly, which yet is not evidently proved; yet he shall never be put by me to so villainous a death. I had rather be counted a King foolish and simple, than to be judged a Tyrant or seeker of blood, especially of such as have served me and mine Ancestors, in many perils so dangerously, weighing more the few evils which yet be not proved, than so many good deserts of his evident and manifest service done both to me and to the whole Realm, &c. And thus the King, somewhat relenting to poor Hubert his old Servant, granted unto him all such Lands as he had given by King John his Father, and whatsoever else he had by his own purchase.

The Kings mind relenteth toward Hubert.

Thus Hubert after long trouble, a little cheered with some piece of comfort, set Lawrence his trusty friend that never left him, one that belonged to St. Albans, to be his Steward and Overseer of those possessions granted unto him by the King. And shortly upon the same, after the Kings mind was seen thus something to relent, the envy also of the Nobles, being now partly satisfied, began to turn to mercy; insomuch that four Earls, to wit, Earl Richard the Kings Brother, William Earl of Warreine, Richard Earl Marshal, and William Earl of Ferris, became sureties to the King for him. Upon whose surety he was transferred to the Castle of Devizes, where he was under the keeping of four Soldiers by them appointed, having the liberty of that Castle. But the Bishop of Winchester, who always hunted after the life of Hubert, craftily cometh unto the King, and delireth the custody of the Castle, making no mention of Hubert, to the intent that by the keeping thereof he might the sooner dispatch him. Hubert having thereof some inkling, breaketh the matter to two of his servants; who with compassion tendring his misery, watched their time (the Keepers being asleep) and conveyed him by night on their backs, fettered as he was, into the Parish-Church of the Town, and there remained with him. The Keepers when they mist their prisoner, were in great perplexity, and after diligent search finding him at length where he was in the Church, with violent force drew him from thence to the Castle again. For the which injury to the Church, the Bishop of Sarum, understanding the order of the matter, cometh to the Castle where the Keepers were, and required that Hubert should be brought again into the Church from whence he was taken. Which when the Keepers denied to do, saying, they would rather he should hang than they; then the Bishop gave sentence of Excommunication against them. Which done, he with the Bishop of London, and other Bishops, goeth immediately unto the King, complaining of the injury done unto Hubert, and especially of the contumely against Holy Church; neither would they leave the King before they had obtained that he should be reduced again into the Church, and so he was. It was not long after, but the King in great displeasure sendeth to the Sheriff of the Shire to keep him well watched in the Church, till either he came forth, or there perished with famine.

Four Earls sureties for Hubert.

Hubert put in the Castle of Devizes.

Anno 1233.

Hubert conveyed out of the Castle into the Parish Church.

Hubert again taken out of the Church, and brought back to the Castle.

Hubert delivered out of prison and carried into Wales.

It befell in the mean season that great dissention rose between the King and the Nobles of the Realm; by reason whereof Hubert was taken and carried away by Richard Earl Marshal into Wales, and there remained until the King at length was reconciled with his Nobles, and so received (with the rest) the said Hubert again into his favour. Ex Matthæo Parisiensi, & ex Floribus Historiarum. Of the which dissention more shall be shewed (Christ willing) hereafter.

Roger Bishop of London goeth to Rome to purge himself before the Pope.

As the beginning of this trouble of Hubert first sprang of vexing the Popes Barns; so likewise Roger Bishop of London, suspected for the same cause, was enforced to travel up to Rome, there to purge himself before the Pope. Where after much money consumed, and robbed also by the way, he got nothing else but lost his labour, and so came home again. Who then doing the part of a good Bishop, after his return from Rome attempted to expell and exclude out of his Diocese all those Italian Usurers called, as before said, Caursini. These Caursinites coming with the Popes Legates into England, and lending their money to Religious Houses, to Colledges and Churches, had their Debters bound unto them in such fort as was much vantageable to them, and much injurious to the other, as in the form of their Obligations in the Story of M. Parisiensis is largely expressed, fol. 65. Against these Caursinites the Bishop of London being worthily inflamed with zeal of justice, first with loving admonition went about to reclaim them for the wealth of their souls, afterward with sharp words began to charge them. But they disregarding Christian counsel, and despising the Bishops threatnings, would not leave the sweetnes of their occupation. Wherefore the Bishop proceeding unto the sentence of Excommunication, precisely and distinctly charged them to depart his Diocese. But they again being confident and imboldened upon the Popes defence, not only set at light his Excommunication, but also wrought such ways with the Pope that they caused the said Bishop of London, being both aged and sickly, to be cited peremptorily to appear beyond the Seas, there to answer to such objections as they should infer against him. And thus the Bishop minding rather to cover than to open the faults of the Church, and partly being let with infirmity and age, was compelled to let the cause fall.

Against Usurers.

Usurers Excommunicated and expelled by the Bishop of London.

Excommunication well used against Usurers.

And thus much of the Popes Merchants here in England, which were not so busie here for their part, but the Pope, the great Master of these Merchant Usurers, was as busie for his. And although his Barns here in England were destroyed, and his bank something decayed, yet he thought to win it up another way; for he proclaimed the same year a general Visitation through all the Religious Houses, exempt or not exempt, universally pertaining to his jurisdiction; where by the cruel dealing of the Visitors, many were compelled to appeal and to travel up to Rome, to the great expences of their money, and filling the Popes Coffers. But as touching this Visitation, to make short (saith the Story) it tended not to any reformation so much as to the deformation of universal order: Dum omnes, qui in diversis orbis partibus unicam Benedicti secuti fuerant regulam, per novas constitutiones ita inventantur ubique discordes, quod ex omnibus cœnobiis, vel aliis religiosorum Ecclesiis vix duo habeantur in norma vivendi concordes: that is, While all they which before through all parts of the world followed only the rule of Benedict, now through new devised constitutions are found in all places so divided and divers, that of all Monasteries, and other Churches of Religion, scarce may two be found, which do agree in one rule and institution of life.

Wicked Counsel about the K.

The great dissention among all Religious Orders noted.

All this while that Hubert above mentioned was secluded from the King, Peter Bishop of Winchester bare all the rule, and above all other alone was accepted. This Bishop being in such principal favour with the King, as by whose counsel all things were administred, removed the natural Servitors that were Englishmen, out of their Offices, and placed other strangers, namely, of Picavia, and of other Countries in their rooms. Among whom was thrust out William Under-marshal, which supplied the roem of Richard Great Lord Marshal of England; for the which cause the said Lord Richard was mightily offended. Also Walter, Treasurer of the Kings house was not only expelled, but also mercied at an hundred pounds, and put from all his holds and munitions, which he had by the Kings Patent granted to him.

Peter de rupibus, Bishop of Winchester perverter of the King.

Old Servitors of the King put out and displaced.

Moreover by the counsel of the said Bishop of Winchester, all the old Counsellers, as well Bishops, as other Earls and Barons, and all the Nobles were rejected from the King in such fort, that he would hear and follow no mans counsel, but only the said Peter Bishop of Winchester, and his Cousin Peter de Rivallis. Whereby it came to pass, that all the greatest holds and munitions in the Realm were taken from the old Keepers, and committed to the custody of the said Peter. Then the Bishop of Winchester, to plant and pitch himself more strongly in the Kings favour, adjoyned to his fellowship Stephen Seagrave succeeding in the place of Hubert the Justice: also Robert Pastew, who had the keeping of the Treasure under the foresaid Peter Rivall. So by these three all the affairs of the Realm were ordered. Moreover, to make their party more sure, by them it was provided, that Souldiers and Servitors from beyond the Sea, as Picavians and Britains were sent for, to the number of two thousand, which were placed partly about the King, partly were set in Castles and Holds within the Realm, and had the oversight and Government of Shires and Baronies, who then oppressed the Nobles of the Land, accusing them to the King for Traytors; whom the simple King did lightly believe; committing to them the custody of his Treasures, the fitting in Judgments, and the doing in all things. And when the Nobles, thus oppressed came to complain of their injuries to the King, by the means of the Bishop of Winchester, their cause was nothing regarded; insomuch that the said Winchester moreover accused certain Bishops also to the King, so that he did fly and shun them as open Traytors and Rebels.

The King forfeiteth his Nobles and thinketh to strange.

{KING} Hen. 3.

These things standing thus out of order, Richard the Noble Marshal of England, with others of the Nobles joining with him, seeing these oppressions and injuries daily growing contrary to the Laws and Wealth of the Realm, came to the King, and blamed him for retaining such perverse Council about him of the Picavians and other Foreigners, to the great prejudice of his natural Subjects, and of the liberties of the Realm; humbly desiring and beseeching him, that he, with as much speed as might be, would reform and redress such excesses, whereby the whole Realm seemed to lie in danger of subversion. Otherwise, if he refused to see correction thereof, he with other Peers and Nobles, would withdraw themselves from his Council, so long as he maintained the society of those foreigners and strangers about him.

Richard Earl Marshal accuseth the King.

To this Peter Winchester, answering again, said, That the King right well might call unto him what foreigners and strangers him listed, for the defence both of his Kingdom, and of his Crown; and what number of them he would, as by whom he might be able to bridle his proud and rebellious Subjects, and so to keep them in awe and good order. When the Earl and the Nobles could get no other answer of him, in great perturbation they departed, promising among themselves, in this case, which so touched the state of the whole Realm, they would constantly joyn together, to the parting of their life.

After this, the foresaid Petrus Bishop of Winchester, with his complices, ceased not by all means to inflame the Kings heart to hatred and contempt of his natural People, whom they so vehemently perverted, that he counting them no other than his enemies, fought by all diligence the utter destruction of them, sending daily for more Garrisons of the Picavians, that in short space, they replenished well-near the whole Land, whose defence the King only trusted unto: neither was any thing disposed in the Realm, but through the guiding of this Peter, and of the Picavians.

The King, thus guarded and strengthened with these foreign aliens and strangers, proclaimed a Parliament to be holden at Oxford, where the Nobles were warned to be present. They considering the indignation of the King conceived, would not appear. Again they were required the first, second and third time to present themselves. The Assembly proceeded, but they came not, for whom the King looked. In this Assembly or Parliament, it was plainly told the King by a Dominick Frier preaching before him, that unless he removed from him the Bishop of Winchester, and Peter Rival his Kinsman, he should not, neither could long enjoy peace in his Kingdom. This although it was bluntly spoken of the Frier against the Bishop, yet this remedy he had; the Frier had nothing to lose. Yet was there another Chaplain of the Court, who perceiving the King somewhat mitigated by the former preaching, and after a Courtlike dexterity handling his matter, being a pleasant conceited man, this merrily came to the King asking a question, What was the thing most pernicious and dangerous of all other things to them that travel by the Seas? That, said the King, is best known to such as travel in that kind of Traffick. Nay (saith he) this is unfit to be told. The King demanding what it was, Forsooth (quoth he) Stones and Rocks; alluding merrily (but yet truly) to the Bishop of Winchester whose name and surname was Petrus de Rupibus, for so Petræ in Latin signifieth Stones, and Rupes Rocks. Notwithstanding, the King either not perceiving the meaning, or not amending the fault, again sendeth to his Nobles, to have them come and speak with him at Westminster. But they fearing some train to be laid for them, refused to appear, sending plain words to the King by solemn Message, That his Grace without all delay should exclude from him Peter Bishop of Winchester, and other Aliens of Picavia, or if he would not, they with the common assent of the Realm, would displace him with his wicked Counsellors from his Kingdom, and have within themselves tractation for chusing a new King.

The King at the hearing of this Message being mightily moved, partly to fear, partly to indignation, especially having the late example of King John his Father before his eies, was cast in great perplexity, doubting what was best to be done. But Winchester with his wicked counsel, so wrought with the King, that he proceeded with all severity against them; insomuch that in short time, the sparkles of poisoned counsel, kindling more and more, grew to a sharp Battel between the King and Richard Earl Marshal, with other Nobles, to the great disquietness of the whole Realm. The which War was prefigured by terrible thundring and lightning heard all England over in the Month of March, with such abundance of Rain and Floods growing upon the same, as caft down Mills, overcovered the Fields, threw down Houses, and did much harm through the whole Realm.

War raised by the King against his Nobles.

Great Thunders and Floods in England.

To prosecute here at large the whole discourse of this War between the King and the Earl Marshal, which continued near the space of two years, to declare all the parts and circumstances thereof; what troubles it brought, what damages it wrought unto the whole Realm, what trains were laid, what slaughter of men, what waste of whole Countries insued from Wales unto Shrewsbury, how the Marshal joyned himself with Leolin Prince of Wales, how the Picavians were almost all slain and destroyed, how the King was distressed, what forgery wily Winchester wrought by the Kings Letters to intrap the Marshal, and to betray him to the Irishmen, amongst whom he was at length slain; all this I refer to other Authors, who at large do intreat of the same, as Matth. Parisiensi, Florilegus, and such others. This is to be noted and observed (which rather pertaineth to our Ecclesiastical History) to see what sedition and continual disquietness was in those days among all Christian People almost, being under the Popes Catholick obedience: but especially to mark the corrupt Doctrine then reigning; it is to be marvelled, or rather lamented, to see the King and the People then so blinded in the principal Point and Article of their Salvation, as we find in Stories, which making mention of a House or Monastery of Converts, builded the same year by the King at London, do express in plain words, that he then did it, Pro redemptione animæ suæ & Regis Johannis patris sui, & omnium anteceſſorum ſuorum: that is, For the redemption of his soul, of the soul of King John his Father, and for the souls of all his ancestors, &c. Whereby may be understood, in what palpable darkness of blind ignorance the silly souls redeemed by Christ were then inwrapped, which did not know, nor yet were taught the right Doctrine and Ester Principles of their Redemption. Ex Matthæo Parisiensi, pag. 86.

Monasteries builded. Pro redemptione animæ.

Mention was made a little before of diffolving the election of John Prior of Canterbury, which was chosen by the Monks to be Archbishop of the said Church of Canterbury, but by the Pope was defeated. After whom one John Blund was elected, who travelling up to Rome this year, Anno 1233. to be confirmed of the Pope, was also repealed and unelected again, for that it was thought in England, and so complained of to the Pope, that he had received of Peter Bishop of Winchester a thousand Marks, and had another thousand promised him of the said Winchester. Who by his Mony thought to make him of his side, and also wrote unto the Emperor to help forward his promotion in the Court of Rome. Notwithstanding, both he with his giving, and the other with his taking of Bribes, were both detected and disappointed of their purpose. For the Pope hating then the Emperor, for the same cause, admitted not the Election; pretending the cause, for that he was proved to hold two Benefices without his dispensation. After whom, by the commandment of the Pope, one Edmund Canon of Salisbury was ordained Archbishop, and had his Pall sent to him from the Pope. Which Edmund after, for his vertues, was canonized of the Popish Monks there for a Saint, and was called S. Edmund. About which time also Robert Grosthead was made Bishop of Lincoln.

This Edmund accompanied with other Bishops, during this trouble between the King and his Nobles, being in Council at Westminster, in the year next insuing, which was 1234. came uttering their minds boldly in the name of the Lords, and declaring unto the King as became his faithful servants, that his Counsel, which then he followed, was not found nor safe, but cruel and dangerous, both to him, and to the state of the Realm, meaning the counsel of Peter Winchester, and of Peter Rival, with other adherents.

Faithful counsel of the Bishops given to the King.

The counsel of Winchester and sixth other Bishops abuse the K. disproved for certain causes.

1. FIrst and Imprimis, For that they hate and contemn the Englisth Nation, calling them Traitors and Rebels, and turning the Kings heart from the love of his natural Subjects, and the hearts of them from him, as appeareth by the Earl Marshal and others, sowing discord among them.

2. Item, By the said counsel, to wit, by the foresaid Bishop and his fellows, King John the Kings Father, lost first the hearts of his Barons, after that lost Normandy, and afterwards, other Lands also, and in the end wasted all his Treasure, so that since that time the regiment of England had never any quiet after.

3. By the said counsel also, in their time and memory, the Kingdom of England had been troubled and suspended, and in conclusion, soe that was before the Prince of Provinces, became Tributary; and so Woe insuing upon the same, the said King John his Father incurred great danger of death, and at last was extinguished, lacking both peace of his Kingdom and of his own heart.

4. Item, By the said counsel the Castle of Bedford was kept long time against the King, to the great loss both of Men and Treasure, beside the loss of Rupella, to the shame of the Realm of England.

5. Moreover, Through their wicked counsel, at this present, great perturbation seemed to hang over the whole Realm; for else if it had not been for their counsel, and if that true justice and judgment might have been ministred unto the Kings Subjects, these tumults had never been stirred, and the King might have had his Land unwasted, and his treasure unconsumed.

6. Item, In that Faith and Allegiance, wherewith they were obliged unto him, they protested unto him, that the said his Council, was not a Council of peace, but of division and disquietness, to the end that they which otherwise by peace could not asspire, by disturbing and disheriting others, might be exalted.

7. Item, For that all the Castles, Forts, Munitions, also all the Officers of the Exchequer, with all other the greatest Escheats of the Realm, were in their hands, of the which if the King would demand account, he should prove how true they were.

8. Item, For that neither by the Kings Seal, nor Commandment, except it have withal the Seal of Peter Rival, almost any business of any weight could be dispatched in the Realm, as though they counted their King for no King.

9. Furthermore, by the foresaid Counsel, the natural Subjects and Nobles of the Realm were banished the Court, which was to be feared would grow to some inconvenience both to the King and to the Realm; forsomuch as the King seemed more to be on their side, than they of his, as by many evident conjectures may appear.

10. Item, It was not well to be taken and liked, the said Council standing of Strangers and Aliens, that they should have in their power both the Kings Sister, and many other Noblemens Daughters, and other Women marriageable, with the Kings Wards and Marriages, which they bestowed and divided among themselves, and Men of their affinity.

11. Also, The said Council regarding neither the Laws, nor Liberties of the Realm, confirmed and corroborated by Excommunication, did confound and pervert all Justice: wherefore it was to be feared, that they would run under Excommunication, and the King also, in communicating with them.

12. Item, Because they kept neither Promise nor Faith, nor Oath with any person, neither did observe any Instrument made never so formal by Law, nor yet did fear any Excommunication; wherefore they were to be left for People desperate, as which were departed from all truth and honesty.

These things (said the Bishops) we as your faithful Subjects before God and Men, do tell and advertise your Grace, desiring and beseeching you, that you will remove and seclude from you such counsel: and as the custom is of all other kingdoms to do, that you will so govern in like manner your Kingdom by your own natural Liege People, and such as be sworn unto you of your own Realm. For this (said they) in verity we denounce unto you, that unless in short time you will see these things reformed, we, according to our duty, will proceed by the censure of the Church against you, and all others that gainstand the same, tarrying no other thing, but only the consecration of this our reverend Archbishop.

Excommunication denounced by the Bishops against the King.

These words of the Bishops thus said and finished, the King required a little time of respite, wherein to advise with himself about the matter, saying, That he could not in such a sudden, remove from him his Council, before he had entred with them account of his Treasure committed to them; and so that Assembly brake up.

The King answer to the Bishops.

It followed then after this communication so broken up, that the King reforted to the parts of Northfolk, where coming by Saint Edmundsbury, where the Wife of Hubert the Justice was, he being moved with zeal of pity toward the Woman, who very humbly behaved her self to the King, did grant her eight Mannors, which her Husband before with his Mony had purchased, being then in the custody and possession of Robert Paslew, one of the Kings new Counsellors above specified. It was not long after this, but Edmund the Archbishop was invested and consecrated in the Church of Canterbury; who shortly after his Consecration, about the Month of April, coming with his Suffragans to the place of Council, where the King with his Earls and Barons was affembled, opened to him the cause and purpose of his coming, and of the other Prelats, which was, to put him in remembrance of their former talk had with him at Westminster; denouncing moreover to him expresly, that unless with speed he would take a better way, and fall to a peaceable and godly agreement with the true and faithful Nobles of his Realm, he incontinently, with the other Prelats there present, would pass with the Sentence of Excommunication against him, and against all them that would be enemies to the same peace, and maintainers of discord.

The pity of the K. toward the Wife of Hubert.

Edmund consecrated Archbishop of Canterbury, which was then diversly vexed by Pope Innocent the 4th for a Salve.

The King after he heard the meaning of the Bishops, with humble and gentle language answered them again, promising to condescend to them in all things. Whereupon within few days after, the King, coming to some better remembrance of himself, commanded the forenamed Bishop of Winchester to leave the Court, and to return home to his Bishoprick, there to attend unto the spiritual charge and care of his Flock committed to him. Moreover, he commanded Peter Rival, the Bishops Cosin, (some Stories say his Son) who had then the disposing of all the affairs of the Realm, to render unto him his Castles, and to give account of all his Treasures, whereof he had the keeping, and so to void the Realm, swearing moreover unto him, but for that he was beneficed, and was within Orders of the Church, else he would have caused both his eyes to be pluckt out of his head.

The King promiseth to the Bishops.

Peter Rival called to account of the Treasure.

He expelled likewise the Pictavians out of the Court, and from the custody of his munitions, sending them home into their Country, and bidding they should no more see his face. And thus the King, wisely dispatching himself of his wicked Counsellors, first did send Edmund the Archbishop with the Bishops of Chester and of Rochester, into Wales to Leolin, and to Richard Earl Marshal and others, to intreat with them of peace. Alfo he received to his service again Men of his natural Country, to attend about him, offering himself willing to be ruled by the counsel of the Archbishop and the Bishops, by whose prudence he trusted his Realm should be reduced again to a better quietneſs.

Pictavians and Strangers, sent home by the King into their Country.

Reconciliation sought between the K. and the Nobles.

But in the mean time, while these things were doing in England, the foresaid Richard Earl Marshal, by the falshood of the Bishop of Winchester, and Peter Rival, forging the Kings Letters to the Irishmen against him, and partly by the conspiracy of Gilbert de Marisco, being circumvented by the Irishmen in War, and there taken and wounded, was by them, through the means of this Surgeon slain.

Richard Earl Marshal, that frustrated by the counterfeit Seal and slain in Ireland.

Great slaughter the same time was of them which were called Catini, about the parts of Almain. These Catini were efteemed of Pope Gregory and the Papists to be Hereticks; but what their opinions were, I find it not expressed. In Paris.

Cathi fals almost diminished of the People for Heretikes.

Albingenses slain in Spain by the Popes Inquisitors.

In like fort the Albingenses afore mentioned, recounted also of the Popes flock to be Hereticks, with their Bishops, and a great number and company of them were slain by the commandement of Pope Gregory at the same time, in a certain Plain in Spain, Ex Matth. Parisiensi, fol. 87.

How the Archbishop of Canterbury, with other two Bishops, were sent into Wales, for intreaty of peace, ye heard before. At whose return again, after the time of Easter, the King going toward Glocester to meet them by the way, as he was in his journey at Woodstock, there came Messengers of Ireland, declaring to the King, the death of Richard Earl Marshal, and the order thereof, through the forged Letters of Winchester, and others: whereat the King made great lamentation and mourning, to the great admiration of all them that were by, saying and complaining, that he left not his like in all the Realm again.

The King lamenteth the death of Richard Earl Marshal.

After this the King proceeding in his journey came to Glocester, where the Archbishop with the other Bishops, coming to the King, declared to him the form and condition of peace, which they had concluded with Leolin, which was this: If the King would be reconciled before with the other Nobles with whom he was confederate, such as the King had banished out of his Realm, to the end that the concord might be the more firm between them: Thus (said they) was Leolin contented, although with much ado and great difficulty, to receive the League of Peace, saying and protesting this unto them, That he feared more the Kings Arms, than all the Puissance both of him, and of all his Clergy within England.

The King of Lewis King of Wales.

The Arms of K. Henry more feared than his puissance.

This done, the King there remaining with the Bishops, directed his Letters to all the Exiles and banished Lords, and to all his Nobles, that they should repair to him about the beginning of June, at Glocester; promising to them his full favour, and reconcilement to them and to their heirs, and that they should suspect no fraud therein, they should have their safe conduct by the Archbishop and Bishops.

Peace concluded between the King and the Nobles.

Example of Excommunication rightly ministred.

Whereupon, through the mediation of the said Archbishop and the Bishops, first cometh to the King, Hubert Earl of Kent, offering himself to the Kings good will and favour. Whom the King, with chearful countenance, received and embraced, restoring him, not only to his favour, but also to his Houshold and Counsel, with his Livings and Possessions, from which he had been disseized before. Then Hubert, lifting up his eyes to Heaven, gave praise and glory to God, by whose gracious Providence he, being so marvelously preserved from so great difficulties and tribulations, was again so happily reconciled to the King and his faithful friends. After him, in like fort, came in Gilbert Basset a Nobleman, Richard Seward, also Gilbert the Brother of Richard Marshal that was slain; which Gilbert recovered again his whole inheritance, as well in England as in Ireland, doing his Homage to the King, and his service due for the same; to whom also was granted the office of the high Marshal Court, belonging before to his Brother Richard.

Robert Earl of Kent restored again to the Kings favour.

Hubert giveth thanks to God.

Fulbood & Meniers Counsellors.

In the same counsel or communication continuing then at Glocester, the said Edmund Archbishop of Canterbury, bringing the forged Letters, wherein was betrayed the life of Richard Earl Marshal, sealed with the Kings Seal, and sent to the Great Men of Ireland, read the same openly, in the presence of the King and all the Nobles. At the hearing whereof, the King, greatly sorrowing and weeping, confessed there in truth, that being forced by the Bishop of Winchester and Peter de Rivallis, he commanded his Seal to be set to certain Letters presented unto him, but the tenor thereof, he said and swore he never heard. Whereunto the Archbishop answering again, defired the King to search well his Conscience; and said, That all they which were procurers, or of knowledge of those Letters, were guilty of the death of the Earl Marshal, no less than if they had murthered him with their own hands.

King many times abused by wicked counsel.

The Bishop of Winchester called to his answer.

Then the King, calling a Council, sent his Letters for the Bishop of Winchester, for Peter Rival, Stephen Segrave, and Robert Paslew, to appear and yield account for his treasures unto them committed, and for his Seal by them abused. But the Bishop and Rival, keeping themselves in the Sanctuary of the Minster Church of Winchester, neither durst nor would appear. Stephen Segrave, who succeeded after Hubert the Justice, and was of the Clergy before, after became a Lay-man, and now hiding himself in Saint Marys Church in the Abby of Leicester, was turned to a Clerk again. Robert Paslew covertly hid himself in a certain Cellar of the New Temple, so secretly, that none could tell where he was, but thought he was gone to Rome. At length, through the foresaid Edmund Archbishop of Canterbury, means was made, that a dilatory day was granted by the King for them to answer. At which day, first appeared Peter de Rivallis, then Stephen Segrave, after him Robert Paslelew, each of them severally, one after another, thewed themselves; but not able to answer for themselves, like Traitors they were reproved, and like Villains were sent away. Ex Matth. Paris. fol. 91.

Peter Rival Stephen Segrave, Robert Paslelew, called to their answers.

Variance between Pope Gregory the Ninth, and the Romans.

WHILE peace thus between the King and the Nobles was reconciled in England, diffension and variance the same time and year began in Rome, between the Pope and the Citizens of Rome. The cause was, for that the Citizens claimed by old custome and law, that the Bishop of Rome might not excommunicate any Citizen of the City, nor suspend the said City with any interdiction for any manner excess.

Variance between the Pope & the Citizens of Rome.

The allegation of the Romans.

To this the Pope answered again, Quod minor Deo est, sed qualibet homine major (to use the very words of mine Author) Ergo, major qualibet cive, ne etiam Rege, vel Imperatore, &c. That is, that he is less than God, but greater than any Man: Ergo, Greater than any Citizen, yea also, greater than King or Emperor. And forsomuch as he is their spiritual Father, he both ought, and lawfully may chastise his children when they offend, as being subjected to him in the Faith of Christ, and reduce them into the way again when they stray out of course.

The Popes Answer.

Moreover, The Citizens alledge again for themselves, that the Potestates of the City, and Senators do receive of the Church of Rome yearly Tribute, which the Bishops of Rome were bound to pay to them, both by new and also ancient Laws. Of the which yearly Tribute they have been ever in possession before this present time of this Pope Gregory the Ninth.

The second allegation of the Romans.

The Pope bound to pay to Rome yearly Tribute.

Hereunto the Pope answered and said, that although the Church of Rome in time of Persecution, for their defence and cause of peace, was wont to respect the head Rulers of the City with gentle rewards, yet ought not that now to be taken for a custome; for that custome only ought to stand, which consisteth not upon examples, but upon right and reason.

The Popes replieth.

Further and besides, the Citizens said that they, at the commandment of the Senators, would appropriate their Country with new and larger limits, and infranchise the same, being inlarged with fines and borders.

The third cause and allegation of the Romans.

To this the Pope again made answer, that certain Lordships, and Cities and Castles, be contained within the compass of the said limits, as the City Viterbium and Montcaster, which they presume to appropriate within their Precinct; but to ascribe to them, and usurp that which pertaineth to others, is against right and justice.

The Popes answer.

For these and such other controversies rising between the Pope and the Romans, such diffension kindled, that the Pope with his Cardinals, leaving the City of Rome, removed to Perusium (as partly before is recited) thinking there to remain and to plant themselves; but the Romans prevailing against him, overthrew divers of his Houses in the City, for the which he did excommunicate them. The Romans then flying to the Emperor, desired his aid and succour; but he, belike to pleasure the Pope, gathering an Army, went rather against the Romans. Then the Popes Army, whose Captains were the Earl of Tholouse (to purchase the Popes favour) and Peter the foresaid Bishop of Winchester, (whom the Pope for the same said had sent for from England, partly for his Treasure, partly for his practice and skill in feats of War) and the Emperors Host joyned together, and bordering about the City of Rome, cast down the Castles or Mansions belonging to the Citizens round about the Suburbs, to the number of eighteen, and destroyed all their Vines and Vineyards about the City. Whereat the Romans being not a little offended, brait out of the City with more heat than order, to the number of 100000 (as the story reporteth) to defroy Viterbium the Popes City with Sword and Fire. But the multitude, being un-ordered, and out of Battel-ray, and unprovided for jeopardies which by the way might happen, fell into the hands of their enemies, who were in wait for them, and of them destroyed a great number; so that on both parts were slain to the view of 30000; but the most part was of the Citizens. And this diffention thus begun, was not soon ended, but continued long after.

A great slaughter of the Romans by the Pope. Ro. Ferufi. Pag. 92.

By these and such other stories, who seeth not how far the Church of Rome hath degenerated from the true image of the right Church of Christ, which by the rule and example of the Gospel, ought to be a Daughter of peace, not a Mother of debate, not a revenger of her self, nor a seeker of Wars; but a forgiver of injuries, humbly and patiently referring all revenge to the Lord: not a raker for riches, but a winner of souls; not contending for worldly mastership, but humbling themselves as servants; and not Vicars of the Lord, but jointly like Brethren serving together, Bishops with Bishops, Ministers with Ministers, Deacons with Deacons; and not as Masters, separating themselves by superiority one from another; but briefly communicating together in Doctrine and Counsel, one particular Church with another; not as a Mother, one over another, but rather as a Sister Church one with another, seeking together the glory of Christ, and not their own. And such was the Church of Rome first in the old ancient beginning of her primitive state, especially while the cross of perfecution yet kept the Bishops and Ministers under in humility of heart, and fervent calling upon the Lord for help; so that happy was that Christian then, which with liberty of Conscience only might hold his life, how barely soever he lived. And as for the pride and pomp of the World, as having for Patrimonies, buying of Bishopricks, gaping for Benefices, so far was this off from them, that then they had little leisure, and less lift so much as once to think upon them. Neither did the Bishops then of Rome fight to be Consuls of the City, but fought how to bring the Consuls unto Christ, being glad if the Consuls would permit them to dwell by them in the City. Neither did they then presume so high, to bring the Emperors necks under their Girdles, but were glad to save their own Necks in any corner from the Sword of the Emperors. Then lacked they outward peace, but abounded with inward consolation, Gods Holy Spirit mightily working in their hearts. Then was one Catholick unity of truth and doctrine amongst all Churches against Errors and Sects. Neither did the East and West, nor distance of place divide the Church; but both the East-Church and West-Church, the Greeks and Latins made all one Church. And albeit there were then five Patriarchal Sees appointed for order sake, differing in Regions, and peradventure also, in some Rites one from another; yet all these consenting together in one unity of Catholick Doctrine, having one God, one Christ, one Faith, one Baptism, one Spirit, one Head, and linked together in one bond of Charity, and in one equality of Honour, they made altogether one Body, one Church, one Communion, called one Catholick Universal and Apostolick Church. And so long as this knot of charity and equality did joyn them in one unity together, so long the Church of Christ flourished and increased, one ready to help and harbour another, in time of distress, as Agapetus and Vigilius flying to Constantinople, were there aided by the Patriarch, &c. So that all this while, neither foreign enemy, neither Saracen, nor Soldan, nor Sultan, nor Calipha, nor Corasmine, nor Turk, had any power greatly to harm it.

Catholick.

The ſchiſm between the Greek Church and the Church of Rome. Equality & mother of concord.

But through the malice of the enemy, this Catholick unity did not long continue, and all by reason of the Bishop of Rome, who not contented to be like his Brethren, began to extend himself, and to claim superiority above the other four Patriarchal Sees, and all other Churches in the world. And thus as equality amongst Christian Bishops was by pride and singularity oppressed, so unity began by little and little to be diſſolved, and the Lords Coat, which the Souldiers left whole, to be divided. Which Coat of Christian unity, albeit of long time it hath bin now feamript before by the occaſion aforeſaid: yet notwithſtanding, in ſome piece it held together in ſome mean agreement, under ſubjection to the See of Rome, till the time of this Pope Gregory the Ninth, Anno 1230. at which time this rupture and ſchiſm of the Church brake out into a plain diviſion, utterly diffevering the Eaſt Church from the Weſt Church upon this occaſion.

There was a certain Archbiſhop elected to an Archiſhoprick amoag the Grecians; who, coming to Rome to be confirmed, could not be admitted unleſs he promiſed a great ſumm of Mony. Which when he refuſed to do, and deteſted the execrable Simony of the Court of Rome, he made his repair home again to his own Country unconfirmed, declaring there to the whole Nobility of that Land, the caſe how it ſtood. For the more confirmation whereof there were others alſo, which coming lately from Rome, and there had proved the ſame or worſe, came in and gave teſtimony to his ſaying. Whereupon all the Churches of the Grecians, the ſame time hearing this, departed utterly away from the Church of Rome, which was in the days of this Pope Gregory the Ninth. Inſomuch that the Archbiſhop of Conſtantinople, coming afterward to the General Council at Lions, there openly declared, that whereas before time he had under him above thirty Biſhopricks and Suffragans, now he had not three; adding moreover, that all the Grecians, and certain others, with Antioch and the whole Empire of Romania, even to the Gates almoſt of Conſtantinople, were gone from the obedience of the Church of Rome, &c. Mat. Pariſ. fol. 112. &c. fol. 186.

Ex Mat. Pa. fol. 188.

By the occaſion of which ſeparatian aforeſaid of the Grecians from Pope Gregory, it happened ſhortly after, being the year of our Lord 1237. that Germanus Archbiſhop and Patriarch of Conſtantinople wrote to the ſaid Pope Gregory the Ninth, humbly deſiring him to ſtudy and ſeek ſome means of unity, how the ſeamleſs Coat of the Lord Jeſus thus lamentably rent, not with hands of Souldiers, but by diſcord of Prelats, may be healed again; offering this moreover, that if he will take the pains to ſtir out the for his part, notwithſtanding his old age and feeble body, would not refuſe to meet him in the mid-way, to the intent that the truth on both ſides being debated by the Scriptures, the wrong part may be reduced, the ſlander ſtopped, and unity reformed between them.

Germanus Patriarch of Conſtantinople writeth to Pope Gregory the Ninth.

This requeſt of the Patriarch, as it was both godly and reaſonable, ſo it had been the Biſhops part again with like humility to have condeſcended to the ſame, and to have been glad with all his might to help forward the reformation of Chriſtian unity in the Church of Chriſt, and ſo to have ſhewed himſelf the ſon of peace: but the proud Biſhop of Rome, more like the ſon of diſcord and diſſention, ſtanding ſtill upon his Majeſty, refuſed thus to do: but writing again anſwer to his Letters, with great diſdain, ſeeking nothing elſe, but only how to advance his See above all other Churches; and not only that, but alſo ſharply after ſent forth his Preaching Friers, to move all Chriſtians to take the ſign of the Croſs, and to fight againſt the Grecians no otherwiſe than againſt the Turks and Saracens: Inſomuch that in the Iſle of Cyprus many good Men and Martyrs were ſlain for the ſame, as by the Letters of the ſaid Germanus Patriarch of Conſtantinople is to be ſeen.

The Pope ſtirreth the whole Church to fight againſt the Eaſt Church. Mat. Pariſ. fol. 211.

The tenor of the which Letter to the Pope, with the Popes anſwer again to him, being long and tedious to read, are extant in the Hiſtory of Mat. Pariſienſis, there to be ſeen and found. The ſummary effect whereof, notwithſtanding, I thought here briefly to notifie for the ſimple and unlearned multitude, which, underſtanding not the Latin, may hereby perceive the fault of this Schiſm, not ſo much to reſt in the Greek Church, as in the Church of Rome, as by the Contents of his Letter may appear.

And as touching this great diſcord between us, if either contrariety of Doctrine, or ſwerving from the ancient Canons, or diverſity of Rites received of our forefathers be any cauſe thereof, we here take Heaven and Earth to witneſs, that we for our parts are ready, and deſire alſo, upon due trial of profound truth by Gods Word, and invocation of the Holy Ghoſt, to join hands with you, or you to join with us. But to ſay the very truth, and to tell you plain, the truth is, that many mighty and noble Potentates would ſooner incline to your obedience, were it not that they feared your unjuſt oppreſſions, your inſatiable exactions, and immoderate proviſions wherewith you wring your ſubjects. By reaſon whereof have riſen amongſt us cruel wars, one fighting againſt another, deſolation of Cities, Bulls and Interdictions ſet upon Church-doors, diviſion of Brethren, and Churches of the Grecians left without ſervice, where God ſhould be praiſed. So that now only one thing lacketh, which I believe to be predeſtined and appointed from above long before to us Grecians, the time I mean of Martyrdom, which alſo now haſteneth faſt upon us, that the Tribunal of Tyrants ſhould be opened, and the ſeats of torments be ſet, that the blood of Martyrs ſhould be ſpilled, and we brought to the ſtage of Martyrdom, to fight for the Crown of Glory.

Another Epistle of the said Germanus Patriarch of Constantinople, and Primate of the Greek Church, to the Cardinals of Rome.

Another Letter of Germanus Patriarch of Constantinople to the Cardinals.

A Nother Letter the said Germanus, Patriarch of Constantinople, wrote also the same time to the Popes Cardinals, wherein he first commendeth them for their wisdom and counsel, and sheweth what utility cometh by good counsel giving. Forsomuch as God (saith he) many times, that which he hideth from one, inspireth to another, for that that good thing which by the Almighty God is sunderly dispensed to divers, through common counsel and conference spreadeth to the publick utility of many, &c. After this effoons he beginneth to exhort them, that they like charitable Ministers, and discreet Counsellors, will take in hand the Spiritual armor of God, to cast down the stop and partition-wall of the old discord between the Greek and Latin Church, and that they will be a means to the Bishop of Rome, that they which so long have been dissevered by dissention, may now be conjoyned in unity of peace, in brotherly charity and communion of faith.

Concerning which matter I have (saith he) already written to his Holiness. And now I beseech the King of Heaven, which took the shape of a servant to help his miserable servants, and was exalted upon the Cross, to raise them up which were fallen into the profundity of desolation, that he will vouchsafe to put from your hearts all elation of mind, extolling it self over and above the unity of your brethren and fellow servants, and to lighten your consciences with the true light of understanding, that we may altogether agree in one, and that there be no schism amongst us. Let us therefore, as we are instructed, so abide in one mind, that it be not said of us, as it was of the Corinthians before us, I hold of Paul, I of Apollo, I 1 Cor. 1. of Cephas, and I of Christ: but that all we, as we hold the name of Christ, and are all called Christians, so may also abide in that wherein we are instructed, in one mind. that is, to follow love and charity in Christ Jesus, having always in our hearts the words of the Apostle, saying, One Lord, one Faith, one Baptism.

And now to be plain with you in that I have to say, I shall define you not to be offended with me in uttering the truth as a friend unto you. The words (saith Solomon) of a wise man telling truth, be like to nails which be driven in deep: And truth for the most part breedeth enemies, and therefore though I am partly afraid, yet will I simply confess the truth unto you. Certes this division of Christian unity amongst us, proceedeth of no other cause but only of the tyranny, oppression, and exactions of the Church of Rome, which of a mother is become a stepdame, and hath put her children from her whom long time she nourished (after the manner of a ravening bird, which driveth her young from her) which children how much the more humble and obedient they are to her, the less she esteemeth them, and treadeth them under foot, not regarding the saying of the Gospel, Whoso humbleth himself shall be exalted.

The tyranny and oppression of the Church of Rome is the only cause of breaking unity between the Greek Church and the Latin.

Let modestly therefore something temper you, and let the avarice of the Court of Rome, although it cannot well out of the flesh which is bred in the bone, yet furcease a while, and let us together condefcend to the trial of the truth; which truth being found out on both sides, let us constantly embrace the same.

Luk. 18.

For why we have been altogether sometimes both Italians and Grecians in one faith, and under the same Canons, having peace each with other, and defending one another, and confounding the enemies of the Church. At what time many flying out of the West parts (whilest that the tyranny of the Hereticks indured) made their concourse to us, and were received; and part fled unto you, that is, old Rome, as to a strong tower of refuge, and so received they comfort in both places, and one Brother was thus received into the bosom of another, by mutual love for their defence.

The old unity and concord between the East church and the West.

Agapetus and Vigilius fled to Constantinople for succour.

Then after when Rome had been often distressed by the barbarous and heathen Nations, the Grecians were ever ready to rescue and deliver them. Did not Agapetus and Vigilius flee unto Constantinople by reason of the dissentions then at Rome, and being honourably received, were here defended under our protection? although the like kindness was never yet shewed of your part to us again in our like necessities. Notwithstanding, we ought to do good to them also that be ungrateful; for so doth the Sea participate her smooth and calm tides even unto the Pirates. And so God causeth the Sun to shine upon the just and unjust. But (alas for sorrow) what bitter division is this, that hath thus sequestred us asunder? One of us detracteth another, shunning the company one of another, as the damnation of his soul. What a mortal hatred is this come among us? If you think we are fallen, then do you help to lift us up, and be not to us a stumbling block to our bodily ruin, but helpers unto the Spiritual resurrection of our souls. So shall we acknowledg our selves bound unto you to give you condign thanks accordingly.

But if the blame and first original of this offence proceedeth from Rome, and the Successors of Peter the Apostle; then read ye the words of St. Paul to the Galatians, saying, When Peter came to Antioch I withstood him in the face, because he was to be rebuked, &c. Howbeit this resistance was no cause of any discord, or breach between them, but the cause rather of further search and profounder disputations, provoking temporal agreement. For they were fast joyned together in the bond of charity in Christ, agreeing in faith and conformity of Doctrine, separated by no ambition or avarice. In which points would God we also were like unto them! This to us in our minds gendreth a great offence, that you gaping so greedily after terrene possessions, scrape together all that you can scratch and rake. You heap up gold and silver, and yet pretend that you be the Disciples of him which said, Gold and silver I have none, &c. You make whole Kingdoms Tributary to you, and Kings and Princes your vassals. You augument your money by usury, and by feats of Merchandize. You unteach by your deeds that which you teach in words.

Paul withstandeth Peter. Gal. 2.

He meaneth of the Kingdom of England, and other more which were made Tributary to the See of Rome.

Moderate your selves therefore with more temperance, that you may be an example to us and to all the world. You see how good a thing it is one Brother to help another. Only God alone needeth no help or counsel, but men need to be holpen one of another. And were it not that I do reverence the blessed Apostle Peter, the chief of Christs Apostles, the Rock of our faith; I would here put you in remembrance how greatly this Rock was shaken and removed from the foundation at the sight of a silly woman; and Christ of his secret purpose permitted the same, which by the crowing of the Cock brought him again to remembrance of that which was foretold him, and raised him from the slumber of desperation. Then he being thus waked, washed his face with tears, confessing himself before God and all the world, to be a true pattern of repentance, which before bare the Keys of the Kingdom, as saying thus unto us, May not he which falleth, rise again? Oh you which are fallen, rise up and behold me, and hearken unto me, travelling towards Paradise; the Gates whereof to open, I have received power.

The Church hath her name of Catholick, whereby and when. Whether the Doctrine of Transubstantiation, made with out the free consent of the East Churches, be Catholick or no?

The fourth Note.

And thus do I write unto you, not for any instruction, but only to put you in remembrance: for I know how God hath indued you with all wisdom and knowledg, as Solomon saith, Give only occasion to the wise, and he will learn wisdom: Teach the just man, and he will be glad to take instruction.

This one thing more I will say, and so make an end: There be great and mighty Nations that are of like mind and opinion with us. First, the Ethiopians that inhabit the chiefest part of the East. After that the Syrians, and other more of greater number than they, and more diffused to vertue, as the Hiberi Alani, Gothi, Chazari, with innumerable people of Russia, and the Kingdom of great Victory of the Fulgarians. And all these are obedient unto us as their Mother-Church, persisting hitherto constantly in the ancient and true Orthodox faith immoveable.

Christian Countries and Nations in the East parts exhibit are not under the Obedience of Rome.

The fifth Note.

The Church of Rome proved not to be Catholick.

The proceedings of Rome found upon no true evidence but are counterfeited.

The God of all holiness which for our sakes became Man, and which only is the Head of his Church and Congregation, vouchsafe to gather us again together in unity, and grant that the Grecian Church together with her filter-Church of old Rome, may glorifie the same Christ, the Prince of Peace, by the unity of faith, to the restitution of found and wholsome Doctrine, wherein many years agone they have agreed and were united. God grant unto you brotherly charity, and the hand of the most mighty God govern govern you all (holy Cardinals) till that joyfully ye arrive in the haven of everlasting tranquillity. The grace of God be with you all, Amen. Ex Mat. Parisiensi, fol. 111.

Shortly after the sending of these Letters, Pope Gregory prepared to send men of War, signed with the Cross, to fight against the Grecians; whereupon the Archbishop of Antioch, with the said Germanus solemnly Excommunicated the Pope, after he first had Excommunicated them: Paris. fol. 118. In the mean time by the tenor of these Letters of the Patriarch sent to the Pope and to the Cardinals, it is evident to all men that have eyes in their heads to see: First, how the whole Universal Church of Christ from the East parts to the West, in ancient times were altogether united in one consent of Doctrine, and linked together in brotherly charity, one Church brotherly to help another, both with temporal aid and spiritual counsel, as case required. Neither was then any one Mother-Church above other Churches, but the whole Universal Church was the Mother-Church and Spouse of the Lord to every faithful believer. Under which Universal Church in general were comprehended all other particular Churches in special, as sister Churches together, not one greater than another, but all in like equality, as God gave his gifts so ferving one another, ever holding together the unity of faith and sisterly love. And so long was it and rightly might so be called the Catholick Church, having in it true unity, universality, and free consent. Unity in Doctrine, universality in communicating and joyning together of voices, consent in spirit and judgment. For whatsoever was taught at Rome touching Faith and Salvation, it was no other than was taught at Antioch, Syria, &c.

The Popes proclamation of war against the Greek Church. The Archbishop of Antioch and Cardinals single Excommunicate the Pope. Five Notes to be considered. The first Note.

The true Catholick Church where it was, and what.

Unity, Universality, Consent.

Secondly, How in process of time, through occasion of the Bishops of Romes tyranny and violent oppreision, this ring of Equality being broken, all flew in pieces, the East Church from the West, the Greeks from the Latins, and that which was one before, now was made two; unity turned to division, universality to singularity, and free consent to dissention.

Thirdly, Here is also to be noted after this pitiful breach of Equality, how many and what great Nations departed from the Communion of the Church of Rome, and especially about this time above specified of Pope Gregory the Ninth, Anno 1230, so that both before and after that time many Councils were holden, and many things concluded in the West Church, whereunto the one half of Christendom lying in the East parts, did never agree; and contrary, many Councils holden with them, which in the Latin Church were not received. So that the Church now as the lost the benefit of universal consent, so also the lost the name Catholick. Whereupon this question is to be asked, that when the Council of Lateran, under Pope Innocent the Third, ordained the Doctrine of Transubstantiation, and Auricular Confession here in the West Church, without the free consent of the East Church, whether the same Doctrine is to be counted Catholick or not?

Fifthly, These things thus standing, then have we to conclude that the Church of Rome falsly pretendeth it self Catholick: For if the name of Catholick must needs import an universal consent of the whole, how can that be Catholick where the consent of so many famous and true Christian Churches hath been lacking; and furthermore, where the consent that hath been amongst themselves, hath rather been coacted than any true or free consent? Which is easie to be proved: for let these Fires and Fagots cease, let Kings and Princes leave to presse their Subjects with the Popes obedience; let the Scripture and the Bishops alone every one in his own Diocess to govern their flock after the rule of Gods Word, and how few be there in this West end of the world (trow you) that would not do the same that these Grecians, Ethiopians, and Syrians, have done before us? And thus much by the occasion of this Patriarchs Letters sent to Pope Gregory concerning the Grecians.

The miserable state of the West parts of Christendom under the Pope.

Whose doings when I consider, as I cannot but commend their wisdom, and judg their state happy and blessed, in shaking off from their necks the miserable yoke of the Popes tyranny; so on the other side considering with my self the wretched thraldom of these our Churches here in the West part of the world under the Bishop of Rome, I cannot tell whether more to marvel or to lament their pitiful state, who were brought into such oppreision and slavery under him, that neither they could abide him, nor yet durst cast him off. So untolerable were his exactions, so terrible was his tyranny, his Suspensions and Excommunications much like to a mad mans Dagger, drawn at every trifle, that no Christian patience could suffer it, no Nation abide it. Again, so deep did he fit in their consciences, they fally believing him to have the authority of St. Peter, that for conscience sake neither King nor Cesar durst withstand him, much less poor subjects once mutter against him. And although his takings and spoilings, namely in this Realm of England, were such that neither the Laity nor Spiritualty could bear them; yet was there no remedy, bear them they must, or else the Popes sentence was upon them, to curse them as black as pitch.

The Popes Excommunications like to a fools Dagger. The fatal perdivation of the Popes Supremacy: a cause of much overthrow.

In reading the Histories of these times, any good heart would lament and rue, to see the miserable captivity of the people what they suffered under this thraldom of the Bishop of Rome, whereof part hath been shewed before, more (God willing) shall follow hereafter, and some part presently I mind to express.

A brief Table or Declaration of the Popes unreasonable Gatherings, Exactions, and oppressions in the Realm of England.

A brief Table of the Popes spoiling and getting of English money in the days of K. Henry the third.

AND first to begin with the Elections of the Bishops. Abbots, Deans, and Priors within this Realm, it cannot be told what mass of money grew to the Popes Coffers thereby, especially in this Kings days; forsomuch as in his time lightly no Election happened either of Archbishop, Bishop, Abbot, or any room of Dignity, but when the Covent or Chapter had chosen one to their mind, the King who had married a stranger, and sought therefore to prefer strangers, would let up another. By reason whereof when the other part was fain to appeal to Rome, and there to plead the case, no small rivers of English money, besides expences and travel by the way, went flowing to the Popes Sea. And although the Election went never so clear, yet the new Elect must needs respect the holy Father with some gentle reward, and further by his Oath was bound every three years, either in his own person or by another, to visit Limina Apostolorum.

So in the house of St. Albans when John Herford was elected Abbot, their publick Election was not enough, but for the confirmation of the same, the Monks were fain to send Reinold the Physician, and Nicholas a Monk, to Rome with a sufficient bag of money, through the mediation whereof the Election might stand, and the new Abbot was sworn every third year by himself or another, to visit the Doorsels of the Apostles.

Money consumed in the Popes Election of Jo. Herford Abbot of St. Albans.

Another such like contention happened between the King and the Monks of Winchester, about the Election of William Rale, whom the Monks had chosen, but the King refused, willing to place a stranger, and therefore sent to Rome his messengers, Theobald a Monk of Westminster, and Master Alexander a Lawyer, with no small sum of money to evacuate the Election of the forefaid William Rale; commanding moreover, that the Gates of Winchester should be shut against him, and that no man should be so hardy there to receive him in the house. Whereupon the said William being excluded, after he had laid his cause upon the whole City of Winchester, made his repair to Rome;

Rome, where for eight hundred Marks being promised to the Pope, his Bishopric (spite of the Kings heart) was confirmed, and he received. Ex Mat. Paris. fol. 164. & 240.

After the death of Stephen Langton Archbishop of Canterbury, ye heard before how the Monks had elected Walter a Monk of Canterbury. But the King to stop that Election, sent up his Proctors Mr. Alexander Stanes, and Mr. Henry Sandford Bishop of Rochester to the Pope, to evacuate that Election, and to place Richard Chancellor of Lincoln. Which Proctors perceiving at first how hard and unwilling the Pope and Cardinals were thereunto, and considering how all things might be bought for money; rather than the King should fail of his purpose, they promised on the Kings behalf to the Pope, for maintaining his Wars against Frederick the Emperor, a Dism or tenth part of all the Moveables in the Realm of England and of Ireland. At the contemplation of which money the Pope efftoons thinking to pass with the King, began to pick quarrels with the foresaid Walter, for not answering rightly to his Questions about Christs descending to Hell, making of Christs Body on the Altar, the weeping of Rachel for her Children, the being dead before; about the sentence of Excommunication, and certain causes of Matrimony. His answers whereunto when they were not to the Popes mind, he was therefore put back, and the Kings man preferred, which cost the whole Realm of England and Ireland the tenth part of their Moveable Goods, by reason whereof, what money was raised to the Popes Gazophylacium, I leave to the estimation of the Reader, An. 1229. Ex Mat. Paris. fol. 71.

And yet for all this the said Richard, the costly Archbishop of Canterbury, within less than two years after, falling out with the King about the Castle and Lordship of Tonbridge, went and complained of him to the Pope. In the traverse whereof it cost the King a great piece of money besides, and yet miss he his purpose. In the which journey the said Archbishop in his return homeward, by the way departed, Ann. 1231.

Money spent at Rome between the King and the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Of the like distention ye heard before between the King and the Covent of Durham, for not chusing Mr. Lucas the Kings Chaplain, whom the King offred to be their Bishop. About the state whereof, when much money was bestowed on both sides welfavouredly, the Pope defeating them both, admitted neither M. William, nor M. Lucas, but Ordained the Bishop of Sarum to be their Bishop, An. 1228. Ex Paris.

The costly Election of the Bishop of Durham.

Between the Monks of Coventry, and the Canons of Lichfield rose another like quarrel, which of them should have the superior voice in chusing their Bishop. In which fute after much money bestowed in the Court of Rome, the Pope to requalifie again each part with some retribution for their money received, took this order indifferently between them, that each part by course should have the chusing of their Bishop. An. 1228. Ex Paris. fol. 68.

Money coming to the Pope for the Election of the Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield.

What busines fell likewise between Edmund Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Monks of Rochester, about the Election of Richard Wendour, to be their Bishop? And what was the end? First, the Archbishop was fain to travel himself to the Pope, and so did the Covent also send their Proctors. Who belike being better monied, weighed down the cause, so that the good Archbishop in that cause against the Monks, and partly in another cause against the Earl of Arundel, was condemned of the Pope in a thousand Marks. Whereof the greatest part (no doubt) redounded to the Popes Coffers, An. 1238. Mat. Paris. fol. 114.

Edmund Archbishop of Canterbury condemned at Rome in a 1000 Marks.

After the returning of the said Edmund Archbishop of Canterbury again from Rome, it chanced that the Monks of Canterbury had elected their Prior without his assent; for the which he did Excommunicate the Monks, and evacuate their Election. Not long after this, the Popes Exactors went about to extort from the Churchmen the fifth part of their Goods to the Popes use, fighting then against the Emperor. This cruel exaction being a great while resisted by the Prelates and Clergy, at length the foresaid Archbishop, thinking thereby to get the victory against the Monks, was contented to grant to the faid exaction, adding moreover of his own for an overplus 800 Marks; whereupon the rest of the Clergy was fain to follow after, and contribute to the Popes Exactors, Anu. 1240. Ex Mathi. Paristiensi. fol. 132. b,

The fifth part of all the Clergy granted to the Pope.

In the Church of Lincoln (whose See before the Conquest was in Dorcester, and afterwards by William Rufus translated from thence to Lincoln) rose a grievous contention between Robert Grosthead then Bishop, and the Canons of the Cathedral Church about their Visitation, whether the Bishop should visit them, or the Dean; which matter being put unto Arbitrators, could not so be compofed, before the Bishop and the Chapter, after their Appeal made unto the Pope, went both unto Rome, and there after they had well wasted their purses, they received at length their answer, but paid full sweetly for it. An. 1230. Par. fol. 119.

Great expence of money in the Court of Rome between the Bishop of Lincoln and the Canons of that Church.

At what time the Canons of Chichester had elected Robert Passelew to their Bishop, at the Kings request the Archbishop with certain other Bishops, taking part against the Kings Chaplain, repelled him, and set up Richard Witch. Upon this, what sending and going there was unto Rome, and what money bestowed about the matter, as well of the Kings part as of the Bishops; read the Story thereof in Mat. Paris. 182, 184, 186.

Money coming to the Pope between the Bishop of Lincoln and the Monks within his Diocess.

Robert Grosthead Bishop of Lincoln (of whom relation was made before) having a great care how to bring the priviledg Orders of Religious Houses within his Precinct, under his subjection and discipline, went unto Rome, and there with great labour and much effusion of money (as the Story saith) procured of the Pope a Mandate, whereby all such Religious Orders were commanded to be under his power and obedience. Not long after the Monks not abiding that (who could soon weigh down the Bishop with money) sent their Factors to the Pope, who with their golden eloquence so perswaded him, and stirred his affections in such fort, that soon they purchased to themselves freedom from their ordinary Bishop. Whereof Robert Grosthead having intelligence, made up to Rome, and there complaining to the Pope, declared how he was disappointed and confounded in his purpose, contrary to promises and assurance made to him before. Unto whom Pope Innocent looking with a stern countenance, made this answer again. Brother (said he) what is that to thee? Thou hast delivered and discharged thine own foul. It hath pleased us to shew favour unto them. Is thine eye ill, for that I am good? And thus was the Bishop sent away with a flea in his ear, murmuring with himself, yet not so softly, but that the Pope heard him say these words: O money, money, what canst not thou do in the Court of Rome? Wherewith the Pope being somewhat pinched, gave this answer again, O ye Englishmen, Englishmen, of all men most wretched, for all your seeking is how ye may consume and devour one another, &c. Ann. 1250. Ex Paris. fol. 230.

What love-convenient cometh by the Popes Dispensations.

How costly the Pope can rate his holy hands.

Money can do much at Rome.

The Pope and Grosthead.

It happened moreover the same year that the said Robert Grosthead Excommunicated and deprived one Ramulphus a beneficed person in his Diocess, being accused of incontinency, who after the term of forty days, refusing to submit himself, the Bishop wrote to the Sheriff of Rutland to apprehend him as Contumax. Which Sheriff, because he deferred or refused so to do (bearing favour to the party) and being therefore solemnly Excommunicate by the Bishop, uttered his complaint to the King. Whereat the King taking great displeasure with the Bishop for Excommunicating his Sheriff, and not first making his complaint to him, sendeth forth with a substantial messenger (Ad Mometa) such as he was sure would speed, unto Pope Innocent, by virtue of whose words the Pope, easie to be intreated, sendeth down a Proviso to the Abbot of Westminster, charging that no Prelate nor Bishop in the Realm of England, should molest or enter action against any of the Kings Bailiffs or Officers, in such matters as to the Kings jurisdiction appertained. And thus was the strife ended, not without some help and heap of English money; so that no wind of any controversie here stirred in England, were it never so small, but it blew some profit for the Popes advantage, Ann. 1250. Ex Paris. fol. 231.

Wilful perjury authorised by the Popes Dispensations.

Absolution which tying out of the Popes Dispensations.

Justice perverted by the Popes authority for money.

In like manner no little treasure grew to the Popes Coffers by the Election of Boniface, the Queens Uncle, a Frenchman, to be Archbishop of Canterbury, Anno 1243. and of Ethelmare, the Queens Brother to be Bishop of Winchester against the wills of the Prior and Covent there, Anno 1250, besides many such other Escheats, which made England poor, and the Pope rich.

Money coming to the Pope for the Election of Archbishop of Canterbury, and of Bishops of Winchester, both Franciscans and Frenchmen.

I come now something likewise to touch briefly of the Popes Dispensations, Provisions, Exactions, Contributions and {King Hen. 3.} and Extortions in England in this Kings days; for to discourse all, it is not one Book will hold it.

Marriage with Eleanor the Kings sister, a Nun, dissolved by the Pope for money.

Simon Monfort Earl of Leicester had married Elenor the Kings Sister, and Daughter of King John, who by report of Stories had taken the Mantel and Ring. Wherefore the King, and his Brother Richard Earl of Excester, were greatly offended with the marriage; which the Earl Simon seeing, made a band of money, and posting over to Rome, after he had talked a few words in Pope Innocent's ear, the marriage was good enough; and Letters were sent to Otho the Popes Legate here, to give sentence solemnly with the Earl. Notwithstanding the Dominick Friers, and other of the like Religious fraternity, withstood that sentence of the Pope stoutly, saying, that the Popes Holines was therein deceived, and souls in danger; that Christ was jealous over his wife; and that it could not be any wife possible that a woman which had vowed Marriage with Christ, could afterward marry with any other, &c. Anno 1238. Ex Paris. fol. 114.

What love-convenient cometh by the Popes Dispensations.

As there was nothing so hard in the wide world, wherewith the Pope would not dispense for money; so by the said Dispensations much mischief was wrought abroad. For by reason thereof the people trusting upon the Popes Dispensation, little regarded what they did, what they promised, or what they sware. As well appeared by this King Henry the Third; who being a great exactor of the poor Commons, as ever was any King before him or since, and thinking thereby to win the people sooner to his devotion, most faithfully promised them once or twice, and thereto bound himself with a solemn Oath, both before the Clergy and Laity, to grant unto them the old Liberties and Customs as well of Magna Charta, as Charta de Foresta, perpetually to be observed. Whereupon a Quindecim was granted to the King. But after the payment was sure, the King trusting by the Popes Dispensation for a little money to be discharged of his Oath and Covenant, went from that he had promised and sworn before.

Wilful perjury authorised by the Popes Dispensations.

In like manner the said King another time, being in need of money, signed himself with the Cross, pretending and swearing deeply in the face of the whole Parliament, that he would himself personally fight in the Holy Land against the Saracens. But as soon as the money was taken, small care was had for performance of his Oath, being so put in the head by certain about him, that he needed not to pass of that perjury, forsomuch as the Pope for an hundred pounds or two, would quickly discharge him thereof. Ex Paris. fol. 273.

Absolution which tying out of the Popes Dispensations.

Out of the same corrupt spring of these Popish Dispensations, have proceeded also many other foul absurdities. For where many young men were in those days which enjoyed Benefices, and were no Priests, and when by the procurement of Robert Grosthead, Bishop of Lincoln, the said young men should be forced, whether they would or not, to enter Orders, they laying their purses together, sent to Rome, and obtained of the Pope a Dispensation to remain still as they were, that is, to have the fruits of Benefices to find them at School or University, and yet themselves neither Ministers to take charge, nor yielding any service for their profits taken. Ex Matth. Parisiens. fol. 256. Besides innumerable heaps of enormities more, proceeding of the Popes Dispensations, as dispensing one man to have sundry Bishoprics, to incroach Pluralities of Benefices, to make children Parsons, to legitimate Bastards, with such other like; the particulars whereof for brevity sake, I do omit to further opportunity.

The intolerable oppression of the Realm of England by the Popes Exactions and Contributions, and other sleights used in the time of King Henry the Third.

The miserable impoverishing of the Realm by the Popes pensions and contributions.

ALthough these emoluments, thus rising daily to the Popes purse by Simony and Bribery, by Elections and Dispensations, might seem sufficient to satisfie his greedy appetite; yet so unstiable was the avarice of that See, that he not yet contented herewith, over and besides all this, sent every where almost some Legate or other into this Realm to take for his advantage. Insomuch that during all this Kings time, the Realm was never lightly without some of the Popes Ligiers, with all violence exacting and extorting continual provisions, contributions, and sums of money to be levied out of Cels, Abbies, Priories, fruits of Benefices, and Bishopricks, and also Laymens purles, to the miserable impoverishing both of the Clergy and Temporality, as hereunder followeth.

Cardinal Otho Legate in England. The receiving of Otho the Popes Legate into the Realm.

First, after Pandulphus was sent into this Realm Cardinal Otho, procured by the King without the assent of his Nobles, to the intent to assist him in certain affairs he had to do. At receiving of which Legate, great preparation was made; many rich and precious gifts in Scarlet, in Plate, in Jewels, in Money and Paltrys, were given him. Whom the King also himself went as far as the Sea-side to meet to receive, bowing down his head in low courtesie to the Cardinals knees. To whom also the Bishop of Winchester for his part gave towards keeping of his house, fifty fat Oxen, an hundred femes of Wheat, and eight great vessels of pure Wine. This Legate at his first coming, beginneth first to bethow fish Benefices, as he found vacant, upon them whom he brought with him, without respect whether they were meet or unmeet. Ex Parisiensi, fol. 103. {Anno 1237.}

After this the Pope hearing how the Nobles and Commons of the Realm began to stomack the Cardinal for his excessive Procurations and Exactions, sent for him home; but the King by reason he stood in fear of his Nobles, and thought to have a stay by the Cardinal against all occurrents, intreated him to stay while he wrote to the Pope to obtain further license for him to tarry; and so he did, not without some English money ye may be sure.

Otho the Legate forbeth to come into Scotland.

The King of Scots bluntness to Cardinal Otho.

In this mean time of vacation, Otho thinking to lose no time, but to gather also some crums in Scotland, made as though he would set things there in order, which were come into the Church of Scotland, to be reformed, and so cometh to the King of Scots, being then in York with King Henry, to have leave to enter. Unto whom the King thus made answer, that he never saw to his remembrance, any Popes Legate in his Land, neither was there any such needed (God be praised) for such to be sent for. Matters there were well enough, and needed no help of his. And as he could never learn neither in the days of his Father, or any his Predecessors, that any such entrance to any Legate was granted; so he for his part would not now begin. But yet notwithstanding forsomuch as I hear (said he) that you are a good man, this I tell you before, that if you will needs adventure in, do it warily, and take heed to your self, lest it happen to you otherwise than I would with; for they be a savage and unruly people, given much to murther, and shedding blood, whom I my self am scarce able to bridle; so that if they fall upon you, I shall not be able to help you. And how they also invaded me, and fought to expell me from my Kingdom, ye heard of late. And therefore I warn you before, take heed betime what you think belt to do. After the Cardinal heard the King speak these words, he plucket in his horns, and durst proceed no further, but kept him still by the side of King Henry. Notwithstanding shortly after, the same Legate coming to the borders of Scotland, there called the Bishops to him, and so when he had well filled his Bags, came back again, Ex Mat. Paris. fol. 106. 123. b.

The Realm of Scotland hitherto never troubled with any Popes Legate.

Cardinal Otho Prevented from going into Scotland.

It was not long after but license came from Pope Gregory to his Legate Otho, for his longer abode here in the Realm (as welcome as water in the Ship) with new authority also to proceed in the Popes affairs. Who first shewing to the Bishops and the Clergy his Letters of longer tarrying, required of them, forsomuch as no man (said he) warreth of his own charges, to be supported with new procurations; which was to have of every able Church four Marks; and where one Church was not able to reach thereto, that other Churches should joyn withal to make the said money. Notwithstanding the Bishops a great while stood in the denial thereof. Paris. fol. 123, 128, 132.

Oppressions of the Cardinal Otho the Popes Legate.

Besides he assembled together all the Black Monks of St. Benedict's Order, giving to them strict Orders, which shortly after for money he released to them again. Paris. fol. 116, 119. {Anno 1238.}

More-

Moreover, by the said Otho, and other the Popes Exactions, with special Bulls directed down for the same, collation of Benefices being taken out of the hands of the Patrons, were give to light and vile Runnagates, coming from Italy and other places, such as pleased the Pope and his Legate to bestow them upon, to the great prejudice of the ancient liberty and right of the true Patrons thereof. Whereupon the Earls, and Barons, and Nobles of the Realm, addressed Letters unto Pope Gregory by Sir Robert Twing Knight, for redress of such wrongs and injuries; who otherwise should be forced (they said) to invocate the succour of their King, who both was able, and was no less willing, according to his duty (they trusted) to reform such enormities, and to defend the liberties of his Realm. The tenor of whose writing is to be read in Mat. Paris. fol. 128. a.

The Nobles of England write to Pope Gregory for collation of Benefices wrested out of their hands.

Not long after the same, in the Year of our Lord 1240. came a new precept from Pope Gregory, by Petrus Rubeus the Popes Nuncio, to the forefaid Otho, that all Beneficed Men of the Clergy, as well in England as in France, should pay to the Pope the fifth part of their Revenues. Whereupon when the Clergy Men made their complaint to the King, seeking to be relieved by him; the King answered them again, that the neither would, nor durst stand against the Pope in any cafe, and fo without all hope of fuccour fent them away. Paris. fol. 132. Then were the Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots and Prelates of the Church commanded to affemble together at Reading, there to hear the Popes pleafure and commandment concerning the payment of this fifth part, where in the end, thus the matter concluded; that the Prelates defired a further time to be given to advife upon the matter; and for that feafon the Affembly brake up. Notwithftanding at laft, after many excufes and exceptions laid in by the Clergy; Firft, That because the money was gathered to fight against the Emperor, they ought not to contribute their money, contrary to the liberties of the Church. Item, Forsmuch as they had paid a tenth not long before unto the Pope, upon condition that no more such payments should be required of them, much leß now the fifth part should be exacted of them, because an action twice done, maketh a cuftom. Item, Seeing they had oftentimes to repair unto the Court of Rome, if they should give this money again it the Emperor, it would turn to their danger coming through his Land. Item, Seeing their King had many enemies, against whom they muft needs relieve the King were with their many, they could not fo do if the Realm were thus impoverished, &c. All which excufes, with divers other more notwithftanding, they were compelled at length to conform themfelves to the Popes good pleafure, through the example given of Edmund Archbishop of Canterbury, who to obtain his purpofe againft the Monks of Canterbury (with whom he was then in ftrife) began firft to yield to the Legates 800 Marks for his part, whereby the reft alfo were fain to follow after. Ex Mat. Paris. fol. 132, 136.

Furthermore, the fame year, the Pope agreed fo with the People of Rome, that if they would aid him againft Frederick the Emperor, look what Benefices were to be given in England, the fame fhould be at their arbitrement to be beftowed upon their Children. Whereupon commandment was fent to the forefaid Edmund Archbishop, to the Bishops of Lincoln and Sarum, that all the Collations of Benefices within the Realm fhould be fufpended, till provifion were made for three hundred Children of the Citizens of Rome to be firft ferved. Upon the which fo miferable requeft, the faid Edmund Archbishop of Canterbury, for forrow to fee the Church fo oppreffed, departed the Realm, and fo continued in France, and died at Pontiniac; Ex Mat. Par. fol. 134. b. Which Edmund was afterward made a Saint, and canonized by Pope Innocent the fourth.

Three thousand pounds to the Popes uſe.

This done, then went Petrus Rubeus the Popes Nuncio, and Ruffinus into Scotland, from whence they brought with them three thoufand Pounds to the Popes uſe about Alhollontide the fame year. At which time moreover, cometh another Harpax from the Pope to England, named Mumelius, bringing with him three and twenty Romans here into the Realm to be beneficed. Thus, what by the King on the one fide, and what by the Cardinal Otho, Petrus Rubeus, Ruffinus and Mumelius on the other fide, poor England was in a wretched cafe. Matth. Parisiensi. 137. fol.

Romans 23 brought to England to be beneficed

Another pretty practice of the Pope to prol for money, was this: The forefaid Petrus Rubeus, coming into Religious Houfes, and into their Chapters, cauled them to contribute to the Popes Holineſs, by the example of this Bifhop and that Abbot, pretending that he and he, of their own voluntary devotion, had given fo much and fo much, and fo reduced them. Paris. fol. 134. Alfo the Pope craftily fubomned certain Friers, authorized with full Indulgence, that whofoever had vowed to fight in the Holy Land, and was difpofed to be releafed of his Vow, needed not to repair to Rome for Abfolution, but paying fo much money as his charges would come to going thither, he reforting to the faid Friers, might be abfolved at home.

The Pope for many years fleeced Christen of their Coin.

¶ This paffed in the year 1240. Now all thefe troubles laid together, were enough to vex the meekeſt Prince in the World; whereto by way of accefs to the Kings further moleſtation, he had much ado with the Prelates and Clergy Men of his Realm, who were always tampering with his Title, efpecially in their Affemblies and Councils; to whom the King, feeking to reftrain them from that presumption, they did both fend and write, as appeareth by this evidence of Record. Rex miſit Galfridum de Langley, &c. That is, The King fent Geoffry Langley to the Archbishop of York, and to other Bifhops purpofed to meet at Oxford, to appeal for him, leſt, in the faid Council there called, they fhould prefume to ordain fomething againft his Crown and Dignity. This was done in the year of our Lord 1241. In which year alfo came a commandment Apoſtolical to the Houſe of Peterborough, that they at the Popes contemplation muft needs grant him fome Benefice by reaping in their dominion, the fruits whereof were worth at leaft an hundred Pounds, and if it were more it fhould be the better welcome; fo that they fhould be as the Farmers, and he to receive the profits. In fine, the Covent excufed themfelves by the Abbot, being then not at home. The Abbot, when he came home, excufed himſelf by the King, being the Patron and Founder of the Houſe. The King being grieved with the unreasonable ravening of thefe Romaniſts, utterly forbad any fuch example to be given. Ex Pariſienſi. fol. 143. But what happened? The Abbot being therefore accufed to the Pope by one of the Legates, and coming up about four years after, in the time of Pope Innocent, to the Council of Lions, was fo rated and reviled, and fo fhamefully thruft out of the Popes Court, that for forrow he fell ſick upon the fame, and there died. Pariſ. fol. 184.

In the time of which Council of Lions, Pope Innocent the fourth (forſomuch as the inſtrument or obligation whereby the Realm of England ſtood Tributary to the Pope, was thought to be burned in the Popes Chamber by little before) brought forth either the ſame, or another Chart like unto it, wherennto he ſtraitly charged and commanded every Engliſh Bifhop, being there preſent at the Council, feverally to ſet to his Hand and Seal. When unreaſonable petition of the Pope, albeit it went ſore againſt the hearts of the Biſhops, yet (ſee in what miſerable ſubjection the Pope had all the Biſhops under him) none of them durſt otherwiſe do, but accompliſh the Popes requeſt therein, both to their own ſhame, and prejudice to the publick freedom of the Realm. Among whoſe Biſhops, the loweſt that held out, and laſt that put to his Seal, was the Biſhop of London. Which act when the King and the Nobility underſtood, they were mightily and worthily therewithall offended. Ex Pariſ. fol. 192. Anno 1245.

After what time Cardinal Otho was ſent for by Pope Gregory in all haſte to come to the General Council, two other in his room here remained, whoſe Names were Petrus Rubeus, and Petrus de Supino. Of whom the one bearing himſelf for the Popes Kinſman, brought out his Bills and Bulls under the Popes Authority, to ſuch an Abbot, or to ſuch a Prior, or to ſuch and ſuch a Biſhop, and ſo extorted from them a great quantity of Gold and Silver. The other, to wit, Petrus de Supino failed to Ireland, from whence he brought with him a thouſand and five hundred Marks to the Popes uſe, An. 1241. Ex Par. fol. 247. b. All which money notwithſtanding, gotten by both the Collectors, in the carriage of it up to Rome, about the death of Pope Gregory, happned into the hands of Frederick the Emperor; who cauſed it again to be reſtored, as near as he could, to them of whom it was taken. Pariſ. fol. 151.

M. Martinus another Meſſenger for the Popes money. An. 1244.

After theſe came in then M. Martinus a new Merchant from the new Pope Innocent the fourth, An. 1244. armed with full power to fufpend all Prelates in England from giving Benefices, till the Popes Kinſmen were firſt preferred. Neither would he take the fruits of any Benefice, unleſs it were above the value of thirty Marks. At his firſt coming, he required of Prelates, and eſpecially of Religious Houſes to furniſh him with Horſes and Paſſtages, ſuch as were convenient for the Popes eſpecial Chaplain and Legate to ſit upon; alſo with Plate, Raiment, Proviſion for his Kitchen and Cellar, &c. and ſuch as denied, or excuſed, he ſuſpended; as the Abbot of Malmesbury, and the Prior of Merton. All Prebends that were void he fought out and referved them for the Popes behoof; among which was the golden Prebend of Sarum, belonging to the Chancellor of the Quire, whom he preferred to the Bithoprick of Bath, and ſo ſeized upon the Prebend being void, againſt the wills both of the Biſhop and the Chapter. Pariſ. fol. 167, 180. Moreover, he brought with him blanks in paper and parchment, ſigned in the Popes Chamber with his ſtamp and Seal; wherein he might afterward write to whom, and to what he would, Pariſ. fol. 178. b. requiring furthermore of the King, in the Popes behalf, to help his Holineſs with a contribution to be taxed amongſt his Clergy, at leaſt of 10000 Marks, Ibid. And to the end that the Pope might win the King ſooner to his devotion, he writeth in the Kings behoof to the Nobles and Commons of the Realm, that they ſhould not fail, upon pain of his great Curſe, to confer ſuch Subſidy of money to the ſubvention of the King, as he then had demanded of them; but they ſtood ſtiff in not granting to him.

Extention of the Popes Legate upon the Clergy of England.

Intimation given to the King touching the Intolerable oppreſſion of the Realm by the Pope.

While the inſatiable avarice of the Pope thus made no end in gathering riches and goods together in England; the Nobles and Barons, with the community as well of the Clergy as the Laity, weighing the miſerable ſtate of the Realm, and namely, of the Church, which now neither had liberty left them to chuſe their own Miniſters, nor yet could enjoy their own Livings, laid their heads together, and ſo exhibited an earneſt intimation to the King; beſeeching him to conſider the pitiful affliction and proſperion of his Subjects under the Popes extortion, living in more thraldom than ever did the people of Iſrael under Pharoah. Whereupon the King beginning at laſt to look up, and to conſider the injuries and wrongs received in this Realm, through the avarice of the Court of Rome, directeth to Pope Innocent the fourth this Letter, in tenor as followeth.

The Kings Letter to Pope Innocent the fourth.

King Henry's Letter to the Pope. The King reſorteth to it to the Popes feet.

SAnctiſſimo in Chriſto Patri, ac Domino, Innocentio, Dei gratia ſummo Pontifici, Henricus eadem gratia Rex Angliæ, &c. Saluteth & pedum oſcula beatorum, &c.

To the moſt Holy Father in Chriſt, and Lord, Innocent, by the Grace of God chief Biſhop, Henry by the ſame Grace King of England, &c. Greeting and kiſſings of his bleſſed feet. The more devout and obſequious the Son ſheweth himſelf in obeying the Fathers will, the more favour and ſupportation doth he deſerve to find at his Fathers hands again. This therefore I write, for that whereas both we and our Realm have ever and in all things been hitherto at the devotion and commandment of your Fatherhood; and that although, in ſome certain affairs of ours and of our Kingdom, we have found your Fatherly favour and grace ſometimes propitious unto us, yet in ſome things again, as in proviſions given and granted to your Clerks of Foreign Nations, both we and our Kingdom have felt no ſmall detriment. By reaſon of which proviſions, the Church of England is ſo ſore charged and burthened, that not only the Patrons of Churches, to whom the Donations thereof do appertain, are defrauded of their right, but alſo many other good works of Charity thereby do decay, for that ſuch Benefices, which have been mercifully beſtowed upon Religious Houſes to their ſuſtentation, are now waſted and conſumed by your proviſions.

Damage received by the Pope in the Realm of England.

The Popes proviſions.

Wherefore forſomuch as your See Apoſtolick ought to be favourable to all that be petitioners to the ſame, ſo that no perſon be wronged in that which is his right, we thought therefore to be faiers to your Fatherhood, moſt humbly beſeeching your Holineſs, that you will diſpoſe and ſurceaſe for a time from ſuch proviſions to be exacted. In the mean ſeaſon, it may pleaſe your Fatherhood, we beſeech you, that our Laws and Liberties (which you may rightly repute none other but your own) you will receive to your tuition, to be conſerved whole and ſound, nor to ſuffer the ſame by any ſiniſter ſuggeſtion in your Court to be violated and infringed. Neither let your Holineſs be any whit moved therefore with us, if in ſome ſuch caſes as theſe be, we do or ſhall hereafter reſiſt the tenor of your commandments; forſomuch as the complaints of ſuch, which daily call upon us, do neceſſarily inforce us thereunto; which ought, by the charge of this our Office and Kingly dignity committed to us of Almighty God, to foreſee that no Man in that which is their right be injured, but truly to miniſter juſtice to every one, in that which duly to him appertaineth. This Letter was ſent the eight and twentieth year of the Kings Reign. Ex Pariſienſi, fol. 172.

The Kings too much ſubjection to the Pope.

A Man would think that this ſo gentle and obedient Letter of the King to the Pope would have wrought ſome good effect in his Apoſtolical breaſt, to withdraw his proviſions, and to have tendered the Kings ſo reaſonable and honeſt requeſt: but how little all this prevailed to ſtop his inſatiable greedineſs and intolerable extortions and oppreſſions, the ſequel well declareth. For beſides that, ſhortly after the Pope ſent M. Martin with blanks, being bulled for contribution of 10000 Marks, in all haſte to be paid alſo, even immediately upon the receiving of this Letter. It followeth in mine author, that the faid Pope Innocent the fourth, after all this great ſubmiſſion of the King, and ſo manifold benefits, and payments yearly out of his Realm received, was not aſhamed to take of Dawid, Prince of North Wales, five hundred Marks by year, to fet him againſt the King of England, and exempted him from his fealty and obedience due to his own Liege Lord and King, to whom both he and all other Welch-men had ſworn their ſubjection before, as by the ſeals and obligations as well of that David himſelf, as other Welch Lords in this be half doth appear: In Matth. Pariſienſi, fol. 172.

Ex Mat. Paris. fol. 1252.

The Pope feeteth Wrichmen againſt the King of England.

Neither did M. Martinus in the mean while ſlip his buſineſs, in making up his market for the Popes money of ten thouſand Marks, but ſtill was calling upon the Prelates and Clergy. Who, firſt excuſing themſelves by the abſence of the King and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, afterward being called again by new Letters, made their anſwer by the Dean of Pauls their Prolocutor:

Contribution required of the Pope with their excuſes and reaſons againſt the ſame.

Firſt, That the poverty of the Realm would not ſuffer them to conſent thereto.

Item, Whereas they had given before a contribution to Cardinal Otho, for paying of the Popes Debts, and knew the ſaid money to be imployed to no ſuch end as it was demanded for, more cauſe they had now to miſdoubt, leſt this contribution in his hands, which was a much more inferior meſſenger than the Cardinal, would come to the ſame or a worſe effect.

Item, If they ſhould now agree to a new contribution, they feared left it would grow to a cuſtom, ſeeing that one action, twice done, maketh a cuſtom.

Item, Forſomuch as a general Council is ſhortly looked for, where every Prelate of the Realm muſt needs bellow both his travel and expences, and alſo his preſent to the Pope, if the Prelates now ſhould be bound to this tax, they were not able to abide this burthen.

Item, Seeing it is alledged, That the Mother Church of Rome is ſo far in debt, reaſon and right it were, that the Mother ſo oppreſſed ſhould be ſuſtained of all her devout Children meeting together in the general Council; whereas by helps of many, more relief might come than by one Nation alone.

Item, Laſt of all, they alledged, That for fear of the Emperor and his threatnings, they durſt not conſent to the ſaid contribution.

While theſe things were thus in talk between the Popes Prieſts and the Clergy of England, cometh in John Marisca and other Messengers from the King, commanding in the Kings name, that no Bishop, that held his Baronage of the King, should inseft his Lay fee to the Court of Rome, which they ought only to him, &c. Paris. fol. 159. An. 1243.

The Popes of England laid to stop the Popes Letters, yet all would not serve.

Not long after this, in the year of our Lord 1245. the whole Nobility of the Realm by general consent, and not without the King knowledge allo, caused all the Ports by the Sea side to be laid, that no Messenger with the Popes Letters and Bulls from Rome should be permitted to enter the Realm, whereunto some were taken at Dover and there stayed. Notwithstanding when complaint thereof was brought to the King by Mr. Martinus the Popes Legate, there was no remedy but the King must needs cause these Letters to be restored again and executed to the full effect, Paris.

Sixty thousand Marks yearly going out of England to the Pope and his Italian Clerks.

Then the King upon advice caused a view to be taken through every Shire in England, to what sum the whole revenues of the Romans and Italians amounted, which by the Popes Authority went out of England: the whole sum whereof was found yearly to be threescore thousand Marks, to the which sum the revenues of the whole Crown of England did not extend, Ex Mat. Paris. fol. 189. a.

Mr. Martin the Popes Legate first out of England in the divels name.

The Nobles then understanding the miserable oppression of the Realm, being assembled together at Dunstable for certain causes, sent one Fulco in the name of the whole Nobility, unto M. Martinus the Popes Merchant with this Message: That he indelaiedly upon the same warning should prepare himself to be gone out of the Realm, under pain of being cut all to pieces. At which Message the Legate being sore agast, went straight to the King, to know whether his consent was to the same or not. Of whom when he found little better comfort, he took his leave of the King, who bad him adieu in the Divels name (saith Matth. Paris) and thus was the Realm rid of M. Martinus. Ex Mat. Parisiensi, fol. 185. b. An. 1245.

The Pope in displeasure with the King of England.

As soon as Pope Innocent had hereof intelligence by the complaint of his Legate, he was in a mighty rage. And furthermore, remembring how the French King and the King of Arragon not long before had denyed him entrance into their Land, and being therefore in displeasure with them likewise, he began in great anger to knit his brows, and faid, It is best that we fall in agreement with our Enemies, whereby we may the sooner bring under these little petty Kings: and so the great Dragon being pacified, those little Serpents we shall handle at own own pleasures at our list.

After this, immediately then followed the General Council of Lions, to the which Council the Lords and States of the Realm, with the consent of the Commonalty, sent two Bills: one containing a general supplication to the Pope and the Council; the other with the Articles of such grievances which they desired to be redressed, whereof relation is made sufficiently before. The other Bill of the supplication, because it is not before expressed, I thought here to exhibite for two causes: First, That Men now in these days may see the pitiful blindness of those ignorant days, wherein our English Nation here did so blindly humble themselves and stand to the Popes courtesie, whom rather they should have shaken off, as the Grecians did. Secondly, That the pride of the Pope might the better appear in his colours, who so disdainfully rejected the humble sute of our Lords and Nobles, when they had much more cause to disdain rather, and to stamp him under their feet. The tenor of the supplication was this.

{ Anno 1245 } The Copy of the Supplication written in the names of all the Nobles and Commons of England, to Pope Innocent the fourth, in the General Council at Lions, Anno. 1245.

To the Reverend Father in Christ Pope Innocent, Chief Bishop, the Nobles, with the whole Commonalty of the Realm of England sendeth commendation with kissing of his blessed feet.

The Supplication of the Lords and Commons of England to the Pope.

OUR Mother the Church of Rome we love with all our hearts, as our duty is, and covet the increase of her honour with so much affection as we may, to whom we ought always to flie for refuge, whereby the grief, lying upon the Child, may find comfort at the Mothers hand, Which succor the Mother is bound so much the rather to impart to her Child, how much more kind and beneficial she findeth him in relieving her necessity. Neither is it to be said our Mother unknown, how beneficial and bountiful a giver the Realm of England hath been now of long time for the more amplifying of her exaltation, as appeared by your yearly Subsidy, which we term by the name of Peter-pence. Now the said Church not contented with this yearly Subsidy, hath sent divers Legates for other contributions, at divers and sundry times to be taxed and levied out of the same Realm: all which contributions and taxes notwithstanding have been lovingly and liberally granted.

The superstitious Founding of Monasteries in England.

Furthermore, neither is it unknown to your Fatherhood, how our fore-fathers, like good Catholicks, both loving and fearing their Maker, for the souls health as well of themselves, as of their Progenitors and Successors also, have founded Monasteries, and largely have indowed the same, both with their own proper Lands, and also Patronages of Benefices, whereby such Religious persons, professing the first and chiefest perfection of Holy Religion in their Monasteries, might with more peace and tranquility scarcy themselves devoutly in Service, as to the Order appertained: and also the Clerks; presented by them into their Benefices, might sustain the other exterior labours for them in that second Order of Religion, and so discharge and defend them from all hazards: so that the said Religious Monasteries cannot be defrauded of those their Patronages and Collations of Benefices, but the same must touch us also very near, and work intolerable griefs into our hearts.

Injuries received in England by the Pope.

And now see, we beseech you, which is lamentable to behold, what injuries we sustain by you and your predecessors, who not considering those our Subsidies and Contributions above remembred, do suffer also your Italians and Foreigners (which be out of number) to be possessed of our Churches and Benefices in England, pertaining to the right and Patronage of those Monasteries aforesaid: which Foreigners, neither defending the said Religious persons, whom they ought to see to, nor yet having the language, whereby they may instruct the flock, take no regard of their souls, but utterly leave them of as Wolves to be devoured. Therefore we may truly said of them, that they are no good sheepherds, wherefore as neither they know their sheep, nor the sheep do know the voyce of their sheepherds, neither do they keep any Hospitality, but only take up the rents of those Benefices, carrying them out of the Realm, wherewith our Brethren our Nephews, and our Kinsfolks might be sustained, who could and would dwell upon them, and imploy such exercises of mercy and Hospitality as their duty required. Whereof a great number now for meer necessity are Laymen, and fain to flie out of the Realm.

Benefices in England wilfully given away by Italians.

Threescore thousand Marks yearly given to Italians out of the Church of England.

And now to the intent more fully to certifie you of the truth, ye shall understand that the said Italians and strangers receiving of yearly rents out of England not so little as threescore thousand Marks, by year, besides other Avails and Excises deducted, do reap in the said our Kingdom of England more emoluments of meer rents, than doth the King himself being both tutor of the Church, and governour of the Land.

Italians received more in this Land of meer pension than did the Kings Crown.

Furthermore, whereas at the first Creation of your Papacy we were in good hope and yet are, that by means of your Fatherly goodness we should enjoy our Franchises, and free Collation of our Benifices and Donatives, to be reduced again to the former state, now cometh another grievance which we cannot but signifie unto you, pressing us above measure, which we receive by M. Martin; who entring late into our Land without leave of our King, with greater power than ever was seen before in any Legate, although he beareth not the state and shew of a Legate, yet he hath doubled the doings of a Legate, charging us every day with new Mandates, and so most extreamly hath oppressed us: first, in bestowing and giving away our Benifices, if any were above thirty Marks, as soon as they were vacant, to Italian persons.

Detestable dealings of the Popes Legats in England.

Secondly, after the decease of the said Italians, unknowing to the Patrons, he hath intruded other Italians therein, whereby the true Patrons have been spoiled and defrauded of their right.

Thirdly,

{ KING Hen. 3 } Thirdly, The said M. Martinus, yet also ceaseth not to assign and confer such Benefices still unto the like Persons; and some he reserveth to the Donation of the Apostolical See; and extorteth moreover from Religious Houses immoderate Pensions; Excommunicating and Interdicting whosoever dare gainsay and him.

Complaint of M. Martin the Popes Legate.

Wherefore, forasmuch as the said M. Martin hath so far extended his Jurisdiction, to the great perturbation of the whole Realm, and no less derogation to our Kings Priviledge, to whom it hath been fully Granted by the See Apostolick, that no Legate should have to do in his Land, but such as he by special Letters did send for: with most humble Devotion we beseech you, That as a good Father will always be ready to support his Child, so your Fatherhood will reach forth your hand of compassion to relieve us your humble Children from these grievous Oppressions.

King Henry the third called every day to hear three Masses by note.

And although our Lord and King, being a Catholick Prince, and wholly given to his Devotions and Service of Christ Jesus our Lord, so that he respecteth not the health of his own Body, will fear and reverence the See Apostolick, and, as a Devout Son of the Church of Rome, desireth nothing more than to advance the Estate and Honour of the same: yet we which travel in his Affairs, bearing the heat and burden of the day, and whose duty, together with him, is to tender the preservation of the publick Wealth, neither can patiently suffer such Oppressions, so detestable to God and man, and grievances intolerable, neither by Gods Grace will suffer them, through the means of your godly remedy; which we well hope and trust of you speedily to obtain. And thus may it please your Fatherhood, we beseech you to accept this our Supplication, who in so doing shall worthily deserve of all the Lords and Nobles, with the whole Commonalty of the Realm of England, condigne and special thanks accordingly. An. 1245. Ex Mat. Paris. Fol. 188.

The Root work of the Lords to the Pope.

This Supplication being sent by the hands of Sir R. Bigot, Knight, and W. de Powick, Esq. Henry de la Mare, with other Knights and Gentlemen, after it was there opened and read, Pope Innocent, first keeping silence, deferred to make answer thereunto, making haft to proceed in his detestable Excommunication and Curse against the good Emperor Frederick. The which Curse being done, and the English Ambaffadors waiting still for their answer; the Pope told them that they should not have their request fulfilled. Whereat the English-men, departing in great anger, Swore with terrible Oaths, That they would never more suffer any Tribute, or Fruits of any Benefices, namely, whereof the Noble men were Patrons, to be paied to that infatiable and greedy Court of Rome, worthy to be detested in all Words. Ex. Mat. Paris. fol. 193.

The Suppliants of the English Nation took no peace with the Pope.

The English Ambassadors grieved with the Pope.

The Pope hearing these words, albeit making then no Answer, thought to watch his time, and did. First, incontinent upon the same, during the said Council, he caused every Bishop of England to put his Hand and Seal to the Obligation made by King John for the Popes Tribute, as is above specified; Threatning moreover, and saying, That if he had once brought down the Emperor Frederick, he would bridle the insolent Pride of England well enough.

The Pope in anger with England.

The Bishops of England forced to their Seals to the Popes Tribute.

℣. But here by occasion of this Council at Lions, that the Reader may see upon what slippery uncertainty and variableness the state of the King did depend; it is material here to interlace the form of a Letter sent by Henry the third to the Prelates of his Land, before they were transported over Sea to Lions; wherein may be gathered, that the King doubted they would be shoving and heaving at his Royalty; and therefore directed these Letters unto them; otherwise to prepare their affections: the tenor whereof followeth:

A Letter of charge to the Prelates of England, purposed to Assemble in the Council at Lions, that they should ordain nothing, &c. to their Kings prejudice.

Tertia Lent.

REX Archiepiscopis, Episcopis, & omnibus aliis Prælatis terræ suæ Angliæ, conventuris ad concilium Lugdunense, salutem. Vinculo juramenti vobis (ut nostis) adstricti, &c.

In English thus:

The King to the Archbishops, Bishops, and to all other Prelates of his Land of England, appointed to meet at a Council at Lions, Greeting: You are (as you know) bound unto us by Oath, whereby you ought to keep all the fealty that you can unto us in all things, concerning our Royal Dignity and Crown. Wherefore we command you upon the fealty and allegiance wherein you are firmly bound unto us, injoyning that you do your uttermost endeavour, as well to get as to keep, and also to defend the right of us and our Kingdom. And that neither to the prejudice of us, or of the same Kingdom, nor yet against us or our rights, which our predecessors and we by ancient and approved custom have used, you presume to procure or attempt any thing in your Council at Lions: nor that you give assent to any that shall procure or ordain ought in this case, upon your Oath aforesaid, and the lest of your Temporalities, which you hold of us. Wherefore in this behalf so behave your selves, that for your good dealing and vertue of thankfulness, we may rather specially commend you, than for the contrary by you attempted (which God forbid) we reprove your unthankfulness, and reserve vengeance for you in due time. Witness my self, &c. the nine and twentieth year of our Reign.

℣. In like fort wrote he to the Archbishops and Bishops, &c. of Ireland and Gascoigne.

{ Anno 1246 } After this Council ended, in the beginning of the next year following, Anno 1246, Pope Innocent came to Cloniack, where was then appointed a secret meeting or colloquie between the Pope and Lewis the French King (who was then preparing his Voyage to Jerusalem) in which colloquie the Pope fought all means to perswade the French King, in revengement of his injury, to War Contra regulum, (as he termed him) that is, against the weak and feeble King of England, either to drive him utterly from his Kingdom, or else to damnify him, whereby he should be confrained, whether he would or no, to stoop to the Popes will and obedience; wherein he also would affist him with all the Authority he could. Nevertheless, the French King to this would not agree. First, for the consanguinity that was between them (for their two Queens were Sisters.) Also for the Truce that they had taken. Thirdly for fear of the Emperor, left he should take his part. Item, for that it could not be without the much spilling of Christian blood. And lastly, because he was preparing his Voyage to the Holy Land, where his coming was already looked for. And thus the French King, denying the Popes bloody request, refused not only to enter War against the King and the Realm of England, but also shortly after concluded with him longer Truce, Anno 1246. Ex Mat. Parisiensi, fol. 196. b.

The Pope threateth the French King to War against the King of England.

Lewis the French King refuseth to War against England.

Straight upon the neck of this followed then the exaction of Boniface Archbishop of Canterbury, that he had bought of the Pope; which was to have the first years Fruits of all Benefices and Spiritual Livings in England for the space of seven years together, until the Sum should come to Ten thousand Marks. Whereat the King first was greatly grieved. But in conclusion, he was fain at last to agree with the Archbishop; and so the money was gathered. Paris. Fol. 197.

The first years Fruits of all Benefices and Spiritual Livings in England charged and offered to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Over and besides all other exactions wherewith the Pope miserably oppressed the Church of England, this also is not to be silenced, how the Pope, sending down his Letters from the See Apostolick, charged and commanded the Prelates to find him some ten, some five, and some fifteen able men well furnished with Horse and Harness for one whole year, to fight in the Popes Wars. And left the King should have knowledge thereof, it was injoyned them under pain of Excommunication, that they should reveal it to none, but to keep it in secret only to themselves: Ex. Parisiensi, Fol. 200.

The Prelates of England charged to find Horse and Harness for the Popes Wars

A subtil practice of the Pope.

The Pope notwithstanding, partly being laboured by Suters, partly of his own mind thinking good somewhat to give to the King and People of England, as Rebates are wont to give something to their Babes to play withal to keep them still, sent down this releasement to the King, that hereafter whensoever any of the Popes Nephews, or of his Cardinals were to be Benefced in any Church of England, either he or the Cardinals should first make the King privy thereto, and instantly crave his good will in obtaining the procuration, or else the same to stand in no effect, Paris. 202. Howbeit all this seemed to be done but of a policy, to get the Kings favour, whereby he might be suffered more freely to pass with greater exactions, as afterward appeared.

The Pope had for more money.

A new Law of the Pope to fish up on all the goods of Clergy men that dye intestate.

For when the foresaid Pope Innocent the fourth had knowledge at the same time of certain rich Clerks leaving great substance of money, which dyed intestate, as of one Robert Hailes, Archdeacon of Lincoln, which dyed leaving thousands of Marks and much Plate behind him, all which, because no Will was made, came to Temporal mens hands: also of M. Almarike, Archdeacon of Bedford, being found worth a great substance when he dyed; and likewise of another, M. John Hotosp, Archdeacon of Northampton, who dyed suddenly intestate, leaving behind him five thousand Marks, and thirty standing pieces of Plate, with other infinite Jewels besides: he sent forth upon the same a Statute to be proclaimed in England, that whatsoever Ecclesiastical person henceforth should decease in England intestate, that is, without making his Will, all his goods should redound to the Popes use. Paris. fol. 203.

A note of certain Ecclesiastical persons dying in England worth great substance.

Furthermore, the Pope, not yet satisfied with all this, addresseth new Letters to the Bishop of Winchester, and to W. Bishop of Norwich, for gathering up amongst the Clergy, and Religious Houses in England, six thousand Marks to the behoof of the Holy Mother Church, without any excuse or delay, by vertue of obedience. Which tollage being greatly grudged of the Clergy, when it came to the Kings ear, he effoons directeth contrary Letters to all the Prelates and every one of them, commanding them upon forfeiting their Temporalities to the King, that no such Subsidy-money should be gathered or tranported out of the Realm. But the Pope again hearing hereof, in great anger writeth to the Prelates of England, that this collection of money, upon pain of Excommunication and suspension, should be provided, and brought to the new Temple in London, by the Feast of the Assumption next ensuing.

Six thousand marks to be gathered of the Clergy of England for the Pope.

The King beginneth to withstand the Pope, but durst not hold out. The Pope in a chafe.

And furthermore, forsomuch as he perceived the King to go about to gainstand his proceedings, taking thereat great disdain, he was about the same time to interdict the whole Land. To whom then one of his Cardinals called Johan. Anglicus, an English-man born, speaking for the Realm of England, desired his Fatherhood for Gods cause to mitigate his moody ire, and with the bridle of temperance to asswage the passion of his mind: which (said he) to tell you plain, is here flirred up too much without cause. Your Fatherhood (quoth he) may consider that these days be evil. First, the Holy Land lyeth in great perils to be lost. All the Greek Church is departed from us. Frederick the Emperor is against us, the mightiest Prince this day in all Christendom. Both you and we which are the Peers of the Church, are banished from the Papal See, thrust out of Rome, yea, excluded out of all Italy. Hungary, with all Coasts bordering about it, looketh for nothing but utter subversion by the Tartarians. Germany is wasted and afflicted with inward Wars and tumults. Spain is fierce and cruel against us, even to the cutting out of the Bishops Tongues. France by us is so impoverished, that it is brought to beggery, which also conspireth against us. Miserable England being so often plagued by our manifold injuries, even much like to Balaams Ass, beaten and bounst with spurs and staves, beginneth at length to speak and complain of her intolerable griefs and burthens, being so wearied and damnified, that she may seem past all recovery; and we after the manner of Ismael, hating of Men, provoke all Men to hate us, &c. Ex Parisiensi, fol. 207.

The words of Johannes Anglicus Cardinal to the Pope.

The miserable troubles of Christendom.

Of Spain he meaneth, because the King of A. Spain is a little before had cut off the tongue of a certain Bishop that did reprehend him.

Paris. fol. 207.

For all these words of Johannes Anglicus his Cardinal, the Pope Sinderick Paffion could not yet be appeased, but forthwith he sendeth commandment with full authority to the Bishop of Worcester, That in case the King would not speedily surcease his Rebellion against his Apostolical proceedings, he would interdict his Land. So that in conclusion, the King, for all his stout enterprise, was fain to relent at last, and the Pope had his money, Anno. 1246. Ex Parisiensi. fol. 204.

Power given to the Bishop of Worcester to interdict the Land.

The King fain to relent to the Pope.

Of this division read before.

Ye heard before of the Greek Churches, under the Empire of Constantinople, how they sequestred themselves from the company of the Romish Church. Insomuch that Germanus the Patriarch of Constantinople, and the Archbishop of Antioch did Excommunicate the Bishop of Rome. And after the said Germanus another Bishop of Constantinople, at the Council of Lions, protested, That whereas before were thirty Suffragans belonging to that Province, now there were not three that held with the Church of Rome. And this breach, albeit it chiefly brast out in the time of Pope Gregory the ninth, Anno. 1230. to open War and bloodshed, yet the same had begun, and so continued long before in such sort as in the time of Pope Innocent the third, if any Priest had said Mass in their Churches, they would wash the Altar afterwards; as appeareth by the Acts of the Lateran Council, Capit. 4. Wherefore Pope Innocent now (as his other predecessors had done before) bearing an old grudge against those Churches of the Greeks, and neither willing by Conference to try with them, nor able by Learning to match with them, thought by force of Arms to subdue them, and sent the Provincial of the Gray-Friers, with other Associates of the same Order, into England with his Precept Authentical, containing in it three Articles.

{KING} {Hen. 3.}

The Greeks used to wash their Altars, if any Latin Mass had been said upon them, &c. otherwise. Concil. Lavocen. cap. 14.

1. FIrst, That the said Provincial, or his Friers, should inquire upon all Usurers being alive; and of all such evil gotten goods, gained per usurariam pravitatem, should make attachment for the use and preparation for this War against the Greeks, Excommunicating all them by distrinx censures of the Church that repugned against it.

Goods gotten by usury, attached for the Pope.

Excommunication abolished.

2. That all they which took the badge of the Cross, for the recovery of the said Empire of the Greeks, or with Goods and Cattel would help sufficiently unto the same, should be absolved of all their sins.

False absolution of sins.

3. Item, That all the goods left in the Testaments of them that were departed, being gotten by Usury, should be taken up to the Subsidy of the Empire aforesaid, and whosoever repugned against the same, should be Excommunicated.

Usuries pensies.

4. Item, That such goods as in the Testaments of the dead were left, or which should be left three next years to come, for restitution of such goods as the dead had evil gotten, they should take up for the Subsidy of the Empire aforesaid, Excommunicating, &c.

Goods left in dead Mens Wills for restitution, converted to the Pope.

5. Item, Such goods as were left to be distributed in godly uses, after the arbitriment of Executors, by the Will of the dead, or were not in their Wills deputed to any certain places or persons named, nor yet were bestowed by the said Executors to the foresaid uses, they should collect to the use and Subsidy aforesaid, and give Certificate to the See Apostolick of the quantity thereof. Excommunicating all repugners and rebellers against the same.

Goods in question in dead Mens Wills converted to a Waragainst the Greeks.

6. Item, That they should diligently inquire of such Mens goods evilly gotten or evilly come by, as were alive, and them they should attach for the Subsidy aforesaid, in case the party, which ought to be satisfied for those goods evilly gotten, could not be found, giving Certificate thereof, and Excommunicating, &c.

Goods ill gotten given to the Pope.

7. Item, That the said Provincial, or his Friers, should have full power to absolve those that were Excommunicated, which wittingly had done any fraud touching the Collection aforesaid, so that the said persons did make due satisfaction to the deputies aforesaid, Ex Matth. Parisiensi, fol. 205.

Absolution for money.

What Man having eyes is so blind which seeth not these execrable dealings of the Pope to be such, as would cause any Nation in the world to do as the wife Grecians did, and perpetually to abrenounce the Pope, and well to consider the usurped authority of that See not to be of God? But such was the rude dulness then of miserable England, for lack of learning and godly knowledge, that they feeling what burthens were laid upon them, yet would play till the Ass of Balaam, or else the Horse of Esop, which receiving the bridle once in his mouth, could afterward neither abide his own misery, nor yet recover liberty. And so it fared with England under the Popes thraldom: as partly by these stories above hath been declared, partly by other in like case following is to be seen.

An unreasonable relation of the Pope.

For so it followeth in the History of the said Mat. Paris, how the Pope taking more courage by his former abused boldness, and perceiving what a tame Ass he had to ride upon, cealed not thus, but directed a new Precept the same year, year, 1246. to the Prelates of England, commanding by the Authority Apostolick, That all Benefices Men in the Realm of England, which were resident upon their Benefices, should yield to the Pope the third part of their goods, and they which were not resident should give the one half of their goods, and that for the space of three years together; with terrible comminations to all them that did resist: and ever with this clause withal, Non obstante, which was like a Key that opened all Locks. Which sum cast together, was found to amount to 60000 pounds; which sum of money could scarce be found in all England to pay for King Richards Ransom, Paris. fol. 207. The execution of this Precept was committed to the Bishop of London, who conferring about the matter with his Brethren in the Church of Paul's, as they were busily consulting together, and bewailing the importable burthen of this contribution, which was impossible for them to sustain, suddenly cometh in certain Messengers from the King, Sir John Lexinton Knight, and M. Lawrence Martin the Kings Chaplain, straitly in the Kings name forbidding them in any case to consent to this contribution, which thould be greatly to the prejudice and defolation of the whole Realm, Paris. fol. 207.

{KING} {Hen 3.}

Non obstante

Threescore thousand pound exacted of the Clergy to be paid to the Pope.

A Parliament.

This being done, about the first day of December in the year above said, shortly after in the beginning of the year 1247. about February the King called a Parliament, where by common advice it was agreed, That certain Ambassadors should be sent to Rome, to make manifest to the Court of Rome the exceeding grievances of the Realm, delivering moreover these Letters to the Pope in the name both of the Temporalty and allo of the Clergy, as here followeth.

Another Letter sent to Pope Innocent the fourth, in the names of the whole Clergy and Commonalty of England, Anno 1247.

A Letter sent to the Pope in the name of all the Estates and Commonalty of the Realm.

SAnctissimo Patri in Christo, ac Domino Innocentio, Dei providentia summo Pontifici; universitas cleri & populi per Provintiam Cant. constituti devota pedum oscula beatorum. Cum Anglicana Ecclesia, &c. To the most holy Father in Christ, and Lord Innocent, by Gods Providence Chief Bishop; the whole Commonalty both of the Clergy and Laity within the Province of Canterbury sendeth devout kissings of his blessed feet. Like as the Church of England, since it hath first received the Catholick Faith, hath always shewed her self faithful and devout in adhering to God, and to our Holy Mother the Church of Rome, studying with all kind of service to please and to serve the same, and thinking never otherwise to do, but rather to continue and increase as she hath begun: even so now the same Church, most humbly prostrate before the feet of your Holiness, intirely beseecheth your Clemency to accept of her petition, in sparing this imposition of money, which so manifold ways for the subversion of other Nations, by the commandment of your Holiness, is laid upon us: considering that not only it is importable, but also impossible which is enjoined us. For although our Country sometimes yielded forth fruit for the necessary sustentation of the inhabitants, yet it bringeth forth neither gold nor silver, neither were able to bring forth of long time so much as now adays is required. Which also being burdened and overcharged of late days with another such like imposition, but not so great as this, is not able any whit to answer unto that which is exacted.

More fools you in giving to the Church so much.

Furthermore, besides this commandment of your Holiness, there is required of the Clergy a subsidy for our temporal King, which necessities neither possibly we can, nor honestly we ought to forsake, whereby he may both withstand the invasion of the Enemy, and maintain the right of his patrimony, and also recover again that hath been lost. In consideration whereof, we have directed the bearers hereof to the presence of your Holiness, with our humble supplication, to explain to you the dangers and inconveniencies which are like to insue upon the premisses, which by no means we are able to sustain, although notwithstanding we know our selves by all bonds of Charity to be obliged to your devotion and obedience. And because our general community hath no Seal proper, we have signed therefore these presents with the publick Seal of the City of London, &c. Ex Parisiensi, fol. 209.

The like Letters were sent also unto the Cardinals to the same effect. The Pope understanding these things, and perceiving that there was no striving against such a general consent, and yet loth to forgo his sweet harvest, which he was wont to reap in England, craftily devised to fend this answer again unto the King, much like to the same which he sent before, which was, That although the Pope in time past, upon his own will and pleasure to the importable grievance of the Realm of England, hath every where, and without respect, through the whole land made his provitions in giving their Benefices unto his Italians, yet now, the Lord be praised, that tempest, said he, is overblown: so that hereafter, if the Pope shall grant his provision for any of his Nephews or of his Cardinals, they shall come first and make their instance first unto the King, without all inforcement, so that it shall stand wholly in the Kings free arbitriment to do herein what he thinketh good, &c. Mat. Paris. fol. 209. b.

The Popes answer again to the King of England.

This answer of the Pope albeit it was but a subtil shift for the time, yet neither did he long stand to that he had thus promised to the King. For shortly after, and within few days upon the same, and in the time also of the said Parliament holden at Winchester, the Pope sent two English Friers into the Realm, whose names were John and Alexander, with full authority, after the largest sort, for new contributions. Who first pretending lowly submission on to the King, while they had leave granted to range about the Realm, afterward, coming to the Bishops and rich Abbots, shewed themselves forth in their full authority, in such sort as they became rather Tyrants than Extortioners.

The Pope false of his promise.

Among others, coming to Robert Bishop of Lincoln, who of all other bare a special mind to the Order of Obfervants, these two Friers as proud as Lucifer, bringing forth the terrible Mandate with the Popes Bulls, required and eke commanded under the Popes mighty Curse, to have the gathering in his Dioces of six thousand marks. Likewife of the Abbot of Saint Albans they required four hundred marks, under great penalty, and that in short time to be paid.

Note the Kibell practices of the Pope to get money.

The Bishop, although well liking before that Order of Friers, yet seeing the impudent behaviour, and more impudent request of those Merchants, thus answered to them again. That this exaction (saying, saith he, the Popes authority) was never heard of before, and neither was honest, nor yet possible to be performed; and moreover, was such as did not only concern him, but the whole publick state of the Clergy, and of the whole Realm in general; and therefore it should be absurdly and rashly done of him to give them answer herein, before the King and the rest of the Council, with others to whom the matter generally did appertain, were made privy thereunto, &c. and so for that time he shook them off, Paris. fol. 210.

The Bishop of Lincoln answer to the Friers the Popes Messengers.

Furthermore, as touching the Abbot of S. Albans, when he also alledged the same causes, he pretended moreover that he would appeal, and so did, to the Pope and his Cardinals. Whereupon immediately was sent down from Pope Innocent another Legate called Johannes Anglicus, an English Frier and Cardinal, who, bringing down a new special precept to the foresaid Abbot, cited him either to appear at London the morrow after S. Giles day, or to dispute to the use of the Pope the foresaid four hundred marks. By reason whereof the Abbot was driven to send his Proctors again, with a new supplication, to the Pope at Lions; who in the end, through great instance of moneyed friends, agreed with the Abbot for two hundred marks, besides his other charges born, and so was that matter compounded little to the Abbots profit, Paris. fol. 213.

The Abbot of S. Albans maketh great fine to the Pope for the 400 marks that he should not with Kibell revocations sue at the Popes Legats

To recite all damages and grievances received by the Bishop of Rome in this Realm of England, neither is any History sufficiently able to comprehend, nor if it were, unneth is there any that would believe it. Notwithstanding to those above declared, this own I thought to commit likewise to memory, to the intent that they which now live in this age may behold and wonder in themselves to see into what miserable slavery, passing all measure, not only the Subjects, but Kings also of this Realm were brought under the intolerable yoke of the Popes tyranny, which in those days neither durst any Man cast off, nor yet was able to abide. As by this example insuing, with infinite others like to the same may appear.

Example how this Realm of England was oppressed miserably by the Pope.

In the year of our Lord 1248. after that Pope Innocent the fourth had taken such order in the Realm, that all Prelates of the Church were suspended from collation of any Benefice, before the Popes Kinsfolks and Clerks of Italy had been first provided for; it happned upon the same, that the Abbot of Abington had a commandment from the Pope, to bestow some Benefice of his Church in all haste to a certain Priest of Rome, which the Abbot, as an obedient Child unto his Father the Pope, was prest and ready to accomplish accordingly. But the Roman Priest, not contented with such as fell next hand, would tarry his time, to have such as were principal and for his own appetite, having a special eye to the Benefice of the Church of S. Helen in Abington, which was then esteemed worth an hundred marks by year, besides other vales and commodities belonging to the same: the Collation whereof the Priest required by the authority Apostolical to be granted unto him.

As this past on, it chanced at last the Incumbent to dye and the Benefice to be empty. Which ettsoons being known, the same day cometh a commandment, with great charge from the King to the Abbot, to give the Benefice to one Aethelmare the Kings Brother by the Mothers side, who at the same time was possessed with so many Benefices, as the number and value thereof was unknown. The Abbot here being in great perplexity, and not knowing what to do, whether to gratifie his King or to obey the Pope, took counsel with his friends: who, well advising of the matter, gave him counsel to prefer the Brother of his Prince and Patron, so that the King would undertake to stand in his defence against the Pope, rather than the Romish Priest, whom always he should have lying there as a spie and watcher of him, and like a thorne ever in his eye: and so the King affiuring the Abbot of his undoubted protection, and indemnity against all harms, the Benefice was conferred forthwith to the Kings Brother.

The Roman Priest, not a little grieved thereat, speedeth himself in all haste to the Bishop of Rome, certifying him what was done, and partly also (as the manner is of Men) making it worse than it was. Upon whose complaint the Pope ettsoons in great anger cited up the Abbot personally to appear before him, to answer to the crime of disobedience. The Abbot trusting upon the Kings promise and protection (which neither could help him in that case, neither durst oppose himself against the Pope) being both aged and sickly, was driven to travel up to the Court of Rome, in great heaviness and bitterness of mind. Where in conclusion, after much vexation and bitter rebukes, besides great expences, he was fain to farisfie the Pope after his own will, compounding to give him yearly fifty marks in part of making him amends for his trelpass of disobedience, Ex Matt. Parisf. fol. 222.

The Abbot of Abington cited to appear before the Pope.

The Abbot of Abington condemned in 50 marks for denying of an English Benefice to an Italian the Popes Nephew.

To this also may be added another like fact of the Pope, as outragious as this, against the House of Binham. For when the Benefice of Wesfle in the Diocels of Ely was void by the death of the Incumbent, who was an Italian and one of the Popes Chamber, the Donation of which Benefice belonged to the Priory of Binham; another Italian which was a Bastard and unlearned, born in the City of Genoa, called Heriggetto de Malchano de Valta, brought down the Popes Letters to M. Berardo de Nymphis, the Popes Agent here in England, with strict charge and full authority, commanding him to see the said Benefice to be conferred in any case to Heriggetto. Yea, and though the Benefice had been given already, yet notwithstanding the possessor thereof should be displaced, and the said Heriggetto preferred: Yea also Non obstante, that the said Pope himself had before given his grant to the King and Realm of England, That one Italian should not succeed another in any Benefice there; yet for all that the said Heriggetto upon pain of Excommunication to be placed therein, Ex Matth. Parisiensi, fol. 240.

A detestable extortion of the Pope to the hurt of the Priory of Binham.

The Grecians excluded and purged in parting from the Church of Rome.

And thus much hitherto of these matters, through the occasion of the East Churches and the Grecians, to the intent all Men that read these Stories, and see the doings of this Western Bishop, may consider what just cause these Grecians had to seclude themselves from his subjection, and Communion. For what Christian Communion is to be joyned with him which so contrary to Christ and his Gospel seeketh for worldly Dominion, so cruelly persecuteth his Brethren, so given to avarice, so greedy in getting, so injurious in oppressing, so infatiable in his exactions, so malicious in revenging, stirring up Wars, depriving Kings, deposing Emperors, playing Rex in the Church of Christ, so erronious in Doctrine, so abominably abusing Excommunication, so false of promise, so corrupt in life, so void of Gods fear: and briefly, so far from all the parts of a true Evangelical Bishop? For what seemeth he to care for the souls of Men, which setteth in Benefices Boys and outlandish Italians: and further, one Italian to succeed another, which neither did know the language of the flock, nor once would abide to see their faces? And who can blame the Grecians then for disfevering themselves from such an oppressor and giant against Christ?

{KING} {Hen. 3}

The vilanies the Bishop of Rome in England through gathering under the Church of Rome.

Whose wife example if this Realm had then followed, as they might, certes our predecessors had been rid of an infinite number of troubles, injuries, oppressions, wars, commotions, great travels and charges, besides the saving of innumerable thousands of pounds, which the said Bishop full faithfully had raked and transported out of this Realm of ours. But not to exceed the bounds of my History, because my purpose is not to stand upon declamations, nor to dilate common places, I will pass this over, leaving the judgment thereof to the further examination of the Reader. For else if I lifted to prosecute this Argument so far as matter would lead me, and truth peradventure would require me to say, I durst not only say, but could well prove the Pope and Court of Rome to be the only fountain and principal cause, I say not only of much misery here in England, but of all the publick calamities and notorious mischiefs which have happned these many years through all these West parts of Christendom, and especially of all the lamentable ruine of the Church, which not only we, but the Grecians also this day do suffer by the Turks and Saracens. As whosoever will considereth by reading of Histories the course of times, and vieweth withal the doings and acts passed by the said Bishop of Rome, together with the blind leading of his Doctrine, shall see good cause not only to think, but also to witness the same. Only one Narration touching this Argument, and yet not transgressing the Office of my History, I mind (the Lord willing) to set before the Readers eyes, which happned even about this present time of this King Henry's Reign, in the year of our Lord, 1244.

England plagued by the Pope when it needed not.

In the which year it chanced, that Lewis the French King, Son to Queen Blanch, fell very sore sick, lying in a swound or in a trance for certain days, in such fort as few thought he would have lived, and some said he was gone already. Among others, there was with him his Mother, who sorrowing bitterly for her Son, and given somewhat (as commonly the manner of Women is) to superstition, went and brought forth a piece of the Holy Cross, with the Crown and the Spear; which piece of the Holy Cross Baldwinus Emperor of Constantinople (whom the Grecians had depofed a little before for holding with the Bishop of Rome) had sold unto the French King for a great sum of money, and blessing him with the same, also laid the Crown and the Spear to his body, making a Vow withal in the person of her Son, That if the Lord would visit him with health, and release him of that infirmity, he should be crossed or marked with the Cross, to visit his Sepulchre, and there solemnly to render thanks in the Land which he had sanctified with his blood. Thus as she, with the Bishop of Paris, and others there present were praying, behold the King, which was supposed of some to be dead, began with a sigh to pluck to his arms and legs, and so stretching himself began to speak, giving thanks to God, who from on high had visited him, and called him from the danger of death. Which as the Kings Mother with others there took to be a great miracle wrought by the vertue of the Holy Cross: so the King amending more and more, as soon as he was well recovered, received solemnly the badge of the Cross, vowing for a Freewill Sacrifice unto God, that he, if the Counsel of his Realm would suffer him, would in his own person visit the Holy Land: forgetting belike the rule of true Christianity, where Christ teacheth us otherwise in the Gospel,

The sickness of the French King.

The Pope and Court of Rome the principal cause of all the publick calamities through Christendom.

{KING} {Hen. 3}

Gospel, saying, That neither in this Mount nor in Samaria, nor at Jerusalem the Lord will be worshipped, but seeketh true worshippers, which shall worship him in truth and verity, &c. An. 1244. Paritiensi, fol. 182.

The French King crossed to go to the Holy Land.

Great preparation in France toward that Voyage.

After this was great preparation and much ado in France toward the setting forth to the Holy Land. For after the King first began to be crossed, the most part of the Nobles of France, with divers Archbishops and Bishops, with Earls, and Barons, and Gentlemen to a mighty number, received also the Cross upon their Sleeves. Amongst whom was the Earl Atrebacensis the Kings Brother, the Duke of Burgundy, the Duke of Brabant, the Countess of Flanders with her two Sons, the Earl of Britain with his Son, the Earl of Barensis, Earl of Suessson, Earl of St. Paul, Earl of Druis, Earl of Retel, with many Noble persons more. Neither lacked here whatsoever the Pope could do, to set forward this holy business, in sending his Legates and Friers into France, to stir the People to follow the King, and to contribute to his journey. Whereupon it was granted to the King, to gather of the Universal Church of France, by the Popes Authority, the tenth part of all their Goods for three years space together, upon this condition, that the King likewise would grant to the Pope the twentieth part for so many years after, to be gathered of the said Church of France. Which was agreed, An. 1246. Ex Matt. Parisiensi, fol. 204. b.

Contribution by Parret to the Kings Voyage.

The Pope maketh partition for his contribution also to France.

{ANNO} {1247}

Shortly after this, in the year of our Lord one thousand two hundred forty and seven, followed a Parliament in France, where the King with his Nobles being present, there was declared how the King of Tartarians or Turks, hearing of the Voyage of the French King, writeth a Letter to him, requiring that he will become his subject. In the which Parliament the time was prefixed for taking their journey, which should be after the Feast of St. John Baptist the very next year ensuing. Also they that were crossed were sworn to persist in their purpose, and sentence of the Popes great Curse denounced to all them that went from the same: Matth. Paris. Fol. 211. Furthermore, for the better speed in his journey, the King through all his Realm caused it to be Proclaimed, That if any Merchant or other had been injured at any time by the Kings Exactors, either by oppression, or borrowing of Mony, let him bring forth his Bill, shewing how or wherein, and he should be recompenced. At which time William Longspath a worthy Warrier, with the Bishop of Worcester and certain other great men in the Realm of England, moved with the example of the French men, prepared themselves likewise to the same journey.

The French King ready to recompence all injuries done to his Subjects. William Longspath with other Noble English-men prepared to the same Voyage.

Preparations given to the French King to run his Voyage.

The next year after this insuing, which was 1248, the French King yet still remaining in his purposed journey, Lady Blanch his Mother, also the Bishop of Paris his Brother, with the Lords of his Council, and other Nobles, and his special Friends, advertised him with great perswasions to alter his mind, touching that so adventurous and so dangerous a journey, for that his Vow (said they) was unadvisedly made, and in time of his sickness, when his mind was not perfectly stablished: and what jeopardies might happen at home it was uncertain; the King of England being on the one side, the Emperor on the other side, and the Pictavians in the midst, so fugitive and unstable: and as concerning his Vow, the Pope should friendly dispence with him, considering the necessity of his Realm, and weakness of his Body. Besides all this, his Mother upon her blessing required him, his Brethren of all love desired him to stay at home, and not in his Person to adventure; others might be sent in his room, with no less Furniture to atchieve that Enterprize, and to discharge him of his Vow, especially seeing at the making thereof his Senses were feeble, his Body weak, and Reason, through sickness and very death almost decaied.

The King recovereth his sickness.

The Kings Answer to his Lords laying down and taking up his Cross again.

{ANNO} {1248}

To whom the King again, Forsomuch (said he) as you say, that for feebleness of my Senses I took this Vow upon me: Io therefore as you here will me, I lay down the Cross that I took. And putting his hand to his Shoulder, he tare off the Badges of the Cross, saying to the Bishop, Here I resign to you the Cross wherewith I was signed. At the sight whereof there was no small rejoycing of all that were there present. To whom the King then, both altering his Countenance and his Speech, thus spake: My Friends (said he) whatsoever I was then in my sickness, now I thank God I am of perfect Sense, and Reason found, and now I require my Cross again to be restored unto me: saying moreover, That no Bread should come in his Head, before he were Recognized again with the same Cross, as he was before. At the hearing whereof all there present were attonied, supposing that God had some great matter to work, and so moved no more Questions unto him.

The people of France blinded with a false miracle.

The vain vow of the French King.

Upon this drew nigh the Feast of John Baptist, which was the time set for the setting forth. And now being in a readiness, the King in few days after was entring his journey: but yet one thing lacked. For the King, perceiving the mortal variance between the Pope and good Frederick the Emperor, thought best first before his going to have that matter appeased, whereby his way both might be safer through the Emperors Countries, and also less jeopardy at home after his departure; and therefore upon the same, he took first his way to Lions, where the Pope was, partly to take his leave; but most especially to make reconcilement between the Emperor and the Pope.

The French King ready to his journeys.

The French King desireth to reconcile the Pope and the Emperor.

Where is to be noted by the way, That as touching the good Emperor there was no let nor stay. Who rather fought all means how to compass the Popes favour, and never could obtain it: insomuch that before he should be Excommunicated in the Council of Lions, he not only answered sufficiently by Thadeus his Attorney, discharging himself against whatsoever Crimes or Objections could be brought against him; but so far humbled himself to the Pope and the Council, that for all detriments, damages, losses, or wrongs done of his part, what amends soever the Pope could or would require, he would recompence it to the uttermost. This would not be taken.

The Emperor Frederick purgeth himself to the Pope and Council.

The fabrisfion of the Emperor.

Furthermore, if the Pope (he said) could not abide his tarrying in his own Dominions and Empire, he would go fight against the Saracens and Turks, never to return into Europe again, offering there to recover the Lands and Kingdoms whatsoever did at any time belong to Christendom, so that the Pope only would be contented that Henry his Son (which was then Nephew to King Henry here in England) should be Emperor after him. Neither could this be admitted.

The worthy offer of the noble Emperor.

Then he offered for truth of his Promise, to put in the French King and the King of England to be his Sureties, or else for trial of his cause to stand to their Award and Arbitrement. Neither would that be granted.

The Emperor offereth the French King and King of England to be his Sureties. The Emperor desireth to Answer for himself in the Council.

At last he delired, that he might come himself and answer before the Council. But the proud Pope in no case would abide that, saying, That he did not yet find himself ready and meet for Martyrdom, to have him to come thither to the Council; for if he did, he would depart himself, &c. Ex Mat. Parisiensi, Fol. 187.

This obstinate rancor and divellish malice of Pope Innocent and his predecessor, against that valiant Emperor, and against the Grecians, what disturbance and mischief it wrought to the whole Church, what strength it gave to the Saracens and Tartarians, how it impaired Christian Concord, and weakned all Christian Lands, not only the Holt of the French King did find shortly after, but Christendom even to this day may and doth feel and rue. Neither can in Stories be found any greater cause which first made the Turks so strong, to get so much ground over Christendom as they have, than the Pestilent working of this Pope, in Deposing and Excommunicating this worthy Emperor. For as there was never Emperor of long time, which more Victoriously prevailed in bridling and keeping under these enemies of Christ, or would have done more against them, than the said Frederick if he might have been suffered: so after the Deposing and Excommunicating of him, when the French King neither would abide at home, as he was Counselled, neither was yet able, without the help of others, to withstand the force and multitude of the said Saracens and Tartarians being now joyned together, neither yet could the Emperor be suffered by the Pope to rescue the King: it followed thereof, that the good King being taken Prisoner, and all his Army destroyed, the Turks thereupon got such a hand, and such a courage against the Christians, that ever since they have burst in further upon us, and now have prevailed so far, as neither the power of the Pope, nor of all Christendom is able to drive them out; as hereafter by sequel of Stories is further to be declared.

The beginning of the Turks Victories over Christendom.

In

Pope Innocent the fourth would not be reconciled with the Emperor.

In the mean time, to return where before we left, when the French King coming thus unto the Pope at Lions to intreat for the Emperor, could find no favour, he took his leave, and with great heavineſs departed, ſetting forward on his journey unto Marſiliæ, and ſo Sailed to the Ile of Cyprus, where he remained all that Winter, ſo that falling into penury and lack of Victuals, he was fain to ſend to the Venetians and other Illands by, for help of Proviſion. The Venetians gently ſent unto him ſix great Ships laden with Corn, Wine, and other Victuals requiſite, beſides the relief of other Illands more. But eſpecially Frederick the Emperor, underſtanding of their want, ſo furniſhed the French Camp with all plenty of neceſſaries, that it had abundance. Whereupon the French King, moved with the kindneſs of the Emperor, wrote his ſpecial Letters to the Pope in the Emperors behalf, but the hard heart of the Pope would not relent. Blanchia the Kings Mother in France, hearing what the Emperor had done to her Son, ſent him moſt hearty thanks, with preſents and rewards manifold: Mat. Pariſ. Pag. 226.

The French men returned ſafe to their Camp. The French King again intreateth the Pope for the Emperor.

Damiata gotten again by French men.

In this mean time, about the beginning of October, the French men got Damiata, being the principal Port or Hold of the Saracens in all Egypt, in the year one thouſand two hundred forty and nine. After the winning of Damiata, the Prince and People of the Saracens, being aſtonied at the loſs thereof, offered to the Chriſtians great ground and poſſeſſions more than ever belonged to Chriſtendom before, ſo that they might have Damiata to them reſtored again. But the pride of the Earl of Artois the Kings Brother, would in no caſe accept the offers of the Saracens, but requireth both Damiata and Alexandria the chief Metropolitan City of all Egypt, to be delivered unto them. The Saracens, ſeeing the pride and greedineſs of the French men, in no caſe would abide it: which turned afterwards to the great detriment of our Chriſtians, as in the end it proved. Ex Mat. Pariſ. Fol. 229.

The Pride of the Earl of Artois.

Death of certain of the French Captains in the way.

First, in the Ile of Cyprus, and in the journey before, died the Earl of Palatin, and one of the twelve Peers of France, alſo the Earl of St. Paul and Bleſſe, who had under him fifty Enſigns, which were all after his Death ſcattered abroad and diſperſed; alſo died Johannes de Denis a valiant Captain, with many other Noble Perſonages both Men and Women, which, by altering the Air and Diet, there deceaſed.

{ Anno } 1250 { Victory of the French men over the Saracens

The next year inſuing, which was 1250, about Aſhwedneſday, the French men, iſſuing out of their Tents by the City of Damiata, flew upon the Saracens which beſieged them, and ſo after a great number of the Enemies ſlain, with Victory and great Spoils, returned to their Tents again. Now within the City of Damiata was the Queen with her Ladies, the Popes Legate, and Biſhops, with a Garriſon of Horſmen for the Defence of the City throughly appointed. The next day, the French-men ſuppoſing to have the like hand of the Saracens, as they had the day before, gave a freſh aſſault upon them, but in that conflict the Saracens had ſo ſtrongly appointed themſelves, that the Frenchmen loſt ten times more than they got the day before, and ſo, after a great ſlaughter of their men, retired unto their Tents again. Whereupon the Saracens began to take great hearts and courage againſt our men, ſtopping alſo the paſſages round about the City of Damiata, that no Victuals could paſs unto them. In like manner the Soldan alſo, gathering all the Gallies about Alexandria and all the Land of Egypt, ſo incloſed the Seas, that no intercourſe ſhould be to them by Water.

French men diſcomfited by the Saracens.

The French men again well ſtiffered by the Soldan.

At length after long Talk and Conſultation between them on both ſides, the Soldan adviſed them betimes to retign unto him the City of Damiata, with the Furniture which they found therein, and they ſhould have all the Country about Jeruſalem, with all the Captives of the Chriſtians, friendly reſtored unto them: wherewith the Chriſtians (ſaid he) ought to be contented, and to ſeek no further, but only to have the Land of Jeruſalem; which being granted to them, they ſhould not incroach into their Lands and Kingdoms, whereto they had no right. This form of Peace, as it liked well the meaner ſort of the poor Soldiers, and divers others of the ſaid Council and Nobility; ſo the proud Earl of Artois, the Kings Brother, in no caſe would aſſent thereto, but ſtill required the City of Alexandria to be yielded unto them. Which the Egyptians by no means would agree unto.

The Earl of Artois and the Popes Legate refuſe the Form of Peace offered.

{ KING } { Lib. 3 }

From that time the French Army, being compaſſed by Sea and by Land, began every day more and more to be diſtreſſed for lack of Victuals and with Famine, being driven to that miſery, that they were fain to eat their own Horſes in the Lent-time, which ſhould have ſerved them unto other uſes. Neither could any Chriſtian, nor Frederick being Depoſed by the Pope, be able to ſend them any ſuccor. Furthermore, the more miſery the Chriſtians were in, the more fiercely did the Saracens preſs upon them on every ſide, detelling their forward wilfulneſs. Inſomuch that divers of the Chriſtian Soldiers, not able to abide the affliction, privily conveyed themſelves, as they could, out of the Camp to the Saracens, who were gladly received and relieved, and ſome ſuffered ſtill to keep their Faith, ſome Marrying Wives amongſt them, and for hope of honour did Apoſtate to their Law, and ſo wrought no little harm to the Chriſtians. The Soldan, being perfectly inſtructed by theſe fugitives of all things belonging to the Kings Army, ſent him word in deriſion, aſking where were all his Mattocks, Forks, and Rakes, his Scithes, Plowes, and Harrows, which he brought over with him, or why he did not occupy them, but let them lie by him to ruſt and canker? All this and much more the King with his French-men were fain to take well in worth. It happened ſhortly after that this Soldan died, being Poyſoned of his own Servants; which was to the Chriſtians a more heaping of their miſeries. For albeit the fair Soldan had been a cruel Tyrant to the Chriſtians, yet was he hated of his own people, wherby his ſtrength was the leſs: after whom ſucceeded another much more cruel. Who as he was better loved, ſo he became much ſtronger, by a general confederacy of all the Saracens which were in the Eaſt parts, joyning now together. So that when the Chriſtians deſired now to have the form of Peace before proffered, he preciſely denied them. And ſo the French Hoſt, which at firſt began to be feared, by their pride and over-much greedineſs grew more and more in contempt amongſt their Enemies, and now was utterly deſpiſed.

The French-men for their miſery in Lent-time.

The Soldan dieth, by whoſe death the French-men.

The Soldan dieth, a cauſe followeth.

The Chriſtians, thus ſeeing all things to go backward with them, and how the baſtard Saracens daily did prevail, began to murmur againſt God, and ſome alſo, which were well ſeſted before, to ſtagger in their Religion, caſting out theſe words of Infidelity: How is this (ſaid they) that the Lord hath left us, in whoſe cauſe we fight? How often within the time of remembrance have we been confounded by theſe Saracens and Infidels, who with ſhedding of our blood have injoyed great ſpoils and victories? Firſt this City of Damiata, which we Chriſtians had gotten dearly with effuſion of ſo much Chriſtian blood, afterwards we were conſtrained for nought to reſign up again. After that, the Army of the Templars, fighting for the Holy Temple againſt the Saracens, near to Antioch, was vanquiſhed, and the Standard-bearer ſlain in the fields. Again, within theſe few years, our French men, fighting in like manner againſt the Saracens at the City of Gazara, were put to the worſt, and many afterward out of Captivity Ranſomed, by Richard, Duke of Exceſter, Brother to the King of England, Henry the third. Then came in the Coſmorins ſent by the Soldan of Babylon, which by a wile invaded the Chriſtians in the City of Jeruſalem, where almoſt all the Chriſtian Army being in the Holy Land, were deſtroyed. And now here our moſt Chriſtian King, together with the whole Nobility, is like to be in danger, utterly to be overthrown. And how is it that the Lord thus ſtandeth againſt us, and fighteth with them? Hath he more regard of them, than of us, &c? Matthæus Pariſ. fol. 231. Such murmuring words of an unſtable Faith many there began to caſt out, as taking diſpleaſure for their ſufferings: but not conſidering on the other ſide what Idolaters they were, what Pride and Diſcord was amongſt them, what Cruelty and Murther they had ſhewed at home in Proſecuting the poor Albingenſes, what Superſtition they firſt brought out with them, with what Idolatry they proceeded, putting their truſt in Maſſes, in the Popes Indulgences, in worſhipping of Images, and praying to Saints. And what helps then could they look for at Gods hand, which had Images in their Temples, to fight againſt them which had none? Or what marvel, if the Lord of Hoſts went not with their Army, committing ſuch Idolatry every day in their their Pavilions to their Sacramental Bread and Wine as they did, and fighting with the ſtrength of their own merits, and not only by the power of their Faith in Chriſt, which is only the Victory that overcometh the World? John 1. Finally, having in their Camp the Legate of him whom the Lord taketh to be his Enemy: as by example of Frederick the Emperor may be well perceived; who, after he was accurſed by Pope Gregory a little before, coming the ſame time in War againſt the Saracens in Paleſtina, Gods Bleſſing wrought ſo mightily with him, that without any blood-ſhed he recovered Jeruſalem, and ſet all the Country about it in great quietneſs, till at laſt the Poliſh Templars, which at the Popes ſetting on went about to betray him to the Soldan of Babylon, and ſo loſt all again by their own malicious miſchief, that the Emperor before had gotten. Ex Mat. Pariſienſis.

But let us proceed further in this holy progreſs: The French King with his Army being himſelf diſtreſſed, and no good there to be done againſt the Soldan of Egypt, after he had ſufficiently Fortified the City of Damiata, with an able Gariſon left with the Duke of Burgundy, he removed his Tents from thence to go Eaſtward. In whoſe Army alſo followed William Longſpath (of whom mention was touched before) accompanied with a picked number of Engliſh Warriers retaining unto him: But ſuch was the diſdain of the French men againſt this William Longſpath and the Engliſh men, that they could not abide them, but found them after opprobrious manner, with Engliſh Tails, inſomuch that the good King himſelf had much ado to keep peace between them.

William Longſpath.

Grudge and diſdain between the French Camp and the Engliſh Soldiers.

The original cauſe of this grudge between them began thus: There was, not far from Alexandria in Egypt, a ſtrong Fort or Caſtle, repleniſhed with great Ladies, and rich Treaſure of the Saracens: the which Hold it chanced the ſaid William Longſpath with his Company of Engliſh Soldiers to get, more by good luck and politick dexterity, than by open force of Arms, whereby he with his retinue were greatly inriched. When the French men had knowledge hereof, they, being not made privy thereto, began to conceive an heart-burning againſt the Engliſh Soldiers, and could not ſpeak well of them after that. It happened again, not long after, that the ſaid William had intelligence of a company of rich Merchants among the Saracens, going to a certain Fair about the parts of Alexandria, having their Camels, Aſſes, and Mules, richly Laden with Silks, precious Jewels, Spices, Gold and Silver, with Cart-loads of other Wares, beſides Victuals and other Furniture, whereof the Soldiers then ſtood in great need. He having ſecret knowledge hereof, gathered all the power of Engliſh men unto him that he could, and ſo by Night falling upon the Merchants, ſome he ſlew with their Guids and Conductors, ſome he took, ſome he put to flight. The Carts with the Drivers and with the Oxen, and the Camels, Aſſes and Mules, with the whole Carriage and Victuals he took and brought with him, loſing in all the Skirmiſh but one Soldier, and eight of his Servitors: of whom notwithſtanding ſome he brought home wounded to be cured.

Victories over the Egyptian Kings.

This being known in the Camp, forth came the French men, which all this while loitered in their Pavilions, and meeting their Carriage by the way, took all the forefaid Prey whole unto themſelves, rating the ſaid William and the Engliſh men, for ſo adventuring and iſſuing out of the Camp without leave or knowledge of their General, contrary to the Diſcipline of War. William ſaid again, he had done nothing but he would anſwer to it, whoſe purpoſe was to have the ſpoil divided to the behoof of the whole Army: when this would not ſerve, he being ſore grieved in his mind, ſo cowardly to be ſpoiled of that, for the which he ſo adventurouſly had travelled, went to the King to complain. But when no reaſon nor complaint would ſerve, by reaſon of the proud Earl of Artois the Kings Brother, which upon deſpite and diſdain ſtood againſt him, he bidding the King farewell, ſaid he would ſerve him no longer. And ſo William de Longſpath with the reſt of his company, breaking from the French Hoſt, went to Achon. Upon whoſe departure then ſaid the Earl of Artois: Now is the Army of French men well rid of theſe tailed people. Which words, ſpoken in great deſpite, were evil taken of many good men that heard him: Ex Mat. Pariſienſi, fol. 233, 234.

The deſpiteful words of the Kings Brother againſt Engliſh-men.

Before the arriving of the French Army in the Land of Egypt, the Soldan of Babylon, having before intelligence of their coming, committed the cuſtody of Damiata unto a certain Prince of his whom he ſpecially truſted, committing alſo to his Brother the keeping of Kaira and Babylonia. It followed now after the taking of Damiata, that the Soldan of Babylon accuſed the Prince which had the cuſtody thereof, before His Nobles, of prodition, as giving the City unto the Chriſtians. Who notwithſtanding in judgment did ſufficiently clear himſelf, declaring how he was certified that the King would Land at Alexandria, and therefore bent all his power to prevent the Kings arrival there. But by diſtreſs of weather, he miſſing of his purpoſe, and the King Landing about Damiata, by reaſon thereof the City was taken unprovided, he notwithſtanding with his Company reſiſting as well as they might, till they could no longer, and ſo departed out, curſing (ſaid he) Mahomet and his Law. At which words the Soldan, being offended, commanded him to be had away as a Traytor and Blaſphemer, and to be Hanged, albeit he had ſufficiently purged himſelf by the judgment of the Court. His Brother which was the Keeper of Kaira and alſo of Babylonia, being therewith not a little grieved, and bearing a good mind to the Chriſtian Religion, deviſed in himſelf how to give the ſaid City of Kaira and Babylonia to the French King, and ſo in moſt ſecret wiſe ſent to the King, ſhewing his full purpoſe and what had happened: and furthermore inſtructing the King in all things how and what he ſhould do, and moreover requiring the Sacrament of Baptiſm, meaning indeed good Faith, and ſending alſo away all the Chriſtian Captives which he had with him in Priſon. The King, being glad hereof, ſent in all haſt for William Longſpath, promiſing a full redreſs of all injuries paſt; who, upon hope of ſome good luck towards, came at the Kings requeſt, and ſo joyned with the French power again.

The lamentable overthrow and ſlaughter of the French Army fighting againſt the Infidels, through the ſiniſter counſel of the Popes Legate.

The Story how the French Army overthrown in the fighting againſt the Saracens.

TO make the Story ſhort, the King, ſetting forward from Damiata, directed his journey towards Kaira, ſlaying by the way ſuch Saracens as there were ſet to ſtop the Victuals from Damiata. The Soldan in the mean time hearing of the couragious coming of the French Hoſt, as being in great hope to Conquer all; ſent unto the King by certain that were next about him, offering to the Chriſtians the quiet and full poſſeſſion of the holy Land, with all the Kingdom of Jeruſalem, and more; beſides other infinite Treaſure of Gold and Silver, or what elſe might pleaſure them, only upon this condition, they would reſtore again Damiata, with the Captives there, and ſo would joyn together in mutual Peace and Amity. Alſo they ſhould have all their Chriſtian Captives delivered home, and ſo both Countries ſhould freely paſs one to another with their Wares and Traffick, ſuch as they uſed to adventure. Furthermore, it was alſo firmly affirmed and ſpoken, that the Soldan with moſt of his Nobles were minded no leſs than to leave the filthy Law of Mahomet, and receive the Faith of Chriſt, ſo that they might quietly enjoy their Lands and Poſſeſſions. The ſame day great quietneſs had entred (no doubt) in all Chriſtendom, with the end of much bloodſhed and miſery, had it not been for the Pope and his Legate, who (having commandment from the Pope, that if any ſuch offers ſhould come, he ſhould not take them) ſtoutly & frontoſe (as the words be of the Story) contradicens, in no wiſe would receive the conditions offered: Pariſ. fol. 232.

The ſame day great quietneſs had entred

The Pope and his Legate cauſe of all this miſchief.

Thus, while the Chriſtians unprofitably lingered the time in debating this matter, the Soldan in the mean time got intelligence of the compact between the Tribune of Kaira and the French King; whereupon he ſent in all haſt to the City of Kaira to apprehend the Tribune till the truth were fully tried, which ſeemed to him more apparent, for that the Chriſtian Priſoners were already delivered. Hereupon the Soldan being in ſome better hope, and leſs fear, refuſed that which before he had offered to the Chriſtians; albeit they with great inſtance afterward ſued to the Soldan, and could not obtain it. Then the Soldan, being wholly bent to try the matter by the ſword, ſent to the Eaſt parts for an infinite multitude of Souldiers, giving out by Proclamation, that whoſoever could bring in any Chriſtian Mans head, ſhould have ten talents, beſides his ſtanding wages. And whoſoever brought his right hand ſhould have five. He that brought his foot ſhould have two talents for his reward.

The Earl of Artois with the third part of the Chriſtian Army paſſeth over the River Nilus.

After theſe things thus prepared on both ſides to the neceſſity of War, the King cometh to the great River Nilus, having gotten together many Botes, thinking by them to paſs over, as upon a ſure Bridge. On the other ſide the Soldan pitched himſelf to withſtand his coming over. In the mean time happned a certain Feaſt amongſt the Saracens, in which the Soldan was abſent, leaving his Tents by the water ſide. Which being foreſeen by a certain Saracen lately converted to Chriſt, ſerving with Earl Robert the Kings Brother, and ſhewing them withal a certain ſhallow Ford in the River of Nilus, where they might more eaſily paſs over; The ſaid Earl Robert and the Maſter of the Temple with a great power, eſteemed to the third part of the Army, iſſued over the River, after whom alſo followed William Longſpath with his band of Engliſh Souldiers. Theſe, being together joyned on the other ſide the water, incountered the ſame day with the Saracens remaining in the Tents, and put them to the worſe. After this Victory gotten, the French Earl ſurpaſſed with pride and triumph, as though he had conquered the whole Earth, would needs forward, dividing himſelf from the main Hoſt, thinking to win the ſpurs alone. To which certain ſage Men of the Temple giving contrary counſel, adviſed him not ſo to do, but rather to return and take their whole Company with them, and ſo ſhould they be more ſure againſt all deceits and dangers, which there might be laid privily for them. The manner of that people (they ſaid) they better knew, and had more experience thereof than he: alledging moreover, their wearied bodies, their tired Horſes, their famiſhed Souldiers, and the inſufficiency alſo of their number, which was not able to withſtand the multitude of the Enemies, eſpecially at this preſent brunt, in which the adverſaries did well ſee the whole ſtate of their dominion now to conſiſt either in winning all, or loſing all: with other ſuch like words of perſwation. Which when the proud Earl did hear, being inflamed with no leſs arrogancy than ignorance, with opprobrious taunts he reviled them, called them cowardly daſtards, and betrayers of the whole Country, objecting unto them the common report of many, which ſaid, That the Land of the Holy Croſs might be won to Chriſtendom, were it not for the rebellious Templars, with the Hoſpitalars and their fellows, &c.

William Longſpath.

Victory of the Chriſtians againſt the Saracens.

Good counſel given, but not followed.

The diſpiteful rebukes of Earl Robert to them that gave him good counſel.

To theſe contumelious rebukes when the Maſter of the Temple anſwered again for him and his fellows, bidding him diſplay his Enſigne when he would, and where he durſt, they were as ready to follow him, as he to go before them. Then began William de Longſpath the worthy Knight to ſpeak, deſiring the Earl to give ear to theſe Men of experience, who had better knowledge of thoſe Countries and people than he had, commending alſo their counſel to be diſcreet and wholeſome, and ſo turning to the Maſter of the Temple began with gentle words to mitigate him likewiſe. The Knight had not half ended his talk, when the Earl, taking the words out of his mouth, began to fume and ſwear, crying out of theſe cowardly Engliſh-men with tails. What a pure Army (ſaid he) ſhould we have here, if theſe tails, and tailed people were purged from it? With other like words of great villany and much diſdain. Whereunto the Engliſh Knight anſwering again, Well, Earl Robert, ſaid he, whereſoever you dare ſet your foot, my ſtep ſhall go as far as yours; and as I believe, we go this day where you ſhall not dare to come near the tail of my Horſe: as in the event it proved true, Ex Matth. Pariſ. fol. 230.

The worthy anſwer of the Engliſh Knight to Earl Robert the Kings Brother.

In this mean time the French King, intending to advance forward his Army, thought beſt to ſend away ſuch as were feeble and lacked Armor, unto Damiatta by Boats. The Soldan, hearing thereof prepared a great number of Boats to be carried by Wain and Cart to the water ſide; which meeting them by the way, drowned and deſtroyed by wild-fire every one, ſo that of all that company of our Chriſtians, of whom ſome were burned, ſome

A number of French Souldiers ſent to Damiatta, drowned and ſlain by the way.

ſlain, ſome drowned, not one eſcaped alive, ſave only one Engliſh-man, named Alexander Giffard; who, although he was ſore wounded in the chace in five places in his body, yet eſcaped to the French Camp, bringing word unto the King what was done. And this was upon the water.

{KING. Hen. 3}

Now upon the Land, ſeeing Earl Robert would needs fet forward, weening to get all the glory unto himſelf before the coming of the Hoſt; firſt they invaded a little Village or Caſtle which was not far off, called Manſor. The Country Boors, and Pagans in the Villages by, ſeeing the Chriſtians come, ran out with ſuch a main cry and thout, that it came to the Soldans hearing, which was nearer than our Men did think. In the mean while the Chriſtians, invading and entring into the Munition incircumſpectly, were pelted and paſhed with ſtones by them which ſtood above, whereby a great number of our Men were loſt, and the Army ſore maimed; and almoſt in diſpair. Then immediately upon the ſame cometh the Soldan with all his main power; who ſeeing the Chriſtians Army to be divided, and the Brother ſeparated from the Brother, had that which he long wiſhed for, and ſo incloſing them round about that none ſhould eſcape, had with them a cruel fight. Then the Earl began to repent him of his heady rathneſs, but it was too late: who, then ſeeing William the Engliſh Knight doughtily fighting in the chief brunt of the Enemies, cryed unto him moſt cowardly to flie, ſeeing God (ſaid he) doth fight againſt us. To whom the Knight anſwering again, God forbid (ſaith he) that my Fathers Son ſhould run away from the face of a Saracen: The Earl then turning his Horſe fled away, thinking to avoid by the ſwiftneſs of his Horſe, and ſo taking the River of Thaſnis, oppreſſed with Harneſs, was there ſunken and drowned. Thus the Earl being gone, the French Men began to deſpair and ſcatter. Then William de Longſpath, bearing all the force of the Enemies, ſtood againſt them as long as he could, wounding and ſlaying many a Saracen, until at length his Horſe being killed, and his legs maimed, he could no longer ſtand, who yet notwithſtanding, as he was down, mangled their feet and legs, and did the Saracens much ſorrow, till at the laſt after many blows and wounds, being ſtoned of the Saracens, he yielded his life. After the death of him, then the Saracens letting upon the reſidue of the Army, whom they had compaſſed on every ſide, devoured and deſtroyed them all, inſomuch that ſcarce one Man eſcaped alive, ſaving two Templars, one Hoſpitalar, and one poor raſcal Souldier, which brought tydings hereof to the King.

The manly courage of William Longſpath.

Theſe things being known in the French Camp unto the King and his Souldiers; firſt of their drowning which were ſent to Damiata, then of their ruine and ſlaughter of the Army, with the Kings Brother by the Town of Manſor, there was no little ſorrow and heavineſs on every ſide, with great fear and doubt in themſelves what was beſt to do. At laſt, when they ſaw no remedy, but they muſt ſtand manfully to revenge the blood of their Brethren, then the King with his Hoſt paſt over the flood of Nilus, and coming to the place where the Battel had been, there they beheld their fellows and brethren, pitifully lying with their heads and hands cut off. For the Saracens for the reward before promiſed by the Soldan or Sultan, unto them that could bring the head or hand of any Chriſtian, had ſo mangled the Chriſtians, leaving their bodies unto the wild Beaſts. Thus as they were ſorrowing and lamenting the ruful caſe of their Chriſtian fellows, ſuddenly appeareth the coming of the Soldan, with a multitude of innumerable thouſands. Againſt whom the French-men eftſoons prepare themſelves to incounter, and ſo the Battel being ſtruck up, the Armies began to joyn. But alack for pity, what could the French-men here do, their number firſt ſo maimed, their hearts wounded already with fear and ſorrow, their bodies conſumed with penury and Famine, their Horſes for feebleneſs not able to ſerve them? In concluſion, the French-men were overthrown, ſlain, and diſpatched; and ſeeing there was no flying, happy was he that firſt could yield himſelf. In which miſerable conflict, the King with his two Brethren, and a few that clave unto him, were taken Captives, to the conſuſion of all Chriſtian Realms, and preſerved to the Soldan. All the reſidue were put to the Sword, or elſe ſtood to the mercy of the Saracens, whether to be ſlain or to remain in woful Captivity. And this was the end of that ſorrowful Battel, Battel, wherein almoſt all the Nobility of France was ſlain, neither was there one man well-neer in the multitude which eſcaped free, but either was ſlain, or taken Priſoner. Furthermore, they that were ſlain or left half alive, had every one his Head and Hand cut off, upon the Soldans Proclamation above-mentioned.

The Sultan or Soldan, after the taking of the French King, fraudulently Suborning an Army of Saracens to the number of the French Army, with the Arms and Enſigns of them that were ſlain, made toward Damiata, where the Duke of Burgundy, with the French Queen, and Otho the Popes Legate, and other Biſhops and their Gariſons were remaining; ſuppoſing under the ſhew of French-men to be let in: but the Captains miſtrutting their haſty coming, and miſdoubting their Viſages, not like to the French-men, ſhut the Gates againſt them, and ſo returned they fruſtrate of their intent.

The ſum of the Kings Ranſom. The number of the French men ſlain.

The purpoſe of the Soldan was, if he might have gotten Damiata, to ſend the French King up higher in the Eaſt-Countries to Caliphа, the chief Pope of Damaſcus, to increaſe the Titles of Mahomet, and to be a ſpectacle or gazing-ſtock to all thoſe quarters of the World. The manner of which Caliphа was, never to let any Chriſtian Priſoner come out, whoſoever came once in his hand. But forſomuch as the Soldan miſſed his purpoſe, he thought by advice of Council, to uſe the Kings life for his own advantage in recovering the City of Damiata, as in the end it came to paſs. For although the King at the firſt was greatly unwilling, and had rather die than ſurrender Damiata again to the Saracens, yet the concluſion fell out, that the King was put to his Ranſom, and the City of Damiata was alſo reſigned; which City being twice won, and twice loſt by the Chriſtians, the Soldan of Saladine afterward cauſed it utterly to be raced down to the ground. The Ranſom of the King, upon condition that the Soldan ſhould ſee him ſafely conducted to Achon (which I take to be Ceſarea) came to 60000 Marks. The number of French-men, and others which miſcarried in that War by Water and by Land, come to 80000 perſons. Hæc Mat. Pariſ. fol. 237, 238.

The two Soldans at variance about the French King.

What miſchief hath come to Chriſtendom and by what means Henry Frederick the Emperour might have ſerved to good Head againſt the Saracens, but the Pope could not ſuffer him.

And this have ye the brief Narration of this lamentable peregrination of Lewis the French King: In which when the French-men were once or twice well offered by the Soldan, to have all the Kingdom of Jeruſalem, and much more in free poſſeſſion; they not contented with that which was reaſonable and ſufficient, for greedineſs to have all, loſt all, having at length no more than their naked bodies could cover lying dead upon the ground, and all through the original cauſe of the Pope and Otho his Legate. By whoſe ſiniſter means and peſtilent pride, not only the lives of ſo many Chriſtians were then loſt, but alſo to the ſaid Pope is to be imputed all the loſs of other Cities and Chriſtian Regions bordering in the ſame quarters: forſomuch as by the occaſion hereof the hearts of the Saracens on the one ſide were ſo incouraged, and the Courage of the Chriſtians on the other ſide ſo much diſcomfited, that in ſhort ſpace after, both the Dominion of Antioch and of Achon, with all other Poſſeſſions belonging to the Chriſtians, were loſt, to the great diminiſhing of Chriſts Church.

During the time of this good King lying at Achon or Ceſarea: Almighty God ſent ſuch Diſcord betwixt the Soldan of Halaphia, and the Soldan of Babylon for letting the King ſo eſcape, that the ſaid Soldan or Saladine of Babylon, to win the King unto his ſide, entred League with him (whom both his Brethren, and all his Nobles almoſt at home had forſaken) and remitted his Ranſom, and alſo reſtored unto him ſuch Priſoners as were in the ſaid Battel found to be alive. Thus the Lord worketh, where man commonly forſaketh. Matth. Pariſienſi, fol. 261.

Another cauſe moreover, why the ruine of this French Army may worthily be imputed to the Pope, is this, For that when Lewis the French King perceiving what a neceſſary friend and helper Frederick the Emperor might be to him in theſe his Affairs againſt the Saracens, and therefore was an earneſt ſuitor for him to the Pope to have him releaſed; yet neither he, nor the King of England by any means could obtain it. And although the Emperor himſelf offered to Pope Innocent with all humble ſubmiſſion to make ſatisfaction in the Council of Lions, promiſing alſo to expugne all the Dominions of the Saracens, and never to return into Europe again, and there to recover whatſoever the Chriſtians had loſt, ſo that the Pope would only grant his Son Henry to be Emperor after him: yet the proud Pope would not be mollified, but would needs proceed againſt him with both Swords, that is, firſt, with the Spiritual Sword, to Accurſe him, and then with the Temporal Sword to Depoſe him from his Imperial Throne. Through the occaſion whereof, not only the French Kings power went to wrack, but alſo ſuch a fire of miſchief was kindled againſt Chriſtendom, as yet to this day cannot be quenched. For after this overthrow of the French King and his Army, the Chriſtians of Antioch and of other Chriſtian Regions thereabouts, being utterly diſcouraged, gave over their Holds and Cities. Whereupon the Saracens, and after them the Turks, got ſuch an hand over Chriſtendom, as to this day we all have great cauſe to rue and lament. Beſides this, where divers Chriſtians were croſſed to go over and help the French King, the Pope for many diſpenſed with them to tarry ſtill at home.

The Tyranny and diveliſh miſchief of the Pope againſt the Emperor.

But as I ſaid, the greateſt cauſe was, that the Emperor which could have done moſt, was Depoſed by the Popes tyranny, whereby all thoſe Churches in Aſia were left deſolate. As touching the which Emperor Frederick, becauſe we have divers and ſundry times made mention of him before, and for that his ſtory is ſtrange, his acts wondrous, and his conflicts tragical, which he ſuſtained againſt four or five Popes one after another, I thought (right out of ſtory) in a whole Narration to ſet forth the ſame, for the Reader to conſider, what is to be judged of this Cathedral See of Rome, which had wrought ſuch abominable miſchief in the World, as in the ſequel of the ſtory following, faithfully Tranſlated out of Latin into Engliſh, is to be ſeen.

The whole Tragical Hiſtory of Frederick the Second, Emperor, Tranſlated out of the Latin Book of Nich. Ciſnerus.

What houſe Frederick came of.

Frederick the ſecond, came out of the ancient Houſe of the Beblini or Gibillini; which Gibillini came of the moſt famous ſtock of the French Kings and Emperors.

What Father and Mother.

He had Frederick Barbaroſſa to his Grand-father, whoſe Son Henricus the ſixth was Emperor after him; who of Conſtantia, the Daughter (or as ſome write, the Niece) of Roger the firſt, King of Sicily, begat this Frederick the ſecond.

The time and manner of his birth.

This Conſtantia was fifty years of Age before ſhe was conceived with him; whom the Emperor Henry the ſixth, to avoid all doubt and ſurmiſe that of her conception and childing might be thought, and to the peril of the Empire enſue, cauſed his Regal Tent to be pitched abroad in place where every man might reſort. And when the time of his Queens travel approached, Conſtantia (in preſence of divers Ladies and Matrons, and other Gentlewomen of the Empire, a great number) was brought abed and delivered of this Frederick, the ſeventh day before the Kalends of January in the year of Chriſts Incarnation 1193, who by Inheritance was King of Naples, Apulia, Calabria and Sicilia.

What Father he had.

Henricus his Father, ſhortly after he was born, obtained of the Princes Electors, that by their Oath unto him given, they would chuſe his Son Frederick for their Emperor after his deceaſe, and ſo did, and immediately called him Cæſar, being yet but in his Cradle.

This Henry when he died (which was ſhortly after the birth of Frederick) committed the protection of him to Conſtantia his Wife, to Philip his Brother chief Governor of Hetruria, and to the Biſhop of Rome, then Innocentius the third.

The Conſpiracies of Pope Innocent againſt Frederick during his minority.

Conſtantia, not long after the death of Henry her Huſband, being fickly and growing into Age, and thereby not ſo well able to govern the troubles and unquiet ſtate of the Empire, reſigned, and willed by her Teſtament the ſafety both of her Son Frederick, and alſo of his Dominions, to the Protection and Government of Innocent the third, thinking thereby ſafely to have provided, &c.

The firſt Conſpiracy.

This Pope Innocent, as ſoon as he had the Protection of the young Emperor and his Seignories, became, inſtead of a Patron and Protector to him and his Dominions, both an Enemy and Conſpirator. The examples are many: One is, he perſwaded Sibyll the late Wife of Tancredus (whom Henry put from the Kingdom of Sicily) to recover the ſame again, and that ſhould thereunto require Philip the French Kings aid. Whereupon one Walcherus being of the Noble Houſe of the Earls of Brenno, which in the Province of Barrenecis had great Living, and Marrying with Ate- via the eldeſt Daughter of Tancredus once King of Sicilia (as is ſaid) now by the inſtigation, counſel, and aid of the French King with the Pope (well-hoping to recover the Kingdom) entred and invaded with great power Campania and Apulia. At which time alſo, the ſame worthy Protector Innocentius the third, ſent his Legates with Letters of Excommunication againſt all thoſe that would not admit and take the ſaid Waldherus for their King.

The ſecond Conſpiracy. Another was, that where the Princes, Electors, and other Nobles, as before is ſaid, had promiſed by their Oath to Henricus, that they would make Frederick his Son Emperor after his deceaſe (whom the Pope ſaw to put their endeavour thereunto to bring it to paſs) abſolved them all from the Oath which they had taken and given for the Election of Frederick the Emperor, as one not content he

The third Conſpiracy. ſhould obtain the ſame. And further, he raiſed ſlanders and defamations againſt Philip, whom the Electors had choſen to govern the Empire, during the minority of Frederick his Nephew. He wrote his Epiſtle (which is yet extant) to the Duke Barthold of Zaringia to be Emperor. Who for that he gave place to Philip, he went about to procure that Otho the Son of Henry Leo ſhould be made Emperor, and that the Princes and Lords, Electors of Germany would

The fourth Conſpiracy. Crown him forthwith after the manner of Aquiſgrane. He deprived all ſuch Biſhops as he knew to favour Philip as Emperor, in the defence of his Nephews right. But Philip whoſe cauſe was better, his skill in Martial Affairs greater, and in power and ſtrength mightier, after divers and great conflicts, the marvellous diſturbance and vaſtation of the whole Empire, by Gods help put the other to the worſe. All which calamities and miſchiefs Conradus Lichtenanus, at that time living, in his Annals, moſt pitifully complaineth of, and accuſeth the Biſhop of Rome and his Adherents to be the chief Authors and deviſers of this great and lamentable miſchief, as ſuch that, for to make themſelves rich by the ſpoil thereof, fought by all means and defired the ſame.

The fifth Conſpiracy. Not long after, a Peace was concluded between Philip and Otho, and Philip reconciled again to the Pope; who within a while after, between Otho and him, was murthered in his Chamber and ſlain. And then was Otho again brought to the Imperial Seat, and new Elected for Emperor, with the counſel and conſent of this Innocent the third, and ſo continued until that a great variance and diſcord chanced to ariſe between the ſaid Otho and the Pope. Whereupon Innocentius fought by all means, how againſt him likewiſe he might work miſchief, and bring him unto his end. The occaſion of this ſudden change and alteration my Author maketh no mention of, but that Otho (now being of great power) invaded and deſtroyed the Dominions of Frederick, as Flaminia, Picenum, Umbria, Hetruria, but chiefly Campania, and Apulia, for that thoſe properly appertained to the Inheritance of Frederick.

Philip ſlain.

Variance betwixt Otho and the Pope.

Thus you ſee, how firſt by the counſel and conſent of Pope Innocentius, and by his inſtigation, beſides his ſecret Conſpiracies, this good Frederick and his Dominions were hurt and indamaged. Then again through his default what damage he ſuſtained by Otho, who by him and his means was made ſo ſtrong as he was: notwithſtanding the great truſt he was put in for the Protection both of Frederick and his Dominions.

What Learning and Knowledge he was of.

At this time Frederick was come unto the age of twenty years: who in his youth, by the proviſion of Conſtantia his Mother, was ſo well inſtructed in Letters, and with other arts and vertues ſo indued, that as thoſe years there appeared and did ſhine in him excellent gifts both of wiſdom and knowledge.

What Vertue he was indued with.

He was excellently well ſeen in the Latin and Greek Tongues, although at that time Learning began to decay, and barbarouſneſs to increaſe. He had alſo the German Tongue, the Italian Tongue, and the Saracen Tongue. He daily exerciſed and put in practiſe thoſe vertues which Nature had planted in him, as Piety, Wiſdom, Juſtice and Fortitude: inſomuch that well he might be compared and accounted among the worthieſt and moſt renowned Emperors his predeceſſors.

Frederick ſuſpected for his Grand-fathers ſake.

Fazellus (the Hiſtorician of Sicilia in this time) writeth, That Fredericus was again after this had in great honor and eſtimation with Innocentius; but yet notwithſtanding he had no ſure confidence in him, for that he had the ſuſpected name of Frederick his Grand-father often in remembrance, and for that occaſion was much deſirous to have him far from Italy.

KING 1 Hen. 3

When Frederick had gathered his power, he purpoſed to ſet upon Otho his Enemy; of which thing Otho hearing (as he was painful in travel) came out of Italy with his Army into Germany, thinking to have met Frederick at the river of Rhine, and to have ſtopped his paſſage; but he was deceived of his expectation, and Fredericus was Crowned, as the manner of Aquiſgrane is, before he came. And after that Frederick in the Winter-time took his journey fo Francfford, and after many meetings in Norico had, and after that Otho was dead, he ſet the Empire in a ſtay, and the whole Country of Germany he in a manner appeaſed. And then with all his Nobles and Princes he returned to Rome, and of Honorius the third was with great Solemnity Conſecrated and called Auguſtus. Which Honorius ſucceeded Innocentius the third in the Papal See, and was a great help to Frederick (although he loved him not) in this behalf, to revenge himſelf upon Otho.

The Conſecration of Frederick.

The Emperor replieth againſt the Popes demands.

The third requeſt of Frederick to the Pope and Church of Rome.

The Emperor Frederick but reaſonably anſwereth to the demands of the Pope to him.

After the Confecration of Frederick the ſecond, he gave many great and liberal gifts, as well unto the Biſhop of Rome himſelf, as alſo unto the Court of Rome beſides. Alſo he gave and aſſured by his Charter, to the Church of Rome, the Dutchedom of Fundanum. For by the unſatible covetouſneſs of the Romiſh Biſhops, this wicked uſe and cuſtom grew, that unleſs the Emperors Elect and Crowned would give unto them ſuch like great and large gifts, they could not obtain of them their Conſecration or Confirmation, which for that intent they deviſed.

Frederick his patience in ſuffering through his liberality a Sword (as it were) to cut his own Throat.

Furthermore, Frederick the Emperor willing to ſhew himſelf more bountiful and liberal unto the Church, neither yet to reſtrain any priviledge that might benefit the ſame, gave and admitted thoſe conſtitutions which the Pope himſelf would define, and are yet extant in their Civil Law: by which his doings he delivered to their hands a Sword (as it were) to cut his own Throat: for the Biſhops of Rome now having even what they lifted, and all in their own hands, might by the pain of proſcription, bring what Emperor or King they lifted under Coram nobis, and keep them by their own Laws, as if they were bound in certain bands, out of which they might not ſtart. For whatſoever he were which for the diminution of the Liberties of the Church were Excommunicated, and ſo conſtituted a years ſpace, then he ſhould be within the danger of this Proſcript, and ſhould not be releaſed before he had made ſatisfaction, and were admitted by the Pope to the Church and Congregation of good men again. Whereby it came to paſs, that whatſoever Emperor, in the Government of his Dominions, ſhould in any point diſpleaſe, or do contrary to the luſt of the Biſhop of Rome, he then as Enemy to the Church was Excommunicate. And unleſs within a year he were reconciled to them again (by this their Principal Law) he was in the Proſcript. And often it chanced that Princes, to avoid the pain of this Proſcript, were ready to do whatſoever the Pope would have them, and commanded them to do.

The Canon of Proſcription granted and confented by Frederick.

The Biſhop between the Pope and the Emperor for the election and deprivation of Biſhops.

Frederick after his Coronation confirmeth all the Privileges and Dominions of the Church.

After the Confecration of Frederick was with great Solemnity finiſhed, and that the Pope and Church of Rome in all ample manner (as is partly deſcribed) were gratified, and yet larger conſtitutions to them confirmed, he departed from Rome, and went into Italy, there to ſet in order and ſtay the Cities and great Towns, for the better Tranquility of himſelf, and ſafety of his Subjects, and from thence into his own Provinces and Dominions: where he heard of certain that began to raiſe and make new Factions againſt him. Amongſt whom were found Thomas and Richard, the Brethren of Innocentius the third, Earl of Anaquinus, that held certain Caſtles in the Kingdom of Neopolitans from him by force: which Caſtles he beſieged and beat down, and took from them all that he in them found. Richard, he took and ſent as a Priſoner into Sicilia; but Thomas eſcaped and came ſpeedily to Rome; whither alſo repaired certain Biſhops and others that were Conſpirators againſt Frederick, as alſo ſuch others as the fear of the Emperors Laws, and their own guilty Conſciences cauſed to flie, and were (that notwithſtanding) of this Biſhop of Rome, Honorius the third (to gratify again the liberality of the Emperor beſtowed upon him) under his Noſe ſecoured, maintained and defended. Which thing when Frederick underſtood, he began to expoſtulate with the Biſhop, conſidering the unſeemlineſs of that his Fact. Againſt whom whom the Pope on the other ſide was ſo chafed and vexed, that immediately, without further delay, he thundereth out againſt him, like a Tyrant, his Curſes and Excommunications.

Tho. Fazellus declareth the deteſtation or defiance to happen between them ſomewhat otherwiſe. There were (ſaith he) amongſt thoſe which were found Traitors to the Emperor, certain Biſhops, which flying to the Pope, requeſted his aid: whereupon the Pope ſent his Legates to the Emperor, and requeſted him, that he would admit and receive to favour thoſe Biſhops which he had baniſhed and put from their offices, and that he would not intermeddle with any Eccleſiaſtical charge wherewith he had not to do: and ſaid further, that the correction and puniſhment of ſuch matters pertained to the Biſhop of Rome, and not to him. And moreover, that the overlight of thoſe Churches in that Kingdom, from the which he had expelled the Biſhops, pertained and belonged unto him.

Whereunto Frederick thus replieth, That forſomuch as now four hundred years and more (from the time of Carolus Magnus) all Emperors and Kings in their Dominions might lawfully commit to apt and fit men for the ſame, ſuch Eccleſiaſtical functions and charges as within their Territories and Kingdoms ſeſt, that he looked to have the like priviledge and authority alſo, that other his Predeceſſors before him had. And further ſaid, That he had the ſame and like authority in the Empire that his Father Henry, and Frederick his Grand-father, and other his Predeceſſors before them had; neither had he ſo deſerved at the hands of the Church of Rome, either of Honorius himſelf, to be deprived of thoſe priviledges which his anceſtors before him had and kept. And further, Frederick being chafed and moved with theſe demands of the Pope, breaketh forth and ſaith, How long will the Biſhop of Rome abuſe my patience? When will his covetous heart be ſatisfied? Whereunto will his ambitious deſire grow? With ſuch like words more, repeating certain injuries and conſpiracies, both againſt him and his Dominions, as well by Honorius as Innocentius the third his Predeceſſor, as alſo other like injuries of Popes to his anceſtors practiſed. What man (ſaith he) is able to ſuffer and bear this ſo incredible boldneſs and intolerable inſolency of ſo proud a Biſhop? Go, (ſaith he, unto the Legates) and tell Honorius, that I will hazzard both the Seigniory of my Empire, and Crown of my Kingdom, rather than I will ſuffer him thus to diminiſh the authority of our Majeſty. Tho. Fazellus lib. 8.

Now becauſe much diſquietneſs and controverſie hath ariſen (for the moſt part through all Chriſtendom in every the Kingdom and Realm ſeverally) for and about the authority of chuſing and depriving of Biſhops (as may be ſeen by the example of this Frederick) which the Pope only and arrogantly challengeth to himſelf, and ſaith it doth not appertain to another: I thought good not with ſilence to overpaſs, but ſomewhat to ſay, and to prove the authority of Chriſtian Kings and Princes in this behalf to be both ſufficient and good. Which thing not only by the holy Scriptures is right eaſie to be done; but alſo that it is by Synodal Decrees and Councils (divers and ſundry) eſtabliſhed and confirmed, may eaſily be proved; as alſo by the ancient cuſtome and manner of the Primitive Church may further be corroborated and made good.

Authority for the election of Biſhops to be in the Princes and their Subjects.

Whereunto appertain certain places collected and gathered out of the Decrees of Gratianus, and eſpecially in theſe Canons, 12, 13, 14, 26, 27, 32, and 63 Diſtinctions. Furthermore, when Chriſtian Kings and Princes began to embrace Chriſt his Religion, both for honour and orderſake it was granted, that when the people defired ſuch miniſters as were convenient, and by them thought meet; that they which were then in the Eccleſiaſtical function, and chiefeſt in authority, ſhould either confirm ſuch as were preſented, or elſe themſelves ſhould place fit men in their Churches as need required. So did the Emperors of Conſtantinople (receiving the order and manner from Conſtantine the Great) uſe and give the right of Eccleſiaſtical function with the conſent both of the people and Eccleſiaſtical perſons, and long ſo retained the ſame. As Honorius the Emperor unto Bonifface, can. 8. diſt. 79. and can. 2. diſt. 97. Alſo by the example of Pelagius and Gregorius Magnus, of which one in the Reign of Juſtinian the Emperor, and Totila governing Italy; the other in the time of Mauritius the Emperor, (when the Lombards poſſeſſed Italy) were appointed Biſhops to the Church of Rome, Chap. 15. 21. 24.

Antiquities of the election of the Biſhop of Rome to be in the Emperor.

And whereas Gratianus in the beginning of the 96 and 97 Diſtinction doth declare, that the Reſcript of Honorius the Emperor is void and of none effect, for that he determined the election of the Biſhop of Rome, contrary to the authority of the holy Canons, when as yet neither to the Civil Magiſtrate, nor to any of the Eccleſiaſtical order, can there be read of any licence given them to diſpence it withal: each man may plainly ſee and diſcern his great folly and want of underſtanding. As though at that time any Decrees were made which ſhould debar Emperors from the conſtituting of the Eccleſiaſtical Miniſters. Or that it were doubtful whether the Emperors at that time had paſt any conſtitutions touching the cauſes of Eccleſiaſtical diſcipline, and the ſame laws then put in ure; when the contrary moſt manifeſtly (both by the Laws and Hiſtories of that age and time, as well of the Church as of the Empire) may appear. And that we need not ſeek far for the matter, this thing is ſufficiently proved by theſe Titles; De ſacroſanctis Eccleſiis, Epiſcopus, Clericus, Beſides other Eccleſiaſtical Chapters and matters touching Religion. All which are to be ſeen in the Books of the principal and chiefeſt conſtitutions, collected and ſet forth by Juſtinian. Amongſt the which, many of the Chapters are ſaid to be accepted and allowed of Honorius and Theodoſius: ſo in like caſe, the 21 Can. in the 63 diſtinction doth declare, that the Grecian Emperors, that next enſued after Juſtinian, did obſerve that manner of ordaining and election of the Biſhop of Rome, although then at that time Interpellatus erat, it was ſomewhat ſpurned at. Amongſt whom mention is made of Conſtantinus the 4th. which was ſirnamed Pogonatus.

The ſtiles of Juſtinian for the election.

The Grecian Emperors Elections of Biſhops.

Carolus Magnus in like manner followed their ſteps and manner in the ſame, as in the 22d Canon, and the ſame Diſtinction is declared. And further, it was at a Synodal Council in Lateran (Adrian being high Biſhop, where were contained and aſſembled 153 other Biſhops) decreed, That the power and authority of creating the Biſhop of Rome, and ordaining of all other Prelates and Eccleſiaſtical Orders, ſhould be in the power and will of Carolus Magnus, as well in Italy as other his Dominions and Provinces, and that whoſoever was not promoted and allowed by him, ſhould not be confecrated of any; and that thoſe which repugned and diſobeyed this Decree, ſhould incur the moſt ſharp pain of proſcription and publication of law. The worthy example hereof is extant in the 18 Can. and 18 Title. Yet notwithſtanding, Stephanus the fourth, author of this Reſcript againſt the ſaid Decree, without the Emperors conſent, was made Biſhop of Rome; who, to the intent he might delude the decreed and ſolemnized penalty, thereby to excuſe himſelf, went into France to Ludovicus Pius, the Son of Carolus Magnus, and at Rheims Crowned he him with the Imperial Diadem. Neither could this Biſhop here ſtay himſelf, but ſpying the great lenity of the Emperor, aſſaied to make fruſtrate the forefaid Conſtitution. For his purpoſe was, and ſo he brought it to paſs, as in the 27 Can. and the ſame Diſtinction appeareth, that it might be lawful for the Eccleſiaſtical order, with the People and Senate of Rome (without the authority of the Emperor) to chuſe the Biſhop of Rome, referving that he ſhould not be conſecrated without the will and conſent of the Emperor. Thus it is manifeſt, that the Biſhops of Rome themſelves, not regarding, but deſpiſing the ſtrict penalty and ſanction of the forefaid Decree of the Lateran Council, were not only the firſt that brake the ſame, but alſo, by contrary reſcripts and conſtitutions, labboured and indeavoured to extol and ſet up themſelves above all others.

Stephen the 4th. firſt author of this election.

The Biſhops of Rome the firſt breakers of the Decrees of the Council.

Whereupon Lotharius, afterward being Emperor, and Nephew to Carolus Magnus, coming into Italy, there to diſſolve the conſpiracy and confederacy of Leo the fourth about the tranſlation of the Empire, renewed and eſtabliſhed again the Synodal Decree of Lateran touching the Juriſdiction of the Emperor for the election of the Biſhop of Rome and other Eccleſiaſtical perſons. And hereof it came, that thoſe Epiſtles were written of Leo in the 16 and 17 Can. and the ſame diſtinction, which alſo, as in the 9 Can. and 10 diſtimade a profeſſion, that the ſame imperial precepts ſhould be kept in all ages. This Leo, when he was reproved of treaſon and other evils, pleaded his cauſe before Ludovicus the ſecond Emperor of Rome, and Son of Lotharius above recited: 2 quæſt. 7. Can. 40.

Lotharius reverenceth the Lateran decrees for Election of Biſhops.

Otho depoſeth Pope the 14th. and ratifieth a new Decree of election.

But after this, as time grew on, the Biſhops of Rome nothing relinquiſhing their ambitious deſires; Otho the firſt Emperor of that name, deprived and put from the See of Rome that moſt filthy and wicked Biſhop John the thirteenth, both for divers and ſundry wicked and heinous acts by him committed, as alſo for his great Treaſons and Conſpiracies againſt his Royal Perſon, and did ſubſtitute in his place Leo the fifth; who, calling a Synod at Lateran in the ſame Temple and place where the other before was kept, did promulgate a new Conſtitution with conſent of the Senate and People of Rome, concerning the Emperors Juriſdiction in the foreſaid Election; which in the 23 Canon is contained and 63 diſtinction. Whereby the old right and power of the Emperor in the Election of the Biſhop of Rome, and other Eccleſiaſtical Prelates, was again with ſharper and ſtricter ſanction confirmed and ratified. Again, John the eighteenth, whom Crescentius the Roman (uſurping the Imperial Crown) had made Biſhop by the conſent of the people of Rome and the Eccleſiaſtical Order, having his Noſe cut off, and his Eies put out, and ſo thruſt out of the Capitol, was again of Otho the third eſtabliſhed and made Biſhop. But when as yet notwithſtanding, the Biſhops of Rome would not alter their old accuſtomed diſpoſition, but with all their induſtry indeavoured to abrogate that Juriſdiction of the Emperor over the Biſhop of Rome (as people loth to be under ſubjection) Henry the third (then Leo the ninth being conſtituted Biſhop) did once again ratifie the ſame and cauſed the Biſhop (which excelled himſelf before all his fellow Biſhops) to ſtoop and give place to Mogontius.

Leo the 9th. was inſtituted by Otho the Emperor.

The election once again ratified to be in the Emperors juriſdiction.

Henry the 3d. and Leo the 9th.

Henry the 4th. and Nicholas the ſecond.

So after the death of Henry the third Emperor, Nicholas the ſecond, although in his Decree (which in the 1 Canon, and 23 diſtinction is recited) he gave the primacy for the Election of the Biſhop of Rome by the means of the Prieſts and People of Rome, unto the Cardinals: yet he would after that, that the Prerogative therein ſhould be reſerved to Henry the fourth the young Emperor, from whom the Empire afterwards was for a time wrefted and taken.

The election hitherto in the Emperors, and now beginneth to fall by Hildebrand.

But now after this, when Hildebrand, which was called Gregory the ſeventh, was Pope, this prerogative of the Emperors in their Election, which before in the creation of Alexander the Biſhop, was neglected and broken; the Biſhops of Rome not only did ſeek to diminiſh the authority thereof, but alſo to evacuate and quite undo the ſame. For he not only aſpired to that dignity without the conſent and appointment of the Emperor, but alſo made reſtraint, that no Emperor, King, Duke, Marqueſs, Earl or any Civil Magiſtrate, ſhould aſſign and appoint to any, any Eccleſiaſtical function and charge; neither that any of his Prelates ſhould be ſo hardy, as to take them at any of their hands: as queſt. 16. can. 7. 9. and 10. may be ſeen.

Henry the 4th. again challengeth the election.

Yet notwithſtanding, after that this horrible Monſter Hildebrand was proſcript and thruſt out of the Papal Seat, and Clement the third put in his ſtead, Henry again challenged his Imperial Prerogative of Election. But yet, when the Biſhops which ſucceeded after this Hildebrand, led by his example, began to derogate from the Imperial Prerogative of Election; and Henry on the other ſide, by all the means poſſible, fought to defend and maintain the ſame; by the ſubtil fraud and miſchievous policy of the Biſhops, which ſet the Son againſt the Father, and found means to ſteal from him the hearts of his Nobles and Subjects, and to ſet them all againſt him, and eſpecially the Princes of Germany, he was depoſed and diſappointed of his purpoſe.

Henry the 5th. alſo forfeiteth for the election and faileth.

And although Henry the fifth (coming to Rome) brought Paſchalis the ſecond to that point, that he both in publick concion, and in writing ſealed, and alſo by Oath confirmed, reſtored again to the Emperors of Rome the Prerogative of Election, and of giving Eccleſiaſtical Dignities: yet notwithſtanding, after that Henry the Emperor was gone from Rome, Paſchalis the Pope, greatly repenting and ſorrowing that he had done (in allowing and confirming the priviledges of Emperors through fear) touching the giving and diſpoſing of Eccleſiaſtical functions, excommunicated the Emperor, and in a Synodal Council at Lateran, ordained and decreed that he ſhould be had and accounted a wicked enemy, that would take any Eccleſiaſtical function or preferment at the hands of a civil Magiſtrate; whereupon were made theſe Decrees, qu. 16. chap. 7. 13, 14, 15 and 16.

Prieſts ſecured that take any Benefice at the hands of a Layman.

Therefore when theſe Decrees touching the deſignation of Biſhops, in ſpight and contempt of the Emperor, were practiſed and put in ure; and when that now (eſpecially by the means and procurement of the Biſhops) inteſtine and Civil Wars began to riſe in the Empire; the Imperial Juriſdiction in this matter was not only weakned and much debilitate, but alſo in manner utterly broken and loſt. For when Henry the fifth Emperor was ſharply of Lotharius and his Vaſſals the Biſhops beſet, and laid unto by the provocation of the Pope, and was mightily, by the Biſhops that took his part on the other ſide, requeſted and intreated (in hope of publick peace and tranquility) that he would condeſcend and ſomewhat yield to the Popes demands: he at length (the more was the pity) that he might be reconciled and have peace with Pope Calixtus the ſecond, in the City of Vangio, departed from and with that his Prerogative or Juriſdiction of giving Eccleſiaſtical Preferments, to the Pope and his Prelates, now more than three hundred years (from the time of Carolus Magnus) in the hands of the Emperors of Rome, and until this time with great fortitude and Princely courage conſerved and kept; which relignation turned to no ſmall detriment both of the Church of Chriſt, and Chriſtian Commonwealth.

Then firſt and never before, obtained the Biſhop of Rome, and quietly enjoyed that Prerogative of Election, and beſtowing of Benefices, which he ſo long before with ſuch great policies (now feareth, now openly, and now with force,) had fought for. And with what ſufficient and good authority Gratianus will prove, that before this time the ſame authority was given to the City of Rome for the Election of the Pope without the conſent of the Emperor, he ſheweth, as in the 29 and 30 Canon, and what good ſtuff he putteth in the later, and how ſubtily that Papiſtical flatterer or Papiſtical Parafite hath forged the ſame, both Carolus Molinæus ſufficiently in divers places hath noted, and by the obſervation of times may of a meaſn Hiſtoriographer, that hath read the French and German Hiſtories, ſoon be eſpied and diſcerned. For firſt, five Biſhops one after another ſucceeded this Gregory the 4th. upon whom 29th. Canon is intituled or fathered; that is, Sergius the 2d. John the 8th. Adrian the 2d. John the 9th. and Adrian the third. Which Adrian by force, wreſting the authority of the Election from the People, was made Pope; when as Gregory (ſpecially to be noted) would not take on him the Papacy, before that the Emperor had conſented to his Election. After this Molinæus compareth Raphael Volaterranus with the 30 falſe Canon, which again is ſuſpected. For why? When Eugenius was Biſhop, who was the ſucceſſor of this Paſchalis, with whom Ludovicus Pius is ſaid to have made a League or paction, the ſame Ludovicus Pius with his Son Lotharius, together with the help of the King of Romans, at Rome made Laws both to all his Subjects in the Empire, as alſo to the Romans themſelves; ſpeaking nothing of the renewing of the Decree made by Lotharius. Then again, how could Leo the fourth write to Lotharius and Ludovicus Emperors, that counterfeit or forged Decree beginning with Conſtituitio, &c. when in the ſame, mention is made of Henricus Aucupes, and Otho the firſt, which reigned more than fourſcore years after them, and Leo the fourth was Biſhop of Rome.

Now with what face dare this ſond fellow Gratianus make Otho the firſt to be Authour of the 31 Canon, when as Otho deprived the ſame John the twelfth of the Papacy; and not only took nothing from the Imperial Juriſdiction concerning the Election, nor from the City of Rome, nor any other Biſhops ſubject to the Roman Empire, but added ſomewhat more thereunto, as was ſaid before. And yet notwithſtanding, ſo ſhameleſs and ſenſeleſs was this Gratian, that he durſt obtrude and lay before the Reader ſo manifeſt fraud and evident Legerdemaine (fained and made of his own Brains in the compiling of this Decree) being ſo neceſſary, as he thought for the Dominion and Primacy of the Roman Biſhops, in the ſtead of good and true laws; neither fearing that the ſame might be after his days reprehended, neither to his great ſhame and diſcredit to him attributed. Where alſo by the way is to be noted, that as this graceleſs Gratianus to pleaſe theſe Holy Fathers, and to erect their Kingdom, would give ſo impudent an attempt to the blinding and deceiving of all Poſterities, inſerting for grounded Truths, and holy

Decrees

{KING 1 Hen. 3}

The coming of Antichriſt preſent Made to be feared.

Decrees ſuch loud lies and deteſtable Doctrine, what may be thought of the rabble of the reſt of Writers in thoſe days, what attempts might hope of gain cauſe them to work, by whom and ſuch like is to be feared the falſifying of divers other good works now extant, in thoſe perilous times written?

Thus when the Biſhops had once wrefted this authority out of the Emperors hands, they then ſo fortified and armed themſelves and their dominion, that although afterwards Frederick the firſt, Grandfather unto this good Emperor Frederick the ſecond, as alſo Ludovicus Pius, and Henricus Lucelburgenſis (as men moſt ſtudious and careful for the Dignities of the Empire, unſained lovers and maintainers of the utility of the Commonweal, and moſt deſirous of the preſervation and proſperity of the Church) did all their endeavours, with ſingular wiſdom and ſtrength, as much as in them lay, to recover again from the Biſhop of Rome this authority of the Imperial Juriſdiction loſt, moſt cruelly and wickedly abuſing the ſame, to the deſtruction both of the Empire, undoing of the Commonwealth, and utter ſubverſion of the Church of God; yet could they not be able to bring the ſame to paſs in thoſe dark and ſhadowed times of perverſe Doctrine and Errors of the People, and moſt miſerable ſervitude of Civil Magiſtrates.

The ſame and like priviledge alſo in the Election of their Biſhops and Prelates, and diſpoſing of Eccleſiaſtical Offices, as the Emperor of Rome had, every Prince and King in their ſeveral Dominions had the like. For by the Decree of the Council of Toletan, which in the 25 Canon and 63 Diſtinction is mentioned, the authority of creating and chuſing Biſhops and Prelates in Spain, was in the power of the King of Spain. The like alſo by the Hiſtories of Clodoveus, Carolus Magnus, Ludovicus nonus, Philippus Audoveus, Carolus Magnus, Ludovicus nonus, Philippus Auguſtus, Philippus Pulcher, Carolus quintus, Carolus ſextus, Carolus ſeptimus, Kings of France, is apparent and well known; for all theſe Kings had the chief charge and government of the French Church, and not the Biſhops of Rome.

And by our Engliſh Hiſtories alſo, as you heard, it is manifeſt, that the authority of chuſing Eccleſiaſtical Miniſters and Biſhops was always in the Kings of England, till the Reign of King Henry the firſt; who by the labour and procurement of Anſelmus Archbiſhop of Canterbury, was deprived and put from the ſame.

Alſo the Princes of Germany and Electors of the Emperor, till the time of Henry the fifth, had all (every Prince ſeverally in his own Dition and Province) the ſame Juriſdiction and Prerogative, to give and diſpoſe Eccleſiaſtical Functions to their Prelates at their pleaſure, and after that it appertained to the Biſhops of Rome the Prelates gat unto themſelves alone this immunity. Johannes Aventinus in his 7th. Book of the Annals of the Boiores doth deſcribe.

Alſo it is probable, that the Kings of Sicilia had the ſame faculty in giving and diſpoſing their Eccleſiaſtical promotions and charge of Churches: Andreas de Iſthmia ad 1. conſtit. Neap. nu. 12. And that becauſe Frederick deſended himſelf againſt the tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome, therefore (as Farellus ſaith) he was excommunicated of Honorius; but that Platina and Blondus alledge other cauſes, wherefore he was excommunicate of Honorius, I am not ignorant; howbeit, he that will compare their Writings with others, that write more indifferently between Honorius and him, ſhall eaſily find, that they more fought the favour of the Roman Biſhops, than to write a verity. But now again to the Hiſtory of Frederick.

The death of Conſtantia the Wife of Frederick.

Nicolaus Ciſſeurus affirmeth, that whilſt Frederick the Emperor was in Sicilia, his Wife Conſtantia died at Catiana or Catana.

A great overthrow of the Chriſtians in Egypt.

In the mean time the Chriſtians which with a great Navy failed into Egypt, and took the City Helopolis, commonly called Dalmatia, and long ago named Peluſium, being in good hope to have driven Sultanus the Soldan out of Egypt, had a great and marvelous overthrow by the conveying of the Water of the Floud Nilus (which then overflowed into their Camp) and were fain to accord an unprofitable Truce with the Soldan for certain years, and to deliver the City again; and ſo departing out of Egypt, were fain to come to Achon and Tyrus, to the no ſmall detriment and loſs of the Chriſtian Army. Whereupon King John ſirnamed Brennus (being King of Jeruſalem) arrived in Italy, and prayed aid of the Emperor againſt his enemies, in whom he had great hope to find remedy of the evils and calamities before declared; and from thence he went to Rome to the Pope, declaring unto him the great diſcomfiture and overthrow paſt, as alſo the preſent peril and calamity that they were in, deſiring alſo his aid therein. By whoſe means (as Ciſneurus ſaith) the Emperor was reconciled again to the Pope, and made friends together; to whom alſo King John gave Joel his Daughter in Marriage, which came of the Daughter of Comadus King of Jeruſalem, and Marqueſs of Monſferrat; with whom he had for Dowry the inheritance of the Kingdom of Jeruſalem, as right Heir thereunto by her Mother. By whom alſo he after obtained the Kingdom of Naples and Sicilia, and promiſed, that, with as much expedient ſpeed as he might: he would prepare a power for the recovery again of Jeruſalem, and be there himſelf in perſon; which thing to do, for that upon divers occaſions he deferred (whether of ſome think one, ſome another) Honorius, unto whom he was lately reconciled, purpoſed to have made againſt him ſome great and ſecret attempt, had he not been by death before prevented, upon whom were made theſe Verſes:

O pater Honori, multorum nate dolori,
Eſt tibi decori vivere, vade mori.

Frederick & the Pope John gave Joel his Daughter in Marriage, which came of the Daughter of Comadus King of Jeruſalem, and Marqueſs of Monſferrat friends.

Honorius the Pope dieth before he can put his prudence in ure againſt Frederick.

After whom ſucceeded Gregorius the Ninth, as great an enemy of Frederick, as was Honorius; which Gregory came of the race whom the Emperor (as before ye heard) condemned of Treaſon which they wrought againſt him. This Gregory was ſcarcely ſettled in his Papacy, when that he threatned him greatly with Excommunication, unleſs he would prepare himſelf into Aſia according to his promiſe as ye heard before, to King John; and what the cauſe was why the Pope ſo haſtened the journey of Frederick into Aſia, you ſhall hear hereafter: In effect, he could not well bring that to paſs, which in his miſchievous mind he had deviſed, unleſs the Emperor were further from him. Notwithſtanding, Frederick it ſhould ſeem ſmelling a Rat, or miſtruſting ſomewhat (as well he might) alledged divers cauſes and lets, as lately and truly he did to Honorius.

Gregory the 9th. as great an enemy to Frederick, as Honorius.

Farellus a Sicilian Writer ſaith, that the ſpecial cauſe of the Emperors ſtay was, for the Oath of Truce and Peace during certain years, which was made between the Saracens and Chriſtians as you heard, which time was not yet expired.

Frederick refuſeth to go into Aſia at the Popes bidding: The Pope is angry.

The ſame Farellus alſo writeth thus of King John of Jeruſalem, that when his Daughter was brought to Rome, the Emperor and the Pope were reconciled together. And being called up to Rome to celebrate the Marriage, Pope Gregory (as the manner of thoſe proud Prelates is) offered his right foot unto the Emperor to kiſs. But the Emperor, not ſtooping to low, ſcarcely with his Lip touched the upper part of his knee, and would not kiſs his foot; which thing the Pope took in very evil part, and was therewith marvelouſly offended. But for that no opportunity at that time ſerved to revenge his conceived grudge and old malice, he diſſembled the ſame, as he might for that time, thinking to recompence it at the full, as time would ſerve, and fall out therefore.

The cauſe of the ſtay of the Emperors journey into Aſia.

The Pope diſſembleth his grudge.

After this, it fortuned that the Emperor hearing how the Chriſtians were oppreſſed by the Soldan in Syria, and that from Arſacida, there came a great power againſt the Chriſtian Princes; he made the more haſte, and was with more deſire incouraged to ſet forward his journey into Aſia. Wherefore, aſſembling the Nobility of the Empire at Ravenna and Cremona, he gave in commandment to Henry his Son (whom not long before he cauſed to be created Cæſar) that he ſhould perſwade the Nobles and Princes of the Empire, that they all would be ready to put to their helping hands, in furthering this his journey and enterpriſe. This writeth Farellus; howbeit, ſome others affirm that theſe things were done in the time of Honorius. But howſoever the matter is, this thing is manifeſt; that Frederick to ſatisfie the Popes deſire, which never would lin, but by all means fought to provoke him forward, gave him at length his promiſe, that by a certain time he would prepare an Army, and fight himself against those which kept from him the City of Jerusalem (which thing he also confesseth himself in his Epistles,and also how he desired and obtained of the Peers and Nobility of the Empire, their aid thereunto) and also appointed a convenient time when they should be at Brundusium.

The preparation of the Voyage of Frederick, to Jeruſalem, and ſtay thereof.

The preparation of the Emperors War against the Turk.

In the mean season, he with all his power and indeavour, made speedy and hasty preparation for the Wars: he rigged and manned a puissant Navy; he had the pickedit Men and best Souldiers that were in every Country, and made warlike provision and furniture for every thing that to such a Voyage and Expedition appertained. Neither was the matter flacked, but at the time appointed great Bands assembled and muffled both of German Soldiers and others, and under their Captains appointed, set forth and marched to Brundusium: (Their Generals were Thuringus and Sigibertus, and Augustinus the Bishop) where they long time lying, and attending the Emperors coming, being let by infirmity and sickness, great Pestilence and sundry Diseases molested them, by reason of the great heat and intemperance of that Country; and many a Souldier there lost his life; among whom also died Thuringus, one of their Generals. The Emperor when he had somewhat recovered his health, with all his Navy launched out, and set forward to Brundusium. And when he came to the Straits of Peloponesus and Creta, being Islands lying in the Sea, and there for lack of convenient Wind was stayd, suddenly the Emperor (his Diseases growing upon him again) fell sick; and sending before all or the most part of his Bands and Ships into Palestina, promising them most assuredly to come after and follow them so soon as he might recover and get never so little health; he himself with a few Ships returned and came to Brundusium, and from thence for want of health, went into Apulia.

Great sickness in the Emperors Army.

The Emperor himself sick.

When tydings hereof came to the Popes ear, he fent out his thundring Curses and new Excommunications against the Emperor. The causes whereof I find noted and mentioned by his own Letters, that is, How that when he had robbed and taken from Brundusius, Prince of Thuring, his Horses, his Money and other rich furniture of his house at the time of his death, he failed into Italy; not for the intent to make War against the Turk, but to convey his prey that he had stolen and taken away from Brundusius; and so neglecting his Oath and promise which he had made, and feigning himself to be sick, came home again: And that by his default also, Damiata was lost, and the Hoft of the Christians fore afflicted. Fazellus, besides these causes spoken of before, doth write that the Pope alledged these also; that he defiled a certain Damsel which was in the Queens Nursery; and that he slew his Wife when he had whipped her in the Prison, for declaring the mischievous act to her Father King Johan. But all the Writers, and also Blondus himself doth declare, that this Joel died after the publication of the Profcript and Excommunication; wherefore the Pope could not without great shame allege the cause upon the death of Joel; for undoubtedly the truth is, that the of her Son Conradus died in Childbed. Then Frederick, to refel and avoid the foresaid flanders, sendeth the Bishop of Brundis and other Legates to Rome, whom the Pope would not suffer to come to his presence, neither yet to the Councils of the Cardinals to make his purgation. Wherefore the Emperor, to purge himself of the crimes which the Pope did so falsly accuse him of, both to all Christian Kings, and especially to the Princes of Germany, and all the Nobles of the Empire, writeth his Letters (which are to be seen) that those things are both false and alo fained, and of the Popes own head invented; and sheweth, how that his Embaffadors with his purgation could not be suffered to come to the Popes presence; also doth largely intreat, how unthankful and ungrateful the Bishops of Rome were towards him for the great benefits, which both he and alo his Predecessors had beftowed upon them and the Roman Church: which Letter, for that it is over tedious here to place, confidering the discourse of the History is somewhat long, the sum of the purgation is this:

The Pope excommunicateth the Emperor for staying his Voyage. He layeth false accusations to his charge.

The Emperor purgeth himself of those crimes the Pope laid against him, by his Letters dedicated to all Christian Princes.

He protesteth and declareth universally, that he had always great care for the Christian Commonwealth, and that he had determined even from his youth to fight against the Turk and Saracens. And for that occasion he made a promise to the Princes Electors of Aquisgrane, how that he would take the War upon him. Afterward he renewed his promise at Rome when he was consecrated Honorine; then when he married the Daughter of the King of Jerusalem, which was an Heir of the same. And for because that Kingdom might be defended and kept from the injuries of the enemies, and because he favoured it even as he did his own, he prepared an huge Navy, and gathered together a strong Army of Men, neither did he neglect any thing that belonged to the furniture of the War. But when the time was come, and his Band was gathered together, his sickness would not suffer him to be there. And afterward when he had recovered the same, and came to Brundusium, and from thence without any disturbance went forthwith to Sea, he fell into the same sickness again, by the which he was let of his purpose, which thing (faith he) he is able to prove by sufficient testimony. How the Pope also doth lay the losing of Damiata, and other things which profpered not well with him, unjustly to his charge, when as he had made great provision for the same journey, both of Soldiers and other necessary things. But he that will understand these things more plainly, among other Epistles of Petrus de Vineis, written in the name of Frederick, let him read these especially which begin thus: In administationem, & justiciam, & innocentiam, & Levate oculos. And truly, even as Fredericus the Emperor declareth in his Letters concerning this matter, all the old Writers of Germany do accord and agree in the same.

The Emperor excuseth himself.

Matth. Parisiensis also briefly collecteth the effect of another Letter which he wrote to the King of England, complaining unto him of the Excommunication of the Pope against him, whose words are these: And amongst other Catholick Princes (faith he) he also wrote his Letters unto the King of England, embulled with Gold; Declaring in the same, that the Bishop of Rome was so inflamed with the fire of avarice and manifeft concupiscence, that he was not contented with the Goods of the Church which were immerable, but also that he shamed not to bring Princes, Kings and Emperors to be subjects and contributors to him, and so to disherit them, and put them from their Kingly dignities: And that the King of England himself had good experiment thereof, whose Father (that is to say, King John) they so long held excommunicate, till they had brought both him and his Dominions under servitude, and to pay unto him tribute. Also that many have experience of the same by the Earl of Tholouse and divers other Princes, which so long held their Persons and Lands in interdict, till they might bring them into like servitude. I pretermit (saith he) the Simonies and sundry sorts of exactions (the like whereof was never yet heard) which daily are used amongst the Ecclesiastical persons, besides their manifest Usury (yet so cloaked and coloured to the simple sort, that therewithal they infect the whole world.) They be sugard and embalmed Simonists, the insatiable Horse-leaches or blood-suckers, saying, that of how the Church of Rome is our Mother and Nurse, wherras it is indeed the most polling Cours in the universal World, the root and vigil Mother of all mischief, using and exercising no motherly doings or deeds, but bringing forth the vigil exercises of a wicked Step-dame, making sufficient proof thereof by her manifest fruits to all the world apparent. Let the Barons of England consider whether thse be true or not, whom Pope Innocent by his Bulls with one consent encouraged to rise and rebel against their Sovereign Lord and Prince King John your Father, as an obstinate enemy to the Church of Rome. But after that the King (far out of square) remembring himself had evacuated into him, and obliged both himself and Kingdom to the Church of Rome, more like a Woman than a Man; and that the wise Barons, whom the Pope had first maintained and stirred up, without all shame, either of the World, or fear of God, had done the same, he sought how he might with gaping mouth devour and consume the sweet fat from them, whom he had miserably to death betraied and disherited, as the manner of the Roman Bishops is. By whose greedy avarice it came to pass, that England the Princes of Provences was brought under miserable subjection and tribute. Behold the manners and conditions of our Roman Bishops: behold the snares wherewith these Prelates do seek to intangle men withal, to wipe their noses of their money, to make their children bond-

KING) Hen. 3. Who be the inventing Wolves in sheeps clothing.

bondmen, to disquiet such as seek to live in peace, being clothed with Sheeps clothing, when indeed they be but ravening Wolves, sending their Legates hither and thither to excommunicate and suspend; as having power to punish whom they list, not sowing the Seed, that is the Word of God, to fruktifie, but that they may bribe and poll mens persons, and reap that which they never did sow. Thus cometh it to pass, that they spoil the holy Churches and Houses of God, which should be the refuge for the poor, and the Mansion-Houses of Saints, which our devout and simple Parents to their purpose builded and ordained for the refection of poor Men and Pilgrims, and to the sustentation of such as were well disposed and religious. But these degenerate Varlets, whom only Letters have made both mad and malepert, do thrive and gape to be both Kings and Emperors.

The Treasure of the Church begged to the Pope.

Doubtless the Primitive Church was builded and laid in poverty and simplicity of life, and then as a fruitful mother begat she those her holy Children, whom the catalogue of Saints now maketh mention of; and verily no other foundation can be laid of any other Church, than that which is laid by Jesus Christ. But the Church as it swimmeth and walloweth in all superfluity of riches, and doth build and raise the frame in all superfluous wealth and glory; so is it to be feared lest the Walls thereof fall to decay, and when the Walls be down, utter ruine and subversion follow after. Against us, he knoweth that is the searcher of all hearts, how furiously these Catholicks rage and go to work, saying, and therefore excommunicating me, that I will not take upon me the journey I have promised beyond the Seas, wherein inevitable and most urgent causes and perils, as well to the Church of God, as also to the Empire, besides the annoyance of mine infirmity and sickness, do detain me at home, and stay the same, but specially the insolency of the rebellious Sicilians. For why? neither do we think it safety to our Empire, nor expedient to the Christian State, that we should now take our journey into Asia, leaving behind us at home such instestine and Civil Wars; no more than for a good Surgeon to lay a healing Plaister to a grievous wound new made and stricken with the Sword. In conclusion also that he addeth, admonishing all the Princes of the world, that they would beware and take heed (by their avaricious inquisity) of like peril and danger to themselves, because that, as the Proverb is, It behoveth him to look about, that feeth his neighbours house on fire. Thus much out of Paris. pag. 69.

Christs Church was builded in humility: the Popes Church in all hypocrisy: Rigs, the Popes Church is not Christs Church.

The Emperors Epistle to the Princes and Nobles of Germany.

But now, that Fredericus the Emperor might in very deed stop the mouth of the cruel Pope, which did persist and go forward still in his Excommunication against him: and that he might declare to the whole World, how that the last year he forelowed not his journey by his own voluntary will, but by necessity; when he had devised and prepared all things meet for the War, and that he had gathered together, and levied a great Army of Men, he departed from thence to Brundusium, committing the government of his Kingdom to Reinaldus the Son of Duke Spoletus, and to Anselmus a Baron of Intigensis, and came by Sea to Cyprus with his Hoft.

Another journey of the Emperor to Jerusalem.

From Cyprus the Emperor with his whole Navy, failed into Joppa, which City he fortified, for that the passages by Land were stopped and kept of the enemies; and by Sea he might not pass nor travel, by means of the extream Weather and Tempest; whereby it came to pass, that within short space they lacked Victuals, and were fore afflicted with Famine. Then fell they to prayer, and made their humble supplication to God; with whose tears his wrath being appeased, the great Tempest, and long continued foul Weather ceased, whereby (the Seas being now calm) they had both Victuals great plenty, and all other necessary things for their need brought unto them, whereby immediately it came to pass, that both the Emperor and his Army, as also the Inhabitants of Joppa were greatly refreshed and animated; and on the other side, their enemies being disappointed of their purpose, were greatly discouraged; insomuch that the King of Egypt, who with great power (accompanied with Scarapho his Brother, Prince of Gaza, and the Prince of Damascus their Nephew, with many other Dukes and Nobles) had incamped themselves within one days journey of Joppa, thinking to have besieged the same, were contented upon the coming of the Emperors Heralds unto them, to intreat of a peace. Whereupon Embassadors were sent unto them with the Emperors demands, right profitable to the Christian Commonweal. The Saracens (immediately consulting upon the same) granted thereunto; so that a peace for ten years was concluded, and was confirmed by solemn Oath on the behalf of both Princes, according to their several usages and manner: the form and condition of which Articles of Peace briefly collected, are these:

The Emperor oppressed by Sea and by prayer miraculously relieved.

A conclusion of a profitable peace duretwo years, between the Turke & the Christians.

First, That Frederick the Emperor should be crowned and anointed King of Jerusalem, according to the manner of the Kings of Jerusalem before him.

The Articles of the Peace agreed upon.

Secondly, That all the Lands and Possessions which were situate betwixt Jerusalem and Ptolomaida, and the greatest part of Palestina, and Cities of Tyrus and Sidon, which were in Syria, and all other Territories which Baldwinus the fourth at any time had and did occupy there, should be delivered unto him, only certain Castles reserved.

Thirdly, That he might fortifie and build what Fortresses and Castles, Cities and Towns he thought good in all Syria and Palestina.

Fourthly, That all the Prisoners which were in the Saracens hands, should be ransomed freely and sent home: And again, That the Saracens might have leave without Armour, to come into the Temple where the Lords Sepulcher is, to pray; and that they should hold and keep still Churatum, and the Kings Mount.

The Letters of Frederick to the Princes & Pope of his fact.

Frederick now, for that he thought the conclusion of this peace to be both neceffary, and also profitable for all Christians, and had also gotten as much thereby, as if the Wars had continued, he sound; sent his Legates with Letters unto the West to all Christian Kings, Princes and Potentates, as also to the Bishop of Rome, declaring unto them the circumstance and success of his Journey and Wars, as partly ye have heard; requiring them that they also would praise and give God thanks for his good success and profitable peace concluded: And desireth the Pope, that forsomuch as he had now accomplished his promise, neither was there now any cause wherefore he should be with him displeased, that he might be reconciled and obtain his favour.

The Emperor crowned King of Jerusalem.

In the mean season the Emperor with all his Army marcheth to Jerusalem; where, upon Easter day, in the year one thousand two hundred twenty and nine, he was with great triumph and comfort of all his Nobles, and also of the Magistrates of that Kingdom (only the Patriarch of Cyprus the Kings Legate, and Oliver the Master or Captain of the Temple with his company excepted) solemnly and with great applause crowned King.

After this, he re-edifieth the City and Walls thereof, which by the Saracens were beaten down and battered. After that, he furnisheth it with munition, he buildeth up the Churches and Temples that were ruinous, he fortifieth Nazarethum and Joppen with strong Garisons, Victuals, and all other things neceffary.

Now see and behold I pray you, whilst Frederick was thus occupied in the Kingdom of Jerusalem, what practices the Pope had in Italy: not I warrant you, any whit at all careful in the affairs of the Christian Commonwealth, but studying and labouring what mischief and spight he might work against the Emperor, whom of set purpose he had so occupied (partly for hate, and partly to inrich himself) in Asia and Jerusalem, so far out of Italy ye may be sure. First, he caused the Souldiers, which the Emperor sent for out of Germany to the maintenance of the holy wars, to be staied as they passed through Italy, letting them of their journey, and took from them, and spoiled them of all such provition as they had. And not only this, but he sent secretly alo his Letters into Asia to those that were of his own faction, that is, to the Patriarch of Jerusalem, and Souldiers that kept the Temple and the Hospital, inticing and inciting them to rebel against the Emperor; which thing Blondus himself, that Popish Parasite, or Historiographer, diffembleth or hideth not. But furthermore, he disswaded the Princes of the Saracens, that they should make no League nor take any Truce with Frederick, neither deliver up unto him the Crown and Kingdom of Jerusalem. Which Letters, as they were mani-

And that he kept the ſame Letters for the more credible teſtimony thereof, in the ſame his laſt Epiſtle unto the Chriſtian Princes he proteſteth. The Copy of which Letters amongſt his other Epiſtles you ſhall have expreſſed.

The Emperor vvithſtanderh the ſecret treaſon vvhich the Pope had vvrought againſt him at Jeruſalem.

Neither were the Popes Letters written to that leavened and ſedious Sect in vain; for the Patriarch and his Colleagioners, which took their name of the Temple, did mightily repugne againſt Frederick. They raiſed a Tumult in Ptolomaida againſt him; they accuſed him and his Legates openly of Treaſon, and did malapertly and boldly withſtand the right worthy and good order he made amongſt them. But as God would, by the help of the inhabitants of Piſa and the Genowayes, and the Dutch Soldiers, both their falſe accuſations were refelled, and alſo their ſeditious purpoſe and tumult repreſſed. And this was the cauſe that when all other Men rejoiced and were glad of the Emperors Coronation, they, as wicked confederators, were heavy therefore, and obtrectors of his worthy laud and fame.

The ſecond and manifeſt treaſon of the Pope againſt Frederick;

The Pope, when he had thus conſpired againſt Frederick, and had betrayed him to the publick Enemy of all Chriſtian Men, the Turk, he could not diſſemble this his miſchievous fact, nor content himſelf therewith, but he would deviſe and practice yet another. For, by reaſon of thoſe ſlanders (which a little before I touched) of the death and daughter of his Wife Joel, he incited Johan Brennus his Father-in-law to make War againſt him, who cauſed the Subjects of his Empire to withdraw from him their Allegiance, as alſo the inhabitants of Picenum, and inhabitants of Lombardy. And thus joyning themſelves together, they craved further aid of the French King, whereby they made a great power. That done, they divided their Hoſt in two Armies, invading with the one the Empire, and with the other the proper Territories and Ditions belonging to the inheritance of Frederick; John Brennus and Pandolph Sazzellanus leading the one (as Generals) into Campania and the Kingdom of Naples; and the other (with John Columnus Cardinal, his Legate, and that Thomas before convicted of Treaſon, being his Lieutenant) he ſendeth into Picenum.

Brennus, Pandolphus Johannes Columnus, & Thomas the Traitor, the Popes Generals and Leaders of his Hoſt.

Of this Treaſon of the Pope againſt Frederick doth alſo Matthæus Pariſienſis make mention, during his Wars in Aſia, who (faith he) purpoſed to have depoſed him, and to have placed Alium quemlibet filium pacis & obedientiæ loco ejus ſubrogare; That is, any other, he cared not whom (ſo that he were the child of peace and obedience) in his ſtead. And for the more certainty thereof, the ſaid Matth. Pariſienſis, pag. 71. repeateth the Letter which a certain Earl of Syria wrote unto him concerning the ſame, which Letter hereunder enſueth word for word.

TO the High and Mighty Prince, Frederick, by the grace of God Emperor of Rome, and ever Auguſtus, and moſt puiſſant King of Sicilia, Thomas Earl of Acharn, his faithful and truſty Subject in all things, humble ſalutation. After your departure, moſt excellent Prince, Gregory the Biſhop of Rome, and publick enemy to your magnificence, gathering together a great power and Hoſt of Men by Johannes Brennus, late King of Jeruſalem, and other ſtout Captains, whom he hath made Generals of the ſame his Hoſt, as a foreign enemy invading your Dominions and Poſſeſſions of your Highneſs Subjects, againſt the Law of Chriſtianity, hath purpoſed and determined to vanquiſh and ſubdue you with the material or temporal Sword, whom he cannot maſter and overcome with the ſpiritual Sword of faith. For the foreſaid John Brennus gathering out of France, and other Provinces near adjoyning, a great Army, giveth unto them of the Treaſure he hath gotten together (by what means I cannot tell) great Wages, in hope to recover and get from you the Empire. And furthermore, the ſame John and others (the Captains of the See Apoſtolical) invading your Land, burn and deſtroy all as they go, driving away, and taking for their booties, all that they can come by, as well Cattel as other things, and ſuch as they take priſoners, they conſtrain, by afflicting them with grievous puniſhments, to ranſom themſelves for great Summs of Mony: neither ſpare Man, Woman nor Child, but take and keep your Towns and Caſtles, hasting no regard that you be in the ſervice of Jeſus Chriſt. And further, if any make mention of your Majeſty unto him, he ſaith, there is none other Emperor but himſelf. Your friends and ſubjects, moſt excellent Prince, much marvel hereupon; yea, and alſo the Clergy themſelves of the Empire, do marvel with what Conſcience, or upon what conſideration the Biſhop of Rome can do the ſame, making ſuch bloudy Wars and ſlaughter upon Chriſtian men; eſpecially ſeeing that Chriſt commanded Peter, when he ſtrook with the material Sword, to put up the ſame into the Scabbard, ſaying; All that ſtrike with the Sword, ſhall periſh with the Sword. Or elſe, by what Law he daily can excommunicate ſuch Pirats, burners of Mens Houſes, and Robbers, when he is the patron and maintainer of ſuch himſelf: hereat they greatly muſe and marvel. Wherefore moſt mighty and renowned Emperor, I beſeech your Highneſs to conſider your own ſafety, for that the ſaid John Brennus hath laid and fortified all the Ports and Havens with no ſmall company of Men and Souldiers; that if (not knowing thereof) your Grace ſhould arrive in any of them, the ſame Garriſons of his may apprehend and take you as a Priſoner, which thing to chance God forefend.

Thus whilſt the Hoſt of this Hoſtile enemy the Pope was incamped in the Dominions of Frederick, he received the Letters which Frederick by his Legates ſent into Europa, as you heard, whereby he underſtood the good ſucceſs he had in Aſia (who not only took no delectation at all therein, but was alſo in a vehement perturbation therewith. Whereby manifeſtly it may appear, what was the cauſe and meaning of the Pope, that he was ſo ſollicitous and urgent to have Frederick the Emperor make a Voyage into Aſia. Doubtleſs even the ſame that Pelias had, when by his inſtigation, he procured Jaſon, with all the choſen youth and flower of Grecia, to fail into Colchus to fetch away the golden Fleece; and that by the opportunity of his abſence he might uſe, or rather abuſe his power and tyranny; and that Frederick might either be long afflicted and molteſted in the Aſian War, or that he might periſh and loſe his life therein, was that he fought, and all that he deſired.

What treaſon the Pope had to bring Frederick to ruin in light againſt the Turk.

And when he ſaw, that Fortune neither favoured his feteches, nor ſerved to his longing luſt, he was as a Man bereft of his wits, ſpecially at theſe tidings of the proſperous ſucceſs of the Emperor. He tore and threw all his Letters on the ground, and with all opprobrious words rebuked and reviled the Legates for the Emperor their Maſters fake; which thing alſo Blondus himſelf denieth not, though he write altogether in favour of the Pope. And to the intent that he might cover this his rage, and unbridled fury with ſome cloak and colour of juſt deſerved dolor, he fained himſelf therefore ſo much to miſlike therewith, as though the Emperor therein had only reſpected his own private commodity, not regarding the utility of the Chriſtians; for that the Saracens had licence (although without armour and weapon to have repared unto the Sepulchre of Chriſt, and had left for them ſomewhat near the ſame as Hoſtery or lodging place; for which occaſion (ſaith Blondus) his Lord Pope rebuked the Emperors Legates, by the name of Traitors and ſuch like other opprobrious words. Now go to, friend Blondus, by what ſtrong arguments prove you unto your Lord Pope, either that the peace which the Emperor hath concluded, was againſt the Chriſtian Common-wealth, or that the Emperor was a Traitor? But who is it that ſeeth not theſe things either by reading of old and ancient Writers, or elſe partly by me that have gathered and collected the ſame out of divers Monuments and Hiſtories, and plainly perceiveth not the conſpiracies and treaſons of your good Lord the Pope, ſo notable and filthy, as alſo his manifeſt ſhame and infamy? What? there be divers that write how the Pope commanded theſe Legates of Frederick to be made ſecretly out of the way, and alſo how he commanded divers Soldiers, returning out of Aſia, to be ſlain, to the end that none ſhould hear the report of thoſe good News which were in Aſia, nor any go thither to tell the fetches he had in hand at home. But I will make report of no more than of thoſe thing which all the Writers with moſt conſent agree upon. This is moſt certain, that that the Pope cauſed this rumour to be ſpread of the death and taking of the Emperor upon this conſideration, that he might allure unto him the fidelity of theſe Cities in the Kingdom of Naples, which yet kept their Allegiance unto Frederick, of whom they ſhould now hope for no longer refuge. And of that doth the Emperor, in his Epiſtle Intituled Leonis agnus, greatly againſt him complain.

The third practice of Pope Gregory againſt the Emperor.

Great are theſe injuries of the Pope againſt Frederick, and moſt wicked Treaſons. But herewith could not the cruel and tyrannical mind of him be contented, nor his luſt ſatisfied, but it ſo far exceeded, as ſcarce is credible that it could: for he preſumed not only to ſet variance between Henry (whom Frederick his Father had cauſed to be made King of Germany) and him, but alſo by his allurements, he cauſed him to become an enemy unto him.

The Pope ſetteth the Son againſt the Father, yea good father of peace.

To whom when his Father had affigned the Duke of Bouria (named Ludovicus) to be his Overſeer and Counſellor; neither knew he amongſt all the Princes of Germany, a Man more faithful to him in his office and duty, or elſe more vertuous, or elſe more grave and apt to be in authority: Henry fearing leſt he ſhould underſtand and know of theſe ſecret counſels, which he with his Conſpirators had in hand againſt his Father, or that he ſhould utter the ſame unto him, or that he ſhould go about to diſwade him from that he was purpoſed to do by authority of the Court and Senate of Rome, he put him out of Office. And this was the fetch of all their policy, that together and at one inſtant (but in divers and ſundry places far one from another) ſharp and cruel War might be made againſt the Emperor, ſo that, his power being diſtract to the appeaſing of variable contention, he might himſelf be the eaſier oppreſſed of a few.

Henry Coſer at the Popes inſtitement, purſueth from him his truſty Counſellor Ludovicus.

The Emperor hearing of the Popes practiſes, returneth ſecretly out of Aſia.

When the Emperor now underſtood what ſtir the Pope kept in all his dominions in his abſence, and when he had ſomewhat reformed and appeaſed the troubles which he ſecretly had wrought him in the Kingdom of Jeruſalem, thinking to prevent the Popes purpoſe in that he went about, and alſo to confirm the friendſhip towards him of them whom in his abſence he found his truſty Subjects: he left in Aſia Renaldus with his Garriſons, commanding all the other bands to be under his appointment; and with all ſpeed he came forth in certain Gallies to Calabria. During the time of his there being, which unlooked for came thither, he aſſembled his power, and made with his friends all the ſpeedy preparation that he might. From thence he went to Barlet, where he tarried twenty days, to whom came the Duke of Spoletanum with all his Garriſons; and ſo from thence with all his power he came into Apulia, and removed John Brennus his Father-in-law from the Siege of Calatia, and within ſhort time by Gods help recovereth again all his Holds and Dominions there. And from thence going into Campania, he winneth Beneventum, and ſo many othere Towns and Holds as the Pope had there, even almoſt to Rome, and ſo after that Umbria and Picena. And now although the Emperor (being moved thereunto upon good occaſion, and upon the Popes worthy deſert) had gotten and recovered this ſo likely an entrance upon the Popes Dominions, whereby he might have revenged him of all the injuries done to him: yet notwithſtanding, for that he preferred nothing before the Chriſtian and publick tranquility (for the love of which he refraining his wrath ſo vehemently urged and kindled) he ſendeth unto him his Legates to intreat a peace, declaring unto him, that if no other conceived grudge towards him were than that he diſſembled and pretended, he promiſeth that he would make to him an account voluntarily, of all things that ever he had done in his life, and that he would and was contented to ſubmit himſelf unto the Church; and alſo that for this cauſe he willingly offered unto him both duty and obſervance. Furthermore, to the intreating of this peace, and deciding of all controverſies, he ſent to the Pope eight or ten of the nobleſt and chiefeſt about him that were Princes and Dukes of the Empire; as Bartholdus the Patriarch of Aquileia, and his Brother Otho Prince of Dalmatia and Hiſtria, Eberhardus, Iwanenſis, Sigifridus, Regimburgenſis, Sibbotus, Auguſtanus a worthy Prelat, Leopoldus of Auſtria and Styria, and Bernhardus, being all Dukes; beſides others of the Nobility to accompany them.

John Brennus removed from the Siege of Calatia.

God proſpereth Frederick in all his affairs.

Frederick preſenteth for the Popes favour, although he have no need.

Blondus reproved, that wrote ſo greatly in the Popes favour.

But yet ſo great was the inſolency and pride of the ſtubborn Pope, that by no gentleneſs or beneficence he could of thoſe Princes be brought that year to the profitable concord of the Church and Chriſtian Commonweal. O worthy head, that challengeth all authority to himſelf in the Church of Chriſt, and in reſpect of his own wilful revenge, ſetteth nothing by the health and utility of all Chriſtendom! Then therefore, when nothing could be done in the matter, and the moſt part of theſe Noblemen departed from Rome, the next year after (with much ado) a peace was made and concluded them, by the help and industry of Leopaldus of Auſtria, Hermannus Captain of the Dutch Souldiers, and the Preſident of Meſſania. The Pope then abſolving the Emperor Fredericus of his Excommunication, took therefore of him 120000 ounces of Gold, reſtoring unto him again the Titles both of his Empire, and alſo of his Kingdoms. Now conſidering the uncourteous dealing of the Pope with Frederick the Emperor herein, who can ſufficiently muſe and marvel at the unſhamefulneſs of Blondus, which hath the face to write, that the Poe (yet notwithſtanding) had dealt more gently and courteouſly with Frederick than was meet, or beſeemed him to do? Who is it that doth not ſee his manifeſt flattery, coloured neither with reaſon nor ſecret diſſimulation? But much more truly and better writeth Cuſpinianus concerning this matter, which ſaith, that the Pope doth occupy very profitable Merchandize, which for ſo much mony ſelleth that he received freely paying nothing therefore, if he had received it of Chriſt indeed, as he faith he had.

The grace of the Emperors abſolution.

Unſhameful Blondus.

Cuſpinianus greatly pleads with the Pope.

And yet although the Emperor Frederick concluded with the Pope this unprofitable peace for himſelf, yet he performed thoſe things that were agreed upon faithfully and diligently. But the Pope which thought it but a triffle to break his promiſe, would not ſtand to the conditions of that peace he made. For by the way, to paſs over other things, neither had he reſtored, as he promiſed, the Cuſtoms of the Land of Sicily, neither yet the City Caſtellana, which he before the peace concluded between them, did occupy and enjoy. And that do both Frederick in his Epiſtles teſtifie, and alſo Ezzelius in his eighth Book, writing of the affairs of Sicilia. Yet notwithſtanding Frederick, for the quieteſt and utility of the Commonwealth, purpoſed with himſelf to bear and ſuffer theſe ſmall injuries, and further ſtudied in all that he might, as well by liberal gifts as otherwiſe, to have the Pope to be to him a truſty friend. As when the Romans and others of the Eccleſiaſtical number made War againſt the Pope for certain poſſeſſions which he kept of theirs, he coming to him at Reat, and as one that tendered the unity of the Church, and thinking to help the Pope at his earneſt requeſt in theſe matters, ſent his Legates unto them, willing them to lay down their armour which againſt the Pope they bare. And when that would not ſerve, at the Popes further requeſt and deſire, he levied an Army againſt them at his own charge, and drave them from the Siege of Viterbium; with other ſuch like affired tokens of amity and friendſhip which he ſhewed him. Who notwithſtanding, ſo ſoon as the Emperor was departed with a ſmall company which he took with him into Sicilia, leaving with him the greater and moſt part of his Army for the maintenance of his Wars, concluded a peace with the Romans (unknown to the Emperor) whom he had procured to travel and labour therein with great expences; affirming, that without his will and commandment, the Emperor had expelled them, and driven them out of the Territories of Viterbium. And hereof doth Frederick alſo himſelf make mention in his ſecond and third Epiſtle, where he complaineth of the injuries of the Pope towards him.

What bene-ficence the Emperor uſeth to have the Popes friendſhip, which he ſhall never get.

A wrell ſet compoſed good turn of the Pope to the Emperor.

Therefore greater commendation had Blondus deſerved, if he had written of theſe treacheries of the Pope, than forgetting himſelf (as unto liers often it chanceth) in writing both contrary to himſelf in the effect of this matter, and contrary to the verity of Fredericus his ſtory; which ſaith, that the Romans were incited to theſe new tumults by his inticing and ſetting on. As though ſimple men of underſtanding could not both by the offering of his Son in Hoſtage, by the great preparation of the Wars, and by the event ſpecially of the thing it ſelf, gather the contrary. But too too impudent will Blondus needs ſhew himſelf.

Blondus ſtaineth his own writ with untruth.

Whilſt

The Emperours Sons no longer fauored, make manifeſt rebellion againſt their Father.

Whilſt that theſe things were done in Italy and Sicilia, great rebellions were moved in Germany againſt the Emperor by Henricus Ceſar, and Frederick of Auſtria, his Sons being the chief Authors thereof. For Henry being diſappointed and ſhaken off from his Lord Pope, and other Conſpirators, by reaſon of the peace between his Father and him (as ye heard) began now to make open challenge to the Empire. And for that cauſe he (as before is ſaid) put from him Ludovicus, whom he knew to be unto the Emperor his Father ſo loving and affured a friend; who as willingly (perceiving and ſmelling what miſchief he went about) forſook his Court, and came to Boioria; who had not there remained a year, but was, as he walked abroad at a certain time, ſtabbed in with a Dagger of one Kelbemiter, and preſently died, his ſervants not being far from him, of whoſe death divers diverſly write. Notwithſtanding the ſequel doth ſhew them to write trulieſt, that affirm the ſaid ſtriker to be ſuborned by Henry Ceſar; who coming unto him in the habit of a Meſſenger, delivered unto him certain Letters, which he ſained to be ſent from the Emperor; And whileſt Ludovicus was in reading the ſame, he ſtrake him in with a Dagger, and gave him his mortal wound, and with ſpeed fled upon the ſame. After whoſe death ſucceeded in that Dukedom his Son Otho, who when ſolemnly according to the manner of the Boiores he ſhould have been created, was alſo let by the ſame Henry Ceſar; who forbad the Aſſembly of the Magiſtrates and Citizens the ſame. They notwithſtanding, neglecting his unjuſt reſtraint, created him; wherefore he firſt beſieged Reginoburgh, and with another company facked, burnt, and waſted Boioria; with many more ſuch great outrages and rebellions.

A wicked regather by Henry Ceſar, for great and faithful ſervice.

The outrage of Henry Ceſar againſt the Emperor his Father.

When intelligence was brought of theſe things to the Emperor, he ſent his Legates, and commanded that both the Ceſar his Son, and other Princes of Germany, which had aſſembled their Armies, ſhould break up and diſperſe the ſame. And becauſe he ſaw and perceived now manifeſtly that his Son made ſo apparent rebellion againſt him, and fearing greater inſurrections to inſue in Germany, he thought good to prevent the ſame with all expedition. Wherefore he determined to go in all haſte to Germany with his Army, from whence he had now been abſent fourteen years, and hereunto he maketh the Pope privy. The Pope promiſed the Emperor hereupon, that he would write his Letters in his behalf to all the Princes of Germany, but perſwaded him to do the uttermoſt of his power, that he ſhould in no caſe go into Germany himſelf. For why? his conficient accuſed him that he had written to the Nobles in Germany, even from the beginning of his Papacy (for the hate and grudg he had againſt the Emperor) that they ſhould not ſuffer him, nor any of his heirs to enjoy the Empire; and further, had ſtirred them all up to rebel againſt him; and had moved Henry the Emperors Son, by his bribes and fair promiſes to conſpire againſt his Father. And to conclude, he was the Author and procurer of the Conſpiracy which the Lombards made then againſt him; and fearing leſt theſe things ſhould come now to the Emperors ear, he was greatly troubled and careful, But the Emperor not thinking it good at ſo needful a time to be abſent, he (all doubt ſet apart) with his ſecond Son Conradus, went ſpeedily into Germany. And aſſembling there a Council in the City of Nurenburgh, Henry Ceſar his Son after his Conſpiracy was manifeſtly detected, which he had in practice with the Longobards (whereof the Pope was chief Author) was by judgment and ſentence of ſeventy Princes condemned of High Treaſon: And being commanded by his Father to be bound, was as priſoner brought to Apulia, where not long after in priſon he died. In whoſe ſtead he ordained Conradus his ſecond Son Ceſar, by conſent of all the Peers and Princes. Furthermore, by publick commandment he renounced Frederick Auſtriacus for his Son, and he cauſed him to be proclaimed an enemy to the publick weal. And further, when he ſaw that neither that puniſhment could cauſe him to remember himſelf, and acknowledg his abuſe, the Emperor with a great Army (accompanied with divers of the Nobleſmen of Germany) took from him all Auſtria and Styria, and brought them again under his own obedience and fidelity.

He Emperor 14 years out of Germany.

The Pope feareth that his treaſon ſhould be eſpied by the Emperor going into Germany.

Henry Ceſar condemned of treaſon, and dieth in priſon.

Frederick Auſtriacus proclaimed an open enemy to his Father, and diſheirited.

The Emperor marrieth King John's Daughter of England.

The ſame year married he with his third Wife named Iſabel, the Daughter of King John of England. Then when he had ſet Germany in a ſtay and quietneſs, he left there Conradus Ceſar his Son; and with his Hoſt returneth again into Italy, there to puniſh ſuch as had with Henry his Eldeſt Son conſpired againſt him; whoſe Treaſons were all detected at the condemnation of Henry Ceſar his Son, chiefly ſet on by the Pope. When the Pope had underſtanding that the Emperor with Warlike Furniture marched toward Italy; although he fained himſelf reconciled, and to be a friend to Frederick, yet was he notwithſtanding to him a moſt ſecret and inteſtine enemy. And underſtanding that he brought with him ſuch a power both of Horſemen and Footmen, to do execution of ſuch as he underſtood to be Conſpirators againſt him in the late tumult and rebellion; thoſe which were faulty herein and guilty (and all other that took their parts) he admoniſhed to joyn themſelves together, and that they ſhould furniſh ſtrongly their Cities with Garriſons, that they ſhould fend for aid to their friends, and that with all the force they were able, they ſhould prepare them for the war. The reſt of the Cities alſo in Italy, whether they were the Emperors or his own, he endeavoureth to make them all his, and proper to himſelf.

{KING Hen. 3.}

The Pope admoniſheth his friends to play his part.

Furthermore, unto the Emperor he ſendeth his Ambaſſadors; to whom, under the pretence of nourriſhing a peace, he had given a ſecret commandment that they ſhould Interdict him and his Hoſt, ſo ſoon as he came within the borders of Italy. To the preſervation of which peace, ſaith he, he had (but late ſince) promulgate a Subſidy to be gathered amongſt the Civitians, when he began the Holy War. And alſo to ſay (not by way of intreaty, but commandingly) that what cauſe of controverſie he had with the Longobards, the ſame he ſhould commit to him, and ſtand to his arbitrement. Whereunto the Emperor replying maketh his Legate this anſwer:

The Popes Ambaſſage to the Emperor.

Shortly after, ſaith he, the peace was made between the Pope and me, he called me for a chief defence both of the Church and himſelf, againſt the Romans which made war with him; and at his requeſt, with mine own proper charge I maintained that his War, and gave his enemies the overthrow. And further ſaid, that he ſhould not do well, through the pretence of peace, to be a let to him from that which both by Law and right he might and ought to do; but rather he ought to diſpoſe himſelf, with force to reſtrain and expell them, which gathered them together as rebels, thinking to exclude themſelves from the ſubjection both of him and the Empire; and that ſuch rebels as both had reſtrained the Souldiers which the Emperor ſent for when he was in Aſia, and divers others alſo (which for neceſſary cauſes he had called to him) which they had ſo wickedly dealt with and abuſed, he (as they had deſerved) ſhould rather deſire to ſee puniſhed and reformed, than to maintain them (under colour of peace) being ſo wicked and manifeſt evil doers. And touching that he demandeth of him, that he ſhould commit and defer ſo great a cauſe, wherein the wealth and ſafety of the Empire conſiſteth, to his arbitrement, by him to be determined, without either affignment of any time when, or adding thereunto any condition or exception for not doing the ſame, neither the diminiſhing and impairing the Dignity and Regality of his Empire conſidered, he could not but marvel; ſeeing that neither it appertained to his calling and faculty, nor to the benefit or commodity of the Empire. To this effect alſo writeth Frederick in his laſt Epiſtle unto the Pope: the effect whereof amongſt other Epiſtles you may read.

The Emperor ſeeketh to break the peace of but concluded.

The Emperor ſent unto the Pope.

And in the ſame his Letters he ſheweth that when the Emperor at a certain time had been with the Pope, at his going away he requeſted, that when he came again, he would come into Italy but with his houſhold-band and family; for that if he ſhould come as before he did accuſtom with his Army, he ſhould terrifie them over-much; amongſt whom (ſaith he) you may aſſure your ſelf to be in great ſafety, and find all things in reſt and quiet; when quite contrary (as the Emperor for a certainty had tried) he had there all things ready and prepared for his deſtruction; ſo that when he pretended unto him greateſt friendſhip, he was buſieſt in conſpiring his death. The certain time when the Pope had this exerciſe in hand againſt the Emperor, I cannot ſearch out, neither may it be in his Epiſtles undated eaſily found out; but that of the certainty thereof no man need to doubt, I have aſſigned you to the Empe-

Emperors Epiſtle, where he maketh mention of the ſame.

The Emperor marcheth into Italy, notwithſtanding the Popes forbidding.

The Emperor ſent for by the Romans.

The Pope ſendeth to Gallion to ſeal the Coaſts of the Emperors.

A ſecret Conſpiracy of the Pope againſt the Emperor.

The Popes Edict againſt the Emperor.

Afrendit de mari bellica beſtia.

The Emperor then as he had determined, proſecuted his purpoſe, and marcheth into Italy, where he brought under his ſubjection thoſe Cities that againſt him rebelled, as Mantua, Verona, Terniſium, Patavium, and others. And then he afterward ſet upon the great Hoſt of the Mediolanenſes, the Brixians, the Placentines, and other Confederators, unto whom the Popes Legate Georgius Longomontanus had joyned himſelf, of whom he took one thouſand priſoners, and alſo their General, being the chief Magiſtrate in the City of Mediolanum, and Petrus Tenopolus the Dukes Son of Venice, and ſlew divers Captains more, and took all their Enſigns. And in this Battel, eſpecially at the recovering of Marchie and Terniſſana, he uſed the friendly aid of Aſtiolimes.

The Pope now ſomewhat diſmaid at this overthrow of his Confederates and Mates (though not much) began yet ſomewhat to fear the Emperor; and whereas before, that which he did he wrought ſecretly and by others, now he goeth to work with might and main to ſubdue and deprive the Emperor. And although the Emperor ſaw and perceived what inward hate and mortal malice he bare towards him, not only by that he ſo apertly ſtood with his Conſpirators againſt him, but alſo that on every ſide he heard, and from all parts was brought him certain word how greatly he laboured againſt him, as with opprobrious words, naughty reports and ſlanders, to the intent to pull from him the hearts and fidelity of his ſubjects, and make thoſe that were his friends his enemies, neither that he meant at any time to take up and ceaſe from ſuch evil and wicked practices; yet notwithſtanding, for that there ſhould be no default in him found for the breach of the league and peace between them a little before concluded, he ſendeth four Legates to the Biſhop of Rome, which ſhould anſwer unto and refute thoſe criminous objections which he laid unto him, as alſo make him privy unto his purpoſe, and what he meant to do, thereby to declare his innocency towards him (in ſuch cauſes) and ſimplicity.

The Emperor ſent unto the Pope.

The Pope refuſeth to ſpeak with the Emperors Legate.

The Biſhop when he underſtood theſe Ambaſſadors to be not far off from Rome, and knew the cauſe of their coming, he thought with himſelf that in hearing the excuſe and reaſonable anſwer of the Emperor, perhaps he might be provoked to deſiſt from his purpoſe, and ſo degenerate from others of his Predeceſſors, he refuſeth to ſpeak with them, and at the day appointed pronounceth the ſentence of Proſcription againſt him, depriving him of all his Dignities, Honours, Titles, Prerogatives, Kingdoms, and whole Empire. And that he had no occaſion hereunto, as well Panduljphus and Colonucius, as the Letters of the Emperor himſelf, do both right well declare. For it may appear he dedicated as it were himſelf to his utter ruin and deſtruction, when he did ſolicite againſt Fredericus, Jacobus Tenopolus the Venetian Duke, whom for the diſpleaſure he took with the Emperor in the impriſoning of his Son, he was in good hope he ſhould allure unto him, he being in ſo troublous time ſuch a comforter and aider unto him, that as Blondus writeth, in a certain Epiſtle Gratulatory, he calleth him Lord of the fourth part of Croatia and Dalmatia, and Lord of half of the Roman Empire. And calling unto him the Venetian and Genouatian Legates, he made a peace betwixt them (which for certain cauſes about their Sea-coaſts were at variance) and Covenanted with them upon this condition, that at their publick charges they ſhould rig and man five and thirty Galles, which ſhould ſpoil and burn all alongſt the Sea-coaſts of the Kingdoms and Dominions of Frederick.

The new ſentence of proſcription againſt the Emperor.

The Pope wageth and hireth 30 Gallies to ſpoil the Coaſts of the Emperors.

But the Pope when he ſaw the good will and fidelity which the Duke of Venice bare unto the Emperor, and ſaw alſo what aid the Emperor had of him, neither that he was like to win him to his purpoſe; then had he recourſe again to his old crafty practices and ſubtilities. And further, he deviſed to put forth an Edict at Rome to the Univerſal Church and people, the beginning whereof is, Afcendit de mari bellica beſtia; wherein he declareth the cauſes wherefore he curſeth and giveth the Emperor to the Devil of Hell, and hath dejected him from all his Princely dignity. He in the ſame accuſeth him of ſo many and ſo huge a heap of miſchiefs, as to nominate them my heart deteſteth. And beſides that he reſtraineth his Soveraign Lord and Emperor of the Appellation, which every private man by law may have. He ſlandereth him of Treaſon, Perjury, Cruelty, Sacrileg, killing of his Kindred, and all impiety; he accuſeth him for an Heretick, a Schiſmatick and a Miſcreant: and to be brief, what miſchief ſoever the Pope can deviſe, with that doth he charge him and burthen him. All this doth he, faith the Pope, that when he hath brought our Holineſs and all the Eccleſiaſtical eſtate to beggery, he might ſcoff at, and deride the Religion of Chriſt, which as a miſcreant he deteſteth. And now for that the Pope had a great and peciall truſt in Albertus Behavus of the noble houſe called Equeſtri (as crafty an Apoſtle as the beſt) as one whom he ſaw ready to lean to his luſt; to him the Pope delivered two other Mandates in ſeveral Letters ſealed, in which he commanded all Biſhops, Prelates, and other of the Clergy, that they ſhould ſolemnly recite the ſame in their Churches inſtead of their Sermon, that by his Decree he had Excommunicated Frederick out of the fellowſhip of Chriſtian men, put him from the procuration or Government of the Empire, and that he had releaſed all his ſubjects of their Allegiance and fidelity towards him. And furthermore chargeth them, and all other Chriſtian men, under pain of curſing and damnation, that neither they ſuccour the Emperor, nor yet ſo much as with him well. Thus he being the Popes ſpecial and truſty Servitor, and made to his hand, cauſed a moſt horrible confuſion and chaos of publick unquietneſs, as ſhall after appear.

Albertus Behavus the Popes one friend.

The Pope threatneth to curſe all thoſe that ſtick with verſit to the Emperor.

Amongſt all other Noblemen of Germany at that time, was Otho the Governour of Rhenus, and Duke of Boiore, towards the Emperor both moſt ſerviceable, and alſo a Prince of great honour, riches, and eſtimation. This Otho with divers other Princes of Germany, by the Popes means, do forſake the Emperor.

Otho with divers other Princes of Germany, by the Popes means, do forſake the Emperor.

Otho was by the Emperor thurthered and ſlain. And the ſame Otho again cauſed three other Princes and Dukes to revolt from the Emperor to the Pope, which were neighbours, and near adjoyning unto him, Uvenceſlaus, and Belus, Princes of the Hungarians, and Henry Duke of Polonia. To whom came alſo Fredericus Auſtriacus his Son; who becauſe he was proſcript or out-lawed of his Father, and had his Dukedom waited and burnt, as you heard, was eaſily won unto the Pope. Theſe gathering a Council (when they had thought to have tranſlated the Empire unto the Kings Son of Denmark) delired to have the Popes Legates to be ſent from him, to the effect of that Election.

The Emperor was at Patavium when theſe news were brought unto him, what the Pope had done at Rome. Therefore he commanded Peter de Vineis his Secretary (upon Eaſter-day) to make a Narration to the people of his great and liberal munificence to the Biſhops and Church of Rome, and againſt, of the injuries of them toward him in recompence thereof; of his innocency alſo in that whereof he had accuſed him, and of the unſeemlineſs of ſuch an act or deed, of the right uſe of the Eccleſiaſtical cenſure, and of the errors and abuſe of the Church of Rome. By which Oration of his, he ſo removed the cloud from many mens hearts of blind ſuperſtition, and the conceived opinion of holineſs of the Church of Rome, and Biſhops of the ſame, and alſo of their uſurped power, and the fabull perſwaſion, that both they plainly ſaw and perceived the vices and filthineſs of the Church of Rome, and Biſhops of that See, as alſo their fraudulent deceits, and flagitious doings, moſt vehemently lamenting and complaining of the ſame. Albertus maketh mention of certain verſes which were ſent and written between the Biſhop of Rome and the Emperor. The which verſes in the later end of this preſent Hiſtory of Frederick you ſhall find.

What great good the Oration of Peter de Vineis did in the Emperors behalf.

The Emperor moreover both by his Letters and Legates, giveth intelligence unto all Chriſtian Kings, to the Princes of his own Empire, to the Colledg of Cardinals, and people of Rome; as well of the ſained crimes wherewith he was charged, as alſo of the cruelty of the Biſhop of Rome againſt him. The Copy of which Letter or Epiſtle follows here under inſerted.

The Emperor to the Prelates of the World.

The Emperors Letter to all Prelates to abide the Pope and refrain him of his will.

IN the beginning and creation of the World, the ineffable foreknowledg and providence of God (who ask-eth counsel of none) created in the Firmament of Heaven two Lights (a greater and a leſs) the greater he created to govern the Day, and the leſs to govern the Night: which two ſo do their proper offices and duties in the Zodiack, that although oftentimes the one be in an oblique aſpect unto the other, yet the one is not enemy to the other; but rather the other, yet the one is not enemy to the other; but rather doth the Superior communicate his light with the inferior. Even ſo the ſame eternal foreknowledg hath appointed upon the earth two Regiments, that is to ſay, Prieſthood and Kingly power; the one for knowledg and wiſdom, the other for defence; that man which is made of two parts (over-wanton and diſſolute) might have two reins to govern and bridle him withal, that peace thereby, and love might dwell upon the face of the earth. But alas, the Biſhop of Rome ſitting in the Chair of perverſe Doctrine or peſtilence, that Phariſee anointed with the oyl of iniquity above the reſt of his conſorts in this our time, which for his abominable pride is fallen from Heaven, endeavoureth with his power to deſtroy and undo all, and thinketh (I believe) to ſtabliſhe again himſelf there, from whence he fell. His purpoſe is to darken and to ſhadow the light of our unſpotted life, whilſt that (altering the verity into lies) his Papal Letters, ſtuft with all untruths, are ſent into ſundry parts of the world; of his own corrupt humor, and upon no reaſonable cauſe, blemiſhing the ſincerity of our Religion. The Lord Pope hath compared us unto the Beaſt riſing out of the Sea, full of names of blaſphemy, and ſpotted like a Leopard. But we ſay, that he is that monſtrous Beaſt of whom it is ſaid, and of whom we thus read: And there ſhall come another red horſe out of the Sea, and he that ſhall ſit on him ſhall take peace away out of the earth: let them therefore that dwell upon the earth deſtroy him. For ſince the time of his promotion he hath not been the father of mercy, but of diſcord; a diligent ſteward of deſolation, inſtead of conſolation, and hath inticed all the world to commit offence. And to take the words in right ſenſe and interpretation, he is that great Dragon that hath deceived the whole world; he is that Antichriſt, of whom he hath called us the forerunner; he is that other Balaam hired for money to curſe us; the Prince of darkneſs, which hath abuſed the Prophets. This is the Angel leaping out of the Sea, having his Vials filled with bitterneſs, that he may bath hurt the Sea and the Land; the counterfeit Vicar of Chriſt, that ſitteth forth his own imaginations. He ſaith that we do not rightly believe in the Chriſtian faith, and that the world is deceived with three manner of deceivers, which to name, God forbid we ſhould open our mouth; ſeeing that openly we confeſs only Jeſus Chriſt our Lord and Saviour to be the everlaſting Son of God, coequal with his Father and the Holy Ghoſt, begotten before all worlds, and in proceſs of time ſent down upon the earth for the ſalvation of mankind; conceived, not by the ſeed of man, but by the Holy Ghoſt; which was born of the Glorious Virgin Mary, and after that ſuffered and died, as touching the fleſh; and by his Godhead the third day he raiſed from death that other nature which he aſſumed in the womb of his mother. But we have learned that the body of Mahomet hangeth in the air, and his ſoul is buried in Hell: whoſe works are damnable and contrary to the Laws of the moſt High. We affirm alſo, that Moſes was the faithful ſervant of God, and a true Teacher of the Law; and that he talked with God in mount Sinai, unto whom the Lord ſaid, Rubum, &c. By whom alſo God wrought miracles in Egypt, and delivered the Law written to the Iſraelites, and that afterwards with the Elect he was called to Glory. In theſe and other things our enemy and envier of our ſtate, cauſing our Mother the Church to accuſe her Son, hath written againſt us venemous and lying ſlanders, and ſent the ſame to the whole world. If he had rightly underſtood the Apoſtles meaning, he would not have preferred his violent will, which bereeth ſuch away with him, before reaſon; neither would he have ſent out his Mandates to the ſuggeſtion of thoſe which call light darkneſs, and evil good; which ſuſpect honey to be gall, for the great good opinion they had conceived of that holy place, which indeed is both weak and infirm, and conver-teth all truth into falſhood, and affirmeth that to be which {KING Hen. 8.} is not.

Truly my opinion (ſo indifferent on every ſide) ought not in any caſe to be infringed and averted from the Faith, to ſuch enemies of ſo corrupt a conſcience. Wherefore we greatly are inforced not a little to marvel, which thing alſo doth much diſquiet us to ſee; that you, which be the pillars and aſſiſtants in office of righteous dealing, the Senators of Peters City, and the principal beams in Gods building, have not qualified the perturbation of ſo fierce a Fludg; as do the Planets of Heaven in their kind, which to mitigate the paſſing ſwift courſe of the great Orb or Sphere of Heaven, draw a contrary way by their oppoſite movings. In very deed our Imperial felicity hath been (almoſt even from the beginning) ſpurred againſt, and envied at of the Papal See and dignity: As Simonides being demanded why he had no more enemies and enviers of his ſtate, anſwered and ſaid, Quia nihil feliciter geſſi: Becauſe (ſaith he) I have had no good ſucceſs in any thing that ever I undertook in hand. And ſo for that we have had proſperous ſucceſs in all our enterprizes (the Lords name be bleſſed therefore) eſpecially in the overthrow (of late) of our rebellious enemies, the Lombards, to whom in their good quarrel he promiſed life and abſolution, with remiſſion of their ſins, is the cauſe wherefore this Apoſtolical Biſhop mourneth and lamenteth. And now not by your counſels (I ſuppoſe) he lamenteth. And now not by your counſels (I ſuppoſe) he laboureth to impugn this our felicity, but out of his own power of binding and looſing, whereof he glorieth ſo much, he impugneth it. But preſently where power and ability wanteth to redreſs, there doth abuſe take place. We ſee in him which was ſo mighty a King, and the worthieſt Prince amongſt all the Prophets, to deſire and crave the reſtitution of Gods holy Spirit, when he had poluted the dignity of his Office. But the Proverb is, Ubi indiſſolubilia non ligantur: As things indiſſoluble are not to be looſed, ſo things that cannot be bound, Popes be not. Which thing manifeſtly is proved in him. For why, the Scriptures of God do inſtruct men how to live, they mortifie our ſouls which are immortal, and quicken the ſame which are dead for want of life. And doubtleſs he is able to humble and bring down thoſe that are unworthy of dignity, as much as him pleaſeth, and when him pleaſeth. Doubtleſs if the Biſhop of Rome were a true Biſhop indeed, innocent, impolluted, and not aſſociate with wicked livers and evil men, his life ſhould declare him ſo to be. He would not then be an offerer of diſſentious ſacrifices, but a peaceable offerer of love and charity, and would ceaſe, not with the incenſe of grief and hatred, but with the ſweet ſmelling incenſe of concord and unity, neither yet would alter Suum Pontificium in malehicium: that is, make of a ſanctified Office an execrable abuſe. If he were ſuch a Biſhop as he ought to be, he would not wreſt or abuſe the preaching of the Word into the fruit and gain of his own diſſention, neither ſhould we be accuſed for ſuch an enemy of our Maſter the true Church, as is ſaid unto her Sons charge by ſuch a Biſhop. Which true and Mother-Church with all reverence we honour, and benignity embrace, ſo beautified and adorned with Gods holy Sacraments. Some ſingular perſons notwithſtanding, faining themſelves to be our Brethren by that Mother, and yet are not, but of a ſtrumpet begot; ſuch, I ſay, as are ſubject and ſlaves to corruptible things (putting them from amongſt us) we utterly reject: eſpecially for that injuries by them done are not only tranſitory and mundane, wherewith our Majeſty is ſo miſuſed, vexed and grieved. Wherefore we cannot ſo eaſily mitigate our mood, neither ought we in very deed ſo to do, and therefore are we inforced the more to take the greater revenge of them. You therefore that are men of grave and deliberate counſel, having the excellent gift (as from God) of wiſdom and underſtanding; refuſe you that roaring enemy of ours in theſe his proceedings, whoſe beginnings are ſo wicked and deteſtable, whoſe comparing things paſt, with thoſe to come. Otherwiſe you that are under our ſubjection, as well of our Empire as other our Dominions, ſhall feel and perceive (both of my chief enemy and perſecutor, as alſo of the Princes that are his fautors and adherents) what revenge by ſword Fredericus Auguſtus ſhall take upon them, God ſo permitting.

{KING Hen. 8.}

The Emperor cauſeth a Parliament or Council to oppoſe the Popes malice.

This done he denounceth a ſolemn Parliament or Counſel of all the Princes and other Nobility of the Empire at Augras whither came Conradus Ceſar, Mogumtinus Preſul, the Saxon Dukes, the Lords of Brandeburgh, Miſna, Thuringus, and the Legates of all the Nobles of Brabant to aid the Emperor. But the Princes Boiemus and Palatinus, being diſſwaded by the Legates, unto whom the Auſtrians had joyned themſelves, refuſed to come to the Council holden at Augra. And being at their wits end, not knowing well what they might do, forſook at laſt the Emperor, and took part with the Pope and the other Conſpirators. Then Fredericus Auſtriacus the Emperors ſecond Son (whom he diſherited as ye heard) by the aid of the Boiors and Bohemians recovered again the Dukedoms of Auſtria and Stiria, putting to flight and diſcomfiting the Emperors Bands and Garriſons which he had there. And although the Cardinals (eſpecially that hoteil man Albertus Boiemus) had allured to the Pope Otho the Duke of Boiora, as ye heard, and divers other Noblemen of Germany; yet notwithſtanding certain Biſhops in Boiora (as Eberhardus Iwanenſis, and Sigrefridus Reginoburgenſis, being at that time the Emperors Chancellor, Rudiocnus Ratiſbonenſis, Conradus Friſingenſis, and others) left not nor yet forſook the Emperor. All which the foreſaid Albertus not only did excommunicate, but alſo by proceſs fought to bring them up to Rome before the Pope, giving commandment to their Collegioners and Cloyſterers, that they ſhould deprive them of their offices, and chuſe ſuch others in their ſtead as would obey the Pope. All which things the Pope underſtanding by Albertus, and of this their fidelity to the Emperor, corroborated and confirmed the ſame his doings, commanding them to chuſe other Biſhops in their ſteads.

The godly Biſhops of Germany are obedient to their King and Prince.

The Emperor ſuppoſeth the Biſhops to be ſubject unto him.

But the Biſhops and Prelates with one conſent contemning the Popes Mandates and Writs, and alſo the curſes and threatnings of Albertus, accuſed, reproved, and greatly blamed his temerity, and alſo tyranny which he uſurped againſt the Churches of Germany, and eſpecially againſt the good Emperor; that without his conſent he durſt be ſo bold as to meddle in Churches committed to the Emperors Government againſt the old and ancient cuſtoms; and that he had Excommunicated the Emperor without juſt cauſe; that he had condemned the Emperors faithful ſubjects as enemies to the Church, for ſtanding with their Liege and Soveraign Prince (which Allegiance to violate, without horrible iniquity they might not) and ſo had fought to diſquiet them likewiſe in their charges and adminiſtrations; and had alſo in that quarrel given ſuch defiance to the Emperor. They accuſed and condemned the fame Albertus alſo for a moſt impudent impoſtor and wicked varlet, and for a moſt peſtiferous botch and ſore of the Chriſtian Commonweal; and they do give him to the Devil as a ruinous enemy, as well of the Church as of his own natural Country, and further think him worthy to have his reward with the reſt of the Popes Purſevants, being the moſt wicked inventers and deviſers of miſchief that were in all Germany. This done they make relation hereof to the Emperor by their Letters; and further, they advertiſe all the Princes of Germany (eſpecially thoſe which were of the Popes faction or rebellion, and were the favourers of Albertus) that they ſhould take heed and beware in any caſe of his ſubtil deceits and pernicious deceivable allurements, and that they ſhould not aſſiſt the Pope for all his words againſt the Emperor. And doubtleſs by the counſel of the high Prelate or Archbiſhop of Boiora (whoſe name was Iwanenſis) and by his induſtry and perſwation, Fredericus Auſtriacus was again reconciled unto the Emperor his Father, from whoſe aid and obedience after that, by no promiſes, threatnings, bribes, nor pains, no nor for the execrable curſes of the Popes own holy mouth, he would be induced or removed. But Albertus proſecuteth ſtill his purpoſed miſchief, alluring and inticing by all means poſſible (and that not amongſt the worſt but the beſt) friends to the Pope, and enemies to the Emperor. Unto ſome he gave their Tythes to fight againſt the Emperor, to otherſome he gave the Glebe-lands of Benefices, and to otherſome he gave the ſpoil of ſuch Colledges and Monaſteries as took not part with the Pope; and to ſome other alſo he gave the Colledges and Monaſteries themſelves. And aſſuredly I find by Johannes Aventinus, Lib. 7. Annalium Boiorum, that there were certain of the Popes own birds, that had their Eccleſiaſtical Tythes taken from them; and otherſome had the rents and revenues of their Colledges plucke away by force to the maintenance of the Popes quarrel againſt the Emperor. Hereby was there a window opened to do what they liſted (every man according to his ravening and deteſtable luſt) and all things lay open unto their greedy and inſatiable deſires. Who liſteth to hear more hereof, let him read Aventinus in his Book before noted, and there ſhall he ſee what vaſtation grew thereby to the whole ſtate of Germany, who largely intreateth of the ſame.

The Biſhops of Germany Excommunicate the Popes Legate and Cardinal.

The Emperor ſuppoſeth the Biſhops true ſubjects to his Prince.

The Emperor openly renounceth the Pope and Church of Rome.

The ruine of the Pope for maintaining the Wars againſt his Lord and Maſter.

While theſe things were thus in working in Germany, Frederick leaving in Lombardy Aſtiolinus with a great part of his Hoſt (he paſſing with the reſt by Apeninum) came to Hetruria and fet the ſame in a ſtay, after that he had allayed certain inſurrections there, and from thence to Piſae, where he was with great amity and honour received and welcomed. This City was always aſſured and faithful to the Emperors of Germany. The Pope underſtanding of the Emperors coming into Hetruria, and knowing what power the Emperor had alſo left in Lombardy, with a great Army beſieged the City Ferraria, that always loved the Emperor full well; which City when the Popes Legate had aſſaulted ſharply the ſpace of five months, and could not win the ſame; he deviſed with himſelf to ſend for Salingwerra out of the Town by way of a parlee, promiſing his faith and truth to him for his ſafe return. Who by the perſwation of Hugo Rambartus, that faid without peril he might do the ſame (being but by way of parlee) was coming to the Legate; who preventing him in his journey, took him as priſoner, contrary to his truth and fidelity. And thus gat he Ferraria, and delivered the keeping thereof to Azones Aſtenſis. And that the Popes Legate thus falſified his truth, and circumvented the Captain and old man Salingwerra, the ſame is confeſſed of the Popes friendly Hiſtoriographers, to be but a ſtratagem or warlike policy. But to return again. About the ſame time alſo the Venetians Navy, at the Mount Garganum, chaſed twelve Gallies of the Emperors, which were appointed to the keeping of that Coaſt, and ſpoiled, burnt, and waſted all the region; and further took one of the Emperors great Ships, being driven by tempeſt and weather into the Haven Sipontium, fraught with men and munition.

The Pope beſiegeth Ferraria.

The Emperors Gallies chaſed, and one of his Ships taken by the Popes.

Fredericus again getting on his ſide the Lucenſes, the Volaterans, the Genenſes, the Aretines, and divers Cities beſides in Hetruria to help that Country, came to Piſa and Piterbium, which took part with him. Some ſay, that the names and factions of Gibellins and Guelphs ſpring from Frederick, that by them he might ſpie and know (having recourſe to all the Towns and Cities in Italy) which took part with, and favoured the Pope, and which the Emperor; and called the one by the name of Gibellins, and the other by the name of Guelphs. But for that both Blondus and Platina, and ſome others, bring no ſufficient proof thereof, but only ſlender conjecture, I rather cleave to the opinion of Nauclerus, Hermannus, Antoninus, Platerentinus, and other ſuch writers, which ſay, that theſe Guelphs and Gibellins in Italy took their beginning of Conradus the Third, Fredericus his great Uncle being Emperor; and that theſe Guelphs were dedicated to the Pope, of Guelphs the younger Brother of Henry the Proud; and that thoſe which were called the Gibellins, were appointed either of Conradus himſelf, or elſe of his Son, being brought up in the Lodſhip of Vaiblingen. But to our purpoſe.

This Gibellins and Guelphs were not ſeen before they came into Italy.

The Pope when he underſtood that Frederick was come to Vitterbium, he was very heavy; for that he feared he alſo would come to Rome, the good will of which City the Pope much miſtruſted. He therefore cauſed a ſupplication to be drawn, portraying about the ſame the Heads of Peter and Paul, and with a ſharp and contumelious Oration he much defaced the Emperor; promiſing them everlaſting life, and gave the badg of the Croſs to as many as would arm themſelves and fight againſt the Emperor, as againſt the moſt wicked enemy of God and the Church. Now when the Emperor, marching ſomewhat near to Rome-Gates, beheld thoſe whom the Pope had, with his goodly ſpectacle of St. Peter and St. Paul, and wirh his alluring Oration, ſtirred up againſt him, and marked with the badg of the Croſs to come forth in battel againſt him; diſdaining to be accounted for the enemy of the Church, who had been thereunto so beneficial, giving a fierce charge upon them, he put them foon to flight; and as many as he took (cutting off that badg from them) he caused to be hanged. From thence he marching into Campania, and his own Kingdoms, levied a great mass of money, and muttered the new bands, and augmented his Army; and in these bands he retained the Saracens also, And to the intent he might find the Saracens the more truitty to him, he appointed them to inhabit in a City named Luceria. For which thing, although the Papisticall writers do greatly blame and opprobriously write of Frederick, yet notwithstanding Nicholaus Machiavellus doth write, that therefore he retained them, left that through the Popes execrable curses he should be quite destitute of Soldiers, as was Fredericus Barbaroffa his Grandfather, a little before, when that of Alexander the Pope he was Excommunicated, as ye have heard.

After this when the Emperor had greatly afflicted by battel the Popes Ecclesiatical consorts, such as conspired with the Pope against him, and that he had wasted and destroyed Beneventum, the Mount Cosenum and Sora, for that they took part with the Pope against him; Frederick when he had manned the City of Aquilia, marched forth with a great Host both of Horsemen and Footmen to Picenum, that he might vanquish his enemies in Italy. And by the way he befieged the strong Town of Wor named Asculanum, which was also converted to the Popes faction and rebellion. He there having understanding what the Popes affinitants had done with the Princes Electors, and other Princes of Germany, especially with Wenceslaus King of Bohemia, and Otho Palatinus, writeth his Letters unto them. In the which, first he shewed how that those contumelies and spightful words, which the Pope blustred out against him, are lighted upon himself; and how the Bishops of Rome have taken to them of late such heart of grace, and are become so lofty, that not only they seek to bring Emperors, Kings, and Princes under their obedience, but also seek how to be honoured as Gods, and say that they cannot err, neither yet be subject or bound to any Religion; and that it is lawful for them to do all things what they list, neither that any account is to be fought or demanded of their doings, or else to be made of them to any; so impudent are they in these their affirmations. And further, as Princes they command (and that under pain of curfing) that men believe every thing they say, how great a lye soever it be. Informich that by this covetousness of his all things go backward, and the whole state of the Commonweal is subverted, neither can there any enemy be found more hurtful or perillous to the Church of God than he. He wrote unto them furthermore, that he (to whom the greatest charge and dignity was in the whole Commonweal appointed and committed) seeing and perceiving to his great peril, their good hearts, wills and practices towards him, would with all the power and ability that God had given him, do his endeavour that he which in the likeness of the shepherd of the flock, and the servant of Christ, and chief Prelate in the Church, theweth himself so very a Wolf, Persecuter and Tyrant, may be removed from that place, and that a true and careful shepherd of Gods flock may be appointed in the Church. Wherefore he exhorteth them, if they define the safety and preservation of the whole state of the Commonweal and Empire, that they be unto him no hinderers, but furtherers of his purpose and proceedings; left otherwise they also should happen to fall into the same fame of servitude with the Bishop of Rome. And further, he gave them to wit, that if he should aspire to that he fought for, (that is, to be an Emperor, and King over Kings) yet should that be no stay of his infatiable desire, but he would be as greedy and ravenous as now he is. Therefore if they be wise, to withstand him betimes, left hereafter when they would, it should be too late, neither were able to withstand his tyranny. The effect of this Epistle I took out of Aventine, which more largely dilateth it, who also writeth that the Emperor (by his Legates) sent the same to Wenceslaus.

The effect of a Letter sent by the Emperor to the Princes of Germany.

No enemy more hurtful to the Church of God than is the Pope.

The Emperor voweth to remove the Pope, and put another more careful shepherd to the Church of God.

Boiemus relenteth at the Emperors Letter.

Boiemus somewhat relenting at this Letter, promiseth to accomplish the Emperors biddings and precepts, and forthwith gathereth the assembly of Princes and Nobles at Ægra; where by common consent they think to renovate with the Emperor a new League and Covenant. And furthermore, they find Otho Boius (which was absent, and would not be at this their assembly to be the Author of this defection, and an enemy to the Commonweal. Otho then seeing himself not able to stand against Cesar and the other Princes with whom he was associate, defining aid of the Pope by his Letters, came with all speed to Boiemus against his Kinsman; whom when he could not perswade unto him again, neither would he to their parts also be won, he obtained notwithstanding yet thus much at their hands, that the League and Covenant (which they were in hand to make with the Emperor) might for a time be deferred, and that another assembly might be made, whereat he also would be, and joyn himself with them. Thus had they, who killed (as you heard) his Father, bewitched also his Son, and brought him to be both a Rebel and a Traytor. In the mean season the Pope sent his rescript unto the King of Bohemia and to Otho, tending to this effect; that in no case they should either forsake him, or else the Church to take the Emperors part. And so much prevailed he by the means of Bohuslaus and Budislaus (which were the chiefest of the Senate Regal) and by his fair promises and bribes to such as he before had made to him, that again at Libussa by Boiemus and Boius new assemblies were gathered for the Creation of a new Emperor, in despite of Augustus the Emperor, and Cesar his Son. And whilest that this was thus in hand, Conradus Cesar called Landshuta the Wife of Otho (being absent) in the teeth for great benefits and possessions which her Husband had, and possessed by the ancestors of him, and that unless her Husband took a better way with himself, and shewed his obedience to the Emperor his Father, that he should not enjoy one foot of that land which now he had by his predecessors. The promotion and dignities which Otho had by the ancestors of Conradus Cesar came thus: Fredericus Barbaroffa in the year of our Lord 1180, at a Parliament holden at Regimoburgh, condemned Henricus Leo of High Treason, and deprived him of his Dominions of Boiora and Saxony, and gave Boiora to Otho Wiltalpachius, for that he had done him so faithful service in his Italian Wars. After that, Ludovicus the Son of this Otho, obtained of this Emperor Frederick the Second, in recompence of his assured and trusty fidelity, the dition of Palatinatum Rheni so called, which gave also Agnetes the Daughter of Henry Earl of Palatine to Otho his Son in marriage. This Henry was the Son of Henry Leo the Traytor, unto whom Henry the Sixth, the Father of Frederick, gave in marriage Clementia his Brothers Daughter, Conradus Palatine of Rhenus, and gave unto him the keeping of the Palace of the same. And as touching the inheritance of Boiora; that he had also now long possessed by the heirs of Otho Wiltalpachius. But to our purpose again.

The Pope findeth his foreign aid and is prevented.

At the same time also the Governour of Colonia Agrippina revolted to the Pope; who not long after, in a skirmish between Brabantines and him, was vanquished and taken prisoner. And doubtless, Fredericus Austriacus, after he was received into favour again with the Emperor (keeping moft constantly his promise and fidelity renewed) during this time made sharp war upon the Hungarians, which took part with the Pope, and greatly annoyed them. As these things thus passed in Germany, the Emperor when he had gotten Ascalum, and led his Host into Flamminia, having Ravenna at his Commandment, from thence came to Faventia, which City never loved the Emperor; the circuit of whose walls is five miles in compass, and pitched his Camp round about the same. And although the siege was much hindered by austerity of the time and weather (being in the very dead time of Winter) yet notwithstanding through his great fortitude and courage, so animating his Soldiers in the painfulness of the laborious siege, he indured out the same, who thought it no little shame, having once made that enterprise, to come from thence without any assault given. And therefore when now the Winter (so extream cold and hard) was well near ended, and the Spring-time now hand at hand, and by long battery he had made the same in divers places faultable; the Citizens (being greatly discouraged, and in no hope of the defence thereof) sent their Legates to the Emperor, craving pardon for their offence, and that he would grant unto them their lives, and so yielded themselves unto his mercy.

The

{KING} {Hen. 3.}

The Emperor great lusty and courageous, yet yet unfortunately inclined.

The Emperor inforced to coin his money of Leather.

A great Victory on the Sea obtained the Popes confederats by the Emperors Navy.

The Emperor Popes side, by the Emperors Souldiers which lay in the garison at Ticinum, thus: There went forth upon a time out of Ticinum into the borders of Genowaies, certain bands to give them Larums in the Country: which bands the fouriers of Mediolanum (where lay a great Garison of the Popes) descrying, told the Captain of the Town, that now a very Opportune and fit time was to give an assault to Ticinum; for that (say they) the greatest part are now gone a Foraging. Whereupon they immediatly calling together the Captains and such as had charge, set their Souldiers in Array, and marched forward to Ticinum. And now when they were come almost thither, the Ticinian bands (whom they thought to have been far a Foraging) were returned and met with them, and fiercely gave a full charge upon them: Who being dismayed at the suddenness of the matter, fought not long, but gave over and fled. In which skirmish were taken (besides those that were slain) three hundred and fifty Captains, and brought prisoners into Ticinum with all their Ensignes with them.

The Emperor obtaineth another victory by Land of Tuscans against the Pope and his confederats.

News hereof was brought to the Emperor not long after, who then was removing from the siege of Faventia (as ye heard) to the City of Benonium, thinking to have destroyed the same. But upon the hearing of these good News, he altereth his purpose, and thinking to have hereafter a more convenient time thereunto, leadeth his Army towards Rome: and in the way he reconciled to him the City of Pisarum. But Fanum, for that the Townsmen shut their Gates and would not suffer the Emperor to come in, he took by force and destroyed. For the Emperor, seeing that neither by Petition made to the Pope, nor yet by his Lawful excusation, he could do any good with him, thought, that by his sudden coming thither, and with fear of the peril imminent, he might be brought to some uniformity, and caused to leave off his accustomed pertinacy. And although the Emperor was too strong for him, yet for that he regarded nothing more than the publick tranquility of the Empire, and that he might then take the Tartarian wars in hand, if he could by any means conclude, he refused not so to intreat a peace with him, as though he had been both in force and Fortune much his inferior.

The Emperor refuseth to make the Pope a feald.

The Turk invadeth Christendom with a great and mighty power.

Whilest that this ruffle was betwixt the Emperor and the Pope Ochodarius the Emperor of the Tartarians his Son, with a great power and provision made, invaded the borders next adjoyning unto him, and there wan Roxolanum, Bodolium, Mudanum, with divers other Cities, Towns, and Villages, destroying, wasting, and burning the Countries all about, killing and slaying Man, Woman, and Child, sparing none of any Sex or Age. At whose sudden invasion, the people being in such fear and perplexity (having no City, no refuge, nor aid to stand in defence for them) were fain to leave all that ever they had, and disperse themselves into Woods, and fly into Marishes and Mountains, or wheresoever any succour else did offer it self to them. And by this time the Tartarian Host was come as far as Uratislavia, where Henricus of Polonia and the Duke of Silesia with their Armies met with them; who, for the inequality of the number and small strength they were of, had foon an overthrow, and almost all their Souldiers being slain, they themselves were taken and put to the Sword. From thence they came to Moravia, and from thence to the Kingdom of Bohemia, which Country, while the King kept himself in strong defenced Forts, and durst not come abroad, he invaded, and destroyed all Hungary, putting to flight and vanquishing Colmannus the Brother of Belus, the fourth King of Hungary, by whom also was great spoil made in both the Pannonias, Mysiasum, Bulgaria, and Servia. When Belus the King of Hungary had gotten to Pola (which is a City of Hisstria) unto Otho the Duke of Dalmatia, he sent his Legates to Fredrick the Emperor, promising that if he would send him aid that the Tartarians might be expelled, then Hungary should ever after be under the jurisdiction of the Emperor: which thing if he refused to do, that then the same were in great danger to be subject to the Tartarians, to the no little peril of the whole Empire. And he said further, that the cause wherof he with more instance required the same, was, that so many Christian Men and Countries made such pitiful Lamentation in this their great calamity and misery,

The unmerciful cruelty and slaughter of Christians done by the Turk.

The King of Hungary craveth aid of the Emperor for the which he offereth him his Land.

and

The Emperor having against them good and sufficient cause of revenge, yet for that his noble Heart thought it to be the best revenge that might be, to pardon the offence of vanquished men: He thought it better to grant them their requests, to save the City and Citizens thereof, with innumerable people, than by Arms to make the same his Souldiers prey, to the destruction both of the City, and great number of People therein. So doth this good Emperor in one of his Epistles, Adallambis, confess himself. Which Epistle, to declare the Lenity and merciful Heart of so worthy a Prince, if that with great and marvellous provocations and wrongs he had not been incited, I thought good in the midst of the History here to have placed. But thus I have kept you long herein, and yet not finished the same.

In this siege the Emperor, having spent and confumed almost all his Treasure both gold and silver, caused other Money to be made of Leather, which on the one side had his Image, and on the other side the spread Eagle (the arms of the Empire) and made a proclamation, that the same should pass from man to man for all necessaries in stead of other money; and therewithal promised, that whosoever brought the same Money unto his Exchequer when the was were ended, he would give them gold for the same, according to the value of every Coin limited: which thing afterward truly and faithfully he performed, as all the Historiographers do accord.

Thus when the Pope, as before is said, had stopped his ears, and would not hear the Emperors Legates that came to intreat for peace, but rejected and despised his moft courteous and equal demands; neither yet had he left any wily policy unattempted or force unpractised, that with his confederates he thought himself either able to revenge or else resist: he by his Legates calleth to a Council at Rome, all such Prelates out of Italy, France, and England, as he thought to favor him and his proceedings, that hereby, as his last shift and only refuge, he by their helps might deprive Fredrick of his Empire, as an utter enemy to God and to the Church. All which things Fredricus having understanding of, and knowing that these assemblies should be but to the destruction and supplanting of him, determined to stop and let their passages to Rome, as well by Sea as by Land, in all that ever he might. So that all the passages by Land being now stopped and prevented, he commanded his Son Henry with certain Gallies to go and keep the Coasts of Sardinia, which Kingdom the Italians call Entimum: and from thence to go to Pisas, and with the Pisans to rig out a Navy to meet with (if it were possible) such as should come to aid the Pope at Rome. The Popes Champions understanding that by Land they could not safely repair to Rome: they procured of Gallies and Ships out of Genoa (having Guilelmus Braccius for their chief Captain or Admiral) Forty fail for their defence; thinking hereby, that if they should Fortune to meet with any of the Emperors Ships or Gallies, which should lye for them in wait, they should be able to make their part good, and give them also the repulse. Enzius in like manner and Huglinus (being Captain and Admiral of the Pisan Navy for the Emperor) lanched forth to Sea with Forty Ships and Gallies: and betwixt the Isles of Lilium and Mons Christi, which lye between Liburnium and Corsica, they met with the Genowaies Ships; and straightways fiercely began to grapple with them and board them, in which fight at length were three of the Genowayes Ships both bourged and sunk, with all the riches and Treasure in them. In these were taken three Legates of the Popes, whereof were two Cardinals, Jacobus Columna, Otho Marchio, and Gregorius de Romanis (all cruel enemies against the Emperor) and many other Prelates more; besides a great number of Legates and Procurators of Cities, with an infinite number of Monks and Priests, besides of Genowayes Souldiers 6000, with divers others.

Pandolphus Colonutius, in describing the Circumstances of the great loss and misfortune of these Champions of the Pope by Sea, amongst the rest declareth, that besides the great prey and booty which the takers had from them, they also found many Writings and Letters against Fredrick, which much helpt them in the defence of those causes, wherein they had labored against him. The like mischance also almost about that time happened on the and that there was none able to help them; which (saith he) is as great shame as may be to the whole Christian State and Empire. And also he said, that if the malice of this barbarous people were not suppressed, then he thought they would make invasion upon the Empire and Provinces of the same.

The Pope will grow to have no peace.

The Emperor although he thought it very requisite, that with all convenient speed this mischief should be remedied and prevented: Yet notwithstanding, his great Enemy the Pope, with his confederates, was the only let and hinderance thereof. For when he saw and perceived that he himself could do no good, and only labored in vain in seeking peace with the Pope, he gave commandment to Bojemus and Boyar, to intreat and perswade with him. And (considering the imminent peril like to insue by reason of such civil diffention to the whole State of Christendom) that he would take up and conclude a peace, and mitigate somewhat his fierce and wrathful mood. Wherefore when he saw further, that neither by that means of intreaty, nor any other, the Pope would desist from his stubborn and malicious froward purpose, he writeth again to the King of Hungary, that he was right sorry and greatly lamented their miserable State, and that he much desired to relieve the need and necessity that he and all the rest stood in. But why that he could not redress the same, nor stand him then in any stead, he blamed greatly the Bishop of Rome; who refusing all intreaty of peace, he could not without great peril to himself depart out of Italy, left that when he should come to the aid of him (by the Popes mischievous Imaginations) he should be in peril of loling all at home. Notwithstanding, he sent Conradus Cesar King of Bohemia, and other Princes more of Germany to retift and withstand the Enemy, as much as in them lay to do. The great Army and number of such Souldiers, as were the Cross by the Popes assignement, deferred their journey against the Tartarians, and had commandment given unto them by one Albertus (the Popes Procurator) to tarry and abide at Home, until they should be called for in battel to fight against the Emperor. This was the loving zeal and affection of the Pope and his adherents: (To conclude) in this time of Calamity towards the Christian State and Commonwealth; that he had rather bend his force and revenge his malice upon the Christian and good Emperor, than either he himself to withstand, or suffer and permit, by conclusion of any profitable peace, that this moft bloody and cruel Tartarian should be let and restrained from so great havock, spoil and slaughter of the Christian Men: and yet forsooth these men will seem to have the greatest regard of all others to the Christian preservation, and think to have the supremacy given therein: what thing else is this, but manifest mockery and deceiving of the people? But notwithstanding, even in the midst of this spoil and havock of Polonia, Bohemia, and Hungaria, was it determined, that at Libusa, the Princes confederate should be assembled about the deposing of the Emperor, and creation of another.

The Pope's fault that the Turk is not refifted.

The Pope had rather fight againft the Emperor than againft the Turk.

But now notwithstanding, the provident forelight and wise policy of the Emperor (as you heard before) in refraining the paffages both by the Sea and Land, who had special regard thereunto, and gave moft ftrict charge that none should pass without privy search and examination, as one having sufficient tryal, as wellin his own perfon as by the example of his Predeceffors, what great mischief and deffention by their Legates every way sent out, they had procured, both to the Imperial State and Dignity, and to the whole Country of Germany: yet found they such means, and wrought such policies, that they had not only secret paffage and repaffage with their Letters and fpials into all Christendom where they lifted, but alfo fo laboured the matter and handled the fame, That the long continued league of amity between the French King and the Emperor, whose Predeceffors, as alfo they themselves, had many years reverently obferved it in Christian concord and unity, was, by this seditious Prelate and arrogant Vicar of Satan, now either utterly infringed, or elfe in varaible fufpence: as by their Letters each to other, and hereunder infuing, is to be read and feen: which for the more probability of this History of Fredrick (not being long or greatly tedious) I thought meet here to intext and place.

The Pope's wise policy.

The Epiftle of the French King to Fredrick the Emperor, touching the imprifoning of certain Cardinals of France.

{KING Hen. 3}

HIberto (Noble Emperor) hath the good opinion and great confidence (many years in mutual love eftablished betwixt us) lasted and continued well, hoping that no such cause should rise betwixt us to hatch either hatred or other occasion offensive between your Highness Empire, and our Kingdom. Especially, seeing that all our Predeceffors, King of France, late of moft worthy memory (till these our days) have been so zealously affected to the moft high and regal State of your Empire; and also that we, whom God hath placed succeffively to Reign as King, have been no otherwise minded nor affected towards the same. None otherwise also on their behalf have the Ancient and renowned Emperors of Rome, our Neighbours and your Predeceffors, shewed themselves towards us (each otherefteeming the Empire and Kingdom of France as one) and faithfully conserving together the unity of peace and concord. Insomuch that there hath not chanced between them these many years so much as one spark of Discord and Diffention. But this notwithstanding, we for our part cannot but greatly marvel, and not without good cause are troubled and vexed; that, without desert or any offence, you have taken the Prelates of our Realm upon the Sea, making their repair to the See Apoftolical; to the which, as well by their faith as their obedience they ftand bound and are obedient, neither could they withftand the Pope his commandment: These have you imprisoned, and so ftill detain the same. Wherein (we do your Majefty to wit) we are not well pleased, neither yet take in so good part, as you peradventure think we do. For by their own Letters we underftand, they had excogitate nothing prejudicial to your Imperial Eftate and celfitude, although the Pope had profecuted therein more than became him to do. Wherefore, seeing that there is no cause why you should detain them; it is meet and becometh no less your magnificence, but that you reftore unto us and set at liberty the faid Prelates of our Realm: wherein also you fhall appeafe our Grudge, and keep us your friend; which account the difpleasure you do to them as our own and proper injury. For why? It were a great diffonnor to our Realm and Kingly Eftate, if we would wink hereat and overpafs the same with filence. Wherefore if you will confider and refpect the thing that we have faid, we doubt not but that you will releafe the Bifhop of Peneftrum, with the other Legates and Prelates of the Church, which you to our prejudice do detain. In defiring of our aid doubtleft we gave unto them a manifeft way: neither could they obtain in our Kingdom any thing at all which feemed to be againft or prejudicial to your Majefty. Let therefore your Imperial Providence ponder in the Ballance of Juftice, those things which we write unto you, neither let our lawful requeft unto you be fruftrate or made in vain. For our Realm and Kingdom of France is not so debilitate or impoverished that it will be spurned at, or troden under your feet: Farewell.

The great amity and long continued league between the Empire and Kingdom of France.

The Rescript of the Emperor to the same Letter of the King of France.

OUr Imperial magnificence hath perused your Kingly Letters; wherein if we had not found manifeft contradiction, they might peradventure have obtained at our hands all that they required. But even as with a little leaven a whole lump of dow is fowred; so a manifeft untruth alledged hath made the whole argument of your letter both faulty and unfavoury. It is apparent that you wanted the vertue of modefty in the conclufion of the same your Graces letter: For that they themfelves bewray no left than we give you manifeftly to underftand, and many more befides do know. It is notorious alfo, and to all the world revealed, in what fort that Apoftolical Father hath impugned our innocency, as well with the one Sword, as with the other; and how that wholeft we at his commandment took our Journey beyond the Seas, the fame our great enemy and hoftile adverfary ftirred up King-

Kingdom of Sicilia: and the same, not in one place or two, but in divers and fundry parts thereof hath wafted, fpoiled, and deftroyed. After this, when with great intreaty at our return from Afia, we had concluded a Peace with him, which with us at his own pleasure he made, and had taken and received our devotion for the same, which in ferviceable manner we granted him: the faid Apoftolical Father (that notwithftanding) hath fince that time rather aggravated his diffleasure toward us, than any thing at all qualified the same; and further hath to our deprivation and fubverfion, excogitate and deviled againft us all the mischief he might or hath been able, no cause in all the world given by us to provoke the same; and further hath promulgated to our great defamation and fhame (as well by his Letters as Legates) the Sentence of Excommunication againft us unto all Nations. Laftly, he affirving to our Imperial State, and conjunct Council for that purpofe called all the Prelates he can get, as one that meaneth to fet all the whole world together by the ears. But fuch is the marvelous Wifdom of God, by whom we live and reign; who beholding the wicked purpofe he went about (confounding the Crafty in their craftineft) hath given into our hands as well your Prelates of the Realm of France, as alfo of other Regions and Provinces; all which we imprifon and detain, as Enemies and Adverfaries to our Imperial Crown and Perfon. For where there deferved not to be a Perfecutor, there hath not wanted alfo a fufficient Withftander and Defender. Let not therefore your kingly Highneft marvel, although Auguftus detaineth in prifon your French Prelates, which have endeavoured themfelves to Confpire, and fo to disturb our Imperial Eftate and Regiment. Fare ye well.

The crafty compaffed in their craftineft.

The King without great diffonnor of the Pope, would not fo have written to the Emperor.

When Frederick now saw there was none other remedy, and that in vain he laboured to have peace with the Pope, he profecuteth this War to the uttermoft: and when he had gotten Tudertum and reconciled the same, he destroyed the Town of Geminum and Narvia, and giveth the fpoil of them unto his Souldiers: he gently received the yielding up of Siburnium, and walketh all the Country round about Rome. The Pope herewith difmayed and troubled with fuch as otherwife diffwaded and counfelled him, and feeing that things profpered not fo well with him and againft the Emperor as he wifhed and defired, being in defpair of obtaining his purpofe, died for very anger and thought.

Gregory the Ninth dieth for thought and cruft heart.

What Opinion the Prelates of Germany at that time had of this Gregory is extant, and to be feen by the Oration of Eberhardius Bifhop of Juvavence, that he made to the Nobility of Bojoria in the Parliament at Reginburgh, written by Johannes Aventius in his feventh Book. Doubtleft he not only brought great and ruinous Calamities to the whole Chriftian Common-wealth and alfo the Empire, whilft he fought thus to depreft and bridle the Emperour, and advance his Papal See and Dignity, but alfo brought into the Church of God much horrible Impiety, Blafphemy and Wickednefs, whereof both Silondus, Platina, Balæus, and others make mention: and amongft others that moft detestable Cantilene, Salve Regina, in the which he attributeth the Honour and Worfhip proper only to Chrift, unto the Virgin his Mother. This is he in whose name the Book of the Decretals was fet out, which (to omit the opinion of divers other learned men) Johannes Balæus calleth it The fink or puddle of Foolifhneft and Impiety. Doubtleft Carolus Molinæus, a man both of fingular judgment in that Law, which in Tribunal Courts and Judgments is ufed, as alfo in this, painted forth the Decree of this Gregory in his Book of Annotations unto Platina, whole words whereof are thefe, Certum eft, multa capita in ius mutila & decurata effe, ut invidiofum argumentum lateret, &c. That is, Doubtleft divers Chapters in the fame Book of Decretals be mangled and unperfect, that many contentious Arguments therein might lurk. For when the ambitious defire of reigning like Kings took them, they ftudied nothing elfe but how to enlarge and advance their See and Dominion with the Empire it felf and other Kingdoms (oft fhaken and weakned through Contention:) and this purpofe and end had they and none other in all their Conftitutions.

Here it fhould feem the Epiftle not found to the fault of the tranflation.

Carolus Molinæus upon the Decretals of Pope Gregory the Ninth.

{KING Hen. 3}

Reafons cause of ftudy, as before you heard.

The proof whereof Molinæus declareth in his Book De regibus Galliæ & Angliæ. But many more Examples by the Emperors, Princes, and Lords Electors of the Empire may be gathered, whereof to fpeak, more convenient place ftall ferve hereafter.

In the ftead of this Gregory was placed Celeftine, born in Mediolanum amongft the Caftellians: who, as Blondus declareth, by fained promifes offered a League with Fredericus, and the eighteenth day after he was created Pope, he alfo died.

The creation and death of Pope Celeftinus.

Thus when the Author of all this Conspiracy was gone, Frederick now thinking himfelf free and void of that fear which before he had, and not daring to be abfent out of Italy, with all his indeavour levieth an Army, and prepareth his furniture and other neceffaries for the delivery of the Chriftians, fo mightily oppreffed as ye heard by the Turk or Tartarians. Who, hearing of the coming of the Emperors, left the ftraight way through Hungary, which they came, and returned by the River of Danubium to Taurica, and fo through the Fens of Meotida, and by the River Tanaum, into Sarmatia Afiatica. When the Cardinals had now a long time protracted the creation of the Pope, and would not agree upon the fame, the Emperor put them in remembrance of their duty, and blameth them for their disagreeing, and exhorteth them to be more careful for the Chriftian Common-wealth. His two Epiftles touching this matter are extant; whereby appeareth, that only for the care and defire he had of peace and of the Chriftian unity and ftate, he did the fame: and for that (peradventure) the Cardinals refufed to make peace with him before they had created a new Pope: the one for more brevity I have omitted, and here inferted the other.

The Emperor prepareth an Army to fight with the Tartarians, or Tartarians fly.

An Epiftle Invective of the Emperor unto the Cardinals, for that they cannot agree upon the creation of the Pope.

UNto you I write, Oh you Children of Ephraim, which evil have bent your Bows, and worfe have fhot your Arrows, filthily turning your backs in the day of battel; unto you I fpeak, O you Children of Belial, and difherkened Flock, you unfenfible people and affiftants of the great Judge, unto you I write, O you diffentious Cardinals, whom the world for your deferts doth hate; for whofe caufes the whole world being at variance is evil fpoken of. Doubtleft, I cannot fpeak unto you, but to your detraction, because I am wordly and you fpiritual. I am unperfect, wherefore I muft do as the unperfect world doth: neither can the part be diffonant to the whole, nor I contrary to my felf that writeth. Attend ye therefore my rude Epiftle, wanting the dignity of rhetorical ftile. My provoked Tongue burfteth forth into words, before my conceiving fpirit hath delivered the same; and so not attending to the higher Regiment, hath haftned to expreft my words not fully conceived or premeditate. Thus I fay, a troubled mind oftentimes doth beget diforedered talk, and untimely uttereth the same. This therefore it is that our heart hath conceived, that we believe and all men confefs, that Jefus Chrift the Mediator between God and man, which came from Heaven to make peace upon the Earth, is not divided and at variance, being alfo the Maker and Lord of the Apoftles. But Satan, being divided in himfelf, that blaftering Prince is amongft you, as thofe to whom he mimifireth: he, even he, the Perfwader of Diffcord and diffention, that Man-killer, Father of Lyes, and Spirit of Darkneft, that hath divided your Tongues, and fet Diffention amongft your felves; neither do ye good one to another, nor yet to the World, being by Fraud into fo perilous a ftate brought: and the little Ship of Peter, which is toffed upon the Sea by the vehement winds, you nothing regard; which Ship, though it need not indeed utterly to fear drowning, yet fuffereth it by your negligence many great ftorms and perilous tempeft. Doubtleft, if ye would diligently confider how the Nations and People whom ye were wont to judge, in fcorn fhake their heads at you; every one of you would be aftamed of another. And to fay the truth, they cannot do too much to detect your fo deteftable Opprobry: for whilft every one of you afpireth to the Chair, every one is at variance with his Fellow, and whilst one of you cannot agree with another, none is promoted; and whilst none is promoted, the Cathedral Dignity vanisheth. And thus by your discord, the peaceable state and concord of the Church is confounded, and the perfection of the Faith and Religion, whereby ye should live, perisheth. And surely, through your default it perisheth; so that, whereas nature hath placed the sense and understanding to be, that part, like a Monster, remaineth with you both senseless and headless. And no marvel, for why, your hearing is impaired, and that sound of the mouth which dayly was heard throughout the whole Earth, is utterly dumb, and become a scoffing Eccho. For why, the thundrings of Peter and Paul are now no more heard, the Preachers are become dumb Dogs, and are commanded to silence. Perhaps you have hands ready to receive, but there be no bribes; for why, those that were wont to come from Saba, and bring gold with them, now come no more, seeing the Lord is not in the Manger, and the Celestial shining Star refusing to be their guid. Moreover, ye want feet to walk withall, for seeing there is no man to give you ought, you will not remove one foot for any mans pleasure. Fie shameless people, the least and simplest Beast may learn you Obedience, for the Birds have their Captain, and the silly Bees their King, but you will come under no Government, &c.

Peter still voice turned into a scoffing eccho.

The Emperor re-inforceth the Cardinals out of prison.

The Emperor after this, at the request of Baldwinus the Emperor of Constantinople, who came to Fredericus to Parma, released the Cardinals out of prison, thinking thereby not only to gratifie the Emperor Baldwinus, but also thinking that thereby things would have the better grown to publick tranquility on every side. When the Cardinals were all assembled at Avignnia, they made Simibaldus, a Genowese, Pope, whom by a contrary name, for that he had determined (as I suppose) to be hurtful to the Commonwealth, they called Innocentius the Fourth. Of which Election when Fredrick understood, he was well pleased therewith. And for that he had in all this troublous time been his friend, he well hoped that the Christian Commonwealth should by him have been brought to much peace and concord. Wherefore he sent both his Legates and Letters gratulatory unto him, letting him to understand how well it contented and pleased him that he was made Pope; and withal how peace and quietness thereby he promised (as it were to himself) he muketh full relation thereof; offering again unto him obedivance, help and aid in all things, commending his Dignity to the publick State and quietnes of the Christian Commonwealth and Empire, &c.

Innocentius the fourth created Pope.

The Emperor rejoyceth of the Popes election, but without cause why.

He also wrote his Letters to Otho Duke of Bojoria, who a little before was reconciled to the Emperor, that he which was elected Pope was a good Man, a lover of peace, and studious as well for the tranquility of the Christian Commonwealth, as of the Empire.

The Legates of Fredrick also, with the furtherance of Baldwinus the Emperor of Constantinople, laboured very diligently for the conclution of the promise of peace. And to be brief, every Man was in good hope and looked for no less. But far otherwise fell the matter out, and contrary to all their expectation. For the Pope (set on and incouraged by the Cardinals and others against Fredrick) secretly and amongst themselves wrought contrary to that they openly pretended, and not a little disappointed both Fredrick and others of their expectation and good opinion they had of the Popes holiness. For whileft the Emperors Legates attended the answer of their peace before promised, Rainerus the Cardinal went secretly to Viterbium with a certain number of Souldiers, and took the Town which before was on the Emperors part.

The Pope taketh Viterbium while the Emperor hoped for peace.

The Emperor having understanding hereof, musttereth his bands, and with a sufficient power entreth the Popes dition, again to recover Viterbium: But yet, taking this war so in hand (not thinking thereby to expel all conditions of peace) at the request of certain of the Cardinals he was contented to leave Viterbium, being furnished by the Emperor of war-like provision before, and came to Aque. From thence he sent again other Ambassadors to Rome, and with them also the Emperor of Constantinople, with the Earl of Tholouse, who he thought were able to do much with the Pope in the prosecuting of this peace.

And although at the time of Easter the matter seemed to have been through, and peace concluded, for that his Legates had Sworn in the behalf of the Emperor (and as he willed them) that he would submit himself to the Pope. And again, for that the Cardinals and others commonly called and named him Fredricus the Christian Prince; yet all this was no more but for a further fetch and purpose. Not for that they meant indeed to conclude any peace with him, or to go through therewithal, but that through this dissimulation and likelihood of peace, which they underfooted the Emperor much desired, he should set free and open the passages which he straitly kept, that no man could pass and come to Rome, whether a great multitude daily resorted and flocked for Religion sake. But when all came to all, and that the Legates perceived no conclusion of peace was simply purposed on their behalf, they began to despair of the matter; letting the Emperor so to understand. The Emperor yet notwithstanding doubted not, but if he might himself speak with the Pope, he upon reasonable conditions should well enough accord with him; wherefore he by his Legates and Letters desired him to appoint a place where the Emperor might resort to him. The Pope seemed to be contented herewithal, and appointed a day at Fescennia, where they would talk together; and the Pope promised that he would be there before him, and expect the Emperors coming. But the Pope in this while had made a confederacy with the French King against Fredricus; who when he knew those three Gallies to be ready and brought unto Centumcellas, which he before had spoken for unto the Genowaites, secretly in the night with his company (hastening thither in Post speed) took ship, and first came to Genoa, and from thence to Lions in France; where he (calling a Council) with a loud voice summoneth Fredrick, and appointing him a day, commanded him there personally to plead his cause.

The Emperor both too much confidence in the Pope.

The Pope mocketh the Emperor and goeth to Lions, where he prosecuteth the Emperor.

And yet although he understood that the sudden departing of him out of Italy, made plain demonstration of no conclusion or meaning of a peace; and also knew the Council which the Pope had called, wherein he was himself both Plaintiff and Judge; and at the same Council those, which he had by bribes allured, pretended the destruction of the Emperor; with many other such evident Demonstrations, both of his envious and hateful heart towards him: yet the most modest Emperor, using the innocency and uprightness of his cause, and as one most desirous of peace and Christian Concord, sent the Patriarch of Antioch, which lately was come out of Syria, the Bishop of Panormia and Thadeus Suessanus the President of his Court (a most skilful and prudent Civilian) to the Council at Lions; which signified unto them that the Emperor would be there for the defence of his own causes. And, for that the day was very short, required a time more convenient for him thither to make his repair. The Emperor also being onward on his way, and come as far as Taurinum, sent before other Messengers, as the Master of the Flemish order, and Peter de Vineis, to give them understanding of the Emperors coming, and to intreat that he would Prorogue the day of hearing, till that he might conveniently travel thither. But for any thing that could be either said or done, or upon how just cause soever required, the Pope would not give so much as three days space, in the which time the Ambassadors assured them of the Emperors presence; as though there had been no common proviso for every man in that case by the law to have used upon any reasonable let. What would I longer protract the time? When the day by them appointed was come, the Pope with his confederates (whom for money and bribes he had gotten to that Council) against Gods law, against Christian Doctrine, against both the Prescript of the Law of nature and reason, against the rule of equity, against the order of law appointed, against the constitutions of Emperors, and also the Decrees of the Empire, without any observation of the Law, or granting dilatory days, without probation of any Crime, or his cause suffered to be pleaded unto, or heard what might be answered therein, taking upon him to be both adversary and judge, condemned the Emperor being absent. What more wicked sentence was ever pronounced? What more cruel fact, considering the person, might be committed? Or what thing more brutish and beastly could have been imagined or devised?

The extremity of the Pope to the Emperor.

{KING Hen. 3.} The diffinition of the fifth Pope Innocentius the fourth.

Vengeance falleth upon the Pope for this fifth Judgment.

{KING Hen. 3.} vised? And yet hereat were those Bishops nothing athamed; but meaning to leave their doings in writing (as an impudent Testimony to their posterity) eftablished the same for a law to continue.

But mark what vengeance God took upon this wicked judge. The writers of the Annals record, that when Fredricus the Emperor, and Comradus his Son being Cæsar, were both dead; the Pope gaping for the inheritance of Naples and Sicily, and thinking by force to have subdued the same, came to Naples with a great Host of Men, where was heard in the Popes Court manifestly pronounced this voice, Veni miser ad judicium Dei, Thou wretch come to receive thy Judgment. And the next day after the Pope was found in his Bed dead, all black and blew as though he had been beaten with bats, as before in the History of King John is declared.

When the Emperor had understanding of this cruel and tyrannical sentence of the Pope, passed and pronounced against him (considering his furious purpose and mind therein) thought good by his Letters, to let all Christian Princes and Potentates understand, as well that injurious and manifold displeasure he had sustained by the four Popes in all their times, as also the cruelty and tyranny of this Pope, in pronouncing the sentence of Judgment and condemnation against him (passing the bounds both of justice, equity, and reason) which Letter as he wrote the same, hereunder followeth to be seen.

The Letter of the Emperor to the French King and other Princes, for the sentence given against him in the Council of Lions by the Pope and Cardinals.

Although we suppose not the contrary, but that both by true certificate and common rumor you have heard of the indifference of our cause and good handling thereof: yet for that more credit is commonly given to that the eye seeth, than to that the ear receiveth, we thought good to present unto you the naked truth of such things, which the Popes successively have put forth, and forged against us. To the perusing and consideration of which my cause and letter, I beseech your gentleness amongst other times of leasure, that you will spie out some fit and convenient time therefore. And all other what soever that shall have desire to hear Princes counsels and affairs, let them in like fort attentively consider. First, whether our Predecessors have been destitute or not, of Godly zeal, just dealing, and righteousness: and whether we may not lawfully revenge our selves, being so much provoked, of such evils and injuries as have been wrought against us. Secondly, let them consider whether Christs Vicar doth follow Christs steps or not; and whether Peters Successors do follow his example or not; and also by what Law, equity and right, that sentence which they have pronounced against us, may be maintained and allowed: as also what name they may justly give it, and whether that may be said to be a sentence, which is given by an unsufficient Judge or not. For although we acknowledge that the Lord hath given full power in spiritual things unto his Church, that whatsoever she same bindeth in Earth, is bound in Heaven; and whatsoever the same looseth, is also loosed; yet we read neither by Gods Law, nor by any Law of Man, that we ought of duty to be subject unto him, or that an Empire ought at his pleasure to be transformed and transposed, or that he may give any such sentence or Judgment to punish Princes temporally, and deprive them of their Kingdoms. For why? Although our confecration belongeth unto him by right and custom (as he challengeth) yet our deposing and depriving doth no more belong to him, than doth that presumption belong to any other Prelate of other Realms, which do consecrate and anoint their Kings, as the custom and manner is. Or put case it were so (we nothing hindered hereby) that he had such power: hath he that power to the intent to revenge himself upon whomsoever his malicious mind consenteth, and without all equity and law to bring them under his jurisdiction? He hath proceeded of late against us, as is said, but not by the order of accusation, forsomuch as neither was there any sufficient accuser, neither were there out any inscription or proces: before neither yet by denunciation, forsomuch as there lacked a lawful denouncer, neither yet by the way of inquisition, for that there went before us no manifest accusation. But he peradventure will say, that all things that he layeth against us were manifest and notorious. But that we deny, and nothing to be notorious, but that which may by a sufficient number of witnesses be approved and tryed. For so may every judge himself (contemning the order of law) affirm what he list to be notorious, and thus condemn whom he list. There were against us (as well it may be said in Council) certain false witnesses, although not many, of whom the Bishop of Calin was one, who is neer Kinsman or Nephew (by our Laws condemned for Treason to be hanged) maketh also to us an infestine Enemy. ¶ To such like effect prosecuting the rest of his Epistle, which for brevity sake I omit.

This policy used the Pope to vex and disturb both the Country of Germany, and the whole Empire; and not so only, but also utterly to destroy and subvert the same: By the ruinous decay whereof, the Pope and his Prelates thought to make up their mouths. And thus, whilst that Germany was now newly again divided, some taking part with Fredrick the Emperor, and Comradus Cæsar his Son, and other Nobles and Princes of the Empire; some with those that should by the Popes procurement be the Electors of the new Emperor, otherwise with neither of both, as men not minding nor tending to the publick Utility, but to serve their own purposes, armed themselves; and thus was the publick Peace and quiet broken and disturbed, and all together in tumult and hurly burly. For whilst the one part laboured by all force to retain the dominion by publick and common consent first to him committed, the other part in like fort indeavored themselves with all force and power to use and occupy the same, according unto the decree of the Bishop of Rome, and to take it from Fredrick: Thus great conflicts grew on all parts.

Germany altogether in hurly burly through the Popes malicious mind.

Germany spoiled by civil dissension.

By these Civil wars, Germany suffered no little calamity; in every place was manslaughter and murther, the the Country spoiled, the Towns and villages fet on fire and burnt, the Churches and Temples, wherein the Husbandmen had put their goods and substance, violated and robbed: Houses were pulled down, the goods divided, and every Mans cattel driven away. To conclude, in this turmoil and contention of depoling and chooling another Emperor, in this faction of Princes, and this liberty of wearing armour, in this licence of hurting and sinning, the impudent boldnes of divers private Souldiers, and especially of such as were the Horsemen, then counted the better sort of Souldiers, were so great, and their unbridled and unfatiable desire in robbing, spoiling and taking of booties, catching and snatching all that came to hand, so much, that nothing could be fure and in safety that any good man enjoyed. Wherefore a little before the death of Guilielmus the King, threefore Cities and Towns which were belonging to Ludovicus Palatinus Duke of Beiors and Rhenus, and Otho his Son, and other Princes, whose names Aventinus in his seventh Book of the Annals of the Boiores maketh mention of, joyned themselves in a league for the expelling of these rebels, and expreiling of their so great injurious rapines and flaughter of men. Of which Army the said Ludovicus being Captian, he chaced and drave the whole rout of them to the uttermoft parts of Germany, and pulled down and overthrew their Castles and Fortreffes, and every other place where they had intrenched themselves.

The robbers and rebels chased out of Germany.

Otho Boius yet notwithstanding, keepeth his promise and faith moft constantly made before to the Emperor Fredrick and Comradus his Son. Whereupon Philippus Farnesensis, Albertus and others calling a Council at Maldorfus (by the Popes commandment) sent for Otho unto them, unto whom they opened the Popes pleasure and commandment. To all which, when he had heard, Otho answered: I cannot marvel at some of you enough, that when as heretofore you perfwaded me to leave and forsake the part I took with the Bishop of Rome, whom you your selves affirmed to be Antichrift, and that I should take part with the Emperor, why that you your selves will not keep your fidelity and promise made unto those good Princes: and he said, that he perceived in them a great inconstancy and levity, both in their words and deeds, which now call that wicked, unjuſt and violent wrong, that but lately they thought equal, juſt and right. He ſaid further, That they were overcome with Pleaſures, corrupted with Superfluity, won with Bribes, gaping for Honour and Eſtimation: and that they neither regarded honeſty, godlineſs, nor their duty and office; but ſtudied how to make diſtention and commotions, and longed after war and bloody battel.

He ſaid further, That for his part he would obey God and his Prince, to whom he had ſworn Fidelity; and that he nought eſteemed the fained, Holineſs and deteſtable practices of ſuch Prelates. He ſaid he believed in Chriſt, and would truſt to his Mercy; and that he believed how thoſe whom they curſed and gave to the Devil, were in greateſt favour with God. Howbeit, and notwithſtanding thoſe Prelates took in good part this Expoſtulation of his, and ſeemed to bear Otho no malice or grudge for that he had ſaid, but to be delirous of peace and unity: yet not long after Otho was curſed as black as all the reſt, and counted as bad as the worſt.

Otho excommunicated for turning from the Pope to take the Emperors part.

Albertus the Popes Champion now in Germany playeth not only Rex amongſt the Citizens, but alſo bethought him of a miſchievous Device againſt Conradus Cæſar the Emperors Son. When by fraud and ſubtilty he had gotten and taken many of the rich Burgeſſes and Citizens of Regineburgh, which bare the Emperor good will, and had ſent them priſoners to Stauffum, Conradus joyning with other Noblemen of the Empire (after he had ſpoiled and waſted much of his Lands and others his Companions) drave him ſo near, that upon certain other conditions he delivered again the Citizens. And ſhortly after coming again to Reginoburgh, and being received and welcomed into the Colledge of D. Hamaranus: Albertus with certain of his Confederates, by the means of Ulricus a Chief Officer of the Monks, came in the dead time of the night into the Chamber, where the Ceſar with a few others about him did lie; and falling upon them, ſome they took, and other ſome they ſlew; and finding no other body in the Chamber or Lodging, they thought that Cæſar had been ſlain among the reſt. But he hearing the noiſe, forſook his bed, and hid himſelf under a bench, and ſo eſcaped their hands. The next day he outlawed or proſcribed the Biſhop and his Mates, and alſo the Monks Bayliff of Treaſon, and ſeized upon all the goods of the houſe. But at the Suit of the guiltleſs Monks he releaſed all to them again, taking by way of fine 100 pounds. Ulricus loſt his Office, and Albertus, thereby to eſcape danger of puniſhment, took upon him the habit of a Monk. Conradus Hochenfolſem, which was the Murtherer of theſe men, though he eſcaped the puniſhment of mans hand, yet the Vengeance of God for the Fact he eſcaped not. For as he rid in the day time abroad, he was ſuddenly ſtricken with a Thunderbolt and died.

Ceſar in danger of Albertus.

Albertus to eſcape puniſhment taketh the order of Blockery.

During all this batle and contentious time, it may well be gathered, that Frederick the Emperor lay not ſtill, but had his hands full: who notwithſtanding (by Gods help) overcoming and ſuppreſſing theſe or the greater part of theſe rebellious Popiſh Tumults, and having done ſtrict execution on thoſe eſpecially that had conſpired againſt his Perſon, calling a Council, and ſetting in ſome ſtay the troubleſome Affairs of his Kingdom, came to Cremona with Fredericus Prince of Antioch. Richardus Earl of Umbria, the Governor of Flammiuia, and Encius King of Sardinia, with a great number beſides of Souldiers and men of war. And beſides he took with him (which he ſent for out of every part) the wiſeſt, moſt vertuous, and beſt left Learned men that there were, thinking with them to have gone himſelf to Lions to the Pope, and there to have with him Communication, as well concerning the Sentence definitive, as alſo about the concluſion of any peace, if by any means he might. And when all things were prepared and ready, he took the Journey in hand, and came to Taurinum, having with him both a great Army of Souldiers, and alſo a great Company of Legates and Ambaſſadors. From thence ſending his Carriages before, within three days Journey of Lions, he was certified that Parma was taken and kept by the Outlaws of divers and fundry Factions of the Pope, his near Neighbours and Friends; as by the Popes Legate, and other Citizens, as of Brixia, Placentia, and ſuch like. Which thing when he underſtood, and that the Pope herein was the only and chief doer, he ſaw manifeſtly it ſhould little prevail to attempt any further the thing he went about, and then at length when he ſaw no other remedy, putting from him all hope of peace, determined himſelf to the wars with all his force and might. Thus altering his purpoſe and journey, he took the ſtraighteſt way into Lombardy, and with an Army of 60000 men he beſieged Parma. And to the intent he might more aptly and near the Town plant his ſiege and battery without diſturbance, firſt he intrenched his Camp, and fortified the ſame about with Bulworks and other defenſible munition. After that, he cauſed divers Victualling-houſes and Taverns in his Camp to be ſlightly builded of timber; and without the Camp he appointed the place where the Market ſhould be kept, and all Victuallers reſort that would. He appointed places for their Churches and Temples, and in feemly manner adorned the ſame: and for the moſt part their Tents were builded with wood, ſo that it was like another Parma. All which things when he had finiſhed, which was not long in doing, for this happy and proſperous ſucceſs he called and named it Victoria, and had thought to have made the ſame to be in the ſtead of the City of Parma, for the which he purpoſed to have made level with the ground. And in the beginning both there and elſewhere, all things proſpered well with Frederick, and had good ſucceſs: for he ſharply hid to their charges that defended and kept the City of Parma. And further, Robertus Caſſilionens, which was the Emperors Lieutenant in Piceenum near unto Auximum, diſcomfited the Popes Army, and flew of them more than 4000, and took many ſuch as were of the Confederate Cities priſoners. And when the Factions or Companies of the Gibelines and Guelphs in Florentia were at controverſie, when Fredericus of Hetruria came to the Gibelines, to whom they had ſent for Aid: the Guelphs therewith diſmaid, fled from thence to Bononia, whoſe goods and ſubſtance came all to the Emperors Coffers, and Florentia alſo it ſelf to the Emperors Obedience. But this good ſucceſs and proſperous fortune laſted not long. For as at a time Fredericus to recreate himſelf (which ſeldom had his health) rode about the fields with certain of his Horſemen to hawk and hunt, many of the Emperors Souldiers, thinking nothing leſs than of ſuch a matter to be attempted of a many ſtarvelings within the Town of Parma, wandred and ranged unarmed out of their City Victoria about the fields. The Souldiers in Parma, having this occaſion offered, with all force and ſpeed poſſible entred the Emperors Camp or Town Victoria: which being not ſtrongly fenced, nor having Gates to ſhut againſt them, was a thing eaſie enough to do. The ſudden ſtrangeneſs of the matter much abaſhed the Souldiers, and they rang out their Larum-bell. The firſt aſſault was given upon Marcus Maleſpina his charge; whom when the Emperor, returning in all haſte, found to be hard beſet, he had thought to have reſcued him. But when that was perceived of the enemy, they bent all their force altogether on that ſide: inſomuch that the Emperor was forced to take the Trench, leſt he ſhould have been of the enemy inviron'd; and from thence he retired into the City or Camp, where he had thought to have gathered further Aid. But the enemy giving not ſo much time thereunto, with all force entred the City Victoria. The Emperor now, when the enemies were entred, left the Camp, and came to Dominum; who when they had killed and ſlain a great number of the Emperors Souldiers, and had burnt and deſtroyed the ſame Camp Victoria, came again to Parma. The Emperor ſuſpecting this thing to be wrought by treaſon, whereby the enemy had underſtanding as well of the Emperors abſence, as alſo of the negligence of his Souldiers, impriſoned certain of the chiefeſt about him, amongſt whom alſo was Petrus de Vineis. Yet whilſt he was at Dominum, gathering together his Souldiers and reſidue of his bands; Encius getteth a great Victory of the Manſuanos, who coming to the reſcue of Parma, loſt fifty of their Ships, and all that they had in them.

The Pope taken and kept by the Popes Legate and other friends of his.

After this alſo, Richardus in another Conflict in Piceenum, diſcomfited the Popes Souldiers, and ſlew their Captain Hugolinus, beſides 2000 others ſlain and taken priſoners. When now Fredericus had gathered again, and new muſtered his Bands at Dominum, he marched forth to Cremona: and notwithſtanding that there he underſtood of the good ſucceſs and victory that Encius had Sundry opinions of the death of Frederick the Emperor.

The Popes Biſhops boaſt themſelves to be) ſaid unto his Diſciples, that Church compared with Chriſt their Maſter and Teacher; and commanded them further more, how they ſhould not draw the ſword, but put up the ſame into the Scabbard; and further gave them in precept, that they ſhould not only forgive Injuries ſeven times, but ſeventy times ſeven times to thoſe that offended them; and when I now compare the lives of the Biſhops of Rome, how near they follow him whoſe Vicar they ſay he is, and conſider ſo many and great Conſpiracies, Treaſons, Rebellions, Diſloyalties, Lyings in Waite, and treacherous Devices, ſo many Legates of the Popes (being Eccleſiaſtical Perſons) which will needs be called the Shepherds of Chriſts Flock, to be ſuch Warriors and Captains of Souldiers in all the parts of Italy, Campania, Apulia, Calabria, (being the Emperors Dominions) in Picenum, Emilia, Flammiuia, and Lombardy, to be ſent out againſt him, and alſo when with my ſelf I meditate the deſtruction of ſo many great and famous Cities, the ſubverſion of ſuch Commonweals, the ſlaughter of ſo many men, and the effuſion of ſo much Chriſtian blood: and laſtly, when I behold ſo victorious, proſperous and fortunate Emperors to be, and ſo many miſerable, unfortunate and vanquiſhed Popes put to flight; I am perſwaded with my ſelf to think and believe, that the Judgments of God are ſecret and marvelous, and that to be true which Aeneas Sylvius in his Hiſtory of Auſtria writeth, that there is no great and marvelous ſlaughter, no notorious and ſpecial Calamity (that hath happened either to the Publick Weal, or to the Church of God) of the which the Biſhops of Rome have not been the Authors.

{KING Hen. 3.} had at Rhegium, yet for that he perceived the defection and backſliding of all or moſt part of Lombardy from him, he determined to take his Journey into Apulia: And when he had there levied a ſtrong and ſufficient Power, he purpoſed to make his ſpeedy return again into Lombardy. Therefore, in his Journey through Hetruria into Apulia, he joyned with his Son Fredericus, which beſieged Capras, and took the ſame: and led with him divers of the chiefeſt Captains priſoners, and after that, ſubduing unto the Obedience of the Empire Miniatum, he came into Apulia.

Ceſar beſieged and taken of the Emperor.

When news was brought him thither, that Encius his Son (coming to aid the Matinenſes againſt the Bononians) was taken priſoner two miles from Mutina; and that in his abſence, the Popes Captains with their Bands and Garriſons went throughout all Lombardy, Emilia, Flamminia, and Hetruria, to ſtir and procure the Cities to revolt from the Obedience of the Emperor, and working the ſame partly by ſubtil policies, and partly by force and ſinifter means to bring them to his purpoſe: he determined with himſelf, with all the force and power he might by any means procure and make to have begun afreſh, and profecuted this War to the uttermoſt. Neither was it to be doubted (as Pandolphus Colonucius writeth) but that he would have wrought ſome marvellous Exploit and great Attempt, but that he was of this his purpoſe (whereunto he was both willing and bent) prevented by unlooked for death. For when he fell into this Ague, being at a certain Caſtle of his in Apulia called Florentinum, and ſaw by the extremity thereof his days to be ſhort, he remembred that which was once ſhewed him, how he ſhould die at Florence; whereupon he made and ordained his Teſtament. And when unto Comadus and other his Children he had given and appointed the great and innumerable maſs of money which he had collected and levied for the maintenance of his Wars, and godly purpoſe (as it is called) and unto them alſo had given all other his Kingdoms and Dominions (to every one according to their ages and years) he departed this wretched and miſerable world.

Pandolphus writeth, that Fredericus was very willing to die, and as they made certain report to him which were preſent at his death, that his mind was altogether ſet and bent on the heavenly joy and felicity. Which thing alſo Gulielmus Puteanus, Andreas Pandalus, and Manardus the Biſhop, being Italian Writers do all affirm, of whom this laſt writeth, that he aſſuredly believeth Frederick to be one of the number of Gods Elect.

The Writers notwithſtanding are of ſundry Judgments and Opinions touching this good Emperors death. Some write, that he was traiterouſly poiſoned by his Cupbearer, being hired thereunto. Some others, that he was ſtrangled with a pillow, of Manfredus the Son of Plaurus. But Pandolphus a good Writer as the beſt, maketh no mention of any poiſon that was given him, but only that he died of an Ague. The laſt opinion of Manfredus he manifeſtly refuteth, and ſheweth that there is no manner of likelihood of the ſame: and further, that the contrary is affirmed by divers other Writers that were of that time. He died in the year of our Lord, 1268. the thirteenth day of December, in the ſeven and fiftieth year of his age, and ſeven and thirtieth year of his Reign, whoſe Corps was brought to Panormum, and there intombed.

The diſcomfiture of the Emperor at the ſiege of Parma.

Frederick had three Wives, the firſt was Conſtantia, the Daughter of the King of Aragon; of whom he begat Henry the Duke of Suevia and King of the Romans: the other Yole the Daughter of Johannes Brennus King of Hieruſalem, by whom he had the Inheritance of Hieruſalem, Naples, and Sicily; of whom he begat Conradus Duke of Suevia, King of Hieruſalem and Naples, being Ceſar: the third, Iſabell the Daughter of King John of England, by whom he had a Son named Henry, which is ſaid to die in his Childhood. This Fredericus had not his Peer in Martial affairs and Warlike policies to be compared unto him, amongſt all the Princes of that age: a wiſe and skilful Souldier he was, a greater indurer of painful labours and travels, moſt bold in greateſt perils, prudent in foreſight, induſtrious in all his doings, prompt and nimble about that he took in hand, and in adverſity moſt ſtout and courageous. But as in this corruption of nature, few there be that attain perfection, neither yet is there any Prince almoſt of ſuch Government and godly Inſtitution both in life and doctrine as is required of them: ſo neither was this Frederick without his fault and humane fragility, for the Writers impute to him ſome fault of concupiſcence, wherewith he was ſtained and ſpotted. And it appeareth that he was not clear thereof, forſomuch as by ſundry Concubines he had ſundry Children; as Encius the King of Sardinia, Manfredus the Prince of Sarsinium, and Frederick King of Antioch. And this is all that I find of the Deſcription of Frederick by Colonucius, which he affirmeth that he gathered out of good and probable Authors. But as touching the hainous Acts and flagitious Deeds, which the Pope burtheneth him withall, and in his Sentence againſt him maketh mention of; Fredericus not only purgeth himſelf thereof, but alſo divers Hiſtoricians (as well German Writers as Italians) affirm the ſame to be falſe and of the Popes own brains, invented to do him ſkath and teen withall. Of which matter thoſe things which Pandolphus (touching the commendation or diſpraiſe of Fredericus writeth) I thought good out of Italian to tranſlate; whoſe words be theſe:

Frederick a moſt valiant Prince in Martial affairs.

Albeit the Emperor Fredericus was indued with many goodly Gifts and Vertues, yet notwithſtanding was he accounted an Enemy of the Church, and a Perſecutor of the ſame: of which both Innocentius the Fourth in his Sentence hath pronounced him guilty, and the ſame Sentence have other Popes regiſtred in their ſix Books of Decretals, and ſtabliſhed the ſame for a Law, how that he ought to be taken for no leſs. Therefore peradventure it ſhould not become me to falſifie or call in queſtion that, which others have confirmed, or elſe to diſpute and argue much of that matter. Yet notwithſtanding as much as his Acts and Deeds in writing declare, and the Books of the chiefeſt Authors affirm, as alſo his own Epiſtles do teſtifie; I cannot preciſely ſay, whether the Biſhops of Rome ſo call him and judge him therefore: Or elſe for that he was ſomewhat too bold in ſpeaking and telling them but the truth, and reproving the Eccleſiaſtical Order of their great abuſes: Or elſe, whether for that he would have had them gone ſomewhat more near the conditions and lives of the ancient Fathers of the Primitive-Church and Diſciples of Chriſt: Or whether for that he defended and ſtood with them for the Prerogative and Dignities belonging to the Empire or not: Or elſe whether they ſtood in fear and awe of the great Power he was of in Italy, which thing indeed Gregory the Ninth in a certain Epiſtle of his confeſſeth: but of theſe things let them judge and diſcern, that ſhall read the Monuments and Hiſtories of Frederick. Truly (ſaith he) when I conſider with my ſelf that Chriſt (whoſe Vicar the Roman The Popes

The wards of Pandolphus touching the ſtaple and diſpraiſe of the Emperor.

Authors. Nicholaus Machiavellus also saith, That all the ruinous Calamities and miserable Chances, that the whole Christian Common-weal, and also Italy hath suffered, have been brought in by the Popes and Bishops of Rome.

Many Epistles of Fredericus there be, which he wrote unto the Bishops of Rome, to the Cardinals, and to divers other Christian Princes, all which I have read; and in them is to be seen nothing contrary unto Christian Doctrine, nothing wicked and ungodly, nothing injurious to the Church of God, nothing contumelious or arrogantly written of Frederick. But indeed I deny not the fame to be fraught and full of pitiful Complaints and Lamentations, touching the avaricious ambition of the Ecclesiastical Persons, and pertinacy of the Bishops of Rome, and that he would receive and take no satisfaction nor yet excuse, in the defence of the right and priviledge of the Empire, which he maintained: also of their manifold and infinite Conspiracies which they practised both secretly and openly against him: and of the often admonitions which he gave to the whole multitude and order Ecclesiastical, to attend upon and discharge their Fuuctions and Charges. And who that further is desirous to know and understand the truth, and covetesh to search out the renowned Vertues of Magnificent Princes, let them read the Epistle of Frederick, dated to all Christian Princes, which thus beginneth, Collegerunt Principes, Pontifices & Pharisæi concilium: and another, wherein he perswadeth the Colledge of Cardinals to take up the dissention between the Emperor and the Pope, which beginneth, In exordio nascentis mundi; and also another which thus beginneth, Infallibilis veritatis testem; besides yet another, Ad Reges & Principes orbis Christiani; with divers others more, wherein may well be seen the Princely Vertues of this so worthy a Peer: all which Epistles collected together in the Latine-Tongue, the learned sort I wished to read, whereout they may pick no little benefit and commodity to themselves. In his Epistle last recited, these are his words, Non exsistimetis id me a vobis ideo contendere, ac si ex sententia Pontificia privationis Majestas nostra sit perculsa. Cum enim nobis sit rectæ voluntatis conscientia, cumq; Deum nobiscum habeamus, eundem testem invocamus id nos spectasse, eum totum ordinem Ecclesiasticum, tam proferrim primores, nervis potestiæ dominationisque eorum fucesisse extirpatisque tyrannidis radicibus, ad primitivæ Ecclesiæ conditionem & statum revocaremus; That is, Think ye not that we so earnestly desire or crave this peace at your hands, as though our Majesty were terrified with the Popes Sentence of Deprivation: when as God (upon whom we truste and invocate) is our witness, and judge of our conscience, that when we went about to reform the Ecclesiastical State, but especially the Ringleaders of the same, and should restrain their Power, and extirpate their great tyranny, and reduce the same to the state and condition of Primitive Church, we looked for no less at their hands. For these causes peradventure, those which had the Government of the Ecclesiatical Dignity, decreed and pronounced Frederick to be an Enemy to the Church: which (as I have said) I leave to others to judge thereof. ¶ Hitherto Pandolphus Colonucius.

Defived commendation upon the Epistles of Frederick.

Frederick purnished with the hatred of the Imperial State to reform the Church of Rome.

And doubtless Examples to the contrary do appear, that Frederick was no Enemy to the Church of Rome, for that he both gave large and great gifts thereunto, and also franchised the same with great Priviledges and Immunities, which things by his own Constitutions, Statutes and Customs, may be perceived and understood. But rather contrariwise that the Bishops of Rome most filthily recompenced the fame his great liberality, and princely Benevolence again, which he gave and bestowed upon the same, as partly in the discourse of this History you have heard: who notwithstanding they so molested and tired him with such and so many Injuries as you have seen, he nevertheless, forgiving and pardoning all the same, for the great zeal he had to the common Christian wealth (whereof he more forced, than of any other thing) sought by all means he might for to have peace, although it were to his own great hinderance. Therefore seeing he was of necessity by the Bishops of Rome provoked to that War, if he did them any skath in revenge of his Imperial Dignity, let them thank their own selves which might otherwise have remedied the same. Notwithstanding upon this occasion divers (both Italian and German Writers, which at that time fought for fat Benefices, and ever since even unto these our days have done the like, by flattery rather to obtain that which they hunted for, than to bear true and faithful Testimony of things as they were indeed) took great occasion to write and flander this good Emperor. But let us pass over these Parasites, and return to those, which although they themselves were of that Calling, I mean of the Ecclesiastical Order: yet notwithstanding, for that they rather preferred the study of verity, and to reverence the truth before Popish authority, and flattering fervitude, greatly extolled and commended this good Emperor Frederick. So did Nicolaus Cusanus a Cardinal in his writing affirm this Emperor to be an Alter Carolus Magnus, both for his wisdom and also diligent regard to the Common-weal. So also writeth Aegidius Biturigum the Bishop, in his Books of the institution and bringing up of a Prince, which he wrote to the French King, exhorting him and all others to take a pattern of this most worthy and excellent Prince: in commendation of whose worthy praise and vertue these Verses are written on his Tomb.

Hope of gain allureth many to write untruths.

Si probitas, sensus, virtutum gratia, census,
Nobilitas, ortis possent resistere mortis:
Non foret extinctus Fredericus, qui jacet intus.

Wherefore, insomuch as it appeareth by the approved Writers, of whom I have made mention, who and what manner of Prince Frederick this Emperor was, and that because he diligently laboured, as well in the preservation of the Christian Commonweal, as in the conservation of the Imperial Dignity, he procured to himself the great hatred and displeasure of the Roman Bishops (who have been to all the good Emperors for the most part utter foes and enemies) and with what wicked flanders and other injuries both by them, and by their Ministers they continually molested him: this Lesson ought to be ours, that having the fame in our memory, we imitate and follow his vertues, hating and detesting the wicked and flagitious doings of those holy Fathers that will fo be called, and Bishops of Rome; desiring God that he will fo guide the hearts of all Kings and Princes, that they may by his Grace advance and set forth his Glory, and reform the corrupt and vitious manner and order of the Church to all sincerity and purity both of Life and Doctrine.

These Verses which here insue were sent and written between the Emperor and Pope Innocentius the Fourth, which, for that to the learned they are both commodious and profitable, at the end of this History I thought good to place.

Certain Heretics in Suevia.

As ye have heard of the iniquity and raging pride of the Popish-Church against their lawful Emperor; so now shall ye hear (Christ willing) how God beginneth to relift and withstand the corruption of that Whorish-Church, by stirring up certain faithful Teachers in sundry Countries; as in the Country of Suevia about the time of this Emperor, Anno 1240. or near upon the same, where were many Preachers, mentioned in the Chronicle of Urspergensis, and also in Crantzius, lib. 8. cap. 16. & 18. which preached freely against the Pope. These Preachers (as Crantzius saith) ringing the Bells, and calling the Barons in Halle of Suevia, there preached that the Pope was an Heretick, and that his Bishops and Prelates were Simoniacks and Hereticks; and that the inferior Priests and Prelates had no authority to bind and loose, but were all Seducers. Item, that no Pope, Bishop or Priest could reftrain men from their duty of serving and worshipping of God, and therefore such Cities or Countries, as were then under the Popes Curse, might notwithstanding lawfully refort to the receiving of Sacraments as well as before. Item, that Fryers, Dominick and Franciscan, did subvert the Church with their preaching. And that the Indulgence of the Pope and his Popelings was of no regard; but that remission which they did preach unto them, they preached it not from the Pope, but as from the Lord. And thus much I thought here to recite, whereby it may appear how the resisting of the Popes usurped Power and corrupt Doctrine is no new thing in these days in the Church of Christ, &c.

Resistance against the Pope, no new thing in Christs Church.

Arnoldus de nova villa condemned of Heresie.

And not long after these aforesaid, rose up Arnoldus De nova villa, a Spaniard, and a man famously learned and a great Writer, Anno 1250. whom the Pope with his Spiritualty condemned among Hereticks for holding and writing against the corrupt Errors of the Popish-Church. His teaching was, that Satan had seduced the world from the Truth of Christ Jesus. Item, that the Faith (which then Christian-men were commonly taught) was such a Faith as the Devils had; meaning belike (as we now affirm) that the Papists do teach only the Historical Faith, which is the Faith Historiæ, non fiduciæ. Item, that Christian-people (meaning belike, for the most part) are led by the Pope unto Hell. Item, that all Cloisterers are void of Charity and damned; and that they all do falsifie the Doctrine of Christ. Item, that the Divines do evil in mixing Philosophy with Divinity. Item, that Masses are not to be celebrated; and that they ought not to sacrifice for the dead. Certain other Opinions there be, which the flanderous Sects of Monks and Fryers do attribute unto him; but (as they are wont in all others to do) rather upon envious taking, than of any just cause given.

Vide librum de syssinus verbatim.

Johannes Semeca the Glos-writer of the Popes Decrees Excommunicated.

And as this Arnoldus was condemned, so also the fame time Johannes Semeca, the Glofs-writer of the Popes Decrees, and Provoft of Hallerstat was excommunicated and deprived of his Provoftship, for refilling Pope Clement the Fourth, gathering certain Exactions in Germany; and therefore he appealed from the Pope to a General-Council, and had many great Favourers on his side, till at last both the Pope and he died.

Guilielmus de S. Amore.

Consequently in this order and number followeth the worthy and valiant Champion of Christ, and Adverfary of Antichrist Guilelmus de S. Amore, a Master of Paris, and chief Ruler then of that University. This Gulielmus in his time had no small ado writing against the Fryers, and their Hypocrisie, but especially against the begging-Fryers, both condemning their whole Order, and also accusing them, as those that did disturb and trouble all the Churches of Christ by their preaching in Churches against the will of the Ordinaries and Pastors, by their hearing of Confeffions, and executing the charges of Curates and Pastors in their Churches. All the Testimonies of Scripture that make against Antichrist, he applieth them against the Clergy of Prelates, and the Popish Spiritualty. If he fame Gulielmus is thought to be the Author of the Book, which is attributed to the School of Paris, and intituled, De periculis Ecclesiæ: where he proveth by nine and thirty Arguments, that Fryers be false Apostles.

Moreover, he doth well expound this saying of Christ (If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell away all thou hast, and come follow me) declaring there, poverty to be injoyned us of Christ, Non altualem, sed habitualem; not in such fort as standeth in outward action, when no need requireth; but inward affection of heart when need shall require. As though the meaning and Precept of our Lord were not, that we should caft away actually all that we have; but that, when the Confeffion of the Fame of God and the Glory of Christ shall so require, then we be ready to leave and relinquish what things soever for the fake of him, &c. As when he requireth in us after the like phrase, hatred of Father and Mother, and of our own lives, he biddeth us not to dishonour Father or Mother, much less to hate them; but that then, when case shall require, we set all things behind the love of Christ. Many other worthy Works he compiled, wherein altheit he uttered nothing but what was truth, yet notwithstanding he was by Antichrist and his Rabble condemned for an Heretick, exiled, and his Books burnt; whose heretical Argumens, as they called them, that thou mayst better judge thereof, hereunder I thought good to place.

This place of the Gospel expounded, Si vis esse perfectus &c. and not come follow me.

Guilielm. de S. Amore condemned of the Pope for an Heretick.

Against false Prophets with signs to know them by, these his words do follow: For because these Seducers (saith he) name themselves to be Apostles, and say that they are sent of God to preach, to absolve and dispence with the Souls of men, by means of their Ministery, read the saying of the Apostle in his second Epistle to the Corinthians, Chap. 11. For such Apostles are subtil and crafty Workmen, disguising themselves to be like the Apostles of Christ. Therefore, we mean to shew some certain infallible Tokens and probable, by the which false Apostles may be discerned from the true Preachers and Apostles of Christ.

The first sign or mark is, that such as be true Preachers do not enter into simple Womens houses laden with fits, and take them as it were captive, as many of the false Preachers do; as in the second Epistle of S. Paul to Timothy the third Chapter is manifeft, saying, Of those sorts are they, which enter into Womens houses, &c. Therefore those Preachers which come into Womens houses, to the intent they may take them captive, be not true Preachers, but false Apostles.

The first sign and token to know a false Fryer and Preacher by.

The second sign and token is, that those that be true Preachers do not deceive simple men with painted and flattering words, whereby they prefer their own Trash and Tradition, as all false Prophets do, as in the last Chapter to the Romans appeareth, saying, By their pleasant pleasant and fugred talk, and by their blessing and crossing they deceive and beguil the hearts of innocent men and women. Glosf. Which gay glorious words they extol and set forth their Traditions, whereby they deceive simple men. Very greatly do they deceive the Souls of simple men, which cause them to enter into their Sect, which they term Religion. And they which before led a naughty life, by reason of their ignorance or simplicity, after their entrance, become subtil and false deceiving Hypocrites, entring together with the rest into poor mens houses; yea, and oftentimes become worse than the others. Whereupon, Mat. 22. Woe be unto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hypocrites, which go about, &c. Therefore they which do this, are no true Messengers, but false Apostles.

Preachers do not deceive men with painted flattering words.

The third sign is, that the true Apostles, if they be reproved, suffer the same patiently, 2 Cor. 12. saying, The Tokens of my Apostleship are accomplished among you, in all patience and sufferance, meaning that patience, which pertaineth to the manners of the Preachers. Therefore they, which suffer not correction or punishment, be no true Apostles, but rather shew themselves to be no Christians at all, 1 Cor. 12. No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost. Glosf. It is meet that Christians should be humbled, to the intent that they may suffer themselves to be reproved, and not to be holden up with Yea and Nay. And also such men do shew themselves to be carnal, and not spiritual at all, although they fain themselves to be spiritual, Gal. 3. Therefore am I become an enemy unto you. Notwithstanding the Glosa saith, No carnal man will be reproved although he err. Wherefore, those Preachers which suffer not correction, seem not to be true Apostles, but false Prophets.

The third sign is, that true Apostles do not reprove when they be reproved.

The fourth sign is, that true Preachers commend not themselves.

The fourth sign is, that true Apostles commend not themselves, 2 *Cor.*4. For we dare not join our selves, nor yet compare our selves unto others which commend and boast of many of their acts, when God alloweth none of them at all. Also true Preachers, although they be indeed praise-worthy for their good deserts, in the consciences of men are they praise-worthy, and not to the outward shew alone, 2 Cor. 3. We commend our selves (saith the Apostle) to the consciences of all men. Then they do not commend themselves in comparison of others. Wherefore the Glosa saith upon the same place, Those, that deserve no Commendation, but in comparison of other, do challenge to themselves other mens deserts and praise. Wherefore in the second Epistle of Saint Peter the last Chapter, it is said, Even as our welbeloved Brother Paul, according to the Wisdom that God hath given unto him, hath written unto you, Glosf. The shiteth of the Apostles hath here forgotten his Papal Authority, and also his Keys that were delivered unto him; for he is astonied as it were at the great wisdome given unto his Brother Paul. For indeed it is the manner of the Elect Children of God, to be more in love with the vertues of other men, than with their own. Wherefore in the second Chapter to the Philippians it is written, Let those that are Superiors esteem of themselves in all humility. They therefore that do the contrary, saying, That their state or doings be better than other mens, although they be Preachers, yet are they no true Apostles indeed, but false Prophets.

The fifth sign is, that true Apostles need no Letters of Commendation; nor yet desire to have themselves praised of men, as in the 2 Cor. 3. the Apostle saith, We need not the Letters of Commendation of any man; that is to say, of false Prophets.

The fifth sign is, that true Apostles need no Letters commendatory.

The sixth sign is, that true Apostles preach not unless they be sent.

The fifth sign is, that false Preachers need not Letters commendatory.

The sixth sign is, that true Apostles preach not unless they be sent, as in the 10. Chap. to the Romans, How shall they preach, unless they be sent? There be no true Apostles, but those that be sent: for they have no need of signs which are true Witnes-bearers, but those that be not sent and do preach are false Prophets.

The seventh sign is, when those false Prophets preach, that were never sent.

The seventh sign is, that false Prophets preach, that were never sent, as in the Epistle of S. Paul to the Corinthians it is written, For we dare not boast of our selves, or make comparison, Glosf. That is to say, with those that be false Prophets, not taking their authority from God, but usurping the same, delirous to bear Rule, claiming in their own name their authority. And therefore although peradventure by presumption they say that they are sent of God, as all Hereticks will say; yet notwithstanding, unless they shall prove their sending either by spiritual Prophesie, as John Baptist did, saying, I am the Voice of a Cryer in the Desert; as out of the Prophet Esay in the first Chapter of Saint Johns Gospel is alledged; or else by Miracles, as Moses did, which turned his Rod into a Serpent, and again, from a Serpent to a Rod, as in the seventh Chapter of Exodus, they ought for to be excommunicated, till such time as they cease from preaching. Yet notwithstanding, a Miracle ought not to be a sufficient testimony of their sending, forsomuch as they be done oftentimes and that of evil and wicked men, 1. q. 1. we may perceive towards the end. But Miracles ought to be suspected, forsomuch as our Saviour faith in the three and twentieth of Matthew, Then shall false Prophets arise, &c. Therefore they which do challenge authority in their own name, forsomuch as they have not their authority from God, they are not true Apostles, but false Preachers.

The eighth sign is, that false Prophets, pretending great Wisdom and Holiness to be in Superstition, have falsly named their own Traditions to be Religion, the which are rather to be counted Sacrilege or Church-Robbery, and do usurp unto themselves, for due deserts of other men, by boasting and bragging among strange and unknown people. Wherefore the Apostle speaking of false Prophets in the second Chapter to the Colossians, saith, According to the Precepts of men, which having a face of wisdom consist in Superstition, interlaced with humility, Glosf. That is to say, mingled with fained Religion, that it might be called Religion, when in very deed it is nothing else but Sacrilege, because it is contrary to all authority; that is, contrary to God himself, that any man should define to have Government of a multitude without publick commandment, as in Deuteronomium the three and twentieth Chapter, Thou hast entred into thy Neighbours Vineyard, Glosf. That is to say, Into the Church of another Bishop. May a man warn and admonish others, or else correct that Congregation which is not lawful for him to govern, nor yet to take to great a charge on him? No. And that it is not lawful to enter into another Bishops Diocess, it is apparent, because it is not lawful for the Archbishop so to do. To this effect appertaineth that which is read, 6. q. 3. And also it is written 9. q. 2. Thoughout. Therefore those Preachers, which against God and his Divine Scriptures do call their own Traditions Religion, are not Apostles, but false Prophets.

The eighth sign is, that false Preachers when they preach not according to the Scripture.

The ninth sign is, by the authority which they have: for although they be no Preachers of the Gospel or Ministers of the Sacraments, yet they will live by the Gospel, and not by the labour of their own hands, against the Text in the 2 Thess. 3. Neither have we eaten any mans bread for nought, or of free cost, Glosf. Then those false Prophets ought much more to live by their labour, which have not that authority which we ought to have; that is to say, to live by the Gospel. And S. Augustine speaketh of this more expresly in his Book De opere Monachorum, by these words, Those our Brethren do claim to themselves (very rashly as true thinketh) that they have any such authority, to live by the Gospel. If they be Preachers of the Gospel, I grant that indeed they have such authority; if they be Ministers of the Altar, if they be disposers of the Sacraments, they cannot well but take to themselves this authority, as also manifestly to challenge the same; if at the least they have not wherewithall to sustain this present life, without labour of their hands. As though he would have said, If they be not such manner of men, then have they no authority to live by the Gospel. Therefore those Preachers which have no authority to live by the Gospel, or else Ministrer the Sacraments, because they have no Congregation whereby to take charge of Souls, and yet for all that will needs live upon the Gospel; they be no true Apostles, but false Preachers.

The ninth sign is, that false Preachers when they preach not according to the Scripture, live upon other mens labours.

The tenth sign is, that false Preachers do counterfeit themselves to have greater care and love to mens Souls, than those that be their very Governors and Pastors have, although they have no charge at all of them; against whom the Glosa speaketh, and the 1 Thes. 2. We are become meek and loving towards you, even as the Nurse which giveth her Child suck, Glosf. A woman nurseth other mens Children for wages, and not for love alone; but she giveth her own suck of very love without respect of money. Therefore those Preachers which fain themselves to have a greater love and affection to the Souls of men, than they that have the charge over them, seem not to be true Apostles. The Apostles study not for Eloquence, nor for the curious placing of their words, but false Prophets do them both, as in the 2 Cor. 11. If the simple and unelequant man, &c. Glosa. The Apostles were not eloquent, but false Prophets are full of curious Eloquence. Also upon the same another glosa, The Corinthians were led away from the Gospel by over-nice Eloquence, 2 Cor. 7. Let us shew our selves before all men as the Ministers of God, Glosa. The Ministers of God do not flatter as false Prophets do. And for this occasion those that be true Apostles have not their abiding in Princes Courts and Noblemens houses, knowing, this saying of Christ in S. Matthews Gospel, Behold, these that are clothed with Silks dwell in Kings Courts. And therefore true Apostles are not conversant in Princes Courts, and Noblemens houses, Glosa. Hard and strict life with the preaching of the Gospel loveth not to come near Princes Palaces, and Noblemens houses. Obsequiuse is cometh to pass that Courtiers are found great Flatterers, therefore those Preachers that have their abode in Princes Courts, or that in any other place do use to flatter, are no true Apostles, but false Prophets.

The tenth sign is, that false Preachers do counterfeit themselves to have greater love than those that be their very Governors.

The eleventh sign is, that true Apostles do preach only for Gods cause, and for the health of Souls, and for no Temporal gain, as in the 2 Cor. 4. saying, We preach not our selves, &c. Glosa. Our preaching tendeth not to our glory and gain, but only to the glory of Christ. But the preaching of Christ, by those that are false Prophets, tendeth to the contrary. Whereupon in the Philip. 1. is said, Whether it be upon occasion given, or else for the verities sake, let Christ be preached, &c. Glosa. False Prophets do preach the Gospel upon some occasion, as either by feeling some commodity at the hands of men, or else because of getting goods, honour, or praise among men. Which notwithstanding that they be ready and willing, as it should seem, to bear and sustain injuries; yet they seek not so much the health of him to whom they preach, as in very deed they do their own commodity and gain. Whereupon, 2 Corimth. 12. Because I seek not the things that be yours; that is to say, not your Treasure, as gold and silver, but only you your selves, Glosa. For otherwise it could by no means be gathered that they should understand him to speak or mean of their substance, because he more esteemeth them than their money, to the intent that they might understand his great good will towards them. Therefore these evil and naughty Preachers which preach for wordly gain or honour, or else for the praise and commendation of men, be no true Apostles but false Prophets. But it may be asked, how shall men understand when these good Fellows preach for their own vainglory sake? It may be answered thus, When they preach before they be called, as in the 2 *Cor.*11. Whosoever boasteth, let him boast and rejoyce in the Lord, Glosa. Which thing he cannot by any means do that hath not his Authority from God. For if any fich Prophet preach, he feeleth his own glory, and that may easily be perceived. Because he is not called of God, he hath no such Authority of him; that is to say, of his Church or Congregation, as to the Heb. 7. No man taketh to himself any dignity, but he that is called of God, as Aaron was, Glosa. He is called of God, that is, lawfully chosen of the Congregation.

The eleventh sign is, that false Prophets do preach only for Gods cause, and for the health of Souls, and not for their own glory, gain, or praise.

The twelfth sign is, that false Prophets do counterfeit themselves to have greater love than those that be their very Governors.

The twelfth sign or token of a false Prophet is, because such Prophets do counterfeit themselves to have greater care and love to mens Souls, than those that be their very Governors and Pastors have, although they have no charge at all of them; against whom the Glosa speaketh, and the 1 Thes. 2. We are become meek and loving towards you, even as the Nurse which giveth her Child suck, Glosa. A woman nurseth other mens Children for wages, and not for love alone; but she giveth her own suck of very love without respect of money. Therefore those Preachers which fain themselves to have a greater love and affection to the Souls of men, than they that have the charge over them, seem not to be true Apostles. Hard and strict life with the preaching of the Gospel loveth not to come near Princes Palaces, and Noblemens houses. Obsequiuse is cometh to pass that Courtiers are found great Flatterers, therefore those Preachers that have their abode in Princes Courts, or that in any other place do use to flatter, are no true Apostles, but false Prophets.

{KING Hen.} but he is an Apostle, which not seeking the glory of this present world, but for the glory to come, doth abase himself, to the intent that the preaching and word of God might be commended and exalted. They therefore which desire to have praise and to be commended of others, rather than that the word of God should have the praise, be no true Apostles, but false Prophets.

The eleventh sign is, that true Apostles do preach only for Gods cause, and for the health of Souls, and not for Temporal gain, as in the 2 Cor. 4. saying, We preach not our selves, &c. Glosa. Obsequiuse is cometh to pass that Courtiers are found great Flatterers, therefore those Preachers that have their abode in Princes Courts, or that in any other place do use to flatter, are no true Apostles, but false Prophets.

The thirteenth sign is, that true Apostles or Messengers do not circumvent or subtilly go about to deceive men, that they should give unto them their goods, either in their life-time, or else at the time of their death, as in the 2 Cor. 7. We have falsly deceived no man, Glosa. By the subtil and deceitful getting away of your substance, as false Prophets do, which get away from you those things that be yours under pretence of great Friendship. Also *Mat.*22. Woe be unto you Scribes and Pharisees, you Hypocrites, which spoil widows houses by your long prayers; which mean nothing else by your Superstition, but that you may spoil and rob the people, as Luke 20. Which devour widows houses by dissembling of your long prayer, Glosa. The which make over-long prayers, to the intent they may seem more devout, and that they may get both money and great commendation of all such as be sick and troubled with the burthen of their sins; whose prayers be turned into sin, which neither are profitable for themselves nor any other, but rather shall have for making those prayers greater damnation, forsomuch as by the same they deceive others: for by this, that they receive and take, both gold and silver, it appeareth that they preach not for Souls health sake, but only for filthy lucre and gain sake, *Mat.*10. Be ye Possessors neither of gold nor silver, Glosa. If they then have these things, they cannot seem or be thought to preach for the health of the Soul, but for lucres sake. And so saith Hierome upon the Prophet Malachi, Because some Prophets took money their Prophesie became Divination; that is to say, their Prophesie appeared not to be Prophesie, but Divination, or Inchantment: that is, that such Prophesie proceedeth not from God, but from the Devil. And this appeareth in 1. q. 1. having this beginning, Nunquam Divinatio, &c. Therefore those Preachers which circumvent and beguile men, to the intent that they should give them their goods, either in their life-time, or after their death, are not true Apostles, but false Prophets.

The fourteenth sign is, that false Prophets when any Verity is preached, which for the most part they are not acquainted withall, or that toucheth them, then begin they to chafe and bark against the same. Whereupon the Apostle in the third Chapter to the Philipians saith, Beware of the Dogs, &c. Glosa. Understand you that they are not Dogs by nature, but by their usage and conditions, barking against the Truth, which they were never acquainted with. And so he compareth them right well to Dogs, because Dogs follow rather custom than reason: so false Apostles do keep the custom of the Law, and do bite and bark against the Truth, as though they were without the gift of reason. And also in the second Epistle to Timothy, the fourth Chapter, saying, They get them Instructors according to their own desires, Glosa. Which may teach them what things they themselves are willing to hear, because the Truth seemeth nothing pleasant unto them. Therefore those Preachers which bark against the late revealed Truth, which toucheth them very near, and therefore cause the same to be hidden and kept under, are not true Apostles, but false Prophets.

The fifteenth sign is, that false Prophets do not inforce any to receive or hear them which be unwilling thereunto, but send them away rather, left they should seem to seek after some earthly and transitory thing. *Mat.*10. Whosoever will not receive you, get you out of that City, and shake the dust from off your feet, &c. Glosa. That you may thereby shew that the desire of earthly things hath no power in you. Therefore those Preachers which strive and wrestle (as it were) to the intent they would be received and heard, are no true Apostles, forsomuch as the Apostle saith, 1 Corim. 11. If any man appear among you to be over-contentious or full of strife, such custom have we none, nor yet the Congregation of Christ.

The sixteenth sign is, that the Apostles did not procure the Indignation of those Princes, with whom they were esteemed and regarded, against such persons as would not receive them and hear them, according as we read in the life of Simon and Jude, the Apostles. The chief Ruler, being very angry, commanded a very great fire to be made, that the Bishops might be cast into the same, and all others which went about to defame the Doctrine of the Apostles of Christ. But the Apostles fell fell down before the Emperor, saying, We beseech you Sir, let not us be the Authors or Causers of this destruction or calamity; nor let us which are sent to be the preservation of Men, and to revive those that are dead through Sin, be killers of those that be alive. Therefore those Preachers which seek to stir up the displeasure of Princes against them (whose favours now they enjoy) that will not receive and hear them, or rather whom they themselves hate, are no true Apostles, but false Prophets.

The sixteenth sign is, that false Prophets do cause Princes and Rulers to bear them ill will.

The seventeenth sign is, that the Apostles of Christ have not only the knowledge of those things which God hath already done, but also of those things which he will hereafter do, as in the Apocalypse 3. Chapter, The beasts were full of eyes both behind and before, Glossa. Obtaining the knowledge of those things which God had done, as also what he would do hereafter in the end of the World. Therefore those that say they know not the perils of the Church in the later time which are prophetied before, or that they care not for them, or else if they know them, they have not eyes behind and before, are no true Apostles; therefore what time as they call themselves Apostles, they are false Prophets.

The seventeenth sign is, that false Prophets do not know what God hath done, or yet will do, as true Prophets do.

The eighteenth sign is, that true Apostles do not desire the riches and goods of them to whom they Preach, whereby they are discerned from Wolves, that is to say, from false Prophets, Act. 20. I have desired no mans gold nor silver, Glossa. By this are Wolves discerned, for they desire such things. And again in the same place: For those things which I have need of, and those which were with me, those hands have ministred. Glossa. This example also of labouring is a Spectacle for Bishops whereby they are discerned from Wolves. For such as ask or beg of those to whom they Preach, or set any other to ask or beg in their names, do seem to commit Simony, like Gehazi, of whom it is read in the 2. Book of Kings the fifth Chapter, that he craved certain apparel of Naaman the Syrian, to whom his Master Eliseus had restored the benefit of health, notwithstanding he had gotten those Garments unwitting to his Master. Whereupon Gregory Nazianzen saith, 1. q. 1. Qui isti debetur. But some Man perhaps will say, Cannot the Preacher ask Money or Money-worth of those to whom he Preacheth? Or at the least, may not he beg? To this may be answered; If the Preacher by Authority Preach and feed his flock as a true Pastor with the food of Gods word, he may take money or money worth; but then it is not begging or craving, but it is by Authority, as the 2 to Timothy 2. Chapter. It is meet that the husbandman that tilleth the ground, should first and after others receive the commodity of his increase. Glossa. He putteth the Vertuous Preacher out of doubt, not Preaching for that intent to make Merchandize of the Gospel, and giveth him to understand, that it is lawful for him to take of them whom he feedeth as his flock, what things soever he hath need of, and doth it not in begging or craving, but by good Authority. It is manifest that it cannot in any place of the holy Scripture be found, that the Preacher ought to beg. But begging is forbidden of all the Apostles of Christ, and is abhorred of Salomon and S. Augustine, and reproved by divers other Holy Men. Therefore it is manifest that the true Apostles do not desire the Temporal goods of them to whom they Preach, neither do they beg, or crave the same. They therefore that require any thing of them to whom they Preach, or else set any other man to ask for them, or in their names, do not seem to be true Apostles, but false Preachers.

The eighteenth sign is, that true Apostles do not desire the riches and goods of them, to whom they Preach, whereby they are discerned from Wolves, that is to say, from false Prophets, Act. 20. I have desired no mans gold nor silver, Glossa. By this are Wolves discerned, for they desire such things. And again in the same place: For those things which I have need of, and those which were with me, those hands have ministred. Glossa. If the Preacher do his duty in Preaching, he may take lawfully for his necessary things.

The nineteenth sign is, that true Apostles are patient in Tribulation, neither do they render evil for good, Matth. 10. Behold, I send you as sheep among wolves. Glossa. They, that occupy the place of Preaching, ought not to procure any evil toward their Brethren, as the example of Christ Teacheth, 1 Pet. 2. saying; Who, when he was reviled, reviled not again, but did submit himself to him that judgeth justly. They therefore that suffer not injury, but rather do wrong themselves, are not true Apostles, but false Apostles.

They therefore that suffer not injury, but rather do wrong themselves, are not true Apostles, but false Apostles.

The twentieth sign is, that true Apostles are not to be interrained as false Prophets be.

The twentieth sign is, that true Apostles at their first coming are evil entertained, as the Lord saith in the 24 of Mat. Ye shall be hated of all men for my names sake. But yet at the length fight get the victory, according to that saying of first the of S. John the 5. Chapter; Every thing that is of God overcometh the world. They therefore that in the beginning rejoyce and are well intertained, but in the end are rejected, seem not to be true Apostles, but false.

{KING 3 Hen. 3}

The twenty first sign is, that true Preachers go not to Preach unto those which have Preachers appointed unto them, because they have not to rejoyce of a company belonging to another mans charge, as to the Romans the 15. Chapter. I have preached the Gospel where Christ was not before preached, lest I should build upon another mans foundation. And in the second Epistle of S. Paul to the Corinthians, the 10. Chapter, he saith; We are no boasters, nor bustie in other mens matters. Glossa. Where another man had laid the foundation. Likewise in the same Chapter; Not having pleasure to boast of other mens labours, that is to say, of those which be committed to the government of another man. Likewise Augustinus saith; Honour ought to seek thee, and not their Honour. Also Chrysostom; Authority is in love with such a Man as refuseth her, and yet abhorreth her not. They therefore that procure and have a desire to Preach unto the people committed to another Mans charge, which is an Office of Honour, especially in Councils, Synods, and great Assemblies, also in Kings and Princes Courts, and Prelates Palaces, are not true Apostles, but false Teachers.

The twenty first sign is, that true Preachers go not to Preach unto those which have Preachers appointed unto them, because they have not to rejoyce of a company belonging to another mans charge, as to the Romans the 15. Chapter. I have preached the Gospel where Christ was not before preached, lest I should build upon another mans foundation. And in the second Epistle of S. Paul to the Corinthians, the 10. Chapter. I have preached the Gospel where Christ was not before preached, lest I should build upon another mans foundation.

The twenty first sign is, that true Preachers build not upon any other mans foundation.

Authority loveth them that refuseth her, and yet abhorreth her not.

The twenty second sign is, that true Prophets are not proved and rule-glorious, as false Prophets be.

The twenty second sign is, that true Preachers know themselves to do much good in the Church and Congregation of God, yet notwithstanding are not puffed up with pride; Ezekiel 3. O son of man I have made thy face as an adamant stone. The adamant stone, when it draweth Iron unto it, is not thereby either lifted up or altered. Likewise a true Preacher when he draweth sinners unto him by his Preaching (whose Hearts were as hard as Iron) is never the more lifted up or higher minded therefore. But as in Luke the 18. Chapter, When ye have done all that ye can, and as well as ye can, yet say that you are unprofitable servants. Psal. 115. Not unto us, Lord, not unto us, but to thy name be given the glory. They therefore that do arrogantly boast themselves of the fruit and benefit that they have done in the Church of God, saying; We have given light to the Universal Church, which was blind before our time, and we have put out the flame of sin in the Church of God (when perhaps they have more furthered hypocrisie than either truth or verity) they are not true Prophets but false, of whom it is spoken in the Psalms, The mouth of them that speak proud things, &c.

The twenty third sign is, that true Preachers seek not the favour of the World, nor yet how to please men, as to the Galath. 1. If I should please men, that is to say, if I had desired to please men, I should not be the servant of God. Whereupon to Timothy the first Epistle and second Chapter; Not as men-pleasers, Glossa. Seeking to please, because we have not the pleasing Spirit. Therefore those Preachers that seek the favour of the World, and do labour to this intent that they might please men, are not true Apostles, but false.

The twenty third sign is, that true Prophets be always men-pleasers.

The twenty fourth sign is, That false Prophets never refuse to be fed of their God.

The twenty fourth sign is, that true Preachers do not refuse to be fed before them, and give God thanks, but that do not the false Prophets.

The twenty fourth sign is, That false Prophets seek not after such fine lodgings and wealthy habitations, where they may have all things at their commandments; but rather such honest refiting places where they may have necessary things for themselves, with their good wills of whom they have it. And they take nothing of such whom they fee to be so ready and liberal in giving, nor think that they do him more pleasure in receiving the gift, than the other do in giving them the same. According to that in the tenth of Matthew, saying, Into what City or Town soever ye shall enter, inquire out those that be of good report in the same, and abide you with them so long as you tarry in the same City or Town. Glosf. Your Host, with whom ye lodge, ought to be chosen by the good report of neighbours, left your preaching be evil spoken of, by reason of his infamy. Neither ought such Men to run from House to House. But whom shall we call worthy of good report? Glosf. Him who knoweth better to do other Men good, than to receive a good turn of another. And this is he which giveth willingly for Christs cause, and not in respect of any commodity. Also true Apostles receive nothing of such Men as lie weltering in their sins, but rather of those that are washed and cleansed from their sins, whereupon the 2 to the Corinthians the seventh Chapter, They have given themselves first to the Lord. Glosf. Because they now amending their old errors and vicious manners have wowed themselves unto the Lord, and afterward gave of that which they had to their Brethren: for otherwise they ought not to have taken any thing of them, because gifts do blind the eyes; but those that give where there is no cause of reproof in their doings, have just cause to give. Therefore those Preachers that seek how to come by dainty fare, and do receive bribes and rewards of naughty Men that have this world at will, to the intent that those Preachers may cover and hide their faults, and get of others what they can by subtilty, which give indeed to remove the thankefels importunity of the craver, or else for avoiding of prefent shame, rather than for any love they have to God, are not true Apostles, but false Prophets, according to that in the 2 to the Corinthians the 9. Chapter, The Lord doth love a willing giver, Glosf. He that giveth for prefent shame, or else for that he may be free from the importunacy of him that asketh, doth lose his substance and merit: wherefore he that hath respect to thefe things, doth not seek the fruit and profit of the giver, but the gift it self, as the Apostle to the Philippians the 4th. Chapter, saith, Seek not the gift, but the fruit or benefit of the giver.

The twenty fifth sign is, That true Apostles seek not after such fine lodgings and wealthy habitations, where they may have all things at their commandments; but rather such honest refiting places where they may have necessary things for themselves, with their good wills of whom they have it. And they take nothing of such whom they fee to be so ready and liberal in giving, nor think that they do him more pleasure in receiving the gift, than the other do in giving them the same. Chapter, saith, Seek not the gift, but the fruit or benefit of the giver.

The twenty fifth sign is, that true Preachers do not leave their own glory in this life, but the glory of Christ; as in John 7. He that speaketh of himself doth seek his own glory, but he that seeketh the glory of him which sent him (that is, of whom he is sent) is a true Apostle. Therefore those which seek the things that pertain to the glory of this world, of the which one is to be affiftant to those that bear rule and authority, according to that saying of Boetius De consolatione; Those that do defire to be extolled, either they Reign and bear Rule themselves, or else do defire to be near about them that have fuch dominion. Another is, They defire to have the fame and vi&tory of that which they have nothing at all deferved before God, whereupon is written that faying of the Apostle, in Gal. 5. Let not us become desirous of vain glory. Glosf. To be defirous of vain glory, is to have victory without any merit or desert; and those, I say, that do such things, seem not to be true Apostles, but false.

The twenty sixth sign is, That true Apostles seek not after such fine lodgings and wealthy habitations, where they may have all things at their commandments; but rather such honest refiting places where they may have necessary things for themselves, with their good wills of whom they have it. And they take nothing of such whom they fee to be so ready and liberal in giving, nor think that they do him more pleasure in receiving the gift, than the other do in giving them the same. According to that in the tenth of Matthew, saying, Into what City or Town soever ye shall enter, inquire out those that be of good report in the same, and abide you with them so long as you tarry in the same City or Town. Glosf. Your Host, with whom ye lodge, ought to be chosen by the good report of neighbours, left your preaching be evil spoken of, by reason of his infamy. Neither ought such Men to run from House to House. But whom shall we call worthy of good report? Glosf. Him who knoweth better to do other Men good, than to receive a good turn of another. And this is he which giveth willingly for Christs cause, and not in respect of any commodity. Also true Apostles receive nothing of such Men as lie weltering in their sins, but rather of those that are washed and cleansed from their sins, whereupon the 2 to the Corinthians the seventh Chapter, They have given themselves first to the Lord. Glosf. Because they now amending their old errors and vicious manners have wowed themselves unto the Lord, and afterward gave of that which they had to their Brethren: for otherwise they ought not to have taken any thing of them, because gifts do blind the eyes; but those that give where there is no cause of reproof in their doings, have just cause to give. Therefore those Preachers that seek how to come by dainty fare, and do receive bribes and rewards of naughty Men that have this world at will, to the intent that those Preachers may cover and hide their faults, and get of others what they can by subtilty, which give indeed to remove the thankefels importunity of the craver, or else for avoiding of prefent shame, rather than for any love they have to God, are not true Apostles, but false Prophets, according to that in the 2 to the Corinthians the 9. Chapter, saith, Seek not the gift, but the fruit or benefit of the giver.

The twenty sixth sign is, That false Prophets are not contented with necessary things, but seek after superfluous.

The twenty seventh sign is, That true Apostles do not endeavour themselves to seek and enjoy the fruit of other Mens labours that they may be fed thereby, because that the belly is such Mens God, according to that in the 2 to the Thessalonians the 3. Chapter, We have heard of some among you which walk inordinately, not laboursing at all, but living delicately, or idly. Glosf. Of other Mens labours, and deserve they to be fed? The Discipline of the Lord cannot away with that doing; for the Belly is their God, which provide to have more than necessary dishes of meat. Therefore those Preachers which so do, are no true Apostles, but false.

The twenty seventh sign is, That true Apostles do not endeavour themselves to seek and enjoy the fruit of other Mens labours that they may be fed thereby, because that the belly is such Mens God, according to that in the 2 to the Thessalonians the 3. Chapter, We have heard of some among you which walk inordinately, not laboursing at all, but living delicately, or idly. Glosf. Of other Mens labours, and deserve they to be fed? The Discipline of the Lord cannot away with that doing; for the Belly is their God, which provide to have more than necessary dishes of meat. Therefore those Preachers which so do, are no true Apostles, but false.

The twenty eighth sign is, That true Apostles do not rejoyce only of the miracles or other excellent works, which the Lord doth by them; but they rejoyce rather of the salvation which they look for from the Lord, than that by doing those miracles they desire any honour; according to that which is written in Luke the 10th. saying: Rejoyce ye not for that the spirits be subject unto you, but because your names are registred in Heaven. They therefore that boast of their own miracles, or of any that belong unto them, for this cause that they are saved by away by that cursed one, and doth neglect and contemn the fame, or else peradventure consenteth unto the same to the outward appearance of the world; and yet, because he will keep his temporal dignity and estimation, refuseth to stir up strife and contention about the same, and so to be evil spoken of, seemeth not to be an Apostle of Christ, but rather a false Prophet, if he be a Preacher.

The twenty ninth sign is, That the true Apostles do never seek their own glory in this life, but the glory of Christ; as in John 7. He that speaketh of himself doth seek his own glory, but he that seeketh the glory of him which sent him (that is, of whom he is sent) is a true Apostle. Therefore those which seek the things that pertain to the glory of this world, of the which one is to be affiftant to those that bear rule and authority, according to that saying of Boetius De consolatione; Those that do defire to be extolled, either they Reign and bear Rule themselves, or else do defire to be near about them that have fuch dominion. Another is, They defire to have the fame and vi&tory of that which they have nothing at all deferved before God, whereupon is written that faying of the Apostle, in Gal. 5. Let not us become desirous of vain glory. Glosf. To be defirous of vain glory, is to have victory without any merit or desert; and those, I say, that do such things, seem not to be true Apostles, but false.

The twenty ninth sign is, That true Prophets seek not their own glory, as false Prophets do.

The thirtieth sign is, That true Apostles care not for the solemnities of Men, neither their falutations, nor festivings, nor any other benefit of theirs. They therefore which love and seek the company and fellowship of Men, their feastings, and other their commodities, do not seem to be true Apostles, but false.

The thirtieth sign is, That true Apostles do not confer the solemnities of Men, neither their falutations, nor festivings, nor any other benefit of theirs. They therefore which love and seek the company and fellowship of Men, their feastings, and other their commodities, do not seem to be true Apostles, but false.

The thirtieth sign is, That true Prophets do not force upon the solemn salutations of men, as false Prophets do.

The one and thirtieth sign is, That true Apostles do not commonly refort to other Mens tables, left that they should for a meals meat become flatterers, as in 2 Thess. 3. That we should give an example to follow us. Glosf. He that cometh oftentimes to another Mans Table, being given to idleneis, cannot chuse to flatter him which feedeth him; but Christ's Religion calleth Men to liberty and to no such bondage: they therefore that refort oftentimes, and that of their own minds; to other Mens Tables (living idlely) are not true Apostles, but false.

The one and thirtieth sign is, That true Apostles do not commonly refort to other Mens tables, left that they should for a meals meat become flatterers, as in 2 Thess. 3. That we should give an example to follow us. Glosf. He that cometh oftentimes to another Mans Table, being given to idleneis, cannot chuse to flatter him which feedeth him; but Christ's Religion calleth Men to liberty and to no such bondage: they therefore that refort oftentimes, and that of their own minds; to other Mens Tables (living idlely) are not true Apostles, but false.

The one and thirtieth sign is, that true Prophets refort to other mens boards and flatter them for a meals meat, which true Prophets do not.

The two and thirtieth sign is, That true Apostles do not hate their enemies, and such as hate them; which Doctrine the Lord taught, Matthew the fifth, saying: Love your enemies, do well to them which hate you; but false Prophets do hurt and defame their Neighbours, according as Jeremiah 14. saith, The Prophets of Jerusalem have defiled the whole earth, Glosf. They are not contented to hurt their Neighbours only, but also whom they before this time have hated, they defame and speak evil of in every place they come: therefore those Preachers which hate them whom they think are their enemies, and do defame them, are not true Apostles, but false Preachers.

The two and thirtieth sign is, that true Prophets do not hate their enemies.

The thirty third sign is, That true Apostles, when they are examined and proved whether they be true Apostles or liers, take that very grievously, and persecute all those that can prove them to be so, and also do stir up and provoke others to persecute the same Men, which also joyn themselves together by secular power, even as certain false Prophets did in the Primitive Church against the Bishop of Ephesus, to whom the Lord said, Apoc. 2. I know, that it is say, I do allow thy works and thy labour; that is, thy tribulation, because that canst not away with those that be evil men. Glosf. But that thou hast a desire to amend them, or else to expel them, and hast examined those which say that they are Apostles, and are but liars, and also hast suffered this patiently. Glosf. The evils which these false Prophets, joyned together by secular power, do bring in, are not the doings of true Apostles, but false Prophets.

The thirty third sign is, That true Apostles, when they are examined and proved whether they be true Apostles or liers, take that very grievously, and persecute all those that can prove them to be so, and also do stir up and provoke others to persecute the same Men, which also joyn themselves together by secular power, even as certain false Prophets did in the Primitive Church against the Bishop of Ephesus, to whom the Lord said, Apoc. 2. I know, that it is say, I do allow thy works and thy labour; that is, thy tribulation, because that canst not away with those that be evil men. Glosf. But that thou hast a desire to amend them, or else to expel them, and hast examined those which say that they are Apostles, and are but liars, and also hast suffered this patiently. Glosf. The evils which these false Prophets, joyned together by secular power, do bring in, are not the doings of true Apostles, but false Prophets.

The thirty third sign is, That true Prophets do not persecute men as the false Prophets do.

The thirty fourth sign is, That true Apostles do not preach to those which are converted already by other Men, but rather do convert those which are not yet converted, left that they should build upon another Mans foundation, as S. Paul, Romans 15. saith, I have laboured so, that from Jerusalem to Illyricus, I have replenished the Gospel in every place. Glosf. That is, I have preached the same abundantly, in whom the great vertue of the Holy Ghost appeareth, because so many Nations, that is, the Gentiles have received the Gospel by me preaching.

The thirty fourth sign is, That true Prophets preach to those which be not yet converted, which the false Prophets do not.

But I have preached the Gospel there where Christ was not preached before, left I should build upon another mans foundation, Gloss. I should not preach to those that were converted by another Man. Also 2 Cor. 10. We are not such as boast and glory in other mens labours, Gloss. Where another man laid the foundation, for that should be to boast inordinately. Also in the same place, not thinking to boast where another man hath government, but in those things which are put in experience, Gloss. Of other Preachers; Because the Apostle did Preach to those to whom the Gospel was never preached, that he might get praise by his own proper labour. Therefore, those preachers which go not to that people which have need to be converted, but to those which are converted already, which have Apostles of their own, that is to say, Bishops and Priests, and yet do boast over another mans flock, are not true Apostles, but false Prophets.

The thirty fifth sign is, That true Prophets chiefly preach in their own Dioces, and not in other mens.

The thirty fifth sign is, Because true Apostles, when they are sent, go to their own Dioceſs, and not to another mans Dioceſs, even as Paul being sent, went to the Gentiles when he purposed to preach, Acts 13. Separate Paul and Barnabas for the business which I have chosen them unto: Gloss. According to the appointment and decree of James, Cephas, and John, went he forth to be a Teacher unto the Gentiles. But those preachers that stand upon their feet, that is to say, those Preachers which have but small worldly substance, for which cause they are more ready to go which way soever it shall please the Lord to send them, I say, the Lord hath sent them to preach, not to those that be sufficiently learned, but to those that are infidels, as we read in Ezek. 2. After that, the Spirit of the Lord set Ezekiel upon his feet, In quam ſpem tuus tangitur, and he said unto him. O Son of Man, behold I sent thee to the Nations which have start back from their possession, which have gone from me, that is, to the Jewish Hereticks, and to those Nations which sometimes have been Christians, as the Egyptians, the Babylonians, and all those that observe the Law of Mahomet. Therefore, if such go to those that are already instructed, having both Apostles, Bishops, and Priests of their own; they go not into their own Dioceſs, but into another mans Dioceſs, and are not true Apostles, but false Preachers. And it is greatly to be feared, left the Church be in hazard and danger by such, unleſs they be thruſt out of the same betime; even as Jonas, when he was sent to Nineve of the Lord, which is interpreted large or wide, and leadeth to the Hill, that is to the Infidels we spake of before: They go not to those Infidels according to the commandment of the Lord, but they turn another way, take their journey into Tharsis, which is interpreted, seeking after joy and pleasure; that is, they go unto those which receive them with joy and gladneſs, and do well provide for them, that is to say, to godly and devout Chriſtians: and therefore it is to be feared, left the Ship in which they be (that is the Church) be in great peril, unleſs they be thrown forth. And therefore the Apostle spake of such false Prophets not without good cauſe, 2 Tim. 2. And shun thou those: Gloss. That is, such men as those be.

The thirty fixth sign is, That false Prophets do attribute to themselves that which they never did.

The thirty fixth sign is, Because true Apostles do not boast, neither do they attribute unto themselves any other thing, but in that God hath wrought the same by them. Paul, Rom. 15. faith, I dare not say any thing but that which Chriſt hath wrought and accomplished by me, Gloss. That is, I speak only those things (which by me) that is, by my miniſtry Chriſt hath wrought. They therefore that boaſt of many things, and do attribute much unto themselves which they never did, are not true Apostles, but false Prophets.

The thirty seventh sign is, That true Apostles do not apply themselves or lean at Logical or Philoſophical reasons. Therefore those Preachers which do indeavour themselves to such kind of reasons, are not true Apostles, but false Prophets.

The thirty seventh sign is, that false Prophets do cleave and lean to Logical and Philoſophical reasons.

The thirty eighth sign is, that false Prophets do love carnally, and not spiritually.

The Thirty eighth sign is, That true Apostles do not love carnally, or after the flesh, but hate what thing soever doth resist them in the service of God, as Luke 14. He that doth not hate his Father and Mother, his Son and Sister, and also himself, he cannot be my disciple, Gloss. That is, He that doth not hate whatsoever doth resist or let him in the service of God, is not worthy to be a Diſciple, neither can he abide in that Office. Therefore forsomuch as true Preachers are the true Diſciples of the Lord, it muſt needs follow that those Preachers which do promote their Nephews and Kinsfolk (how unworthy soever they be) to Eccleſiastical promotions and livings, contrary to the will of God, or do any other thing that letteth or hindereth them in the service of God, are not true Apostles, but false Prophets.

{KING Hen. 3

The thirty ninth sign is, That true Apostles do not hunt for the friendship of this world, for he that is the friend of this world, is the enemy of God; therefore those Preachers, which purchase the friendship of this world, are not true Apostles, but false Prophets. Therefore forsomuch as the Scripture is infallible, as in the twenty fourth Chapter of Matthew, saying, Heaven and Earth shall perish, but my words shall indure for ever; and the Holy Ghoſt which spake in the Apoſtles cannot lie; for Propheſie (for the moſt part) is not spoken by the will of Man, but the Holy Men of God spake by the inspiration of the Holy Ghoſt, as it is read in the firſt Epiſtle of Peter, the firſt Chapter; it remaineth, That all Men which are bound to defend the Church, may riſe up in the defence of the same, according unto that in the 24. Chapter of the Proverbs; deliver those that are led to death, and ceaſe thou not to reſcue those which are drawen to deſtruction. Neither may he alledge vain accuſations, because it is said in the same place, If he say he is not able or strong enough, he that beholdeth the thoughts of Mens hearts, shall know it, &c. Whatsoever perisheth in the Church of God for want of preachers, all that shall be demanded of them at the day of Judgment; as Jacob confeſseth to Laban, whole Sheep he fed, Genesis 31. I did restore all the loſs, and that which was ſtolen I made answer for. I will demand his blood at thy hands, Ezekiel 3. This is said to the Paſtor or Prelate. But if the other things which we have spoken of before could not move the Prelates and Cardinals, this at the leaſt should move them; because that then the Spiritual power which doth conſiſt for the moſt part in the exerciſe of Preaching, in hearing Confeſſions, and enjoyning of Penance, shall be taken away from them by little and little, for by piecemeal doth the Wolf devour the poor and needy Man: 3. Gueſt. Chap. 1. When the authority Eccleſiastical therefore shall be quite taken from them and diſpoſed to others, such as either by their Order, or Apoſtolical grant do challenge to have the same; then doubtleſs shall neither the juriſdiction of Civil cauſes and pleadings, nor any authority that such Prelates have yet remaining, neither yet the poſſeſſions of the temporal goods of the Church any longer remain amongſt them. Shall such have the temporal goods of the Church which miniſter not the ſpiritual Treasure thereof? 1 Cor. 9. Know ye not that they which kill the Sacrifice ought to eat of the Sacrifice? and they that ſerve at the Altar are partakers of the Altar? For as the body without the ſoul cannot ſtand; ſo corporal things without ſpiritual things cannot continue, 1 Queſt. 1. if any ſhall take away the same. Thus have you had the 39 Arguments, for the which both he the ſaid Gulielmus was condemned, and his Books burned.

{KING Hen. 3

The thirty ninth sign is, that false Prophets do hunt after the friendſhip of this world.

Whatſoever doth perish in the Church of God for want of preachers shall be required.

In the days of this Gulielmus, there was a moſt deteſtable and blaſphemous Book fet forth by the Fryers (mentioned alſo in Matth. Pariſienſis) which they called Evangelium æternum, or Euangelium Spiritus Sancti. That is, The Everlaſting Goſpel, or the Goſpel of the Holy Ghoſt. In which Book many abominable errors of the Fryers were contained, ſo that the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt was utterly defaced, which, this Book faid, was not to be compared with this Everlaſting Goſpel, no more than the ſhell is to be compared with the kernel, than darkneſs to light, &c. Moreover, that the Goſpel of Chriſt ſhall be preached no longer but fifty years, and then this Everlaſting Goſpel ſhould rule the Church, &c. Item, That whatſoever was in the whole Bible, was in the ſaid Goſpel contained. At length this Fryers Goſpel was accuſed to the Pope, and ſo fix perſons choſen of the whole Univerſity to peruſe and judge of the Book: as Chriſtianus Canonicus Balueacenſis, Odo de Doaco, Nicolaus de Baro, Johannes de ſicca Villa Anglus, Johannes Belim Gallus. Among whom this Gulielmus was one, who mightily impugned this peſtiferous and diveliſh Book. Theſe ſix, after the peruſing of the Book, were ſent up to Rome. The Fryers likewiſe ſent their meſſengers withal, where they they were refuted, and the errors of the Book condemned; but ſo, that the Pope with the Cardinals commanded the ſaid Book to be abolished and condemned not publickly (tendering the eſtimation of the Religious Orders, as of his own moſt chief Champions) but that they ſhould be burned in ſecret wiſe, and the Books of the foreſaid Guielmus to be burnt withal.

Beſides other his Books, two Sermons we have of his yet remaining, one upon the Goſpel of S. Luke, of the Phariſee and the Publican, the other upon the Epiſtle read in the Church on May-day; where in the firſt he reſembleth the Phariſees to our Monks, and that he proveth by all the properties of the Phariſees deſcribed in the Goſpel. The Publican he reſembleth to the Laity, ſuch as becauſe the ſooner they are reduced to acknowledge their ſins, the more hope they have of mercy. The other, because they ſtand confident in their own righteouſneſs, are therefore further from their juſtification. In the later Sermon he feſteth forth and declareth what perils and dangers be like to fall upon the Church by theſe Religious Orders of Monks and Fryers.

Lawrentius Anglicus condemned of the Pope.

Among the other beſides of that age, which withſtood the Biſhop of Rome and his Antichriſtian errors, was one Lawrence an Engliſh-man, and Maſter of Paris; another was Petrus Johannes a Minorit. Of whom the foreſaid Lawrence was about the year of our Lord 1260. who in his teaching, preaching and writing, did ſtoutly defend the part of the foreſaid Gulielmus and the reſt of his ſide againſt the Fryers. Againſt the which Fryers he wrote two Books: one in the defence of William afore-mentioned; the other upon this Argument and Title, To beware of falſe Prophets, &c. Certain other things alſo he wrote, wherein by divers proofs and teſtimonies he argued and proved, That Antichriſt was not far off to come.
